New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, T. H. WALN

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor

J. HAMILTON, D. D. T. W. DOUGLASS. W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME III. NUMBER 49. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1853. WHOLE NUMBER, 153.

INFLUENCE.

Drop follows drop, and swells
With rain the sweeping river;
Word follows word, and tells
A truth that lives forever.

Flake follows flake, like spirits
Whose wings the winds dissever:
Thought follows thought, and lights
The realm of life forever.

Beam follows beam, to cheer
The cloud the bolt would shiver;
Throb follows throb, and fear
Gives place to joy forever.

The drop, the flake, the beam,
Teach us a lesson ever;
The word, the thought, the beam,
Impress the soul forever.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

JEWISH FESTIVALS.

PASSOVER.

On the evening of the fourteenth day of Nisan, the festival commences; and while the Baal habayith—master of the house—goes to the synagogue with his sons, we will give our attention to the further preparations which are now made at home by the female portion of the household. They are all dressed in festive array; the mistress of the establishment lights the Sabbath lamp, and then sets the table, but very differently from ordinary occasions. In the first place she fixes several pillows or cushions on one side of the table, against the wall—an imitation of the oriental couch; this is for the Baal habayith to lean upon; for on this season their present state of exile and captivity is to be entirely lost sight of, and they transport themselves in imagination and scenery at least, back to the happier periods of the Hebrew Commonwealth.

Next, the good lady takes a large round dish of plate—if there be wealth, or of tin, if moderate circumstances. (The Jews of the Continent place a great value on their sets of [English] tin, which are kept for centuries in the same families as heir-looms. They are always shining with a plate-like lustre.) A napkin is placed on this dish, and upon it an unleavened cake, somewhat larger and thicker than those described in my last week's article. On one side this cake has a peculiar stitch; another napkin covers it, and a second cake with two notches is laid on it; then another napkin, and a third cake with three notches. These notches are used to distinguish them from each other. These cakes or Mitzooth, are symbolical of the three classes of ancient Israel: the Priest, the Levite, and the Israelite [Inymen.]

These three cakes are then covered with another napkin; and various little plates and saucers, seemingly abstracted from some toy tea-set, are placed on it. One of these contains the roasted shank-bone of a lamb, a sad remembrance of better days, when the paschal lamb was still annually offered up at Jerusalem. As the Jews think it unlawful to eat the paschal lamb out of Jerusalem, this bone is now all that represents this ceremony. By it is placed a little vessel with bitter herbs (Ex. xii.8,) and a cup of salt water, into which they are dipped. Another with green herbs—lettuce generally—to indicate the season of the year. Contiguous to it is a paste made of the pounded apples, almonds, etc., seasoned with various spices, in remembrance of the hardships their forefathers had to endure in making bricks for the Egyptians. This mixture is supposed to resemble the mortar. A roasted egg completes the arrangement of the dish. Covers are then laid for all the members of the family, [Hebrew] domestics included; and a cup or wine glass placed for each, and by its side a Gahdah, a book containing the ritual for this night. A superfluous cup for Elijah will be explained in the sequel.

The male members of the family now return from the synagogue; and the spectacle now presented to their wondering gaze is very imposing, the more so from its novelty. After a brief general survey the father blesses his children, each separately, and so, also, afterwards, does the mother, as explained in my chapter on the Sabbath. After one or two hymns are chanted, they all sit down to the table, and open their gahdahs, and, looking at the unleavened bread on the table, commence to recite, in a chanting tone, in Hebrew of course, "Behold this bread of misery! but such as it is, let all strangers and needy come and partake of it freely," etc. All the cups are then filled with wine. This is everywhere most strictly observed, even by the poorest.

In this ritual every family is supposed to have within its bosom one or more individuals representing either of the four following characters: the wise or philosophical, the wicked, ungodly or heterodox, the pious or orthodox, and the simpleton, who is indifferent to everything. These four characters are assumed by four boys, or some other members of the family. The first asks, "wherefore are all these things? what mean all these ceremonies?" The second or ungodly ridicules them, and inquires: "Of what use is all this nonsense?" The third, or pious, is willing to believe everything handed down through his fathers, nothing doubting. With the fourth—who displays no curiosity, and who is called, "he who knows not how to ask anything"—the father is bidden to open a conversation on the, at present, all-important subject of the exodus. To answer all these inquiries, then, the whole family proceed to read the whole history of their forefathers, from the death of Jacob to Miriams' song of triumph, after the passage of the Red Sea; specially arranged for this night's service, and everywhere interspersed with praises and thanksgiving to God.

At stated intervals, the reading is interrupted by the bitter herbs being dipped into the salt water. Hence, into the above mentioned paste, and distributed to the household. One of the cakes of unleavened broad on the centre dish is then broken in two, and one-half of it is placed between the cushions, while the other half is distributed among the company. Wine is drank four times during the evening; the cups must be replenished after each bibulation, though but little should have been drunk. Elijah is supposed to lend his auspicious presence at this service or Seder, as it is called; and, on this evening, hospitality is even extended to invisible beings, and in every Jewish family, all the world over a cup is placed and filled for the Prophet; and some of the boys take his turn, whenever the cup must be tasted.

The whole evening service is divided into two parts, in the interval of which, the centre-dish is removed, and a plentiful supper is partaken of, preceded, however, by the consecration of the holidays over the wine cup, as is the case on every Sabbath-eve. Immediately after supper, the centre dish is replaced; the door is opened for Elijah to enter, and while open, they repeat the maledictions contained in Psalm LXXIX. 6. It is but just to say, however, that no especial meaning is now attached to them, nor are they applied to any nation or people. Whenever the door was opened, we boys all felt very solemn, not without some modified dread or suspicious awe, lest the old Prophet should really and bodily pay us a visit. The chance, however, we knew, was very small, as he was pressed by so many thousands of similar, and simultaneous invitations; nevertheless, our little heads were busy in imagination, anticipating the probable features, and apparel of the venerable Thisbite. I think I could tell the precise length and color of the beard I always attributed to him. I did not use to like the idea of opening the door for him; but then after a moment's reflection, I would say: "Who's afraid?" and throw it open most heroically.

After the door is closed again, they proceed to repeat the Hallelujah psalms; several hymns of a cabalistical, i. e. very foolish and nonsensical import, are then sung, and the exercises of the evening are to be closed by eating a small portion of the half of the unleavened cake that was hid under the cushions. But this piece is nowhere to be found! Again and again it is looked for, between the several cushions, but in vain! The father, then, looks round the table inquiringly, and soon detects the thief by his roguish smile. It must be known that it is a time-honored custom for one of the boys to hide this half cake, and not to deliver it to the father, till he promises some present, such as a new coat, hat, etc., whereupon it soon makes its appearance. After partaking of this, nothing further must be eaten or drunk this evening. What remains of this half of the cake, is preserved till next year, and by old women is supposed to possess various virtues, such as Papists attribute to their relics. It is burned with the crumbs on the eve of Passover, as described in my last. Before concluding, they say: "This year we are bondmen; the next we shall be free; this year we are here; the coming year we shall be in Jerusalem!"

The institution of the Lord's Supper, doubtless, took place about this time; as it corresponds very nearly with the latter part of these exercises. After the fourth cup is drank, no more must be tasted that night as above-mentioned; and Christ said: "I will not drink of the fruit of the wine, until the kingdom of God shall come." He then gave them bread, also above described. I have, moreover, no doubt that the sop that Christ gave to Judas (John xiii., 26,) was the same as is here described as bitter herbs, which were dipped into salt-water. The hymn mentioned in Mark xiv., 26, which the margin calls a psalm, was most likely one or more of the psalms above-mentioned as hallelujah psalms, and which now extend from the 113th to the 118th inclusive. From all this we may conclude that some, if not all, of the present ceremonies observed on the eve of the Passover, were in use in the time of our Saviour, and they become venerable and endeared to us from his having given them the sanction of his august presence and from his participation in them; and more specially, from his having commemorated them by instituting in their stead the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. He being the great antitype of the paschal lamb, once offered up for all, did away with the necessity of annually renewing this sacrifice. Let us be truly thankful to him for it, and each one of us endeavor to have a personal interest in the atonement thus provided for us.

This night and the night following are called Lel Shemurim, or "night of watchfulness," as they think all Israel is on these nights under the especial care of God, the great Watcher and Keeper of his people; and I have heard it stated that no death or other misfortune ever occurs on these nights—at least, so it is believed.

Before the family retires, Elijah's cup, which was not emptied at the fourth drinking, is left on the table, together with a piece of "mitzoth, (the thicker unleavened bread,) after everything else has been removed; so that if the Thisbite should come during the night, he may find the wherewithal he may regale himself.

I shall now close this long article with a true story, which took place on one of these seder-nights. The adventure happened to the father of the writer, who used to tell it to his children on every recurring Passover-eve. When a young man, and on his travels, his host requested him to take a bed in the room where these ceremonies had taken place, it being customary in certain countries for some one to sleep in the room—to wait on Elijah, perhaps. A light is also kept burning all night through. About midnight, he dreamt Elijah had come, and was making a meal of the "mitzoth;" he gradually awoke, and thought he heard some noise in the room, and when he was sufficiently awake to take a sober survey of the room, he saw to his amazement Elijah's large unleavened cake marched along the floor! He looked again and again, rubbed his eyes, and fain would have persuaded himself that he was still dreaming, but this consolation was not allowed him. He at length summoned up sufficient courage to rise and examine the apparently invisible motive power of the cake, when, what do you think he found? Why nothing but a very respectable little quadruped, vulgarly denominated mouse! This solved the miracle with a vengeance, and I should not be surprised if he found himself somewhat skeptical as to the bodily re-appearance of Elijah.

In my next article, I hope to close my somewhat extended remarks on the Passover, and meanwhile must pray my readers not to the end.

JOSEPHUS.

Columbia, S. C.

REPORT OF THE BIBLE COMMITTEE.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

The committee to whom was referred the Bible Cause, beg leave to report:

They have received no communication from the Bible Agent or Agents within the bounds of our Conference, giving an account of what has been accomplished for this most catholic cause. Neither have they received as definite an account as desirable from the preachers of this Conference of the amounts collected in their several charges, for the diffusion of the Word of Life among us. But while the cause has not met with that encouragement demanded at our hands, yet we rejoice that something has been done, signifying thereby our consciousness of its being the cause of God.

From the various reports which have been made by the American Bible Society, we find great encouragement to give our continued and most hearty approval of its operations. For within the last year it has been enabled to publish one hundred and thirty-three thousand three hundred and fifty-five copies, and collected thirty-seven thousand seven hundred and ninety-seven dollars over any preceding year. The reports also inform us of the increased demands within our own country upon the Society for a supply of God's Holy Word, while the cry of millions of perishing heathens falls with unresisting power upon their ears.

The revolutions that have taken place, and are now continually occurring in the Eastern Hemisphere, especially demand our serious consideration. It is no longer a problem that the nations of the earth may read and learn the Will of God concerning them in their own language. For the Society, following the indications of Divine Providence, have already translated the Bible into multiplied scores of languages, which have been greeted by those thus favored with feelings of a thrilling character.

Can we then, whose souls have shared in emotions of heavenly joy, from scanning the sacred page, misinterpret those feelings? If, from meditations in the law of the Lord, it becomes our delight, both day and night, and proves a lamp to our feet and a light to our path; and if the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether, and if Jehovah is to be known by all the earth, to be feared, and if indeed the Scriptures are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction and instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto every good work, should we not then exert our influence in diffusing among the ignorant and degraded nations of the earth so sacred a treasure, so heavenly a light and so powerful an agent designed by the God of heaven for the enlightenment of the world upon those subjects which make for its peace and happiness?

And especially should this subject interest us just now, when the fact is considered that the Roman Catholic community are lending all their energies, doubly renewed, backed by the authority of the Supreme Pontiff himself, not only to prevent the free and full circulation of the Scriptures, but also to prevent their being read in schools and families. Are not these facts portentous of evils of the greatest magnitude? And shall we slumber at our posts while the enemy is making such aggressive movements in our midst? Blind and recreant must be that Protestant that could sleep on his arms when such a foe is in our midst. Let us awake then and take us to the rescue, while it is called to-day, ere the night of papal tyranny and oppression overtakes us and bind us in its relentless folds.

The committee cannot well close their report without adverting to the death of our beloved Pollock, appointed at our last session, as Bible Agent within the bounds of the Alabama Conference. Short was his stay, but well was his work performed while life and strength remained. For soon his work was accomplished, when his Master called him from his labors on earth, to higher and more glorious refreshments in heaven.

But to a body of Christian ministers it is entirely unnecessary to attempt a vindication of the value of the Holy Scriptures to convert the world and save it from its impending ruin.

Therefore, in view of the subject under consideration, we offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we will, as far as practicable, in the month of June, take up collections not otherwise provided for, in our several charges, for this cause; and that the Presiding Elders be and are hereby requested to exert their influence to see this resolution carried into effect.

Resolved, That in view of the scarcity of ministers in our Conference, we, if thought practicable, recommend Brother Wm. H. C. Price to the favorable consideration of the managers of the American Bible Society, as a suitable person to act as agent within the bounds of the Alabama Conference.

Resolved, That each preacher having charge of work be required to keep an exact account, as near as possible, of collections made among our own congregations, so as to report the same more definitely at our next Conference.

Signed, J. A. CLEMENT,
A. McBRYDE,
A. J. COLEMAN,
Committee.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

SUNDAY SCHOOL REPORT.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

That wisdom unto which all things are known from the beginning, the remotest results of all actions perceived, has declared that if we "train up a child in the way he should go, when he is old he will not depart from it." It assures us that the pious training of children shall not be lost. The fascinations of the world may for awhile charm the spirit thus trained into forgetfulness of its eternal interests—the pleasures of sin entice it from the path of duty—association with the unbelieving and the ungodly, may blunt the moral sensibilities and lead the soul far away from God, and the stirring pursuits of life may temporarily absorb the whole man: nevertheless, the holy culture of the infant mind shall not prove fruitless. Though through long years its fruits be not visible, and it seems lost in oblivion, yet in the still hour of reflection, which must come to all, the heart will turn sadly from the empty joys of earth, as the prodigal from the husks that the swine did eat, and will feel that these fill not its immortal longings; and in that hour thrilling memories of the past will rush with power over the piously trained mind. It will live again in thought its infant innocence; the home of childhood looms up behind intervening years with beautiful freshness: the sainted mother, perhaps long since in her angel-home, seems now with tearful eye to speak to us again in softest tones of love, while with throbbing hearts we look earnestly into her sweet face as she tells us how Jesus loved little children and took them up in his arms, laid his hands upon them and blessed them; how he was nailed to the cross for us and died for us, and what holy wonders there are in the blessed land beyond the stars; and our tiny hands seem once more clasped as we repeat the sweet prayer of childhood falling from a mother's holy lips. Memory recalls vividly that venerated father as he read from the old family Bible, hymned the praise divine, and then knelt in solemn prayer invoking blessings on his loved ones.

The Sabbath School to which we had so joyfully hasted—the kind teacher, the early lessons, the holy child-like lecture of the man of God, and the gentle encouraging word he gave each of us to be a good child—all arise before us and bitter tears of repentance over these holy instructions so sadly neglected, flow freely. This holy training, like the healthful streams of a lofty fountain, flows on secretly beneath the overlying sins of riper years, only to burst forth with increased power, at a more advanced point in life's journey.

Nor are these the best hopes we may cherish of the effect of training up children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. No; there are multitudes who, like Timothy, from a child have known the holy Scriptures, and this knowledge has not been buried beneath a superincumbent load of guilt, but like the youthful Samuel, they have heard the word of God, and cried, "Speak Lord for thy servant heareth." What though our children be by nature "children of wrath," and though they live in a world whose multitudes move in the broad way, their path beset by subtle and malignant fiends, in whose wiles they are unexperienced. Nevertheless, we need not fear that holy training, in the comprehensive sense of the term, will prove profitless. No; that Savior who so touchingly took little children in his arms and blessed them, still lives, and is "the same yesterday, to-day and forever"; upon the throne of the universe, and in all the outgoings of His omnipotence, he is unchanged, and in the invisible arms of infinite love He will again and ever bless little children. The good Shepherd can never cast away the lambs from his bosom. The vast variety of earthly objects cannot so bewilder and absorb the attention of the child of pious care, as to make him wholly unmindful of gospel truths. The silent voices of the stars eloquently proclaim to his youthful heart, not yet deafened by the hum of business strife, worlds of beauty and love above them. The artless wish expressed by children for the more perfect powers and joys of the dwellers in that heavenly world, evinces a half-awakened consciousness that some fearful moral disaster has swept away from us a vast inheritance, the intended gift of our Great Father. These truths exist not in the infant mind in well-defined logical forms, but rather in the half-smothered cries of the soul for the restoration of its lost treasure. This childlike of the heart then, with the confiding simplicity of childhood, not yet tutored by severe experience to guard against falsehood, makes the youthful mind a rich soil for the seed of truth, from which the sower may gather some thirty, some an hundred fold. Let us do our duty then to the rising generation, and perchance in countless instances we shall discover that there is a closer approximation to the infant John the Baptist, "who was filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb," than we had deemed possible. Life's eras are linked in an unbroken chain, "the child is father to the man," and though the holy influences shed upon youth may sometimes flow through long subterraneous channels, beneath a wasted life, to spring forth with fertilizing beauty near the passages of the Jordan; yet not unfrequently do they convert the entire life into a garden of the Lord, blooming in holy beauty, and rich with celestial fruit.

The fact then being established, that effort for the salvation of children is more certainly and richly recompensed than labors for the salvation of maturer age, the question arises what is our duty in the premises. We need not say that our duty does not lessen the responsibility of parents. Let them, like Abraham, "command their children to keep the way of the Lord, and do justice and judgment," if they would rest "in Abraham's bosom."

Nor does the most faithful discharge of ministerial duty to children, aside from the Sabbath School, supersede the necessity for calling into energetic operation this noble auxiliary of the church, in caring for her lambs. The more regular observance of the Lord's day, the worship of the Sabbath School, the study and recitation of the lessons, with the kind instructions of the teacher, and that without which the cap stone of the work is wanting, namely, the frequent simple lectures of the Pastor—these tell well upon youthful immortals. In truth, to the Sabbath School the world is largely indebted, for the evidently rapid spread of the spiritual heaven in the mind of our age, and for the numerous missionary heroes who have gone forth as the advance guard of God's Israel, to plant the standard of the cross in the kingdoms of darkness. From the Sabbath School have gone forth a host of statesmen, warriors, philanthropists, and mighty men, to enthrone Christianity in the high places of the earth. To the economy of Methodism, which like Levi hath borne the holy fire for the twelve tribes, the Sabbath School is of essential importance. It is true, that to our fathers, who bore the unsearchable riches of Christ to the log cabin of the hardy pioneer, through interminable wilds, where mingled the wild scream of the panther, with the still more savage war whoop, the Sabbath School was of relatively less moment; but to the successors of these heroic men, and in lands long laid under tribute to civilization, where numerous cities adorn our State, and hosts of scientific men come forth annually from the halls of science, and richest inventions abound, and society has taken settled forms, the Sabbath School is indispensable to our very existence. If we do not with enlarged views care, in their earlier years, for those who were baptized into our Church, we shall have the meagre satisfaction of seeing them turn with disdain from the simple spiritual beauty of Methodism to a more gorgeous ritual; or to some easier style of religion, which will lay stress upon some one or more of its forms, to the neglect of more vital truths; or to the adoption of some theory of Christianity, which will not so strictly require them to "be not conformed to this world, but to be transformed by the renewing of their minds, that they may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." But we hope better things of the itinerant ministry, though we thus speak; and we do most sincerely congratulate this Conference that the man who presides over the Sabbath School Publications of our Church, does most efficiently recognize in our children our future statesmen and philanthropists, and ministers, and heirs with us of the promise of eternal life, as the generation to which unborn ages will be indebted for the transmission of all that is useful, wise, holy, and glorious among us.

The beautiful, profound, and simple works prepared by Dr. Summers, which are so well adapted to nurture the mind of childhood in holy wisdom, and to impart instruction to riper age, are worthy of all praise. We may but briefly notice them.

"The Questions on Genesis" will guide the inquiring mind successfully into the discovery of the secret riches of wisdom and holy wonders of that first of the books of the Lord—that book which is the sole chronicle in our possession of the earliest ages of mankind—of the achievements of the giant antediluvians, and the faithful record of post-diluvian distribution of families and of patriarchal life, progression and covenants—the only book which describes the beauty and harmony of the newly formed world, over which the sons of God shouted for joy; whose truths are the firm foundation for the glorious superstructure of Revelation, thereafter builded up and finished by prophets and apostles. This book of "Questions" should be in the possession of all.

We trust the Editor's labors in this direction will be extended over the entire Bible. Indigenous Bible literature of this description, will be hailed with great satisfaction throughout our Zion.

The glow of pleasure we feel in contemplating the sweet, holy and instructive Hymn Book of our Church, will be increased on seeing the same excellence connected with numerous delightful hymns on early piety, and for the various exercises of the Sabbath School, in the "Hymns for Schools and Families," just edited in cheap style by Dr. Summers. It is worthy of universal acceptation.

"The Sunday School Teacher" is the very essence of thorough research into the history of Sundry School operations, and into the qualifications demanded for, and the character of Sunday School exercises. It is truly "multum in parvo." An indifference to this work would reveal the want of qualifications for the post of a Sunday School teacher, and much more for the office of a pastor of the flock of God. The editing of Wesley's approved Sermons in tract form, and these again neatly bound and in cheap style, with entirely new and valuable indexes, and a faithful restoration of the purity of the original Wesleyan standard text, confers a benefit upon mankind, and places within easy access to the religious world, Sermons, which are the nearest approach, in the whole range of homiletic literature, to the simple majesty of Christ's Sermon on the Mount. The happy faces of thousands of our children, upon the distribution of the Sunday School Visitor, and the profit we have all derived from its pages, are a sufficient testimony of its worth. Would that its light were more widely diffused. That a livelier interest in the Sabbath School department of ministerial duty must be awakened, facts abundantly demonstrate. How shall this desideratum be obtained? To do this effectually, it will be necessary to devote an evening during the sessions of our annual Conference, exclusively to Sabbath School interests. An energetic Agent in the field also, in imitation of the Georgia Conference—a man of God, whose heart is in the work, to travel throughout the bounds of our Conference, to lecture and point out the most judicious mode of conducting the Schools, to preach in our congregations upon the subject, to organize Sabbath Schools wherever necessary, and to report to this Conference the striking excellencies or defects in the Sunday School management in any portion of our work, would give a powerful impetus to this work.

The Sunday School Editor, for sufficient reasons, does not think it necessary to ask the Conference to order collections to be taken up for the publication interests during the present year.

The Sunday School statistics which follow, will not allow us to show the gratifying increase of interest which we think more perfect returns would afford. There are reported to us in the Alabama Conference:

Schools, 237; Superintendents, 259; Teachers, 1159; Scholars, 8394; Volumes, 2,989; Visitors, 1708; Monies for Home, $1076,30; Monies for Publications, $456,53.

Delicacy forbids us to commend by name the example of a certain brother, who reported twenty-one Schools in his circuit, for the imitation of the brethren.

We are sorry to add that we have no report of Schools from twenty-nine fields of labor; six of these have schools; twenty-three are reported to have none. We would kindly ask the Shepherds of these, how have they obeyed the injunction of the Great Shepherd, "feed my lambs?"

From the foregoing considerations, your Committee respectfully recommend to this Conference the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, that on an evening during the session of our Conference, a meeting be held to promote the Sunday School interests, a collection be taken up, and two speakers appointed at each Conference to deliver suitable addresses on the occasion, at the ensuing Conference.

Resolved, secondly, that we recommend the appointment, if practicable, of a Sunday School Agent, to stir up this interest throughout our bounds.

Resolved, thirdly, that this Conference will circulate in all our Sunday Schools the works prepared for them by Dr. Summers, particularly those within named.

Resolved, fourthly, that the preachers of this Conference shall be held derelict to duty, who will not organize Sunday Schools wherever practicable; and visit, lecture and encourage in the pulpit and otherwise, the existing Sunday Schools.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

E. J. HAMILL,
CHARLES STRIDER.
W. J. POWERS.

ETERNAL LAMPS.

When we hear the word Lamp, we involuntarily recall that beloved lamp of our childhood, burning in the secret mountain-cavern, and throwing its magic radiance over so many of our winter nights—the wonderful Lamp of Aladdin; or we enter in imagination the Chapel of the Nativity at Bethlehem, where the many golden and jeweled luminaries, presents from Kings and Emperors, hang like low stars within their own rich twilight; or we think of the lamps borne before the bride and bridegroom in ancient Judea, like the Torch of Hymen, at the weddings of old Greece and Rome—or of those seven crystal vessels of supernatural flame which St. George found in the enchanted castle, and which he extinguished by means of a goblet of precious liquor, to the instantaneous and utter destruction of that place of illusions. By the help of the same word, moreover, we can, if it so pleases us, penetrate into that mosque in the city of Fez, where nine hundred brazen lamps are said to burn every night; or can travel into the obscure antiquity of Egypt (the native country of these artificial illuminators, as some think), and be present at the Feast of Lamps there held annually, according, as Herodotus reports. Our present business, however, is not with any of these; but rather with that "bright consumate flower" of all lamps—the lamp which burns perpetually.

There are two kinds of Eternal Lamps—one which is said to be found in tombs, and one which the Rosicrucians and other mystical philosophers conceived they could make, and which was to be of use to them in their scientific experiments. Of the former kind we hear more frequently and have fuller accounts, than of the latter. The poet Cowley, in a note on this subject, expresses an opinion that the oldest of sepulchral lamps came from the East, where there was such infinite expense and curiosity bestowed upon sepulchres." Be this as it may, it is chiefly in connection with ancient Roman tombs that we read of the discovery of Eternal Lamps. According to the belief once entertained, the Romans placed these lights in the mausoleums of their friends and relations, as a mark of honor; here it was asserted they continued burning without any waste, and in defiance of ordinary natural laws, as long as the air was excluded from them; but, immediately upon the opening of the tomb, the rare and apparently supernatural flame was extinguished. The circumstance furnished Cowley with a simile in describing the violent death of Ammon by the hand of Jonathan:

> 'Twixt his right ribs deep pierced the furious blade,
> And open'd wide those secret vessels where > Life's light goes out when first they let in air.

It is affirmed that, about the middle of the sixteenth century, during the pontificate of Paul III., an ancient tomb was discovered in the Via Appia; which, from the inscription upon it, was supposed to be the burial-place of Cicero's daughter Tullia. In this sepulchre was found the body of a woman, with her hair done up in tresses, and tied with a golden thread; also a lighted lamp, which, if the story were true, must have been burning for at least one thousand five hundred and fifty years. But this admirable spectacle did not last long. The contents of the mausoleum were no sooner influenced by the exterior air, than the light extinguished itself; and the body—fading like a ghost before the eyes of the beholders—fell into a heap of formless dust.

Between four and five centuries previous to this, a lamp, which had been burning for a still longer period, is said to have been unearthed in a tomb supposed to contain the body of Pallas, the son of Evander, mentioned by Virgil. It must have been lying there for above two thousand two hundred years. A countrymen in the neighborhood of Rome, happening to dig a little deeper than usual in his field, came upon the body of a man taller than the city wall, and enclosed in a stone coffin, with an inscription establishing the identity of the corpse. An immense gash, measuring four feet and a half, was in the middle of the breast—the very gash inflicted by the spear of Turnus; and over the head there was a burning lamp. William of Malmesbury, whose history contains an account of this matter, says that the lamp was "constructed by magical art; so that no violent blast, no dripping of water, could extinguish it. While many were lost in admiration at this, one person (as there are always some people expert in mischief) made an aperture beneath the flame with an iron style, which, introducing the air, the light vanished." Some days afterwards, "the body being drenched with the drip of the eves, acknowledged the corruption common to mortals; the skin and the nerves dissolving." Considering that Pallas is a somewhat doubtful historical character, and that there are good reasons for believing that men taller than the city walls have never existed, it is perhaps unnecessary to add that it would be exercising no great amount of scepticism to discredit this narrative, Eternal Lamp and all.

Solinus, a Latin writer who lived in the first century of the Christian era, tells us that a light was found in a tomb, which had burnt there above fifteen centuries, and which fell into dust in the hands of those who took it up. It is said that several of these lamps have been discovered in the territory of Viterbo in Italy; of which that of Olybius Maximus of Pedum is the most celebrated. This had remained burning for fifteen hundred years—which, by the by, appears to be the favorite allotment of time in these matters. Two phials, one of gold, the other of silver, both filled with an admirably clear liquor, nourished, without any sensible diminution, a lamp placed between them, or, as some say, under them. But whether this, like the others, expired "when first they let in air," deponent sayeth not.

Hitherto we have spoken only of Italy; but it appears that our own country has had the honor of producing these phenomena. "It is reported," says Bailey in his English Dictionary, (1730,) "that, at the dissolution of monasteries, in the time of King Henry VIII., there was a lamp found that had been burnt in a tomb from about three hundred years after Christ, which was near twelve hundred years. Two of these subterranean lamps," he adds, "are to be seen in the Museum of Rarities at Leyden, in Holland;" Rarities indeed! But did they continue to burn in the Museum? or had their eternity come to an end?

The existence of these stories probably suggested an image to Shakspeare's mind in that solemn address of Pericles over the supposed dead body of his queen, which he is about to consign to the ocean:

> Where, for a monument upon thy bones,
> And age-resisting lamps, the belching whale,
> And humming water must o'erwhelm thy corpse,
> Lying with simple shells. [Act III., Sc. I.

Spenser also has an Eternal Lamp—not, however, in connection with death, but with a wedding:

> His owne two hands the holy knotts did knitt,
> That none but death for ever can divide;
> His owne two hands, for such a time most fitt,
> The nousling fire* did kindle and provide,
> And holy water thereon sprinckled wide;
> At which the bushy teade† a groome did light,
> And sacred lamp in secret chamber bide,
> Where it should not be quenched day nor night,
> For feare of evill fates, but burnen ever bright.
> [Book I., c. 12, v. 5.

Upon says that Spenser here "seems to allude to the mystical meaning of the Wise Virgins' lamps in the parable, which, like the typical fire in Levit. vi., 'shall ever be burning upon the altar of love; 'shall never go out.'" But it ought to have been added, that in this case special directions are given that the fire shall be supplied with fuel.

Would the reader like to know the composition of Eternal Lamps. We are in possession of two or three receipts, which we do not mind imparting to him. According to some authorities they are made of the oiliness of gold, resolved by art into a liquid substance. That is one way. Oil of gold is no doubt obtainable at any chemist's shop; if not, write to some friend or relation at the Australian or California diggins. Another method has been set forth, from personal experiment, by Tithemius, a learned German ecclesiastic of the fifteenth century. He assures us that he had himself made an oil of flour of brimstone, borax, and spirit of wine which burnt many years without wasting. It does not appear, however, that it would burn an indefinite number of years; so that, after all, this was not an Eternal Lamp. Athanasius Kircher, a philosophical German Jesuit, who lived about two hundred years ago, and who has written a great deal on the subject of lamps, speaks of a way to reduce the flame back into wax, so as to keep up a perpetual supply; which would certainly be economical. The inconsumable wick is to be of asbestos. And here it may be remarked that lamps with asbestos wicks have in fact been made; which, as far as the wicks themselves were concerned, have had some appearance of immortality. That this singular mineral has the power of resisting the action of fire is perfectly well known; although it is probable that some slight diminution in weight does really take place, which would necessarily end at length in the destruction of the substance. The same author mentions a chemical preparation of gold, which is thereby rendered spongy, is called Salmender's wool, and which he also recommends as a material for wicks. Fortunio Liceto, a Genoese physician of the seventeenth century, who strenuously contended for the possibility of Eternal Lamps, says: that the ancients had a secret of making an inconsumable oil, or of constructing their lamps in such a manner that, as they burned, the smoke condensed insensibly, and resolved itself into oil again. This looks like an anticipation of those modern stoves which consume their own smoke, and by means of which, and Lord Palmerston's Bill, we may hope to see the air of London purified. Liceto contends that everlasting fires burning on the altars of some of the pagan divinities were of the same nature as Eternal Lamps; but it is well known that these fires were sedulously maintained by their appointed guardians, and that the punishment of death was ordained for letting them expire.

Our countryman, Friar Bacon, believed in the possibility of making lamps that should burn forever; and even the scientific Dr. Plott, who died as late as the year one thousand six hundred and ninety-six, entertained the same opinion. He proposed asbestos as the material for the wick. Indeed he conceived that to be the only possible substance for the purpose, and that its failure would be a proof, either that Perpetual Lamps are altogether fabulous, or that the ancients made them without wicks. For the fluid which is to support the life of the flame, he suggested naphtha, or liquid bitumen, which will burn without a wick; and thought that a trial might be made of the bitumen springing into the coal mines at Pitchford, in Shropshire. This is in fact a shrewd guess in the direction of gas lamps; though the gas-contractors will tell you that for a perpetual light there must be a perpetual supply. It is quite certain, however, that a species of illumination may be produced which will continue for a great length of time without any fresh material for combustion. In a book of chemical and other scientific experiments, printed not many years ago, we find the following directions for making a lamp that will burn twelve months without replenishing: "Take a stick of phosphorus, and put it into a large dry phial, and corked, and it will afford a light sufficient to discern any object in a room, when held near it, and will continue its luminous appearance, for more than twelve months." It is possible that the Rosicrucian philosophers possessed some such knowledge as this, and so deluded their more ignorant contemporaries.

On the sceptical side of the question, Otterio Ferrari, who lived in the same century with Liceto, wrote a work, printed at Padua, in sixteen hundred and eighty-five, entitled Dissertatio de Veterum Lucernis Sepulchralibus. In this treatise he contends, "that the use of sepulchral lamps cannot be of such standing in Italy as is pretended; because they used to burn their dead, and put the ashes in urns of such narrow necks that a lamp could not be got into them." He then endeavors to prove that there cannot be a perpetual flame either by means of the oil or wick.

*Sacramental fire. †Torch.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The best mode, as it seems to us, of accounting for the phenomenon, has been put forth in the Ana of Vigneul Marville, where we find the following: "It happens frequently when antiquarians are searching by torchlight old sepulchres which they have opened, that thick vapors, produced by decomposition of the bodies, become ignited at the approach of the flame, to the great astonishment of the attendants, who have more than once shouted a miracle. This sudden effect is quite natural; but it has occasioned the belief that these flames proceed from Perpetual Lamps." At the same time extinguished lamps may really have been discovered, which, of course, would aid the delusion.

Rosencrantz, the supposed founder of the Rosicrucian sect, is said to have made an Eternal Lamp, which was discovered some years after his death, in a subterranean vault where he lay buried. This story, (which is a sort of improved edition of the legends relating to the alleged burial-places of Tullio and Pallas,) is thus related in number three hundred and seventy-nine of Addison's Spectator:

"A certain person, having occasion to dig somewhat deep in the ground, met with a small door having a wall on each side of it. His curiosity, and the hopes of finding some hidden treasure, soon prompted him to force open the door. He was immediately surprised by a sudden blaze of light, and discovered a very fair vault. At the upper end of it was a statue of a man in armour, sitting by a table and leaning on his left arm. He held a truncheon in his right hand, and had a lamp burning before him. The man had no sooner set one foot within the vault, than the statue erected itself from its leaning posture, stood bolt upright, and upon the fellow's advancing another step, lifted up the truncheon in his right hand. The man still ventured a third step; when the statue with a furious blow broke the lamp into a thousand pieces, and left his guest in a sudden darkness. Upon the report of this adventure, the country people soon came with lights to the sepulchre, and discovered that the statue, which was made of brass, was nothing more than a piece of clock-work; that the floor of the vault was all loose, and underlaid with several springs, which, upon any man's entering naturally produced that which had happened. Rosicrucious, say his disciples, made use of this method to show the world that he had re-invented the ever-burning lamps of the ancients; though he was resolved no one should reap any advantage from the discovery."

An editlon of the Spectator, published hy the Tonsons in seventeen hundred and sixty-seven, has a frontispiece hy Hayman, illustrative of this story. The statue in armour stands with uplifted truncheon—the mysterious lamp hangs by long chains from the sullen vault—the recumbent figure of the tomh sleeps in white repose beneath the enchanted radiance—the perspective of heavy arches recede into the gloom—the sepulchral urn is seen ln a niche overhead—and the scared man enters at the doorway.

In Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy a lamp is mentioned which is to burn as long as the man with whom it has a certain mystical connection continues to live. This lamp (according to Burgravius, a disciplé of Paracelsus, from whom Burton quotes) is to be made of man's blood; which, chemically prepared forty days, and afterwards kept in a glass, shall show all the accidents of this life: if the lamp burn brightly, then the man is cheerful and healthy in mind and body; if, on the other hand, he from whom the blood is taken be melancholic or a spendthrift, then it will burn dimly, and flicker in the sockst; and—most wonderful of all—it goes out when he dies. A lamp is described in the old romance of "Virgillue," a singular chronicle of the magical feats and works of superhuman sclence, attributed by the middle ages to Virgil the poet. The story is worth quoting at length, as a really grand fiction, and as a fine specimen of old English.

"For profit of the common people," says the history, "Virgilius on a great mighty marble pillar did make a bridge that came up to the palace; that palace and the pillar stood in the mid of Rome; and upon this pillar made he a lamp of glass that always burned without going out, and nobody might put it out; and this lamp lighted over all the city of Rome from one corner to the other, and there was not so little a street but it gave such light that it seemed two torches there had stand; and upon the walls of the palace made he a metal man that held in his hand a metal bow that pointed ever upon the lamp for to shoot it out, but always burned the lamp, and gave light over all Rome. And upon a time went the burgesses' daughters to play in the palace and beheld the metal man; and one of them asked, in sport, why he shot not; and then she came to the man, and with her hand touched the bow, and then the bolt flew out, and brake the lamp that Virgilius made; and it was wonder that the maiden went not out of her mind for the great fear she had, and also the other burgesses' daughters that were in her company, of the great stroke that it gave when it hit the lamp, and when they saw the metal man so swiftly run his way; and never after was he no more seen. And this foresaid lamp was abiding burning after the death of Virgilius by the space of three hundrd years or more."

After all, to what does an Eternal Lamp amount even on the shewing of its believers? Merely to something whose perpetuity is leased upon chance, and which accident or mischief may at any time bring to a sndden and finol stop.

The Little Worlds.—The multitndinous, or microcosms of which the world called society is made up, would form delicious subjects for the metaphysical cosmologist to enlarge npon, if there were time enough in the longest life to look into their various structures, movements, histories and relations to each other. But the interval that separates first from second childhood is too short for the accomplishment of the task: in fact, it is as much as most people can do to master the cosmology of the especial worlds in which they severally live and move, within the short space between life's vestibule and its back door—the grave. Nevertheless, in "circulating" among these little worlds, the quick observer notes a good deal that is suggestive and instructive, and, if a cynic and a humorist, he finds plenty of material for pasquinades and sly shots at folly on the wing.

There is the world of letters. What a heterogeneous world it is, with its men of genius and of gammon—its immortals and its ephemera—its writers against time and for all ages—its prophet poets and its poets for profit—its philosophers and its puff-mongers—its strong drivers into the sea of knowledge, who bring up pearls at every plunge, and its mere swallows that skim the surface of that sea, and scatter from it a few dazzling drops that vanish with the passing moment. Like the general world, it has its wholesale spoilers, its pirates, its petty thieves, its swindlers, its charlatans, and its dupes. Its great are plundered of their ideas by false plagiarists and paper-staining pickpockets, and there are always "fences" in the shape of "enterprising publishers" at hand, ready to receive the "swag" after it has been so mutilated and disfigured that the original owners would be ashamed to swear to it. Among all the rascals included in the census of rascality, there is none more contemptible than the brain-robber, who, without a presentable idea of his own, lives by stealing the thoughts of others. The literary world is composed of originators, adapters, dissectors, imitators, thieves, and humbugs, and we regret to say the nobler orders of originators, adapters, and dissectors, are few in comparison with the canaille. [N. Y. Sunday Times.

Dreams.—I have thought a hundred times that if I had wings and no specific gravity, I would soar just so far upward, that I could see the even glimmer o'er the edge of the earth, and, at the same time against its motion on its axis, would hold myself in such a position that for a whole year long I could look into the mild, bread eye of the evening sun. But at length I would sink down drunk with splendor, like a bee over fed with honey, in sweet delirium on the grass. [Jean Paul Richter.

Religious Fanaticism.—A man named James Brady, a Protestant, got into a dispute with a couple of Italians, who were Catholics, in a lodging house in Coral street, New York, on the 26th, upon religious subjects. At length one of the Italians became so excited that he drew a knife and stabbed Brady in the left side, exclaiming as he did so, "You are a d—d Protestant," and then fled.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, January 7.

Bishop Andrew.—This gentleman passed through the city on Wednesday, from Texas Conference. The health of his family did not allow him to spend any time here.

New Paper.—We heartily welcome to the list of city exchangee the Semi-weekly Creole. Business-like in appearance, and vigorous in style, this sheet takes the right side on general questions, and handles local ones in a way that promises n correction of time-honored abuses in our municipal administration.

New Anvertisements.—We invite those especially that serve our readers as a directory to the best schools in the Sonth. Our advertising colnmns are rich in these already. Parents and guardians would do well to consult them. The terms are reasonable, as published. For those schools that advertise by the year we deduct fifty per cent; a premium offered to no other class of advertisements, because we like to bring the teacher and the student together.

Two important ones are added this week. President Wiley makes a tempting offer to young men of the right sort. This college has one hundred and twenty students. President Deeme leaves those going farther North without excuse. The Doctor and Professor Jones, we know and can say, that besides solid acquirements and qnalities, they possess the fineness of faculty and sensibility that eminently fit them for superintendihg female education.

JUVENILE SOCIETIES.

A pretty picture, and one of moral force, is The First Alms. Well conceived and well executed. A mother "stands up" her child upon the railing, and its little dimpled hand drops a penny into the beggar's palm. Too early, selfish nature cannot be subdued. Too early, the luxury of doing good cannot be felt—the habit cultivated.

Well, thie has to do with those associations that are beginning to be formed and favored in the bosoms of some of the Churches, called Juvenile Missionary Societies. Each Sabbath School should be resolved into one. Train the Missionaries and the Missionary supporters. They will be needed. Nurse the Missionary spirit. The Church has a great work to do, and such a spirit as the last and present generations grew up with, is not up to the mark.

The organization is simple. Elect officers from amongst the children. Hold monthly meetings. Have a young speech or two. Take up the collection—say a fixed sum for each member, so that the poorest child can pay it. Be regular, and the enm will mount up in the conrse of a year, astonishingly. Yes, take up the collection, pass round the hat among the children. They must get used to it; a great deal of it will have to be done before the world is converted. Some grown people get nervous at the sight.

It spoils the effect of the sermon on them. They never will get over it. Pity, but can't be helped now. Take care no more Christians be raised that way.

Three Churches are in our eye, very respectable ones too, that would have failed last year, of their Missionary Assessment, but for the juveniles. One particularly that had $100 to raise, was in a strait. The day was set, sermon preached and the congregation only gave $29. What was to be done? Another Sabbath, and the pastor would be on hie way to Conference. The Sabbath School Superintendent said the treasury of the Children's Missionary Society had something—he would count it. It was $70, lacking a few cents! And so that Church was reported at Conference equal to its assessment. Brother Pastor, try it.

Reform.—Temperance hae some strong friends in Caddo Parish. They have got their views into the masses. The vote for License or No Licenee of dram shops was taken ln Shreveport last week, and resulted: Licenss 74; No Licenso 103. Awhile before, in Greenwood, the No License was carried by eight majority. Why does not every ward in the State, under the present law, rid itself of the nuisance?

Bishop Simpson, accompanied by Rev. N. Reasoner, left New York for California in the steamer George Law, the 20th ult. Bishop Baker, the Corresponding Secretary, and the Treasurer of the Missionary Society, with a number of the managers, together with other clerical and lay members of the Church, accompanied him, or were at the ship to see him off. There were not wanting some Christian women to say a few parting words to a chief pastor whose ministry had profitted them.

"What is the best attitude for self-defence?" said a pupil to a well-known pugilist. "Keep a civil tongue in your head," was the significant reply.

The California Mails.—A great portion of the mail for the Atlantic States which left San Francisco on the 1st of December, was lost by the disaster to the Winfield Scott. The mail was very valuable, and it is thought that not above one fourth of it has been saved. We have received but few California exchanges, and this we are rendered almost worthless by the damage they received from

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE IN LAY SESSION.

The peculiar, yet simple plan adopted by the Louisiana Conference a year ago, for securing the counsels and co-operation of the Laity "to advance the several benevolent and financial interests which have heretofore been under the sole care of the Conference," went into operation at its late session. As this plan attracted considerable attention, and was looked forwnrd to with solicitude by those who felt that a desideratum of this sort might be supplied to our economy, without infringing upon any cardinal principle of our Church government, we took special notice of its working at the Mansfield Conference, and now report thereon.

The Churches throughout the Conference seem to have accepted it very generally, and that too without any prejudice or mistrust, arising from the sound of mere words. This is evident from the number of delegates appointed. Some of these did not attend; it was a new thing, and they were not in the way of it. The seat of Conference was in the extreme north-west of its boundary, and difficult of access; and it was a very busy time of year. Many of the preachers could not attend.

The character of the Lay brethren present, their home influence, their Christian spirit and intelligence, showed that the Quarterly Conferences meant to be well represented. They spoke freely in debate and to the point, and led in devising liberal things; their style of address was more formal, and they held more rigidly to "parliamentary rule" than the preachers. It was a little odd, but none the worse at all, to hear the words "Mister," "the gentleman last on the floor, &c;" frequent reference to parliamentary rules, and once to Jefferson's Manual, about the substitute, the amendment and the rider. This was not objectionable. It elevated the tone of discussion, without restricting healthy freedom. Perhaps the very fraternal manner of a knot of Methodist preachers, sometimes tends to the free and easy, in excess.

The presence of our Lay brethren, even if there had been no arrangement for them to be heard formally, would have been beneficial and agreeable. They were samples of the Church at many points, and showed, with a most favorable impression upon all and upon each other, what our Methodism is made of. Their representatione of the nature and wants of the fields they came from, gave us all more vivid and minutely accurate information of the people the Conference serves, and the resources and condition of the broad and varied territory it embraces.

The Conference opened and closed its sessions at 9 A. M. and 1 P. M.; this in the plain old way. There was nothing mixed here. The routine was gone through in form and in fact, as though there was no such thing as Lay Committee co-operation. So the minutes show. All measures and resolutions were passed upon, as if they had originated there. Their merits and demerits, the affirmative and negative, were open to the discussion of any member of Conference. Amendments and substitutes were in order. The question stood free; the subject might be referred back to committee. But a looker-on would readily perceive that the matter under consideration had been considered before; it was free from crudities; was in form and presentable shape. Little or no speech making on the final passage; and though dispatched quickly, there were no marks of haste. Reason: it had been handled, turned over and talked over, in all the lights that the Conference, in free consultation with Lay brethren, could throw upon it.

The afternoons were devoted to these Committee meetings. The subject under consideration is say Education. The member of Conference who is Chairman of the Standing Committee on that Church interest, is Chairman of this meeting. The Chairman is posted up on this subject—having been appointed for that purpose at the previous Conference, and generally laye out work. Information is gathered and measures devised for the extension and support of our educational institutions. Discussion ranges the usual limits; the sense of the mixed meeting is fully ascertained and a report agreed on. This ie offered to the Conference on the morrow, it may be, or whenever the Bishop calls for reports from Committees, and finally passed upon.

This business concluded, the Committee rises, and if the afternoon be not run, resolves itself into Committee of the Whole, on some other subject, say Ministerial Support. The Chairman of this Committee is determined as before.

Some subjects took up more than one afternoon, as the last-mentioned, which grew into long and animated discussion; while one or two others were disposed of briefly.

Evidently, a Committee of the Whole, including an element not an integral part of the original body, must be somewhat anomaloue. The legal structure of an annual Conference cannot be altered, and there is no desire to alter it to suit the case. Regulations, therefore, of a special character were found to be necessary for a complete business adaptation. The following were adopted:

Resolved, That the 11th resolution of the minutes, under the head of "Miscellaneous Resolutions," be amended by striking out the words "Lay Committee co-operation," and inserting in lieu thereof, "The Committee of the Whole in Lay Session."

Resolved, That the rules regulating the Committee of the Whole in Lay Lay Session, shall differ from the ordinary rules of a Committee of the Whole in the following:

1st. It shall elect its own Secretary.

2d. It may appoint Sub-Committees upon the subject-matter of the Committee.

3d. It may limit discussion.

Chairman, go into the consideration of another subject, without rising.

5th. It may put the previous question.

The movement is favorably inaugurated. It gave large satisfaction and dissipated the fears of any who had fears. If it be harmless to the integrity of Methodism in its tendency, none will doubt its efficiency. For our own part we are not so wedded to it, even for so good a beginning, but we can look, and can look, and shall look impartially upon its future developments.

At the late session of the Alabama Conference, the Committee on Education made an elaborate and comprehensive report. Emphasis was bestowed by the Conference on this interest. Indeed, light and heat were elicited from an extraordinary quarter. Both our correspondents remarked upon this, and Dr. Summers writes to the Sou. Christian Advocate:

Col. R. A. Baker, a member of the Joint Board of Finance, favored the Conference with some excellent remarks on Education, support of the ministry, and cognate points.

During the discussion of the Report on Education, Prof. Garland, of the University of Alabama, being present, was called upon for an address on the general subject. He complied, with apparent reluctance, and held the Conference spell-bound with his enlightened views and philosophical suggestions. I have not room for even an abstract of his sensible and opportune remarks; he would do the Church a service by writing them out for one of our journals, say the Quarterly, from which all our newspapers might copy.

What was thus done informally, the Committee of the Whole in Lay Session provides for legitimately.

Elsewhere we publish a few rough notes taken down at the afternoon meetings.

REV. R. H. RIVERS, D. D.

The joint Board of Visitors of Centenary College, La., have been called to a special meeting, on the 19th inst., at Jackson, by their President, Dr. Winans. Dr. Rivers having resigned the Presidency, it becomes necessary to fill his place. This will be a very difficult work. The connection of Dr. R. with Centenary College has marked the days of its largest prosperity. He takes charge of La Grange College, Ala. In an eminent degree Dr. R. gathers about him and holds firmly, and wields to the benefit of whatever he is associated with, the good will and admiration of all castes and classes—the learned and unlearned, the rich and poor, men and youths. The popular man, profound scholar, zealous preacher, laborious officer and apt instructor are rarely found so combined. This combination of high qualities has been felt in Centenary, and will be felt at La Grange.

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted at the Louisiana Conference:

Whereas, this Conference is informed that R. H. Rivers, D. D., has resigned the Presidency of Centenary College, and requested a transfer from this to the Tennessee Conference; Therefore, Resolved, first, That it is with deep regret this Conference parts with Dr. Rivers, whose fellowship, labors and counsels we have highly appreciated.

Second, That the cause of this transfer of Dr. Rivers (the ill health of his wife,) enhances our regret at parting, and has our sympathy and prayers.

Third, That if, in the providence of God, Dr. Rivers' way should be open, at any future time, to return, we express the hope that he do so, and will cordially welcome him to the Louisiana Conference.

RESOLUTIONS OF LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Resolved, That the preachers take up collections upon their several circuits and stations to defray the expenses of the Delegates to General Conference, and that the same be forwarded to H. N. McTyeire, at New Orleans, by the 15th April.

—

Resolved, That, hereafter, at each annual session of the Louisiana Annual Conference, its members report as receipts for their support during the previous year, only the moneys and drafts paid them up to the time of the session of said Conference.

— H. A. Morse.

Whereas, In the opinion of this Conference all the financial interests of the church in our bounds, and especially those connected with our missionary operations, will be greatly advanced by the publication and distribution of our annual minutes, therefore,

Resolved, 1st. That we draw upon our missionary fund to defray the expenses of said publication.

2nd. That a committee of three be appointed to superintend the publication of said printing; and,

3rd. That 3,000 copies in cheap form be published.

4th. That they be distributed as follows:

New Orleans District,	600	copies.
Opelousas "	500	"
Shreveport "	600	"
Ouachita "	800	"
Lake Providence "	500	"
	3,000

Quarterly Conferences for Montgomery District:

Salem Station,	January 7—8
Tuskegee,	" 14-15
Auburn,	" 21-22
Crawford Circuit,	" 28-29
S. Uchee and N Uchee Col. Mis.	" 28-29
Montgomery Circuit,	February 4—5
Montgomery Colored Mission,	" ....
Montgomery Station,	" 11-12
Montgomery Colored Charge,	" ....
Catomer Colored Mission,	" ....
Tuskegee Circuit,	" 18-19
Andrew Colored Mission,	" ....
Hayneville,	" 25-26
Big Swamp Mission,	" ....
Orion Circuit,	March 4—5
Union Circuit,	" 11-12
Lafayette,	" 18-19

S. Armstrong, P. E.

First round of Quarterly Meetings in Columbus District, Alabama Conference:

Eutaw, January 14 and 15,		1854.
Forkland and Pine Grove, Jan. 21 and 22,		"
Columbus Station, February 4 and 5,		"
Athens Circuit,	" 11 and 12,	"
Mount Zion Circuit,	" 18 and 19,	"
Buttehatchy,	" 25 and 26,	"
Columbus Circuit, March 4 and 5,		"
Pickens "	" 11 and 12,	"

THE COMMITTEE MEETINGS.

ON MISSIONS.

Dec. 14, p. m.

The Committee of the Whole in lay session met in the Conference Room, at half-past two o'clock P. M. Rev. Joel Sanders, Vice President, in the chair. Meeting opened with singing and prayer conducted by Chairman. Rev. J. C. Keener, Secretary of Conference Missionary Society, Secretary ex-officio.

The call for lay-committee men being made, the following presented their certificates of election by the Quarterly Conferences:

Charles Waters, Moreau street, N. Orleans.
Isaac Randolph, Felicity " " "
Dr. C. G. Young, Greenwood, Caddo Parish, La.
H. L. Green, Bœuff Prairie Ct., La.
E. K. W. Ross, Bastrop, " Joseph M. Laney, Alexandria, "

Rev. Mr. Turnley remarked that among these were some local preachers, whom he was glad to see, but wished to be informed if the lay-committee men must not be strictly laymen. He so preferred.

It was replied and agreed to that whomsoever the Quarterly Conference appointed to represent it, did represent it—being a local preacher did not disqualify; though the impression seemed to prevail that laymen strictly were better.

The question was raised whether certain influential visiting brethren present might not be invited to take seats in Committee to represent circuits and stations whose delegates were not here.

Objected to, as letting down a gap not easily filled up hereafter and not proper. Delegates must, in every case, be elected and present certificates.

The President called for information of the state of the slave and domestic missions within the Conference. The various missionaries spoke freely of the location and history of their charges—their hindrances, helps and encouragements. Their narratives were minute and interesting—the viva voce reports were full of vitality, and the information imparted was full and the solicitude enhanced. Rev. L. A. Reed and W. Ferguson explained the mode and success and occasional defeats of slave missions in the sugar plantations. Rev. J. M. Hofer did the same of German missions in New Orleans. [See the Missionary Secretary's report for particulars.]

Rev. R. Randle moved that the Committee adjourn to meet to-morrow afternoon.

Dr. Young would correct—the nature of this meeting would not allow such a motion. Committees never adjourned. It was proper for the Committee of the Whole to rise and beg leave to report progress to the Conference and sit again. Whereupon, the Committee rose.

[Note. This subject was resumed another day, after the intervention of others, but, for the sake of connection, what was subsequently done is here inserted.]

Dec. 16, p. m.

Meeting opened with religious services. Vice President in the chair. Wm. A. Austin, lay-delegate from Monticello, presented his certificate and took his seat. It was moved that the present system of paying missionaries be continued, which is to support the preachers sent on missionary ground from the Missionary Treasury, and the missionaries are required to make such collections on the work as they can, for the benefit of the Missionary Society, and report the same.

Rev. J. C. Keener would draw attention to a need—a great need—in our slave missions which had been brought to his view, especially in the sugar planting regions. Our church organizations were often injured, if not broken up, by a change of owners or overseers, or other change. The labor of our missionaries, after years, in building up a church on a plantation might and sometimes did pass from us this way. It was lost and could not be gathered up again. He referred to an instance in which more than two hundred colored members, for years reported here, had been lost. The proprietor being an Episcopalian, had installed an Episcopal minister, who entered into our labors. Our present mode of operation—preaching in sugar houses, and depending solely on plantation accommodation for preaching to the negroes—left us at the mercy of any fluctuation. The work suffered. Would it not be well to get the planters, friends of the missions, to unite two or three together, and build, conveniently to all, a common meeting house. Here was a stand made. Moreover, the moral influence was good. The preacher had a better hearing, the Gospel a better sway over the plantation negroes, and even the whites in attendance, if the place be somewhat set apart. It must not be so common—closely associated with every day, toil, &c. Sunday smelt too strong of week day. Something in it, though it might look small.

Rev. C. J. Halberg remarked that his experience, though confirming the losses and fluctuations we were exposed to, yet impressed him that, while some owners might enter into the meeting house plan, it would not suit all. In the upper country it would do, but where plantations were so large, it was deemed necessary to order that them should not be too much strolling about. He liked the plan suggested. It would not fail to help and conserve our efforts for the slave population.

Mr. Abney had noticed that the negroes never thought they were preached to, unless they had it all to themselves. He agreed with the previous speaker.

D. Brown liked it. He was going to build (or had) a church for such a use for his

After much interesting discussion, the committee agreed and rose; and the following resolutions were subsequently reported by its chairman to the Conference and adopted:

"Resolved, That we recommend, wherever practicable, the building of chapels upon the roadside in the neighborhood of those plantations upon which our missionaries at present labor, so that their labors may be for the benefit also of the surrounding neighborhood. That said chapels be upon land regularly deeded to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Resolved, That we will especially name and plead for the German missions in New Orleans, in making our annual missionary collections, and that we invite Brother Hofer to travel throughout the bounds of the Conference for the purpose of building chapels, and otherwise aiding said missions.

Resolved, That we recommend the continuation of the present system of paying the missionary from the Treasury of the Missionary Society, and that the missionaries be required as heretofore to make collections for the benefit of the Missionary Society from planters and others throughout the bounds of the several missions."

(To be Continued.)

COMMON SCHOOL EDUCATION IN ALABAMA.

The Mobile Tribune of last week has an able, suggestive article on this subject, bearing upon the present legislature. Alabama has nearly everything to do, our own State much, in equalizing the educational facilities of its various sections. In compact communities the present system works well, but is well-nigh a failure elsewhere. We hope Col. Walker's bill will put the management of this interest as far as possible above demagogues. Let not the Schools feel the disturbing influence and fluctuations of every county election. We quote from the Tribune, and join in expressing gratification at the indications of better things. May Alabama legislation take position on this and every subject ahreast of 1854:

"There is no difference of opinion among intelligent people as to the fact that the interests of popular education are in the first rank of State objects. All those States of the Union which have acted on the truth of this sentiment, have practically proved its correctness; and, as a general rule, the different States have enjoyed prosperity in proportion as they have shown their devotion to it. Whether a State look at the development of her resources, the successful application of her industry, the character of her citizenship, or the stability of her institutions, the claims of education present themselves as the most efficient and certain instrumentality to effect these ends. So far all are agreed. Why, then, have we no State system of education?

There are various reasons for it. The circumstances surrounding us as a new State have hitherto embarrassed the adoption of a general scheme of instruction. Our energies had to be directed to objects of immediate and urgent importance. We had lands to clear and fields to reduce to tillage. We had to get things ready for systematic prosperity. All the work of occupying the forest, settling neighborhoods around common centres of trade, opening access to sea-board markets, and the numerous other incidents of an initial stage of society had to be regarded. These things restrained any great exertion to cover the State with an educational system. But there was another reason. We had a sixteenth section fund. It held out some hopes, and really bestowed some benefits. It was just enough to give the State a gentle opiate, but not enough to be a large and permanent good. Our experience has now demonstrated two things, viz: That we are in urgent want of a common school system of education; and that special provision must be made by the Legislature for it. Nothing that we now have will answer the purpose. A new scheme must be originated. And to secure its thorough working, to guard against all perversions, and to dignify it properly in popular estimation, Alabama must incorporate it into her State Government, and hold it up to official responsibility in all its departments. What will be the effect? If such a system be adopted, the educational facilities of the several sections of the State will be equalized, so far as physical circumstances permit; the difficulties in the way of any extended results from the sixteenth section fund will be obviated; the machinery of education will be subjected to official authority; the growing mind of the State will be trained in common sentiments, and a State character will be formed. It will increase our intelligence, morality, patriotism. It will enlarge our productive industry, stimulate our talent, arouse our genius: and in a few years, the working force of our educated mind, turned into the several channels of active life, will so augment the wealth of Alabama as to renumerate it for any expenditure.

The main features of Col. Walker's School bill are admirably adapted to the objects of State Education. For the pecuniary support of the contemplated system, it appropriates one-fifth of the annual revenue of the State, and in addition thereto, authorizes a tax of one dollar on "each and every qualified elector in this State." It empowers the Board of School Commissioners in each county to arrange school districts, to erect school houses, to examine and appoint teachers, to exercise a watchful supervision over the various schools, and to fulfil other duties essential to a complete system. It imposes certain obligations on the Probate Judge, and requires of him a full annual report on the state of education in his county. It further provides for the appointment of a State Superintendent, who shall visit all portions of the State and examine their wants; deliver addresses; arrange and publish forms of instruction for judges, commissioners, assessors and teachers; apportion the funds to the different counties, and, in various other ways, carry out the objects of the system.

A great merit in this plan is, that it provides for a thorough and effective supervision. All the States that have tried common schools, have found that their success depended almost entirely on this branch of service. No self-acting system can possibly be adopted. A perfect superintendency, extending from the State Commissioner to the County Superinthe experience of common schools is more certain than this; and hence the constant aim of those States and foreign nations, that have established general systems of education, is to exert a wise, faithful, earnest agency, by means of traveling and local superintendents. There can be no State system of common schools without a State officer; and on his intelligence, zeal and tact, the results of the system will mainly depend."

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

LA GRANGE COLLEGE.

Mr. Editor: The gloomy cloud of despondency that recently hung over La Grange College, created by the death of J. W. Hardy, her most able and efficient President, has been removed by the election and acceptance of Dr. Rivers, of the Centenary College, situated in Jackson, La. During his administration of that College, she has been highly prosperous, and more than meeting the anticipations of her most sanguine friends.

It is, therefore, not for want of success, or appreciation of his labors, that Dr. Rivers leaves Louisiana; nor is it for a want of attachment to this nursery of the Church. The change of climate has been unfavorable to the health of his family, hence he has been induced to return to La Grange College—his Alma Mater—where he graduated some fifteen years since, and some years was a most efficient Professor, under the administration of Bishop Payne.

When we recur to the past history of La Grange, and remember her want of an endowment, the self-sacrifice of her various Presidents and Professors, and the amount of good she has done, is it any wonder that the Methodist Episcopal Church should cling to her with fondness and feel sensibly every thing that tends to blight her prospects, and rejoice in all that promotes her prosperity.

We are glad and truly rejoice that our beloved and long-cherished La Grange College has one at its head who is so well qualified to make her useful and prosperous, as is Dr. Rivers.

He has the capacity, energy, moral and religious worth, that inspires the confidence of parents, guardians and the public generally. I will not speak disparagingly of others, but I must say that I know not the man of superior adaptation and qualification, and from whom the friends of the College have so much to expect, as from Dr. R. H. Rivers.

This College was established by our Church more than a quarter of a century ago. The best interest of the Church demanded it, and like all other such enterprises, where they have been dependent on the voluntary liberality of her friends, she has had much to contend with, and numerous difficulties to surmount. But notwithstanding these apparent insurmountable obstacles, she has, in the opinion of the writer, always been in the foremost ranks of usefulness. The Legislature of our own and other States, have many of her scholars. Law and medicine have claimed the attention of not a few, while the ministry has in her ranks some of her most intelligent and highly cultivated men.

We then bid her God-speed in her onward course of usefulness, and I earnestly pray that, as she advances in age, she may advance in usefulness until her name shall be praised in all the land.

R. A. B.

GENERAL EUROPEAN WAR.

It will be perceived, from the various details of the latest foreign news, that the late Russian successes are generally considered by the English press and its echo, that of New York, as almost certain to lead to a general war in Europe. The London Times, that great leader of British opinion, has suddenly changed sides and assumed a warlike tone; and this fact has, no doubt, from the enormous influence of the Times, had no little part in bringing about the new impression which now prevails. The reasoning, however, on which this sudden persuasion seems itself, does not seem to us by any means weighty enough to induce an able Ministry and a people as eminently prudent as the British to abandon that policy of peace which is now of such vast concern to the nation. We suspect that these warlike notions will presently appear to have been but the momentary stir of the English sympathy with the Turks, in their recent disaster; and that the feeling will soon revert to that politic view of the whole matter, which is pretty certain, in due time, to take possession of that most sensible of men, Mr. John Bull.

There is, also, another very sensible person, without whom Mr. Bull is going, in no event, to engage in this war. That person is one Louis Napoleon: a very discerning and subtle gentleman; who usually knows excellently well what he is after, and takes remarkable care that nobody else should.

Now, we have never been able to see how either of these skillful and wary powers can believe that it will not lose greatly more than it can gain, by bringing about a general war, as it must by joining the Turks against the Russians. What has England or France to fight about? First, the old Balance of power; second, the wider stretching of Russian power towards India and Persia. We do not count the trade of the Levant or of the Black Sea: for surely that trade will be much the same, whether the Turks or the Russians be at Constantinople.

On the other hand, the industrial and financial condition of England and France renders a war an evil of terrible magnitude. This would be one that would demand operations on a great scale and enormously expensive. The contest with a league, bended by a power so strong, so obstinate and so difficult seriously to hurt as Russia, could not well fail to be long. Should it prove so, it would, but too probably involve both England and France in national bankruptcy; and that is almost ever certain to be attended by fundamental political revolution.

These alone are consequences so probable and so terrible as must give pause, most awfully, to every sober man in either England or France. But, besides, neither of them would choose to help forward what both particularly dread—the commercial ascendancy of the United States. If England and France engage in such a war, while we do not, they throw into our hands the carrying-trade of the world; and the nation that secures that, soon becomes—becomes at her pleasure—the armed mistress of the seas.

All this is obvious: but behind all this there lurks, visible enough to the eye of every skillful politician, yet another fact, which neither Louis Napoleon nor Lord Aberdeen is going to overlook.

Both must know that Red Republicanism sits waiting for such a war, as the signal for a bloody and general revolutionary outbreak; in nearly every country of Europe. By secret societies, spread everywhere, whatever of visionary or desperate or unscrupulous of means, is bent either on a social subversion or on merely dethroning a dynasty, is organized for a new out-sanguinary and probably bathe half the old world in torrents of civil blood. For what calls itself Democracy there is still further gone than ours; is yet more progressive; and now looking on all its past failures as (God save the mark!) the result of its own mistaken lenity to kings and nobles, is determined that its next insurrection shall be one of extermination to all its adversaries. In short, France, Germany, Prussia, Hungary, Italy and Ireland, now swarm with men ready to set out, systematically and on principle, with all those atrocities at which even the old French Revolution did not arrive, until it had been gradually trained to these diabolical cruelties of civil war.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Now, we say that such is the state of things in Europe; and the English and French governments, who understand it all, cannot surely be so mad as to give it its opportunity. We do not believe and shall not believe it, until we see.

Meantime, we can very well see that England and France are very averse to seeing Russia aggrandized, and will, to check it if possible, do everything but fight. It is quite prudent of them to keep up a mighty make-believe of fighting: but to turn it into a reality would be the extreme of absurdity.

Poor Relations.

A poor relation is—the most irrelevant thing in nature—a piece of impertinent correspondency—an odious approximation—a haunting conscience—a preposterous shadow lengthening in the noontide of your prosperity—an unwelcome remembrancer—a perpetually recurring mortification—a drain on your purse—a mote intolerable dun upon your pride—a drawback upon success—a rebuke to your rising—a stain in your blood—a blot on your escutcheon—a rent in your garment—a death's head at your banquet—Agathocles' pot—a Mordecai in your gate—a Lazarus at your door—a lion in your path—a frog in your chamber—a fly in your ointment—a mote in your eye—a triumph to your enemy—an apology to your friends—the one thing not needful—the hail in harvest—the ounce of sour in a pound of sweet—the bore par excellence. He is known by his knock. Your heart telleth you "That is Mr. ——." A rap, betweon familiarity and respect; that demands, and at the same time, seems to despair of, entertainment. He entereth smiling, and embarrassed. He holdeth out his hand to you to shake, and—draweth it back again. He casually looketh in about dinner-time—when the table is full. He offereth to go away, seeing you have company—but is induced to stay. He filleth a chair, and your visitor's two children are accommodated with a chair at a sidetable. He never cometh upon open days, when your wife says with some complacency, "My dear, perhaps Mr. —— will drop in to-day." He remembereth birth-days—and professeth he is fortunate to have stumbled upon one. He declareth against fish, the turbot being small—yet suffereth himself to be importuned into a slice against his first resolution. He sticketh by the port—yet will be prevailed upon to empty the remainder glass of claret—if a stranger press it upon him. He is a puzzle to the servants, who are fearful of being too obsequious, or not civil enough to him. The guests think "they have seen him before." He calleth you by our Christian name, to imply that his other is the same with your own. He is too familiar by half, yet you wish he had less diffidence. With half the familiarity, he might pass for a casual dependent; with more boldness, he would be in no danger of being taken for what he is. He is too humble for a friend, yet taketh on him more state than befits a client. He is a worse guest than a country tenant, inasmuch as he bringeth up no rent—yet 'tis odds, from his garb and demeanor, that your other guests take him for one. He is asked to make one at the whist table; refuseth on the score of poverty, and—presents being left out. When the company break up, he proffereth to go for a coach—and lets the servant go.

He recolleets your grandfather; and will thrust in some mean, and quite unimportant anecdote of—the family. He knew it when it was not quite so flourishing as "he is blest in being it now." He reviveth past situations, to institute what he calleth favorable comparisons. With a reflecting sort of congratulation, he will inquire the price of your furniture: and insults you with a special commendation of your window-curtains. He is of opinion that the inn is a more elegant shape, but, after all, there was something more comfortable about the old tenbottle—which you must remember. He dare say you must find a great convenience in having a carriage of your own; and appealeth to your lady if it is not so. There is a worse evil under the sun, and that is—a female poor relation. You may do something with the other; you may pass him off tolerably well; but your indigent she-relative is hopeless. "He is an old humorist," you may say, "and affects to go threadbare. His circumstances are better than folks would take them to be. You are fond of having a 'character' at your table, and truly he is one." But in the indictions of female poverty there can be no disguise. No woman dresses below herself from caprice. The truth must out without shuttling. "She is plainly related to the L——s; or what does she at their house?" She is, in all probability, your wife's cousin. Nine times out of ten, at least, this is the case. Her garb is something 'between a gentlewoman and a beggar, yet the former evidently predominates. She is most provoking—humble, and ostentatiously sensible to her inferiority. He may require to be repressed sometimes—aliquando sufflaminandus erat—but there is no raising her. You send her soup at dinner, and she begs to be helped after the gentlemen. She requests the honor of taking wine with her; she hesitates between port and Madeira, and chooses the former—because she does. She calls the servant Sir; and insists on not troubling him to hold her plate. The housekeeper patronizes her, and the children's governess takes upon herself to correct her when she has dissaken the piano for a harpsichord.

EFFECTS OF MARTIAL MUSIC.—Since Poetry—especially the lyrical form of it—has become a power in the State, it may be interesting to our readers to hear that a Turkish poet, Salis Effendi, has written a national hymn, in the style of the "Marseillaise," which his countrymen are described as repeating with extraordinary zest and energy. Philosophers afford to despise poetry, and Plato banished the bards from his model republic; but in moments of crises like that which now shakes the Orient, it is always found that men will bear, and dare, and aspire more greatly under the sway of lyrical passion than without the exaltation of nerve and brain produced by this subtle and spiritual power. The Spartans needed a Tyrtæus. Roger de Lisle nerved the arms which beat down one tyrant another, the Kings of Europe. Korner roused all Germany to action. Becker's lyric fired the Rhine provinces—and won for the author two royal pensions. The Revolution of '89 was effected to the chorus of "Mourir pour la Patrie," and the splendid Hungarian campaign of '49 was made to the "Kossuth March." Our own Commonwealth was introduced by a drum tune—and James the Second was frightened out of three kingdoms by a chorus. Dibdin and Campbell did nearly as much for the British Navy as Nelson and Collingwood—our song-writer certainly did more than Solomon, Pepys and all other antiquarian prosers to assert the sovereignty of the seas put together. This is of no small moment, then, that a native should have drawn from the rock those living waters of song, which at once satisfy the craving and fortify the national zeal. To those who have a merely human interest in the contest of Turk and Russ, it is pleasant to catch the voice of the Muses beside the thunder of war. If it be only as the expression of another and a nobler influence in the affairs of mankind.—Museum.

BAKO TALK.—The use of what are called "slang phrases" has become disgracefully common. Everywhere one hears them. Children, as well as adults, women, as well as men; Intercourse with these vulgarities. Thus, such phrases were confined to the "b'hoys" who ran "with the engines," enjoyed an almost undivided monopoly of them. But having crept into the theatres, and been started in low comedy as wit, these have gradually found their way into the press, and begun to pollute the mouths of children and females. Yet that the last, especially, should ever have taken up these slang phrases would appear incredible, if the fact were not before us. Surely, there is neither wit, nor originality, nor humor, nor even vulgar smartness in such expressions as "me you don't," "well I won't," "I rather guess not," "look here, stranger," and scores of other slang phrases which are now heard everywhere. Even in the months of men such phrases are far from being commendable. It would be an advance of refinement, if they were to be banished entirely. Oaths, which were always profane, have, within the last generation, come to be considered vulgar. Such should be the verdict on slang phrases.—[Philadelphia Ledger.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED.—On the evening of November 30th, by Rev. C. C. Calloway, in Eutaw, Alabama, Mr. JOHN M. HATES, to Miss ELIZABETH, eldest daughter of Dr. F. L. Constantino.

By the same, in Macon, Miss., on the evening of the 10th December, MR. WILLIAM EILAND, to MISS MARY FLETCHER, eldest daughter of REV. LEROY MASSINGALE, of Alabama Conference.

By the same, in Noxubee County, Miss., on the morning of the 6th of December, MR. ALEXANDER JEFFRIES, to MISS ELIANCE'S TATE.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square first insertion	$1 00
Each subsequent insertion	50
One Square, one year	5 00
One Square, six months	10 00
Two Squares, one year	25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

General Intelligence.

Street Shows.

As our streets become filled with people, so do they become filled with portable sights and itinerant shows, intended to attract the popular attention and extract the popular small coin. Chartres and Canal streets, Carondelet and St. Charles are thronged by as bustling a crowd of pedestrians as on any winter previous, and their adroit has reproduced the wonders and money-making spectacles of former seasons. The men with the miraculous writing paper—which obviate all need of previous knowledge concerning either writing or spelling, and acts as potently on the possessor's abilities as a direct spiritual manifestation—has returned with a fresh assortment of his materials, re-mounted his old box, and again commenced recounting to credulous crowds the half-supernatural power of his goods. The organ-grinders are back, too, with recruited ranks and machines as dismally melodious as it would seem possible to contrive. The man with a white hat, attached to a "thermometer"—which gives in cubic inches the capacity, force and healthiness of any one's lungs who blows vigorously into it—and pays therefor the sum of one picayune—is, among our latest arrivals. A number of philanthropic individuals, with science cheapened and diluted to the popular comprehension, have honored us with their presence, and now display the wonders of the firmament for a dime, or exhibit microscopic marvels for a picayune. A grand museum of small wonders has opened at the corner of St. Charles and Gravier streets. Another museum, of panoramic wonders is in operation on the Levee. Indeed, we cannot begin to chronicle the numbers or character of these peripatetic exhibitions. They defy enumeration as well as description, and flit continually about, changing their names and their natures as well as their localities. One thing only is clear concerning them: they edify the people, who in their process of edification blockade the streets, and drive the regular routine of travel into the opposite walk or into the gutter.

With all the nonsense and nuisance involved in their train we are nevertheless glad to behold these birds, the harbingers of business, life, animation and enjoyment. They contribute materially to our street pictures, and we feel by no means confident that their abolition would not be cause for sorrow. They have a place by prescription—a pretty large one too, in the catalogue of our winter curiosities. In the summer they flit and cannot be found. At all events they are here now; and though we never wish to verify Prof. Nichol's through a three-foot telescope, or follow Farraday by means of a two-bit microscope, we are glad to see that others can be gratified in such elementary manner and amused by such amusing means. We trust the Razor Strop and Soap Man, and the man with Punch and Judy, and the Old Soldier with a warlike panorama of more battles and more bloody ones than ever were fought, will come also and increase the number of our winter shows.

STEAMBOAT ACCIDENT ON THE RHEA.—Loss of Life.—About 4 o'clock on Sunday morning the steamboats Pearl and Natchez came into collision about six miles below Baton Rouge, when the Pearl instantly sunk, and some eight or ten lives were lost. The Pearl was coming down from Attakapas, the Natchez going up the river; but we have yet no further particulars of the circumstances attending the collision.

Among those lost, Capt. Stanley, brother-in-law of Capt Dorsey, of the Pearl, is one; and those known to be lost are—Robert Sullivan, two Dutch laborers, Col. Bates's negro Jack, Morris Child and two firemen.

The cabin of the Pearl floated off, fortunately, and the Magnolia brought down the crew and passengers who were saved to this port.

Louisiana.

Caddo Parish—The Shreveport Southwestern has the following statistics of Caddo parish, which will be found interesting:

The total population is	9,499
Voters	944
Slaves	5,991
School subjects	1,295
Acres of the cultivated land in the parish	102,960
Acres cultivated in cotton	30,070
do. corn	18,587
Number bales of cotton made in 1852	15,529
Number bushels of corn do	386,225
Value of real estate	$1,585,992

An election was held at Shreveport on the 25th, on the question of granting licenses to vend liquors in small quantities. The result was a majority of 29 in faror of withholding license.

MARTINGALES.—Yesterday, between the hours of 10 and 12 o'clock, a small negro was sent in a skiff from the Pacific saw mill in this place for the purpose of towing some logs to the shore, when he discovered a small rough box floating in the river, which he got aboard, and brought to the mill for inspection. The box was then opened, and found to contain a newly born boy dead, but seemed apparently to have been in the water only a few hours. There is an mystery hanging over this affair which we hope to see soon ferreted out.—[Bayou Sara Ledger, 29th.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival of the Louisiana we have received Texas papers of a late date.

The Pacific Railroad Bill has been signed by the Governor and it is now a law. This was the last official act of Governor Henderson previous to his resignation.

On the 21st ult. the inauguration of Governor Pease and Lieutenant Governor Dickson took place.

The inaugural message of Governor Pease was delivered to both Houses of the Legislature on the 23d.

It is an able and comprehensive document, and particularly commends itself from the many important suggestions with which it is filled. Among the most leading and important measures which he recommends to the consideration of the Legislature is the establishment of a suitable and permanent provision for the support of public schools, for which purpose it is suggested that two millions of dollars of the United States five per cent. bonds shall be appropriated and set aside; the income of this fund to be annually apportioned to the several counties of the State according to the number of free children in each between the ages of five and sixteen years. He also outlines the necessity of a good University in the State, where a liberal education can be received, and recommends therefore that the sum of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars of the United States bonds now in the treasury be appropriated and set apart as a perpetual fund, the interest of which shall be applied to the erection and support of a State University.

The necessity of endowments for a Lunatic Asylum and for an institution for the instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, are noticed. For this purpose he recommends that five hundred thousand dollars of the United States five per cent. bonds be appropriated, one half of the sum being set aside for each.

Relative to the Pacific Railroad we find the following remarks:

I would also suggest that the alternate sections upon the line of the Mississippi and Pacific road be granted to other roads connecting this with our gulf ports, with the Vicksburg road and the New Orleans and Opelousas road at such points as will best accommodate the different sections of the State. Such a disposition of these sections is but just, since the portions of the State through which these branch roads are to be built, will receive no immediate benefit from the Pacific road unless they are thus connected with it.

He comments at considerable length upon the importance of river improvements, showing that for many years, even if railroads are constructed, the people of the State must rely upon them for the transportation of their productions to market.

Relative to the Indian tribes within the limits of the State, he suggests that a portion of vacant domain, remote from the settled parts of the State, shall be appropriated for the temporary occupation of those remnants of tribes that properly belong to the State; that all locations within the limits thereof be prohibited, and that a qualified jurisdiction for Indian purposes be ceded to the United States Court.

Dr. Geo. W. Ehrswiler died of yellow fever in Brownsville on the 19th ult. This individual fought a duel about the commencement of the filibuster movements, and killed his antagonist, Lieut. Ross, of the filibuster army.

The Austin Gazette of the 26th ult. says:

On Friday last there was a hard struggle on passing the Senate's bill, chartering the Pacific Railroad Company, to a third reading. Various amendments and motions to adjourn were voted down, and under the operation of the previous question, the bill was passed to a third reading by a vote of 31 yeas to 19 nays. On Saturday the bill was again taken up and passed by an overwhelming majority, yeas 41, nays 13.

There having been no amendment made in the bill in the House, as it passed the Senate, it is therefore now law, unless vetoed by the Governor, which no one apprehends.

We learn from the Rockhart Express, that Mr. H. Anderson, of Seguin, was killed on the 5th ult., by the accidental discharge of his gun, while out duck-hunting.

The Galveston Civilian, of the 27th ultimo, says that nothing has been done on the Mexican boundary survey West of El Paso, for want of an appropriation. The question has become one of negotiation, and is referred to the State Department. The work on the undisputed portions, this side of El Paso has been completed. The commission expired by limitation of law on the 1st of January.

The same paper of the 30th ult., says: The new pilot boat, designed for this port, we understand has sustained some damage in her sails and rigging, on the passage out from New York, and put in at Charleston for repairs.

The inauguration of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor took place at Austin on the 21st ult.

Governor Pease nominated Col. Edward Clarke as Secretary of State, and the nomination was confirmed unanimously by the Senate. The State Times says:

This appointment will no doubt be well received. Col. Clarke is a gentleman of ability and observance. He served the State in the civil and military capacities. He was a delegate to the Convention which framed the State Constitution—a member of the legislature—was attached to the staff of Gov. Henderson in the Mexican war, and was present at the battle of Monterey.

The Clarksville Standard of the 17th ult. says: A murder is said to have been committed in Lamar county on the 8th instant, by Daniel T. Alexander, who, it is said, proceeded to the house of Jacob Akard, near the Sulphur, and shot him down. Alexander and his son, who accompanied him, have fled. It is said that Akard charged Alexander with stealing hogs. Akard was shot in the left side of the neck by a ball discharged from a rifle.

The Bastrop Advertiser states that the affray happened lately in Ingraham's Prairie, Fayette county, between Mr. Miller, of Houston, and a Mr. Hyde, which resulted in the death of the latter. Both were armed with double barrel shot guns, and both fired—the shots of Miller only taking effect.

The New York Tribune on the Conviction of James Gordon Bennett.

The New York Tribune has a lengthy article noticing the recent conviction of Mr. Bennett, of the Herald, for libel, in which it says:

Innocence and innumerable as are the blackguardism and infamy of the Satanic Press—infamous as it is to a proverb—we confess to feel towards Mr. E. P. Fry has been more than ordinary intemperate or indecent, foul and damnable. We own to an exhaustion of rhetoric in any attempt to paint the Satanic and its Editor in such verbal tints as would make their pictures life-like. We feel the paupers of the dictionary—the starasmus of idiomsand all such efforts to describe. We can understand the starving wretch, with tear-withered eyes, with wilted cheek, with shrunken vitals, and almost pulseless heart, driven to the last of extremes to get the bread to save life. We can understand a Thug, or even under certain circumstances a Burke; both belong to Pandemonium, but still are comprehensible. But the creature who diverts the Satanic, who revels in wealth and libels—who amasses and stabs, and stabs and amasses—whose whole life seems made up of the refuse of depravity, is a mystery to us. Cause and effect is swimming here, and human nature stands aghast at a very Colossus of perversion, boasting that his legs rest on each hemisphere, and spread over a vast ocean.

* * * * * * * * *

The fable is now turned. The ruffian has got his deserts. The low-mouthed, blatant, witless, brutal scoundrel, is condemned—condemned, too, by the People. Let not his sewer-sheet roll its nastiness and filth over this "Codfish Aristocracy"—as it has called them for fifteen years, is scarcy diatribes—as the cause of his withering hissling condemnation. That sordid noby falsehood will not serve him. We say he has been condemned by a Jury of the People; not because we do not consider all honorable citizens as alike entitled to that name, but because The Satanic has always attempted, with its turid scribblings, to light up divisions and hates in society, by classing one set as aristocracy and the other as plebeians; and taking therefore, The Satanic's own distinctions, we say he has been so condemned. Upon looking at the jury list question we find it composed as follows: One milkman, three butchers, one paint dealer, one grocer, three quarrymen, and two mechanics. These are the men who have condemned the libeler belonging to the Satanic to pay Ten Thousand Dollars; compelled him to do it although, master of the science of the law's delay, he longed to try out his victim by throwing huge and manifold obstacles in the prosecution of the matter—compelled him to do it, although backed by seven lawyers who obstructed and obscured the course of justice for fire long years.

This jury, indeed, have entitled themselves to the lasting gratitude of the community. They have proved that justice, when perseveringly pursued, can be obtained even against a libeler fortified behind a fortress of gold and silver, and wielding a greater intimidation than the history of this country has hitherto known. Every man in the community who is not ready to sprawl himself in dung-heaps before this Juggernaut of the Press, will bear in mind the utmost instantly rendered verdict of the jury—six, as we learn, being for twenty thousand dollars—four for ten thousand—and two really for ten thousand, but manage first at five thousand, so as to admit of compromise, by which means they early had by the verdict as recorded. Besides this, the costs and fees will swell his expenses to some seven thousand dollars more, making his loss seventeen thousand dollars in all.

RIOT AND GREAT EXCITEMENT AT CINCINNATI.—A dispatch from Cincinnati to the New York papers, dated the 26th ult., says:

Our city is the scene of a terrible excitement, caused by a threatened demonstration, by an organized body of Germans, against Mr Bedini, the Pope's Nuncio, who is now the guest of Archbishop Purcell, and officiated in the Cathedral yesterday morning. A most violent animosity, it seems, is entertained toward Bedini by a body of Germans in this city, called the "Society of Freemen," and last evening about five hundred members of this society assembled at their hall, and having organized, marched in a body to the vicinity of the Archbishop's residence, with the supposed intention of doing personal violence to the Nuncio. The Chief of Police, however, having received an intimation of the movement, retained the entire police force at the watch-house, which is situated opposite to the Archbishop's residence. As the "Freemen" approached they set up a diesal groan, accompanied with shouting and discordant music. When the procession was passing the watch-house, the police, at the word of command, rushed upon it, and each arrested a man. A general melee followed, and a scene ensued which baffles description. Many shots were fired, and shouts and executions filled the air. The rioters finally fled, but were pursued by the police, and upward of sixty of their number captured and placed in the cells of the watch-house.

The bitter animosity against the Nuncio which led to this outbreak is the consequence of that individual's alleged betrayal of the cause of liberty in Italy, during the revolution of 1848. Several inflammatory articles have recently appeared in the German papers touching that matter, in one of which the following sentence occurs: "If the Hungarian butcher, Haynau, rash with so warm a reception in monarchical England, what ought the Pope's Nuncio to expect in republican America?"

The excitement is continued this morning in the neighborhood of the watch-house, where a large crowd is collected.

The parties arrested last night have been held to bail for their appearance on Friday next. Fourteen were wounded, of whom one has since died.

Highly Important from Europe.

ARRIVAL OF THE PACIFIC.

The Battle of Sinope—Disastrous Defeat of the Turks—Eight Turkish Vessels Sunk—The Turkish Admiral, Osman Pasha, Taken Prisoner—How in Europe Received and Interpreted.

The steamship Pacific, from Liverpool the morning of the 14th ult., arrived at New York the afternoon of the 26th. She brings four days' later news than that received by the America.

We extract the following summary of the news from the N. Y. Tribune:

On Monday, the 12th, the British public was startled from its propriety by a telegraphic dispatch published in the London Times, stating that a Russian squadron of six sail-of-the-line had forced the harbor of Sinope and burned, sunk, captured, and destroyed every ship, with one exception of a Turkish squadron of fourteen sail, had taken prisoner the Turkish Admiral, Osman Pasha, carried off his flag ship from under the guns of the shore batteries, and were towing it to Sevastopol, when it sunk, and with it the supply of money for paying the Turkish fleet.

This disastrous intelligence caused the greatest excitement, and further intelligence was anxiously looked for.

Additional accounts came at length, but only to confirm the previous news.

On the 13th November the Russian Admiral Nakimoff—[other accounts spell his name Mucklin]—with six ships of the line appeared off the Roads of Sinope, and forthwith proceeded to attack the Turkish force that he found there. After an engagement of one hour's duration he had destroyed seven Turkish frigates, two corvettes, one steamer and three transports. The larger vessels destroyed had each 800 soldiers besides artillerymen on board, and a large sum of money, being bound for the east coast of the Black Sea. The Turkish Admiral's frigate was towed out by the Russians, but burnt at sea.

Osman Pasha and his suite were taken on board the Russian Admiral's ship. One Turkish vessel managed to escape undamaged, being the only survivor of the fourteen. The battle, says the dispatch, began an hour's distance from Sinope. The Russian flag-ship was so much injured that it could with difficulty reach Sevastopol. Prince Menchikoff immediately left Odessa for St. Petersburg to communicate the victory to the Emperor.

We already knew that Osman Pasha was charged with the conveyance of troops and stores to Batum. Accounts said "charged with a few steam-frigates, with the escort of six or seven transports of troops." The battle is stated to have commenced at "an hour's distance from Sinope." There is, therefore, every probability that on leaving the harbor of Sinope he fell in with the Russian squadron, and either accepted battle on unequal terms, or attempted to regain the protection of the land batteries, but was cut to pieces before reaching. The latter is the more likely as one ship is reported to have escaped undamaged, having, no doubt, succeeded in gaining shelter under the shore guns.

Observe that this report of the victory was brought to Odessa by a Russian aid-de-camp of Menchikoff, and from Odessa it was telegraphed to Vienna. The confirmation came from Bucharest and other Russian sources.

Having given the Russian account of the battle; we learn by a telegraphic dispatch received at Paris on the 12th inst., that the Russian force considerably outnumbered the Turkish.

In addition to the six ships of the line mentioned in the Moniteur as the strength of Nachimoff's fleet, he had twelve frigates, a brig and five steamers, in all twenty-four sail, while Osman had but fourteen. The Turks fought with the most desperate bravery, and caused the Russians the loss, in sunk and burned, of two ships of the line, three frigates and two steamboats! The shore batteries were totally inefficient for protection. The remaining Russian ships were so badly disabled that they could take no prizes, and could with difficulty make their way back to Sevastopol.

While this calamity is befalling the Turkish ships, the English and French fleets are lying idle in the Bosphorus. And, more extraordinary still, the major division of the Turkish fleet is lying there idle too! Admiral Slade, the Englishman who commands it, has just returned from a pleasure cruise in the Black Sea, having been unable to find an enemy, although he met another report having been received by the Turkish Admiral, that the Russian ships were in search of a Turkish squadron of eighteen sail, which had left Sinope for Constantinople.

So Admiral Slade and the English and French Admirals salute in the above manner, and in other dancing parties! Perhaps the following remarks from the Liverpool Daily Times, which for the most part speaks the sentiments of the best thinking of the nation, may not be unworthy of the gallant Admiral's attention:

"What, may be asked, has become of Admiral Slade? The Englishman said to be in command of the Turkish fleet in the Black Sea?

"He left Constantinople with the whole Turkish force under his command, and on November 26 he is said to have returned to the Bosphorus with the squadron under his command. If Admiral Slade had detached himself from so large a portion of his force as that said to have been destroyed at Sinope, he must be called upon by the Parliament of Britain to account for such an act.

"In taking the command of the Turkish fleet, he did not shake off his British allegiance, and if he cannot give a satisfactory account of an act which may entail years of bloodshed, he should be dealt with accordingly. The day, we trust, is far spent when the rights of nations can be bartered away for a mess of pottage.

"If the destruction of the Ottoman fleet has taken place, a general European war must be the inevitable result, and the actors in the prelude to so untoward and lamentable an occurrence are responsible not to England only, but to Europe. Again we say the North ought to speak out before it is too late."

Private letters from Paris state that the news of the disaster to the Turkish fleet was received with the profoundest astonishment.

The Emperor is stated to have been overwhelmed by the Intelligence. Explanation is imperatively demanded why a considerable part of the Turkish naval force was permitted to be annihilated within so short a distance of where the powerful English and French fleets were lying in inglorious ease.

Shamyl and Selim Pasha has taken various fortresses; and it is stated that they surround Prince Woronsoff on all sides in the vicinity of Tiflis.

The Turks were repulsed in an attack on Alexandrianopolis, in Georgia, but have blockaded the citadel of Akhalzikh. Its fall was daily expected.

The Journal de Constantinople mentions a report that Schamyl had defeated 15,000 Russians, and a Vienna paper states that the attempt to land 18,000 Russians near St. Nicholas was repulsed with heavy loss.

Advices from Paris state that another plot against the life of the Emperor had been discovered, and a large number of arrests were made on the 10th instant, upon which evening over a hundred persons were in custody.

Madrid letters inform us that, upon the tenth of the present month, the sittings of the Cortes were suspended in a summary manner, by a royal decree, and that a revolution was apprehended in that capital.

Advices from Constantinople to the 29th of September had reached England. The cholera was then one hundred and eighty-four deaths per day. Freight, and about twenty thousand sheep, made up the passengers. The news from the army was very encouraging for miners and laborers. Minerals were rather heavy. The rural districts north of Sydney were very prosperous.

We have further news from India and China. Pegu remained in a very unsettled state. General Godwin, the English commander, was dead. Cholera had appeared at Bombay. Trade was improving in Calcutta. Fighting still went on in Canton and Shanghae. Great excitement prevailed at Whampoa, in consequence of the death of a Chinese woman in prison, and the Americans had to protect the British Vice Consul.

Seamen are still scarce in England, and their wages keep up. In London there was great difficulty in getting seamen, unless at very high wages. As much as £5, and £5 10s. a month, was given to seamen on board colliers. The Peninsula Company sent to Southampton, amongst their own ships there, for a crew to take round the Himalaya.

LIVERPOOL MARKETS.

COTTON—Since the sailing of the America, and receipt of advices per Arabia, the market has remained quiet, but steady. The limited shipments to England advised per Arabia had increased that steadiness, but the present low prices of common and middling Surat have led to a large speculative business therein; of 7000 bales total sales of to-day, 1300 about 3500 having been Surats, at 2⅝ to 2¾@ 4¼d. Total sales of cotton for the past three days, 19,000 bales, of which 6000 were Surats, on speculation. Quotations of American are unchanged and close steadily. Fair Orleans, 6¾d; middling, 6d; fair Mobile 6¼d; middling, 5⅞; fair uplands, 6⅛; middling 5⅝; inferior 3¼@4d; ordinary, 4¼@5⅛ ₰ lb.

At Manchester, to-day, there was a slight improvement on some qualities of light goods for export.

BREADSTUFFS—The market has again been very active, and prices for flour have advanced 1s 6d@2s per bbl. and for wheat 2d@3d over the price of Friday last, which were taken out per America. There is a considerable fleet off, and inbound, with breadstuffs but received orders from Holland and the north of France have kept up the buoyancy. The increased pretensions of holders had to some extent tended to check business. Choice parcels of flour were rather scarce. Quotations are called for American white Wheat at 10s@10s 9d. Red 9s 8d@10s 2d. Philadelphia and Baltimore Flour 7s 6d@38s. Ohio Flour 37s 6d@ 38s 6d. Western Canal and Canada at 36s 6d@37s. Sour @35s 6d. Indian corn steady at previous currency.

Dreadful Disaster.

From the London Times, Dec. 7.

OVER ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY LIVES LOST.

The fearful catastrophe which befell the Hull and Hamburg screw steamer Marshall, and the lamentable fate of all on board—numbering, it is supposed, no fewer than one hundred and fifty souls, without one being spared to tell the fate of her loss—has excited a most painful amount of interest at Lloyds. In the absence of all positive information there is little doubt that she foundered very shortly after coming in contact with the homewardbound bark Wm. Hardie.

The anticipated declaration of Captain Hategene, the master of that vessel, taken on oath by the Admiralty Receiver at Hull, and which has been forwarded to Captain Halstead, the Secretary at Lloyds, will be found to contain all that is known of the facts attending the destruction of the ill-fated steamer:

Sailed from Stockholm on the 24th of November last, for Hull, with a cargo of iron, bones and deals, passing Elsinore on the 15th, having very heavy weather, the ship laboring and straining very much, and shipping a great deal of water, the pumps being constantly attended to. We sighted Flamborough Head light on the night of the 27th, distant four or five leagues, the wind still blowing hard from the south-west. We proceeded without anything particularly occurring until Monday, the 28th. At about 10 o'clock at night, when off the Newsand floating light, at the mouth of the Humber, we were run into by a steamer, name unknown, the Newsand light, as far as I can judge, was at the moment W. S. W., distant three or four miles, our ship being on the starboard tack, lying N. S. and by E. half E., with the wind at the south-west blowing a fresh breeze, and hazy at intervals. We were all upon deck at the time, having a light at our bowsprit, and shewing two flash lights over our starboard side. The moment we saw the steamer approaching we hailed her, and said she would be into us, but received no answer.

We continued our course, with the exception of varying half a point to the eastward, believing the steamer's head to be to the north, and that by that means she would have gone clear of our vessel, and it being so excessively dark that we had no time to brace the ship about, as the steamer would have run into our ports amid ships, and if we had squared the mainyard to wear, she would have run into our starboard midships. Notwithstanding the precautions we took, and the endeavors of myself and crew to make those in charge of the steamer hear, the steamer ported her helm and ran into us on the starboard side, striking between the breech hooks, thereby starting the ship's stern, breaking several planks in the bow, and the forecastle floor, besides starting the bows at both sides, and otherwise shaking her very much. Her jibboom, jibs, foretop gallant mast and all the rigging relating thereto, were carried away, and the vessel was quite unmanageable. Immediately after the accident, I hailed the steamer, and begged of them to stay by us, as I was apprehensive the ship would go down, as she was heavily laden. I received a reply from the steamer stating they would do so. The steamer, on getting clear from our wreck, got round into my starboard quarter, and in a very short period again came into collision with us by running in the starboard side of our stern, carrying away the rudder, starting the sternpost, breaking the wheel to pieces, and otherwise cutting the ship nearly down to the water's edge. Before this second collision, I hailed the persons on board the steamer to reverse her engines, but received no answer. It was almost immediately afterwards that the accident followed. I again begged they would not leave us, as I expected nothing but that the vessel would go down. I received, however, no answer, and the instant the steamer got clear, she bore away in a southerly direction. One of my apprentices named Robert Burns, fell through the aperture made by the steamer's stem in our stern, and was unfortunately drowned, although every attempt was made to save him.

The night was extremely dark and hazy, and the wind was increasing from south-west to south to a gale. The steamer remained in sight but a few minutes. I was unable to get a sight of her afterwards. On both occasions when she ran into us I inquired several times for her name, but received no answer. She was a screw steamer with painted ports and a boat head figurehead. Our vessel was totally disabled. I cut away the wreck before the bows, some hands attending to the pumps. She was making water very fast. We afterwards secured the wheel to the rudder-irons from wheel ropes to steer the ship. The flood tide being nearly spent, I was enabled to get her into the Humber, when I thought it most prudent for the safety of my men to bear away for the nearest inward of the Humber, and succeeded in bringing up with eighty-five fathoms of chain on the small bower anchor, and forty-five fathoms on the first bower, the wind blowing a heavy gale. It was then about 3 o'clock in the morning. In the interim I got three boats overboard in order that I might lighten the ship and have them in case of her going down, which I fully anticipated, there being a heavy sea running and the vessel making considerable water. In getting the boats overboard the skiff got stove and went adrift; we attempted to get into the boats for the purpose of plugging up the hole in the stern where the water was flowing in, but the sea prevented us. I then caused all the spare sails to be thrust into the aperture from below, as far as it was practicable, and then under-drawn new lower studding sail double under the quarter, as the only chance of stopping the leak, which was fortunately partly succeeding in doing. I then unbattened the hatches and loosened the iron, that I might be prepared, if occasion required, to throw it overboard, so as to lighten her.

At 10.30 A. M., having a signal for pilot hoisted a fishing smack named the Adventure of London, came to my assistance, and the master of it coming on board, I agreed with him to stop by me till the gale was over for the sum of £40, and then go to Grimsby for a couple of steam tugs to tow the vessel up to Hull. As soon as the gale decreased the smack left, and the steamer arriving the ship was taken in tow, and we arrived at Hull about one o'clock on the following day.

JOHN AUGUSTUS GATGENS,

Master of the bark Woodhouse, belonging to Hull.

People are entertained that some of the unhappy creatures might have been picked up by the coasters, which almost hourly pursue the track between the steamer went down, but the time that has intervened since the loss, without any such gratifying intelligence being received, leaves little doubt but that the whole must have perished.

GENERAL URQUIZA.—The correspondent of the N. Y. Post, writing from Buenos Ayres, gives the following description of Urquisa, the hero of the recent revolutionary events in that region:

He is a man of fifty-four years of age, tall, stout, with regular features, rather an interesting countenance, very soft grey eyes, indifferent in expression when not lighted by anger. There is nothing in his aspect which denotes the possession of any distinctive qualities whatever, either good or bad—without moral elevation as without meanness. When angry, his voice does not alter, though he speaks with more rapidity, curtailing his words; his color does not heighten, his eyes do not sparkle, nor does his brow contract; and he would appear to feign more anger than he really feels, did not the consequences very often prove more terrible than the apparent imitation would have led to fear. I could observe in him no sign of dissimulation, excepting certain modes of expression common among the country people; no sign of astuteness, energy or sumbtlety, save a winking of the left eye, which is rather a pretension to sagacity than a proof of it.

His deportment is decent. He wears a white poncho, both known and country; he sometimes puts on a black dress-coat, which is not unbecoming to him; inconsistent with his manners, which are very unaffected, without being rude. The only thing that mars him is a habit of keeping his hat on his head; a round hat, inclined a little forward, which makes him throw his head back ungracefully, after the rather ridiculous manner of country rustics.

HOW A BOOK WAS WRITTEN.—Whatever may be said of George Lippard, he often writes powerfully. In a letter to the publisher of his last work, "New York: Its Upper-ten and Lower Million," Mr. Lippard writes as follows of his satisfaction in the work:

This book was the child of many years.

It is finished—it is printed in beautiful form—it is no longer in the dark, but before the public; and the author follows its fate with anxiety, satisfaction, pride. Egotism! Think of the long nights he has spent over it. In June, when clover breath and moonlight came through the open windows, and loved ones sat watching by his side. In winter, when the snow was white in the moonlight, and he sat alone, writing, writing—though the same snow, visible from the window, shone white and cold upon the graves of his beloved. Began in a winter when his Christmas heart was a circle of home and its joys—this book was ended on a still summer night, in a desolate house, by a bereaved hearth, when there was no one but him to hear the sound of the pen. And is it egotism in him, when he sends it forth, to think of these things, and follow yearningly its fate?

RUCKETS OF THE NEW YORK THEATRES ON CHRISTMAS.—Monday the 26th was generally celebrated in New York as Christmas. The theatres were crowded in the evening to overflowing, and it is estimated in a New York paper that the receipts of the several theatres could not fall short of $12,000. The receipts of the Broadway theatre reached $7,800. During the daytime 11,300 adults and 4,718 children visited Barnum's Museum, yet so perfect were the arrangements that scarcely any inconvenience was felt. The receipts for the daytime only were $3,600.

HEALTHY.—The Mayor of Trouville, in France, in reply to an insinuation that an epidemic prevails in that locality, says "the fact is, that for the last five years to our certain knowledge, there has only one person died here, and he was an old man of 103, who was foolish enough to hang himself.

WANT OF WOMEN IN AUSTRALIA.—The Melbourne Argus says: "In this, the richest colony in the world, the males outnumber the females to the enormous ext

...TY BOOKS....By Alfred Tennyson.

...ave gone away
...wide:
...
...the door,
...hings before.
...shutter close,
...widows we shall see
...and vacancy
...house.

...no more of mirth
...or merry-making sound,
The house was builded of the earth,
And shall fall again to ground.

Come; for life and thought,
Here no longer dwell;
But in a city glorious—
A great and distant city—have bought
A mansion incorruptible;
Would they could have stuck with us!

Sinope.

THE SCENE OF THE NAVAL CONFLICT.

The following notice in its topographic aspect of Sinope, where the recent battle was fought between the Turks and Russians, will, at the present moment, be read with interest:

...ll on shore to see the place and sketch ... the circling beach agreeably filled by a ...lovely evening. The sun had veiled his ...eyes behind a dark bank of cloude, ...lurid tints of purple and yellow to per... earth, air and water. The wind hushed; ...was frozen over; town silent as sleep or ...not even one twittering bird to break the ...of our walk; fishermen drawing their ...idly, peadent sails wooing the breeze, ...and lazy oars unmoved along boats' ...all Sinope the embodiment of calm repose ...highest ideality. The temples, palaces ...erected by a powerful line of ...have been leveled with the dust. Neught ...of so much magnificence save a dirty ...town of a thousand wretched houses, ...by crumbling walls, and tottering ...of Byzantine construction. Almost ...a wreck is the enormous hull of an em... ...er, which stands unlaunched on ..., built here where timber and work are ...never finished; allowed to ret. Does ...not elucidate the subject? Alas for Si...

...ancient capital of Pontus under that ...than Mithridates Eupator, and the birth... of that great beast Diogenes the Cynic, ...riginally a colony of the Milesians, and deri... its name from an amphibious young lady ...was the unnatural offspring of a river and ...town, the Asopus and Methone, after she eloped ...ther with a third element, Apollo or the Sun, ...indeed, but few traces of such illustrious ...cedents. Many fragments of ancient archi...ural art, however, such as broken columns, ...ellated cornices, and half-defaced inscriptions ...n architraves and sepulchral stones, have been ...made use of in raising these feeble fortifications, ...and they still attest what Sinope once was; ...while the quarries above the town, whence one of ...the calcareous beds is the trachytic rock over...laid by n black volcanic formation seems to have ...furnished its building materials, tell an eloquent ...tale of ... down-hill; for large blocks lie ...there hewn and ready for removal, some sculp...tured, and some actually on their way to the ...city. We also saw the picturesque ruins of an ...aqueduct, designed by Pliny the younger, to ...supply the Sinopians with good water from a ...distance of sixteen miles; and the ancient mole ...can be distinguished under the sea, enclosing a ...considerable space along the shore, and leaving ...only a narrow entrance for galleys, but many of ...the great square stones composing it have been ...worn and displaced by the action of the waves ...with the aid of that universal destroyer, Time.

The subjoined description of the place regards it in a strategetical point of view:

The position of Sinope, about half way between Constantinople and Trebizond, and the promontory at which it is situated, and which, on the land side, may be said to form its harbor, or rather open roads, mark it as a site of importance in a naval war on the Black Sea. This was perceived by General Sebastiani, Napoleon's Ambassador to the Porte in 1808, and who showed the same promptitude in commencing fortifications at Sinope, as in improvising defences at Constantinople. Since that period, the defences of the place have never been completed; and those which were constructed have fallen into decay. It so happens that Sinope never was attacked in former wars between Turkey and Russia, upon which seems to have been founded the somewhat gratuitous assumption that it never would be. This assumption was natural enough for Old Turkey; but it may be hoped that Young Turkey, aided by Western strategical counsels, will practically repair the error with a view to the future. Nothing can be less surprising than what has now occurred in an open roadstead, covered by no efficient land defenses. Six ships of the line walked with perfect ease into the ramparts and shipping of such a place. Its importance, besides its commanding situation on the coast, consists in the fact that it is the site of the only Turkish dockyard, for the construction of vessels of war, except Constantinople. The oaks of the neighboring mountains supply timber more durable than the Russians employ for their perishable craft at Sebastopol. In every point of view it is of the first importance to put the place into a state of defense; though this has been unfortunately delayed till it rather too much resembles "shutting the stable door after the steed is stolen."

What to avoid on the Continent,

Avoid all disturbances, and especially all religious and political discussions, which are the sure forerunners of them. Avoid all cheap hotels, as they are the dearest in the end. Avoid going into churches, if it is only to turn into the ceremony that may be going on there. Avoid talking too much English, or expressing your remarks too freely in that language, as more English is understood now-a-days on the Continent than you may probably imagine. Avoid disparaging everything continental to the glorification of everything English, as it only shows a narrow spirit, and besides, the standard of comparison is not always a true one. Avoid laughing at everything you do not understand, for the laugh may occasionally be turned against you. Avoid leaving your name behind you wherever you go, as the Anglicanneme of Smith is sufficiently known by the title time on the public monuments abroad without needlessly increasing the circulation. Avoid condemning a language you are not acquainted with as "gibberish," as an acquaintance with that same "gibberish" would tend materially to the advancement of your own pleasures and comforts; and moreover, you should recollect that English, to the ear of a foreigner, is not the most musical language in the world. Avoid taking English servants with you—male or female—as they will only grumble all the way, will be a source of infinite trouble, expense and annoyance to you; and besides, you will have to wait upon them instead of their waiting upon you; and more than that, you might as well have left them at home, as—depend upon it—you will have no peace or enjoyment in traveling, until you have sent them back again. Avoid as many extraordinary costumes as you can, for it has been found by practical experience that they only excite the risible faculties of foreigners. Avoid all angry disputes with officials, or remonstrating indignantly with custom-house officers, as you will not gain anything by the process, and the chances are they will do all they can to retard you on your journey. Avoid all dinner experiments with the carte, as you will, probably, get something with a very fine name to it, but which, upon tasting, is anything but agreeable to your Britannic palate. Avoid all joking, verbally or practically, with foreign gentlemen in uniform. Avoid changing too much money at once, as the coin that is perfectly good where you are may be only fit to play at pitch and-toss with two miles further. Avoid taking the prescriptions of English doctors to foreign chemists, the practice being rather a dangerous one. Above everything, recollect at all times the country you belong to, and so always avoid doing anything that is likely to bring the smallest disrespect upon the name of an Englishman! [Punch.

Women vs. Men.—Women in all countries are civil, obliging, tender and humane; they are ever inclined to be gay and cheerful, thoorous and prudent, and they do not hesitate like men, to perform a generous action, more liable, perhaps, to err than men, but in general more disinterested, more virtuous and performing more good actions than men. In my extensive wandering in foreign climes, if hungry, thirsty, wet, cold or sick, woman has ever been friendly to me, most uniformly so. [Lodyard.

An Italian Tragedy.

A recent traveler relates, that a favorite dramatic piece in the towns of the Genoese territory is founded on the following tragic story: A few years since there lived at Port Maurice, near Oneglia, two lovers named Anna and Giuseppe, the children of widows in good circumstances, the former eighteen, and the latter twenty years of age. The parents had given their consent to their union, and the wedding-day was soon to be fixed; when, during a short absence of Giuseppe, probably brought about by artful contrivance, an intriguing friend of the family prevailed on the mother of the bride to give her daughter to a more wealthy lover. Anna, overcome by a maternal importunity, did what she had not firmness to refuse to do, and promised to bestow her hand on a man for whom she had no affection. Grief, however, soon undermined her health, and, by way of amusement, she was sent to the mountains to the olive harvest. Her mother also went to see some relations in the country, and an elder sister was left at home.

Anna, nevertheless, grew worse: nay, she was so ill, that her friends alarmed for her life, sent for her back to her mother's house. Meanwhile, Giuseppe had returned, and the report of Anna's intended compulsory marriage soon reached his ears. On the following Sunday he met her sister at mass, and with the urgency, yet with the resignation of despair, he implored her to procure him a last interview with his beloved. They agreed that he should find Anna in the garden in the evening by moonlight, while the only gardian domestic, an old sailor, was at the public house.

At the appointed time Giuseppe was in the garden, and there he found his Anna, weak, melancholy, and silent, who went up to him with faltering steps; but in vain he questioned her; in vain he endeavored to draw from her the acknowledgement that she still loved him, and noted by compulsion—not a word could he elicit—mute, pale, and motionless, she stood like a beauteous statue before him. At length he clasped the adored object in an ardent embrace, during which he buried a poinard in her heart. She fell without a groan. The murderer hastily fled over the wall of the garden. The sister alarmed at Anna's protracted absence, went out into the garden, where she found her lifeless in her blood, and with the assistance of the old sailor, who had returned too late, carried her into the house.

The wretched assassin, impelled by savage frenzy, after strolling about all night, again scaled the wall of the garden, where he no longer found his Anna, but only her blood, which he was busily employed in wiping up with his handkerchief; when the mother, ignorant of what had happened, returned early in the morning from the villegiatura, accompanied by the friend who was the cause of the catastrophe, and unlooking the gate, entered the garden. The fiendish Giuseppa ran to meet her, and holding the bloody handkerchief close to her face, wildly cried, "Conosci tu quel sangue?" (Do you know the blood?) The mother rushed with a fearful presentiment into the house, where the first object that met her view was the corpse of her murdered child. The maniac again fled to the caverns of the neighboring mountains.

The corpse was decorated after the Italian fashion, crowned with a garland of myrtle, and deposited the night before the funeral in an open coffin in the church before the high altar. Here a person was placed to watch it by the light of consecrated tapers. After midnight the assassin suddenly forced his way into the church; the affrighted watchman ran off, but stopped at a distance to observe his motions, and beheld the unfortunate Giuseppa covering the remains of her whom he had murdered from affection, with a thousand kisses and burning tears; after which, with the rapidity of lightning, he dispatched himself by several pistol-shots, and fell lifeless on the corpse of his beloved victim. The unhappy mother went raving mad. During her insanity she frequently exclaimed, "Conosci tu quel sangue?" and soon sunk into a premature grave.

Puffery.

We have far greater respect for the man who puffs himself than for the men who puffs his neighbor. In the former case there is something of a sublime self-reliance, a noble trusting to unsupported valor. To enter the ring alone, without backers, is at least a proof of courage, and as to self-vaunting, have we not the authority of all the Homeric heroes? In the Iliad no man butters another—each anoints himself, and that most liberally. Why in the name of all that is candid, should a great man affect depreciation? Look to Moses and Hyams. They don't own themselves inferior to any in trade, on the contrary, they take up the Jew's-harp, and tweng it in their own laudation. What would be the effect if Nibbs, in the coffee line, announced himself in his advertisement as inferior to Hunks, who deals in the same department? Why, he might shut up shop next term, for he would be playing into the hands of his rival.

Nibbs does nothing of the kind. He avers his is the sole establishment in London where genuine coffee can be obtained; and, as confidence begets believers, he is a thriving man. Hunks, if he pleases, may insinuate that Nibbs lies, indeed, if he does not, he will hardly secure an adequate share of the public patronage. Sometimes a brace of obscurities attempt to rise to reputation by puffing each other. Nothing more contemptible can be imagined than two blockheads engaged in mutual slaver. Blaw-weary writes an essay, in his usual unintelligible style, upon the genius and characteristics of Popjoy. Popjoy reciprocates, in the next number of the same periodical, upon the tendency of the writings of Blaw-weary. The unhappy confederates conceive that they are covering one another with glory—they are not aware that whatever comes from their hands is foul, and must necessarily defile. Not originally very sweet, they become more redolent of the jakes. Yet this is no unusual phenomenon in literature; and it is the more remarkable because, in nine cases out of ten, the allies entertain at heart an intense hatred and contempt for each other.

Mutual interest is all that binds them together; and they would, if they dared, disobarge with the utmost zest, a broadside into the ribs of the friend whom they have puffed so highly. Real literary talent stands alone, and is altogether independent of coteries. Whenever we see a man looking about for props and extraneous support, we entertain a suspicion that his foundation is really unsound. He would not do so, if he had a well-grounded faith in his own powers, for it is the destiny as well as the prerogative of genius to work alone, and to struggle upwards without invoking assistance. We never knew any good result from these reciprocal puffings.

They remind us of the two tourists, who, on ascending Ben-Nevis, had recourse to one another's flasks for a little stimulant energy, but who broke down half-way, each attributing his failure to the exhorbitant swallow of his comrade. The fact was, that they had shared quite fairly, but that either should have kept his own supply to himself. There is always danger in such copartnery. Laban tried to cheat Jacob; and Jacob cheated Laban. Jaffier sold Pierre, and Tresham divulged the Gunpowder Plot. On the whole, then, we maintain the doctrine that it is far wiser, and more satisfactory for a man to put him elf, than to assign that task even to his most intimate friend.

Oriental Wit.—As a woman was walking, a man looked at her and followed her.

"Why," said she, "do you follow me?"

"Because I have fallen in love with you."

"Why so?" My sister who is coming after is much handsomer than I am; go and make love to her."

The man turned back, and saw a woman with an ugly face, and being greatly displeased, returned and said—"Why did you tell me a story?"

The woman answered—"Neither did you tell me the truth, for if you were in love with me, why did you look for another woman?"

Love and Bathing.—Somebody once said—it makes no odds whom—for it is a pretty simile, and perhaps quite true—that he had often remarked that young ladies take love as they take sea-bathing; some timidly put in one foot, then with a shiver and a look of apprehension, put in a second, then as they do no more than make a trembling, curtsey in the water, the element comes, scarcely reaching the region of the heart, and then with a squeal they run to dry land as soon as possible, and shivering, cry, "How cold it is!" Others, again, shutting their seraphic eyes to the dangers of the deep, souse in head and ears, and rising with Ned's glow upon their faces, declare the sea "delicious!"

"Good Morning."—Everybody says "good morning" in New York till—after dinner. The higher the circle a man moves in, the later he dines, and the longer he says "good morning."

This salutation is a sort of sliding scale of people's precise position, the lower it runs the higher he stands. The man who says good evening" to you at exactly one minute past 12, City Hall time, is down to 0—zero. Depend upon it, he works for a living; he toots it down town, mornings, and carries his dinner in a small tin pail with a young tin pail inverted upon the top of it. The sun reports himself not more regularly at the meridian, than that man's appetite.

There's another that bids you "good morning," and all the bells, little and big, have tolled, struck and rung two o'clock. He's "well to do," and well fed—and dines at half-past—steps gently into the omnibus—fare six cents—and is set down somewhere, to walk gently a few steps, and be a cheir with arms and cushions, meditatiegly ministers to "the inner man."

There comes one at six full past, who says "good morning" still. He's up to 212 degrees on the scale, the very boiling point of respectability.

And there, on the curb-stone side of the walk, toals a poor devil, who for the matter of dining is not on the scale at all. He never dines; he could say "good morning" all day long, were there any such thing in his Almanac, or any "inquiry" for boggars' wishes. The thermometer doesn't go up into his circle; the tube isn't long enough; water vaporizes before it gets there, as at seven P. M., he stands at one of the Park gates, hat in hand, for a copper, and murmurs as you scowl at him, an humble deprecatory "good morning." [N. Y. Tribune.

A Cold in his Head.—We are oftentimes amused by the ludicrous sound and perversion of words when spoken by a man with a cold that effects the voice as connected with the nasal organ, commonly called "a cold in the head." An instance of this kind came under our notice a few days since, with most amusing effect. A man went into a store and asked the clerk:

"Where is Bulberry street?"

"Bulberry street?" said the clerk, "don't know of a street by that name; better look in the directory."

The man with a cold looked in the directory, and running his finger down the M's, stopped at the words "Mulberry street," and said,

"Why, there it is now; Bulberry street."

The clerk answered, that it looked like Mulberry street.

"Well, I said Bulberry street."

"I know you said Bulberry street—but I didn't" said the clerk.

"I beddent say Bulberry street!" said the man with a cold, getting red in the face—"I said Bulberry street!"

"So you did—Bulberry street!"

The man with a cold in his head indignantly left the store, saying something about a "blussed impledent pluppy!"

Interesting to Ladies.—Extravagance we say, has struck in. It appears that some one has returned from Europe with the information, that ladies of high rank there frequently spend more money upon that part of their wardrobe which is unseen, than upon that which is seen. Hence, the ruling ambition of the season, among the newly enriched, is to possess the costliest articles of invisible attire; to exhibit at home to particular friends, and at street crossings and puddles (real and imaginary,) to the public at large, skirts of the most elaborate construction; to wear yards and yards of lace embroidery and stitching, where the eye cannot penetrate, to carry about all day a small fortune concealed among the strata of their apparel, and at night to sink into a mound of down, enveloped in robes which cost more money than the poor girl who ruined her eyes by making them can save in years.

Not to put too fine a point upon it, we may as well mention that for the robes just referred to—thirty, forty, forty-five and fifty dollars are no very uncommon prices. [N. Y. Mirror.

The language of China is understood throughout the remote regions of the eastern world when written, just as the Arabic numerals are alike in all the languages of Europe. A man from the province of Fuchau would not understand a word of the spoken language of Nankin. A Japanese could not make himself understood to a Chinese; and an inhabitant of Formosa could do nothing with an inhabitant of Siam; but the moment they took pen in hand and wrote the sign which conveyed the idea, then all became perfectly intelligible. Dr. Bowring the other day showed some friends a Chinese newspaper, which could be read by 500,000,000 of human beings, though not more perhaps than 40,000,000 could understand the spoken language of each other. [London Inquirer.

Mrs. Amelia Opie, the popular author of numerous works of fiction, died at Norwich, England, the city of her birth, on the 2d of December, at the age of eighty-five years.

FORRESTER'S BOYS' AND GIRLS' MAGAZINE
—FOR 1854.—

A New Years' Present that will be "New" all the Year.

Our plans for next year are such as we are confident will please every Boy and Girl who has the privilege of reading our Magazine. We have the best of reasons for knowing that since the Magazine has been in our hands entire satisfaction has been given, both as to the character of the work and the regularity of its issue. Still we pledge for the next year a positive IMPROVEMENT in every respect! We shall increase the number and attractiveness of its Pictorial Illustrations, giving at least one hundred beautiful wood engravings during the year. The Editor, Francis Forrester, Esq., already the most popular writer for the young in this country, will impart to our pages increasing variety, interest and value. THE ART OF PENCIL DRAWING, written with such simplicity and illustrated with Engravings will make it easy for any intelligent child to become its own instructor in that delightful art. The typography, already the best of the dollar Magazines, will be still more improved. It will be worked from stereotype plates, prepared with the most careful attention to accuracy and beauty. In a word we intend to fully merit the hearty and general commendation of the Newspaper Press, viz., that it is the prettiest and best Children's Periodical in the Union. The following are extracts from among the many notices of the Press:

The reading matter is varied, chaste and interesting, and so far as distinctness and beauty of execution are concerned, we are safe in pronouncing this juvenile work "unapproached and unapproachable." [The Constitutional, Cornwall, Canada West.

This little monthly ought to be in the hands of every Boy and Girl. The February number is full of every thing calculated to please the little Misses and Masters. Better to spend your Dollar for this, little Girls, than for candy; and Boys, it will do you more good than a dollar's worth of tobacco or cigars. Price $1 in advance. [Southern Rights Advocate, Anderson, S. C.

This is one of the best periodicals for the "little folks" that we know of. [Zion's Advocate, Portland, Me.

It is an excellent periodical for youth, and has long been a favorite with a host of the rising generation. [Christian Advocate and Journal.

In engraving, and instructive and entertaining reading this is the beau ideal of a child's Magazine. [Richmond Christian Advocate.

We do not know of a juvenile publication that is so beautifully printed, so neatly illustrated and so completely adapted to interest and improve the little folks as this one. [Buffalo Express.

It has beautiful illustrations and excellent reading matter. It is fully equal to any juvenile Magazine within our knowledge. The well known reputation of its publishers, and the approbation with which it has heretofore been received, commend it to the public. [Northern Christian Advocate, Auburn, N. Y.

This is one of the prettiest and best publications for the young that has come its way to our table. [Philadelphia Christian Advocate.

It is edited by Francis Forrester, who, we are quite sure, was born an editor, for no man knows better than he how to write what all the boys and girls love to read. We are ourselves indebted to him for some of our best articles. [The Young Reaper.

Is one of the best publications for youth that is issued from the American press and it always gives us pleasure to notice it, because we know how favorable has been its influence upon some children who regularly read it.—[Pittsfield (Mass.) Sun.

We really think it worth four times the cost for the children. [North Adams Transcript.

We are well acquainted with the publishers, F. & G. C Rand, No. 7 Cornhill, Boston, and we know them to be men of integrity and ability, and to be relied on for honesty and fidelity in meeting their responsibilities as publishers. [Western Christian Advocate, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The typographical appearance of the work is such as to insure an elegant volume for binding and preservation, a year. [Contender, Concord, N. H.

We are glad to notice that the excellent monthly entitled Forrester's Boys' and Girls' Magazine," published for ten years past at Boston, has passed into the faithful and able hands of Messrs. F. & G. C. Rand as publishers, No. 7 Cornhill. It will undoubtedly improve under their care. [N. Y. Independent.

It has won its way by sterling merit, and is at present the best Magazine for boys and girls in the United States. [Ethan's Falls Republican.

The work is one of rare excellence, not inferior to any of the lamented Peter Parley's in his palmiest days.—[North-western Christian Advocate, Chicago, Ill.

☞ The 13th volume begins with January. Terms $1 per year, invariably in advance. Liberal discount made to clubs. Agents wanted, who can furnish unquestionable references. Individual subscribers, however, may be their own agents, by carefully enclosing a dollar to the Publishers.

A specimen number sent gratis to those who desire it. Also, on hand, the six Yearly Volumes of the Magazine, neatly bound. Price $1 per Volume.

F. & G. C. RAND, Publishers, jan6 1t No. 7 Cornhill, Boston.

Avoid situations which put our duties in opposition with our interests, which show us our good in the misfortunes of others; sure that, in such situations, whatever sincere love of virtue we have, we weaken, sooner or later, without perceiving it, and we become unjust and deceitful indeed, without having ceased to be just and good in the soul. [Bossuet.

To Persons Out of Employment.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED, TO SELL PICTORIAL AND USEFUL WORKS FOR THE YEAR 1854.

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS A YEAR!

WANTED, in every section of the United States, active and enterprising men, to engage in the sale of some of the best BOOKS published in the country. To men of good address, possessing a small capital of from $25 to $100, such inducements will be offered as to enable them to make from $3 to $5 a day profit.

☞ The Books published by us are all useful in their character, extremely popular, and commend large sales wherever they are offered.

For further particulars, address (post-paid)
ROBERT SEARS, Publisher,
de24 181 William st., New York.

Teachers Wanted.

A Gentleman and his Wife, or a Lady and her Brother and Sister, (provided they will be properly educated, are wanted to take charge of our Public School. Salary, $1000, certain, and whatever else can be realized from Music and other extra studies, and boarders from beyond the township. The last Teachers increased their salary several hundred dollars by these means.

Address, Rev. D. S. Doolittle, Livingston, Madison county, Miss., Postage paid. dec10

WANTED.

A lady who performs well on the Piano and sings well, and also a gentlemen who performs well on the piano and violin. Satisfactory testimonials must be given of character and qualifications. They are desired as assistants in the Music Department of the Alabama Female College, at Gainesville, Ala. Address, stating terms,
W. K. POINDEXTER, dec4-4t Gainesville, Ala.

SITUATION WANTED.

A Young Lady well qualified to teach the common English Branches of Education, desires a situation as Assistant in a Female High School, or as private Teacher in an agreeable family. Address "M. H. H., Richland, Holmes, Mississippi. nov5 4t

WANTED.

A Good Situation for a lad between 14 and 15 years old, either in a Store, a Printing Office, or a Silver Smith's Shop. Address J. W. H., Jones Bluff, Sumter co., Ala. nov5 6t

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., No. 34 Gold street, New York, continue to publish the following British Periodicals, viz:
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW, (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, (Whig.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, (Free Church.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, (Liberal.)
AND BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

—TERMS—

For any one of the four Reviews ..... $3 00 per annum
For any two " " ..... 5 00 "
For any three " " ..... 7 00 "
For all four of the Reviews, ... 8 00 "
For Blackwood's Magazine, ... 3 00 "
For Blackwood and the three Reviews, 9 00 "
For Blackwood and the four Reviews, 10 00 "

Payments to be made, in all cases, in advance. Money current in the State where issued will be received at par. Address, post paid, LEONARD SCOTT & CO.,
79 Fulton st., New York. Entrance 54 Gold st.

☞ Postage on Blackwood and the four Reviews, 72 cents a year. [Nov13-1y.]

Education.

EMORY and HENRY COLLEGE.

WASHINGTON COUNTY, VA.

THE SPRING SESSION of this Institution will commence on the 12th January, 1854. There is, we believe no College in the South offering stronger inducements to young men desirous of a thorough course of collegiate instruction.

TERMS:

Tuition per session of 5 months	$15 00
Board " " "	31 50
Washing " " "	5 00
Fuel " " "	2 00
Contingent charge " " "	1 25
	$54 75

With a location famous for health, with ample Libraries and Apparatus, with a full and efficient Board of Instruction, and with a degree of cheapness unparalleled, any young man with limited means, fair abilities and proper energy can here acquire a superior, liberal or business education. For further information address

E. E. WILEY, President,
jan6 6t Emory Post-office, Va.

GREENSBORO' FEMALE COLLEGE,
GREENSBORO', N. C.

FACULTY:

CHARLES F. DEEMS, D. D., President and Professor of the Natural Sciences and Belles-Letters.
REV. TURNER M. JONES, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and the Ancient Languages.
MONS. ERNEST JOUANNE, (of the College of Henri IV., Paris,) Professor of the French Language and Literature.
THEODORE WOLLE, Esq., Professor of Music.
MISS N. JANE SPEER, Miss NANNIE T. SPEED and Miss LUCY McGEE, Assistants in the Literary Departments.
MISS AUGUSTA M. HAGEN, Madame JOUANNE and Miss CAROLINE A BLAKE Assistants in the Department of Music.
MISS H. L. SIMPSON, Reading and Painting.
THOMAS C. BLAKE, Esq., Steward.
MRS. T. C. BLAKE, Matron.

This Institution is situated in a healthy part of Central North Carolina. It is under the charge of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In the selection of the Faculty the Trustees have had reference first of all to superior qualifications, and as far as practicable have obtained ladies and gentlemen of Southern birth and education.

The course of study is as full and as thorough as that in the best Female Seminaries. While particular attention is paid to the solid branches of education, sufficient regard is had for the ornamental; but above all the culture of the morals of their pupils is considered the great work of the teachers. Special lessons of economy are inculcated. The pupils are not allowed under any circumstances to contract debts. Parents deposit money in advance. All the expenditures of the scholars are under direct supervision of the President, and their purchases are made by their teachers. Perhaps in no similar institution of its numbers have the bills of the pupils been so small in the aggregate as at this College during the past year.

The department of Natural Science is furnished with excellent apparatus, some of the instruments being of the highest finish, with all modern improvements. Lectures are delivered on Chemistry by the President, and on Natural Philosophy by Prof. Jones, weekly, and are accompanied by experiments. In the selection of the Professor of French regard was had to purity and accuracy of pronunciation, and the present incumbent of that chair possesses more than ordinary qualifications for his office. The practical use of the language in conversation is the aim of daily lessons.

In the department of Oil Painting the teacher does not seek to give her pupils simply a "pretty picture" at the close of the session, but the principles of the art are assiduously taught in the expectation that those who have special talent for design may prosecute self-culture after leaving the school.

All the principal teachers have had much experience in the business of their profession, and "thoroughness" is the motto throughout the whole Institution. The Faculty are working under this formula: "We are striving to make not the largest but the best school in the land."

TERMS:

$70 a session (of 21 weeks) for Tuition and Board, including washing, fuel, lights, furnished rooms and attendance; $20 extra for music on the Piano or Guitar, or for Oil Painting; $5 for Drawing or French or Latin. The Trustees believe that no school of its grade at the South offers such advantages on such favorable terms.

For further particulars application may be made to the President of the College.

The next session will open December 23, 1853. ja6-3t

Re-opening of the Baton Rouge Female Seminary.

Parents and others concerned in the education of misses and young ladies, are respectfully notified that the epidemic having disappeared, the studies at the Baton Rouge Female Seminary were resumed on WEDNESDAY the 9th inst. [n26] M. W. HEAD, Principal.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE, ALA.

This Institution of Learning has been in successful operation for ten years, is situated eight miles north of Selma, and is the child and property of the Alabama Conference.

There are two departments, male and female. In the male department young men are prepared for the junior class in any college, or if they choose, complete their education here. The female department is regularly organized as a college.

The course of study is extensive, and the instruction thorough. The teaching is done mainly by men of age and experience, (not by girls.)

The President (Rev. A. H. Mitchell) is a minister of the gospel, of twenty odd years standing, and during most of that time has been connected with literary institutions of the church in Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama. He is assisted by seven others, most of whom are persons of age and experience, and all, with one exception, professors of religion. A majority of the Board of Trustees are members of the Alabama Conference, which fact is a sufficient guarantee of its successful management.

Board and tuition are as low as can be afforded, and lower than most institutions of similar grade.

The next term opens the first Monday in October, and closes the first Wednesday in July. For further particulars, apply to the President, at Summerfield, Ala.

B. J. HARRISON, Secretary.
Summerfield, Alabama.

PORT GIBSON COLLEGIATE ACADEMY,
FOR YOUNG LADIES.

INSTRUCTORS.

REV. A. J. EDGERTON, A. M., Principal.
REV. W. F. CONRAD, A. M.
REV. C. D. DeCOENIEL, Professor of Piano, Harp and Guitar.
MRS. S. C. EDGERTON. MRS. H. CONRAD.
MISS ELLEN FOSTER, Teacher of Music.
MISS MARVIN, MISS HADNETT.
MRS. GILMAN, Matron.

The Next Session will commence on Monday, the 7th day of November.

TERMS—PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

For Boarding, per session of twenty weeks $50
For Fuel, Washing and Lights, do. 10
For Bed and Bedding, if not provided, do. 5

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

Tuition—Juvenile Class, per session twenty weeks ... $15
" Second Division, do. do. ... 20

COLLEGIATE DEPARTMENT.

Tuition—English Studies, per session twenty weeks .. $25
" Latin and Greek, or either, do. .. 15
" French, Italian or German, do. .. 15
Stationery, in other class, do. .. 1

MUSICAL DEPARTMENT.

Instruction Piano or Guitar, per session twenty weeks, $30
Use of Piano, do. 5

ORNAMENTAL DEPARTMENT.

Drawing in Perspective and Painting in Water Colors, do. .. 5
Fancy Embroidery ..... do. 5

No deduction for absence, except in case of protracted sickness.

Boarders are expected to have their wearing apparel marked, and to come furnished with Towels, Hair and Tooth Brushes, and Silver Dessert Spoon and Fork.

The location of the Institution is regarded as one of the best in the State. The buildings were erected at a cost of near $30,000, affording capacious and airy rooms for the inmates, and all under the immediate eye of Mrs. E. and Female Assistants.

The course of Study will be as extensive and thorough in Natural Science, English Literature, Ancient and Modern Languages and Mathematics, as in the best Colleges of the kind.

Lectures will be delivered regularly before the Young Ladies, on Natural Science.

Prof. DeCOENIEL, who has the reputation for being one of the best musicians in America, will give lessons on the Harp to any young Ladies who desire it.

☞ Vocal Music will be taught free of charge.

Port Gibson, Oct. 21, 1853. dec10-4t

FEMALE MASONIC INSTITUTE,
Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama.
Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.

TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY, we would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the true interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence a liberal support.

The Principal has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his tutelage.

The services of Miss MARY W. HOWZE, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and felicitous manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.

The Musical, French, and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competent and skillful Teachers, and all due attention given to the arts and accomplishments that so beautify and adorn the gentler sex.

The Primary Department will be confided alone to a choice and gifted Lady, for we design to attend carefully to that sadly and mischievously neglected class of Pupils.

The Scholastic year is divided into Two Sessions of nearly Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Examination Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils received at any time, and charged to the end of the Session. For fractions of Sessions each week is counted one twentieth.

The School is not Sectarian or Denominational; and the only religious tuition embraces the principles of a pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible.

The Principal and his wife have charge of the Stewards Department, and will tenderly care for the health, manners and morals of those who Board in the Institute. Each boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved subject of parental solicitude, and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet, Discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful restraints of family government will be thrown around them.

CHARGES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Primary Class $12 50
Preparatory Class 15 00
Junior and Senior Class 20 00
Music on Piano, Guitar and Harp, (each) 25 00
Drawing, Painting and Embroidery, (each) 10 00
French and German, (each) 15 00
Use of Instrumentals 1 00
LATIN included in the Regular Course.
BOARD (including Washing, Fuel and Lights) per month 10 00

Each Boarder must furnish her own Towels, Brushes and Combs and have each article distinctly marked with her full name.

AN INVARIABLE RULE—Board and Tuition one-half in advance, and the balance at the end of each Session; and every account must be closed at the end of each Session, by Cash, or by Note.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.

Each Lodge in Marengo County is entitled to select within its jurisdiction, a worthy object of beneficence, and have her taught in the Institution without charge, provided said Lodge secure the payment of her Board and supply her with Books and Stationery.

As the Principal is so extensively known, the Committee have forborne to speak of his character and qualifications, and refer Parents and Guardians to the persons named below.

JNO. H. PRINCE, Chairman.
FRANK M. PRINCE, Secretary.
JABEZ YORK, Treasurer.

REFERENCES.

Hon. J. F. H. Claiborne, New Orleans.
Rev. H. N. McTyeire, New Orleans.
Prof. A. H. Holcombe, Mobile.
Hon. R. H. Baker, Mobile.
Hon. J. C. Monette, Bay St. Louis.
Hon. S. H. Pleres, Bay St. Louis.
Dr. John R. Purnell, Selma.
Abner Jones, Selma.
Rev. A. H. Mitchell, Summerfield.
Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, Summerfield.
Rev. J. A. Heard, Dayton.
Hon. J. M. McClanahan, Shelby County.
Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama, September 1, 1853. oct1

MARION FEMALE SEMINARY.
MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALABAMA.

FACULTY.

REV. JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, A. M., Principal, and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Sciences.
H. M. DALY, A. M., Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
MISS E. L. HASKILL, English.
MISS M. J. BONHURANT, English.
MISS PHEBE FULLER, Drawing, Painting, French and Guitar.
MISS J. V. CLARK, Primary and Preparatory Department.
MRS. L. J. ARMSTRONG, Governess.
MRS. REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice, one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and for elegance, convenience of arrangement—for number, else and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentleman and his lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of the positions. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great amiability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and unstirring faithfulness, secures to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, charges date from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady, for the entire session, in the collegiate department; one hundred and seventy-four dollars will embrace the language; two hundred and thirty-five dollars will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the piano, and in the languages.

The above estimate does not include books, stationery, sheet music, ornamental materials and lights; all of which articles are furnished by the Principal on moderate terms.

The Institution is furnished with a new and complete Chemical, Philosophical and Astronomical apparatus. It also has a large collection of globes, terrestrial and celestial; and celestial maps, charts, charts plates and diagrams, for simpl

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, H. WALK

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor

J. HAMILTON, D. D. T. W. DRUMAN. W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME III. NUMBER 50. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1853. WHOLE NUMBER, 154.

MY DYING HUSBAND.

The following is from a new volume of poems, by Mrs. C. E. Judson, published in New York. It bears the unmistakable marks of its Asiatic origin, describing the emotions of a true woman's heart as she sat by the bedside of her dying husband, in the midst of scenes, and sounds, and airs so truly Oriental:

Sleep, love, sleep!
The dusty day is done:
Lo, from afar the freshening breezes sweep
Wide over groves of palm,
In at the open casement cooling run,
And round thy lowly bed,
The bed of pain,
Bathing thy patient head,
Like grateful showers of rain
They come;
While the white curtains, waving to and fro,
Fan the sick air;
And pityingly the shadows come and go
With gentle human care,
Compassionate and dumb.

The dusty day is done,
The night begun;
While prayerful watch I keep,
Sleep, love, sleep!
Is there no magic in the touch
Of fingers thou dost love so much?
Fain would I scatter popies o'er thee now,
Or with soft caress,
The tremulous lip its own nepenthe press
Upon the weary lid, and aching brow
While prayerful watch I keep,
Sleep, love, sleep!

On the pagodn spire
The bells are swinging,
Their little golden circles in a flutter
With tales the wooing winds have dared to utter,
Till all are ringing
As if a choir
Of golden-nested birds in heaven were singing,
And with a lulling sound
The music floats around,
And drops like balm into the drowsy ear
Commingling with the hum
Of the Sepoy's distant drum,
And lazy beetle ever droning near,
Sounds these of deepest silence born
Like night made visible by morn;
So silent that I sometimes start
To hear the throbbings of my heart,
And watch, with shivering sense of pain,
To see thy pale lips lift again.

The lizard, with his mouse-like eyes,
Peeps from the mortise in surprise
At such strange quiet after day's harsh din,
Then ventures boldly out,
And looks about,
And with his hollow feet
Treads his small evening beat,
In such a tricksy, winsome way,
His delicate marauding seems no sin.
And still the curtains swing,
But noiselessly;
The bells a melancholy murmur ring
As tears were in the sky;
More heavily the shadows fall,
Like the black foldings of a pall,
Where juts the rough beam from the wall,
The candles flare
With fresher gusts of air;
The beetle's drone
Turns to a dirge-like, solitary moan;
Night deepens and I sit in cheerless doubt, alone.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The report from the Colored Missions of the Louisiana Conference for the past year is as follows:

Preston's Colored Mission was served this year by Rev. Samuel Haws. It includes two plantations, with 172 members; amount collected $50.

Lafourche Colored Mission was served by Rev. Lewis A. Reed. It is situated on Bayou Lafourche, and embraces eight plantations, 366 members, 118 children under catechetical instruction; amount received $759 55.

Bayou Black Mission was served by Rev. W. J. Ferguson. It embraces six appointments, 201 members, 60 children under catechetical instruction; amount collected $100; report not complete.

Baton Rouge Colored Mission was served by Rev. W. H. Crenshaw. Number of members 140, children catechised 225.

Madison Colored Mission was not supplied. It embraces six plantations, 185 members, 130 children under instruction.

Bastrop Colored Mission was served in connection with Bastrop circuit by Rev. Reynolds Trippett. It embraces four plantations, 295 members; amount collected $358.

Monroe Colored Mission was served by Rev. W. H. Rogers; embraces eight plantations, 75 members; amount collected $215.

Caddo Colored Mission. This mission was left without a preacher; the Presiding Elder obtained one to supply it. There are 272 members and 125 children under catechetical instruction upon 24 plantations.

GERMAN MISSIONS IN NEW ORLEANS.

First German Mission served by Rev. J. A. Pauley; members 73; there are 60 children in the Sabbath School; amount collected $706.

Second German Mission served by Rev. J. M. Hofer: numbers 40 members, 42 children in Sabbath School; amount collected $222 35.

3d German mission served by Rev. M. Muns: 18 members, 25 children in Sabbath School; amount collected $131 75.

The 4th German mission was formed during the year and was served by Rev. G. Busmun. It numbers 14 members, 50 children in Sabbath School; amount collected $126 50, and a further sum of $1306 collected and applied to the erection of a new chapel. Although these missions have suffered very much from the late epidemic, (having lost fully 20 per cent.) they are gaining in numbers and influence with the German population every year. They are worthy of all the care and money that have been or may be expended upon them. The public are referred to the resolutions of the Conference in favor of these missions, inviting the Rev. J. M. Hofer to take up collections throughout the work for their enlargement.

THE NEGRO MISSION-FIELD OF LOUISIANA.

Another year of labor has tested the value of the present system of preaching upon plantations. The results in members converted seem disproportinate to the labors expended. This brings in review the obstacles to successful preaching which the missionary encounters at every step in his round. First, the preaching-place—which is the sugar-house, some vacant "quarter," the cooper's shop or half-out-of-doors in the hall of a double log cabin, in fact any place not otherwise occupied, where room can be made in a hurry by piling the rubbish all around and leaving a bare spot in the centre, for the congregation. Which would all be ample enough in a time of persecution to a church glad to catch the Gospel as they might; but to the negro, in a time of profound peace, who has all his notions of religion laid in some "old Virginny" meeting-house, with its regular altar and pulpit and gallery, such an extemporising a house of God out of every-day materials seems no doubt a violent unfitness to the gospel—old wine in new bottles.

Most usually this hall offer of the truth is unrelieved by anything save the preacher and his pocket Bible. The master is not there nor his family; the overseer nor his, nor, of course, the more genteel part of the "hands." There are, however, some few planters and overseers who are praiseworthy exceptions to this rule, who are present, who honor the Gospel as a lesson to be learned equally by high and low. No doubt the presence of master and mistress, of superintendent and family in Sabbath-day garb is respectful devotion, goes far towards strengthening the hands of the missionary; it shows the simple-minded African that the Word is that of authority and life, by so much at least, as he may think his betters revere it.

The servants of one plantation gathered together, however proper the place itself, must ever lack one of the elements of a congregation. There may be a familiarity of faces as well as of things; persons who see each other for the most part only on the Sabbath day in church, are mutually impressed by the presence of each other, and this state of the mind produced by novelty of place and presence, has ever been regarded as the one most favorable, according to the Scriptures, for hearing the law.

It is the economy of the Gospel that men should not "forsake the assembling themselves together," that they should repent, pay their vows and take the cup of salvation "in the presence of all his people;" that preaching should be to the people, and that the Holy Ghost should fall upon congregated Israel. The servants of one plantation compose a family, and a gathering of them, however large, could not be to themselves half so like a congregation as a comparatively small number would be of those gathered from different places several miles around. Experience shows that sugar plantations change owners more frequently than any other planting interest, and each change jeopards the labor of the missionary. During the last year hundreds of members have passed from under our control by a change of owners. In some instances a change of superintendents works the same result. It is thought by the new-comer that a crop is materially lessened by preaching, that it interferes with discipline, makes the servants saucy, hinders Sunday work, makes the "hands" lazy on Monday, and is generally inconvenient. It is not very difficult for an owner to be persuaded by a pushing, active overseer to give up a policy which seems at least to be a dead loss of one day in seven, and, may be, of a good deal besides. He can think under such circumstances that preaching don't do any good. He forgets that one day in seven has been secured to his "man servant," his "maid servant," his "cattle" and the "stranger within his gates," by the strong commandment, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy; in it thou shalt not do any work;" and that it will take an immense deal of good cropping to furnish him with an answer to the compassionate and just Judge who shall accuse the Sabbath-breaker with robbery.

It is a great though common mistake to suppose that the Gospel more easily converts the negro than the white man. The negro takes the first steps more readily—he receives the Word with joy—but not so readily does he yield fruit. He is ready to join the church, glad to sing and quick to "give in his experience." And it must be set down as a misfortune that the policy of "opening the doors" of the Church—emphatically all of them—has brought into membership a vast amount of colored material only to make the Church inefficient by bad character and to lull the poor souls themselves into false security.

No wonder sometimes overseers think that preaching don't do any good—that "getting religion" is mere sham and is the most fruitful source of bad crops; no wonder they lay upon the poor missionary all his own sins, all the bad weather and all their own blunders besides. Masters have not unfrequently, by a masterstroke of philanthropy, determined to save both conscience and cash, and allow some chronic old servant occasionally to spend all Saturday night in droning over a "quarter"—full of drowsy souls, worried in their slumbers to know whether its somebody preaching or the mill; or else will let some ambitious young fellow, who the trader said was a kind-of-preacher, to tell of the griffin-shaped things that he "seed once in the woods," how he was struck on the top of his head and it ran all over him. This they have allowed would answer for the Gospel.

It is certain that God will allow no such thing; servants need instruction, patient teaching of the laws of God and the hope of the Gospel. So far from any kind of preaching answering the purpose, none but the best kind can; and masters may be assured if a preacher is able enough to preach so as to interest and instruct their servants, they have no occasion to be ashamed of him as their own spiritual guide. To be a good "negro-preacher" requires the highest order of preaching talent.

No arrangement for preaching to colored people in houses set apart especially for them has, we are persuaded, answered so well as the preaching to them—say in the afternoon—in the same house that is used by the white congregation. The Gospel, to be efficient, must be proclaimed from an independent position upon ground set apart to the service of God, not only where the minister is free to declare the whole truth, but equally to all: where discipline can be administered: where the minister is neither thought to be identified with the master on one hand nor the servant on the other; where church membership cannot be affected by sale of estates or change of plantation policy.

In this Missionary enterprise it is of the first moment that the master and the superintendent be won to Christ. The conversion of either often does more for the gospel upon a plantation than a years preaching beside. On Bayou Black the conversion of a few persons stopped Sabbath work on half a dozen plantations.

All this may be compassed by building on the road-side of large plantations neat chapels, to cost about $500, if practicable upon ground deeded according to discipline, where the white as well as the colored neighborhood can worship. If such preaching places were scattered up and down our bayous and rivers at distances apart of ten or fifteen miles, preaching could be furnished to a much larger number of souls by one preacher than upon the present plan.

The planters and their families and superintendents with tacirs, and the Creole population would by their presence give countenance and weight to the labors of the missionary. From this point, too, as a centre, he might upon Sabbath night extend his labors to slaves too far off to attend church.

The Society and the Conference have by express resolution recommended this course to its missionaries, and especially to those large-minded planters who have determined to provide suitable houses of worship and the Gospel for their servants even at their own expense.

In concluding this extended notice of our own slave-field, the Board would state that the whole slave-field of the Methodist Church South embraces 120 Missions, 101 Missionaries, 34,934 colored members, 59 churches and 16,659 colored children under religious instruction.

In noticing the change in the Missionary aspect of the foreign world during this year past, we confine ourselves to its remarkable feature—a movement in favor of Christianity and call for it most unexpected, originating almost without aid from Christendom in regions widely remote.

Sometime in May last there landed at the Sandwich Islands a savage of herculean form, who represented that he was a chief come from the Marquesian Islands on purpose to procure Christian teachers to return with him to instruct himself and his people in Christianity. That his people had heard through a Hawaiian who had left a ship and settled among them, of the results of the introduction of the Bible into the Sandwich Islands, and that it had put an end to wars and bloodshed. Feeling that life was intolerable among themselves as they were then living, he had proposed to go himself for teachers; that he was the High-chief of Hakuhiwa, and that he had been deputed by a council to go to Hawahii or Tahati and get a missionary, as he said, "not a papist, but such as the Sandwich Islands had." On inquiring of a whaling captain he had ascertained that it would take a month to go and a month and a half to return. He had consequently taken five months for his expedition, at the end of which time, if he did not return with teachers, they would suppose him dead and would probably return to their old diversion of war.

A meeting of the Hawaiian Missionary Society was immediately called, the Rev. Mr. Alexander acting as interpreter. Makouai was informed by him that the audience had assembled to confer in regard to sending missionaries to his countrymen. With great earnestness, the chief asked—"Have you found the teachers?"

The next mail from the Sandwich Islands brought news that two Hawaiian ministers of the Gospel and two school teachers, accompanied by their wives and the chief Makouai, sailed from Honolulu on the 16th of June, in the English brigantine Royalist, which had been chartered for the purpose of conveying them to their destination.

In a far distant region from the island-home of the Marquesian chief, just twenty years ago, a little "leaven"—a Christian tract called "Good words to admonish the age,"—had been put in a whole continent of "meal." This tract or publication was a compilation of short sermons on passages of Scripture and the general principles of religion in four Chinese volumes. The author of it was the first Protestant Chinese convert, Lang Afah. The man who received it was the rebel-chief, Tsion-te, then a youth of 16 years, attending the literary examinations at Canton. From this he learned that men ought truly to believe in God, in Jesus Christ, obey the Ten Commandments and not worship devils.

Twelve years passed away, and again the young man came to Canton and spent two months with the Rev. Mr. Roberts. While there he maintained a blameless deportment, showed considerable mind in religious matters and was known as a gentlemanly Chinaman of the higher class. From that time, 1846, until this last year he had been lost sight of, when strange to say, he appears the successful leader of a revolution that promises to control the political and religious condition of more than one-third of the human race—the multitudes of the Empire of China estimated by some at four hundred millions of souls.

Sir G. Bonham, commander of the English man-of-war, Hermes, gives an account of his visit to Nankin: "The insurgents let us know immediately that they professed Christianity—Protestant Christianity—and I believe sincerely, and many of them intelligently so: nor can there be a doubt of their Protestantism, for their expression is characteristic; they always said—as also the Imperialists in speaking of them—that they were worshippers of Jesu, in contradistinction to that of worshippers of Tien-chu.

"They circulate tracts, not copied from Missionary tracts, but drawn from the Scriptures by themselves, and written in a far superior style of Chinese than that current, or, perhaps, possible to foreigners.

"They are iconoclasts, and destroy every vestige of idol worship."

Dr. Bridgman reports that the rebel chiefs are printing and circulating Bibles and tracts. In a speech delivered recently in England, Mr. Hardey, a missionary on a visit from India, presented a remarkable contrast to this policy. He said that though the Roman Catholics had been in Indin 300 years, and had hundreds of priests there, and allowed castes in religion, they had never, up to the present day, translated a single leaf of the Scriptures into any one of the thirty-five dialects.

Meanwhile our own Missionaries in China have been taking advantage of the present state of things. Dr. Taylor succeeded in penetrating into the camp of the rebels; he was received by them with marked distinction and sent off with an escort to protect him beyond their lines; he distributed tracts amongst them.

Bro. Cunningham writes back the most luminous letter we have yet had from China. After stating what a mysterious movement of Divine Providence had opened access to all the nation, he says, "We want a thousand preachers for China.

About half as far to the east of the Marquesian islands as China lies to the west, is a country that seemed more hopeless than either; one that has long sat in the region and shadow of Roman Catholicism—New Grenada. In it, too, "light is sprung up." During the year the news took the country by surprise that the people of that State had dissolved all connection between Church and State, and guaranteed religious liberty to all Christians equally; that they had reduced the priests to their proper level of citizens; in a word, had adopted the policy of the United States in regard to religion.

These wonderful facts of the workings of the Spirit among the nations "without," while they encourage all who pray, "Thy kingdom come," they chide a laggard Church for its slow portage of the Gospel; that she should have allowed a Pagan people to meet her more than half-way in search of the bread of Life.

The preaching the Gospel in the wilds of this country by our fathers, was the means which once excited the zeal of the Church; but those wilds have for the most part been tamed, and preaching to their present occupants is scarcely a missionary enterprise. The preacher should be more than abreast with the pioneer.

At that time Methodism wielded a large amount of this capital of visible toil. It was the genuine article of self-sacrifice which has been so well counterfeited by the Romish Church—by an army of monks, nuns and stall-fed saints, she has maintained a reputation for piety while indulging the grossest lust for power and wealth, anxious to have upon any terms "all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time."

"Indeed the principle of self-sacrifice enters so manifestly into religion that without that condition of good experimental and missional, no net can inflame the zeal of the Church. The ministry are commanded in its constant exercise to carry the Gospel to every creature, because every heart in the Church is moved at the eloquent going forth of her ministers to difficult or distant fields. One thus going forth is worth in effect a centenary of Missionary reports and sermons. He awakens in the old a devotion of substance, and in the young a devotion of self; he gives force to the home-laborer, for his brother has gone forth weeping and bearing precious seed, and he preaches to every member in each stage of his experience, love to man and devotion to Christ. On the other hand, that Church whose ministry are found in no rough road of duty, and whose membership are anxious only to provide themselves with pleasant preaching, may declare herself apostolical—yea, though her voice be heard in the streets—yet who will believe her, for "by their fruits ye shall know them"!

This apostolical element of our Church, too long latent, is becoming free. Our China Mission exhibits it—our five Missionaries, actual and accepted, exhibit it, and the reflex action of that mission seen in the increase of our Missionary Treasury. We see it and feel it yet more in the recent visit to California, about to be repeated, of our Bishop, Joshua Soule—the Great Itinerant, who, at the age of 70, has the Four Continents in his heart on the plan of a four-week's circuit. We venture to say that this last act of his life will give an impress to the Church at home equal to that which the Methodist Church in England received from Dr. Coke's missionary voyage to India. And should he, "the aged," go to China, as he indeed threatens, it will, more than the sea-buried bones of a Coke, stamp the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a Missionary Church, whose ministers shall take a seven years' appointment to a foreign mission as now to a swamp circuit, and whose Bishops shall take the world into the work, and send out in the same hour men to China, to Chickasaha, to Big Sandy, and to Borneo.

The access which Paul had to all the world by virtue of his Roman citizenship, doubtless had no small weight in his estimate of duty and determined his missionary course: so the importance of the American Government in the eyes of the world, while to us a source of just pride, should also be a strong argument for missionary enterprise: one which will be yet stronger should it become the settled policy of the United States to secure religious liberty for her citizens in the territory of all nations with whom she forms treaties as in her late treaty with the Oriental Republic of Uruguay.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Your committee recommend the following resolutions as a part of this report:

Resolved, By the Committee of the Whole in Lay Session, That a sub-committee of three be appointed to inquire into the expediency of establishing some where in Northern Louisiana, a High School for the education of boys and young men, under the patronage and control of this Conference, where the sons of Methodist preachers may receive an academical education free of charge for board and tuition; that said sub-committee make their report at the next session of the Conference, when in committee of the whole in Lay Session, and if said sub-committee report favorably to establishing such an institution, that they indicate a suitable plan for its location, and also devise a scheme or place for its establishment and endowment, and present it as a part of their report:

Whereupon Dr. C. G. Young was appointed chairman of said committee, and Col. A. P. King and A. A. Abney were added.

Resolved, That we take pleasure in recommending the Mansfield Young Ladies' School, under the charge of J. C. Scales and lady, to the favorable consideration and patronage of our people and the public generally; that we regard this school as under efficient control and located in a healthy section of the country.

Resolved, That we recognize the "Baton Rouge Female Seminary," under the control of Mrs. M. W. Read as one worthy our patronage and that in the absence of a Conference School we will recommend said schools in our charges.

Resolved, That we cordially approve of the establishment of a Female School of high order, at Opelousas, and Bro. Cyrus Thompson be and is hereby appointed the special agent of this Conference to procure the donation, from the Legislature of the State, of the buildings of Franklin College for this purpose, and that the Presiding Elder of that district, the preacher in charge at that station, and also the preacher at Baton Rouge, be requested to render Bro. Thompson any assistance in their power.

Resolved, That Wm. Hardy, J. W. McDonald, J. W. Morrow, Benj. W. Pierce, A. A. Abney, Edward Pate Harris, Robert M. Dickinson, W. P. Haughton, J. Bryant, Theodrick Johnson, George W. Wren, William Lackey, R. M. Kennon, Rev. John C. Blackman, Daniel Brown, Dr. C. G. Young, Rev'd. Joel Saunders, Rev. R. Randle, Rev. H. N. McTyeire, and Thomas Smith be and are hereby appointed Trustees of Mahala Female College, located at Mindon. This institution has been permitted to languish in consequence of the uncertainty of the legality of the will of our deceased Brother Drake, in which he had made a large donation to the school. If this bequest should fail, the wants of the country will not fail, nor the claims of the daughters of our people, and we sincerely hope that steps will be taken at once to put the school into successful operation. It affords us pleasure again to notice favorably the Female School of Dr. Speer at Natchez, as one of the best of its kind.

Your committee are pained to learn that Rev. Dr. Rivers has been compelled by domestic afflictions to resign the presidency of Centenary College; they feel safe, however, in assuring the friends of the college that this event will in no wise hinder its increasing and permanent prosperity. The last session of the college was the most prosperous it has ever enjoyed. The catalogue exhibits two hundred and sixty students in all departments. The finances have also been improving; and our hearts are rejoiced to learn they have again been blessed with an excellent revival of religion. It may be well to mention here that Jackson, where this college is located, is one of the most healthy places in the southern country, as shown by the fact that it has been exempt from the late epidemic, which has scourged nearly every other town in the State; and that the retailing of spirituous liquors is prohibited by law. We are glad to see the country awakening to the importance of religious education, and we feel encouraged by the various manifestations of interest felt upon this subject, and especially during the present session of Conference, where we have had the counsel of a Lay Committee, and the indications of Divine approval upon what has already been done; and close our report by commending the educational interests of the church to the diligent attentions and devout prayers of our people.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

H. C. THWEATT, Chairman.

REPORT OF PERIODICAL COMMITTEE.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The publication of the New Orleans Christian Advocate commenced on the 8th of February, 1851, since which time it has reached a circulation of over five thousand; a growth of circulation almost unparalleled in the annals of religious journalism. Its largest circulation is in Alabama, next, Louisiana, next Mississippi, next Texas, and next Arkansas. Since the reduction of the subscription price, now more than one year ago, from two and a half dollars to one dollar and fifty cents, the increase in circulation has not been proportionate to its cheapness. The paper cannot properly be sustained with a less circulation than ten thousand paying subscribers. Owing to various untoward circumstances, this figure is but little more than half reached at the present time; but the committee entertain sanguine hopes that it will have been attained before the close of the present Conference year.

We may confidently assert that it is the cheapest religious and family newspaper in the South; and that the ability and interest with which it is sustained, are not surpassed by any of the Advocate family.

Amongst other reasons for its rapid and extensive circulation, especially within the bounds of the Louisiana Conference, are the following:

1st. That it is Southern in its sympathies and interests, occupying at once the centre of those interests which are eminently dear to the South.

2d. That it is a newspaper in the largest and best sense, recommending itself alike to the planting and commercial public, and to religious readers of every calling. As a family paper, it commends itself by the variety, worth and purity of its literature, and the fullness of its commercial and current news. Its location enables it to furnish its patrons with the latest intelligence from all parts of our own country and the world.

3d. That it is, with a single exception, the only journal which avowedly advocates the cause of Protestantism in the State. The circulation of such a paper, for the purpose of opposing the aggressions of Romanism, has become a felt necessity. In this view, the New Orleans Christian Advocate has a mission to fulfill and interests to subserve, which are commensurate with the religious liberty and the political integrity of the country.

The committee submit the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That they with great pleasure recommend the New Orleans Christian Advocate as a family, religious newspaper, which for cheapness and the variety, amount and ability of original matter, is unequaled.

2. Resolved, That we pledge our best efforts to increase the circulation to ten thousand; that each Lay member of the committee will use his best endeavors to obtain ten new subscribers, and each preacher thirty new subscribers.

3. Resolved, That we recommend that this paper be brought before the congregation, and publicly recommended to our people; and that special efforts be made to induce those who are able, to subscribe for a number of copies for distribution amongst the poor.

4. Resolved, That the editor be requested to print a prospectus on a quarter sheet, and forward the same to the Post-Offices and Preachers within the bounds of the Conference.

5. Resolved, That the laborious sacrifice of the Editor, and the able manner in which he has discharged the duties of his station, entitle him to the grateful acknowledgments of his lay and ministerial brethren.

We further submit the Southern Methodist Quarterly Review to the favorable consideration of the Conference. Your committee are in possession of no data concerning its circulation or the condition of its finance. The character of the Review, as a medium of sound and elevated literature, has been more than sustained, under the editorial direction of Dr. D. S. Doggst. We are warranted in saying that this periodical requires a more liberal and extended support, in order that it may assume its true position amongst publications of this sort.

It is the only one of its kind in the Southern connexion; not local in its affinities, but eminently connexional, Southern Methodism should feel it a privilege, as well as a duty, to give it an efficient support.

The Southern Ladies Companion, although it has not altogether met the expectations of its friends, is not unworthy of your efforts in its behalf. The department of literature, which it is designed to fill, is of the highest importance. If we would wish its improvement, we must exert ourselves in increasing its circulation, and in commending it to the appreciation of our families.

Resolved, That we, this Conference, recommend our delegates to General Conference to reduce the price of our books and publications to the lowest safe publishing price, and that they also adopt the custom of printing the selling or retail price upon each book.

L. PARKER, Chairman.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON PERIODICALS.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

The committee on periodicals having attended to the interests confided to them, respectfully ask leave to present the following report:

The importance of the religious Press is beginning to be felt in the world, but not yet has the influence which it is destined to exert upon mankind been fully appreciated. The efficient service rendered by religious newspapers in carrying out the great designs of the Gospel of Christ in the salvation of men has, perhaps, been but imperfectly understood and consequently inadequately appreciated. The support given to the weekly and periodical literature of our Church is far from being equal to our ubilities.

If, as the workmen in the vineyard of Christ, we are to levy a contribution upon every lawful means for its culture, the poverty of interest manifested in the circulation of our papers would seem to be enigmatical. It is a well-known fact that few of our people content themselves in this age of reading without a newspaper of some kind, and it is a lamentable truth that the eminations of the most trifling secular press often supplant the most solid and useful religious paper. Perhaps this may be more or less attributable to a criminal indifference upon the part of the agents, for we cannot believe that their meager support is owing to a want of excellence in the papers themselves. Surely none are afraid of disparagement when contrasted with the most ably conducted of the circular presses; we can offer either of them to the most intelligent without being afflicted with a sense of inferiority and with fearlessness of injury place them in the hands of the less informed.

The Nashville and Louisville Christian Advocate, published at Nashville, Tennessee, and edited by Drs. McFerren and Parsons, has a considerable circulation within our Conference bounds and well deserves a more extended patronage. We recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That we continue to give attention to the interests of this paper and endeavor to collect its dues and extend its circulation.

The Southern Ladies' Companion continues to be patronized by us, but not so liberally as could sincerely be desired. It is in a stage of improvement, and all it lacks under the management of its present able editor, to enable it to take rank with the first of its class in an increased patronage. Your committee submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That we increase our zeal in circulating this periodical, introducing it as far as may be practicable among the people of our several charges.

We are gratified to learn from the Publishing Committee of the Southern Christian Advocate that this paper is in a prosperous condition. It continues to maintain its former elevated character—a paper in every respect such as we can unqualifiedly endorse and confidently recommend.

We offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That we entertain a high appreciation of the merits of this paper, and will continue to give it a hearty support.

The Sunday School Visitor, under the editorial control of Dr. Summers, has already reached a distinguished position. It is peculiarly gratifying to learn that while it receives high commendation from abroad, the efficient service rendered by it in developing and promoting the Sunday School interest among us is so marked. The cause it advocates is dear to the heart of every minister; the influence it exerts is confessedly great, and its circulation should be greatly increased. Your committee indulge not now in words of commendation, however worthy the subject, but earnestly recommend to this Conference the following resolution:

Resolved, That we will make special effort to place it in every Sunday School and family in our several charges in proportion to the number of children.

Notwithstanding the high expectations we entertained for the New Orleans Christian Advocate, we are enabled by its increasing prosperity to indulge still higher. Our fears have all vanished and our entire confidence is established by the fulfillment of every promise it made. It is now an indispensable organ. To a more than liberal support we must all pledge ourselves. We are gratified to learn that the resolution of the last Conference was tolerably well carried out; this encourages us to resolve again. It must be recollected that Alabama is its chief support and therefore the Alabama Conference must clothe and feed it well.

We submit for the action of the Conference the following resolution:

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to collect the dues, and if possible, to obtain each thirty new subscribers during the present Conference year for the N. O. Christian Advocate.

The Southern Methodist Quarterly Review, published at Richmond, Virginia, and edited by Dr. Dogget, is worthy alike for the richness of literature and the purity and excellence of its moral tone, of our confidence and esteem.

We recommend the following resolution:

Resolved, That with increased zeal we seek to promote its circulation.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

WM. M. LOVELADY,
J. W. SHORES,
J. B. RABB,
P. P. NEELY.

PACKING UP FOR HEAVEN.

A little child was playing with its mother, and they were talking about heaven. The mother had been telling the child of the joys and glories of that happy world, the beauty and glory of the angels with their shining wings, the streets of gold, the gates of pearl, the golden crowns, and the harps, and the white robes, and the song of redemption. There is no sickness there, no pain nor death, nor sorrow, nor sighing, for God shall wipe away all the tears from every eye, and there is no sin, which makes all the trouble here, but perfect holiness. All will be holy, just as the Lord Jesus is holy, and all will be perfectly happy in him. All good children will be there; and he himself has said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Oh! what a happy world! There we shall see God, and love him, and rejoice in him, and God himself shall be with us, and our God:

"There we shall see his face,
And never, never sin,
And from the rivers of His grace Drink endless pleasures in."

Oh, what a happy world! And how happy shall we all be when we once get there.

"Oh, dear mother," said the little child, jumping up at the thought of that bright, happy place, and such happy company, "let us all go now, let us start now! I long to be there. Let us go right away to-night!"

"Oh, but we can't get ready to-night, we must wait a little; and besides, we are not ready for us to come yet, but when we come he will let us know."

"But why can't we get ready now should like to go now right up to heaven. Dear mother let us go to-morrow."

"But my dear child we are not ready yet and we must wait God's time, and when He is ready He will send for us."

"Well, dear mother, let us begin to pack up now, at any rate."

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, January 14.

DEPARTURE.—Bishop Soule left this port for California, Saturday morning last, on the steamship Pampero. The Bishop takes the Nicaragua route. The proprietors of this excellent traveling line presented him with a free passage, through. The day before sailing he ordained, in the parsonage of Carondelet Street Church, Revs. J. Pauley, J A. Ivoy and H. A. Morse, traveling Elders.

The Bishop is in good health. Rev. F. E. Pitts accompanies him. After holding the Pacific Conference he expects to be back and attend the whole or part of the session of General Conference, at Columbus, Ga.

DEDICATION.—The large congregation that met last Sabbath, in the Morean St. Church, just opened, to bear Dr. Pierce, were disappointed on account of misapprehension arieing in the correspondence. The Doctor did not arrive in time. But a home reserve was forthcoming. Rev. J. B. Walker, did well improve the occasion by a dedication sermon and a collection. A debt was reported by building committee of $3500. Going to work quietly and in good earnest $2500 were raised on the spot. Lamented Harry Hill was not there to "take the balance," but it will be raised. Next morning a friend sent in a draft for $250 of it.

We have never seen a more substantial, comfortable and neat church at the cost of $15,000. Not a nail was to be driven or strip of carpetting to be laid. All was complete. The singing of the choir was well arranged for the occasion and well executed. Our friend and brother, Capt. R. L. Robertson, deserves, as he receives, the thanks of the church-going community for the taste exhibited and the sacrifice he has made in bringing this church to such speedy and admirable completeness.

APOLOGY.—Our friends from whom we have several interesting communications on hand and obituary notices, will excuse a delay, on account of publishing Conference proceedings. Next week.

OBIT.—The Catholic Messenger, organ of Archbishop Blanc, of this city, is no more. The wheels of life stood still two weeks ago. So much grease was spent in keeping them going there was barely enough left for "last unction."

Father Perche, the editor, and the Archbishop will excuse us. A press of matter forbad our noticing the event sooner. ☞ If the resolutions of the Louisiana and Alabama Conferences (see Periodical Reports) are carried out, the Advocate has no such fate to fear.

PERIODICALS.—We have, by due mail, the London Quarterly, a first-rate number. Blackwood, too, for December. Also the Ladies' Repository. McGinnis & Carver have laid on our table PUTNAM, for January.

BRITISH PERIODICAL LITERATURE.—The reprints of the five great British periodicals, by Messrs. Leonard Scott & Co., of N. York, have afforded us a world of entertainment, and valuable instruction. The beginning of a new year offers us fitting occasion for making our acknowledgements for the pleasure we have derived from them, and of advertising to our readers that these works, sustained by such an affluence of talent and learning, and the best pens of the British scholastic and literary world, are within their reach for a mere trifling sum.

We refer them to the ADVERTISEMENT for terms and postage. The mail serves these periodicals with unusual fidelity. They are issued in this country nearly as soon as the originals.

GEORGIA CONFERENCE.

The following are the Delegates appointed by the Georgia Conference, to the General Conference, South, meeting in Columbus in May next:

Dr. Lovick Pierce, Rev. W. J. Parks, Dr. Geo. F. Pierce, Revs. J. W. Glenn, S. Anthony, J. E. Evans, J. B. Payne, G. J. Pearce, Josiah Lewis, A. T. Mann, J. C. Simmons.

ALTERNATE DELEGATES.—Revds. W. R. Branham, J. P. Turner and W. G. Parks.

	Number.	Increase.
White members	50,869	2,468
Colored "	19,582	1,366
Preachers	552	14
Sunday Schools	445	44
Superintendents of S. S.	490	46
Teachers of "	2,452	449
Scholars of "	18,592	2,495
Volumes of "	45,719	3,130
	Amount.	Increase.
S. S. Money	$2,558 09	$824 31
Am'n Missionary money	17,727 14

Number of preachers received on trial into the Conference 18.

The general business of the Conference was conducted with great harmony, under the direction of Elder Parks, the President. No Bishop in attendance—Bishop Paine being detained on account of the illness of his wife.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS.

MINISTERIAL SUPPORT.

December 15, P. M.

Rev. L. A. Reed in the chair. Meeting opened with religious services by chairman Rev. R. Trippett was appointed Secretary, and Charles Waters, Esq., Assistant Secretary.

The following additional Lay-Committeemen presented certificates and took seats in committee:

Cyrus Thompson: Opelousas.
Stephen Williams: Castor Circuit.
Col. A. F. King: Jackson Circuit.
Daniel Brown: Red River Circuit.
A. A. Abney: North Bossier Circuit.

The call was then made for the claims and allowances of members of the Conference, covering quarterage and table expenses, and the receipts on same.

The following resolutions were presented by Rev. J. C. Keener:

Resolved, That at this session the Conference decide for the year following, what amount will be needed to provide for the payment of superannuates, widows and orphans of preachers: And what per centage that amount is of the sum of the entire salaries of the members of the Conference; and shall at the next session collect of each preacher such a per centage upon his entire actual receipts for the year: That said per centage, or mort-pay, shall be added on by the stewards of the church to the allowance of each preacher and provided for accordingly.

Considerable debate sprung up on this. Dr. Young liked the essence of the resolution—thought it would work well. He would amend the last clause, making it a request that the stewards add on, etc. Accepted.

The mover said the old plan never had paid and never would. Widows and orphans felt no reliance on it. The preachers felt no reliance. It was driving them to locations. But this was like a mutual insurance company. He would be willing to pay out of his own pocket an annual premium of this kind to know that his own family were provided for. It was better than an insurance company. They die—the Church lives. The Methodist Church had one dark blot on it—the only one he hoped—she had never met the just claims of her superannuates and the widows and orphans of those preachers who have died in her service. The preachers would not be allowed to pay this per centage by a generous people—it would be paid for them. But if they had it to pay out of their meagre income, it would be well invested. Something must be done.

A. Abney would like to know if this sum was to be funded or distributed annually. Answer: Annually. It took the place of the Conference collection.

The question was raised as to the legality of the proposed measure.

Rev. J. Sanders referred to Discipline, page 175—showing that the proposed measure was within the power of this Conference and every Annual Conference.

The committee rose.

December 17, P. M.

The resolution under discussion at the rising of the committee of yesterday. It was read by Secretary.

Rev. H. Avery would amend and have the per centage laid on the quarterage. That was a specific amount and could be calculated on. It would be an equal burden.

H. N. McTyeire suggested, to the contrary, that it would make the burden very unequal. A brother preacher without family was not interested as much in the provision for widows and orphans as one who had a wife and half dozen children. The latter felt all the relief proposed: the former none. Yet they were taxed nearly equal! The whole income, however, was in proportion to the size of family: the benefit realized was in proportion to the size of family. Let the whole income, if any, be taxed.

Dr. Young favored the amendment. The circuit that had a preacher and family to support, could not afford to pay this additional sum as well as the circuit with lighter burden. It would be likely to cut down the allowance if a per centage had to be added to it.

The amendment was lost.

Daniel Brown did not like this new plan. The old was better. He had been a member many years. The people could not be driven—might be led.

Rev. R. Randle reminded him of the amendment—"to request."

Dr. Laney spoke at length and earnestly. He favored the plan generally, but was chary of measures here devised on this subject. If the new plan failed, the old being abandoned, the Conference beneficiaries would suffer. The Church he came from was ready to do its duty.

Col. King suggested, with other remarks, that what was to be raised, be raised in solido. Too many collections were not popular or convenient. The people would rather give more at once and let there be judicious disbursements.

The original mover begged leave to add the following as amendment:

Resolved, That when a work is supplied, it be requested to send up to the Conference the said per centage upon the amount which may have been actually raised within its bounds for the support of the Gospel during the year.

Rev. R. Harp said that, though having no selfish interest in the matter—he had not a family, might never have—but he was willing to divide with a deceased brother's widow and children. He would be taxed gladly, not on his quarterage only, but on all his receipts.

The original motion and amendment was then put and passed by a large majority.

Information was asked how much would the per centage be? Answered: that upon the total receipts of the past year it would be about 4 cent.

The following preamble and resolutions were brought forward by Dr. Young, and adopted without debate:

Resolved, That a prize of $200 be and is hereby offered for the best essay, not to exceed one hundred pages 12mo., in print, which shall be presented to the award of a committee, consisting of ———, before the first day of Nov., 1854, and covering the following ground:

1st. The claims of a Gospel Ministry to a support—general and special—and defining what is properly meant by Ministerial Support.

2d. The duty of contributing to the support of the Gospel and prescribing the measure of that duty.

3d. A rule of conduct by which this duty may be best observed, money collected and the Church supported; which shall be most practical, certain and regular in its operations; and the whole subject adapted to the wants of the M. E. Church, South, and the habits, business and condition of the people residing in the section of country over which she has chiefly extended.

Resolved, That the object in offering this premium is to disseminate correct and useful information upon what is designed to be the subject-matter of the Essay, among, especially, the membership of our Church, and to excite them to a proper appreciation of duty, therefore it shall be for gratuitous distribution after defraying the expenses of publication, and if any profit shall arise therefrom it shall go into the Conference Treasury for the support of widows and orphans.

The Committee of Award was filled by the chairman—Dr. C. G. Young, Rev. H. C. Thweatt and Rev. W. E. Doley.

The following resolution was offered by a layman, had pending its discussion the committee rose, to meet after tea:

Resolved, That, in view of the changes which have taken place, from various causes, in the world of property, whereby the wages of labor, the price of clothing, and all that go to make up the means of living and supporting a family have been greatly enhanced, and in effect correspondingly depreciating the value of money, this Conference, respectfully recommend the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, to increase the disciplinary allowance for ministers, their wives and children fifty per cent. upon the present allowance.

December 16—7 P. M.

The committee took up the resolution pending.

Rev. L. Parker offered amendment—100 per cent. instead of 50. Amendment lost.

Col. King admitted that in the support of the ministry we were behind: not so much from the unwillingness or unfriendliness of the people, but a lack of information and system. He admitted the depreciation of fixed capital: fixed salaries must go up; had gone up in most instances. But might we not be going too fast? People might take alarm. There was the resolution just passed, laying a per centage on the preacher's income and requesting the stewards to provide for this additional sum. Let us rest on that awhile. He would like the resolution recommending an increase of allowance for the reasons given, but no per cent. fixed. Leave that open.

The amendment was accepted.

Mr. Brown did not think the resolution based on true premises. At the risk of being thought selfish he would speak out his mind, and here it was. Were not the allowances of preachers now made in reference to these changed circumstances? Was not a coat as cheap now as ten years ago? Did a preacher's horse die, he was furnished with another, gratis? (Rev. Mr. Pipes said they had not given him a horse. Mr. B. replied—You did not lose a horse on the Natchitoches Circuit.)

Mr. Abney was sorry the amendment had been accepted. They were not making laws but recommending to the General Conference. Put down a figure and we would know what we are about. Our recommendation ought to be specific, say 25, say 50, say 75—say something. The idea of present figures keeping up the ministry of the Church was preposterous. If he were a Methodist preacher he should see nothing else before him, if he married, but getting a home, clearing a field and making a living.

Mr. Brown begged to say that the trouble now was not in the allowances made but in the trouble of collecting them. Allow more—the trouble of ministerial support still remained. Sorry to say it—must say it though—the preachers were sometimes extravagant. For his part he was afraid of the fishes and of the loaves. The world was going after them. Preachers must not be encouraged that way. A self-denying ministry was the kind. He hoped no worldly inducement would ever be needed to replenish our ministry: rather see it disbanded first. What said the Bible: "He that forsaketh not father and mother, lands and houses, &c., &c., and so on." That was it. Couldn't improve on that plan.

Mr. Ross favored the resolution. The Church loved the ministry and would have them live as well as work.

Rev. R. J. Harp would defend the people and Methodists of Louisiana from implications here. He believed they would vote nine to one against the present salaries. The stewards even now evaded it. No intelligent congregation thought of confining itself to disciplinary figures. He had met with a few—even good members—of Bro. Brown's way of thinking: but they were few and disappearing. He always got more than the fifty per cent.: could trust it to the laity.

Dr. Young thought that while many good members seem to regard poverty as necessary to the spiritual welfare of the ministry, they had no idea of applying to themselves the same means of edification. He once went to a good living planter, that had been in the Church for years and never gave anything for its support. He told him what had to be raised for the Presiding Elder and preacher in charge that year, and asked his contribution. "Why," said he, in dead earnest, "I thought the Discipline always supported the preachers."

Rev. W. A. Smyth was not a speech-maker, but would say that the laity present seemed more anxious to raise the support of the ministers than were they to receive it. He would suggest that the preachers do not vote and the committee do not report to Conference, but turn it over to the Quarterly meetings and let them fix it up.

Mr. Brown felt in duty bound to set himself right in reference to Bro. Hurly's remarks. His life and character stood for him at home, as the Church's servant and preacher's friend. If Bro. H. got more than his Disciplinary allowance, by fifty per cent., and he was a specimen, what was the use of the resolution?

Mr. Thompson considered it hard to improve on the old plan. Preachers were well fed, well clothed, rode good horses, could come a great way to Conference. He could not see where the need, the demand for allowance was. Mr. T. was a merchant by profession, and could say that the matter of prices and produce, &c., was as broad as it was long. People used to pay 37 1-2 cents for calico to make dresses and now get it for 15 cents, and even a better article. Methodism was cheap and hence it was everywhere about. He would keep it cheap; meant to vote with Mr. Brown. Pews, carpets, and chandeliers were coming too much in fashion. He rejoiced in a poor man's church. He came from a sugar region, (Opelousas) and there the people were making sugar at from 1 1-2 to 4 cents a pound, and molasses at 15 cents a gallon, and but for God's good Providence in getting very large crops, they would fall behind.

Rev. A. E. Goodwyn favored the resolution. No just delicacy would keep ministers from speaking out. They never asked salaries, only a support—had a right to that. Had no objection to putting carpets, curtain-hangings and such luxuries away, if these were discarded from all houses, as well as the house of God and the parsonage, and turned into money for the poor. The claims of the ministry were simple and stood upon high grounds—Bible precepts—and might be even preached upon. He was embarrassed with no mawkish modesty in this matter—saw no reason why others should be. Felt no concern in his own case—always had been, always expected to be supported. But it was the principle of the thing.

[Speaker also said something about old fogyism and Young America.]

In the midst of some excitement Mr. Brown said the other side had gained nothing by the last speech and Mr. Harp's.

Rev. Mr. Randle deeply regretted the last speech—it was irritating. There was a general disclaimer, all round, of any intentional unkindness.

H. N. McTyeire thought both feelings and explanations unnecessary. Their lay-brethren had been invited there, not to disguise counsel but give it: liked the plain way they did it on every subject—this one especially. He would not go one step ahead of them here: waited for them to lead and they were leading. He had received for publication, just before leaving the office of the Advocate to come here, two sets of resolutions, emanating from laymen, looking in this direction. All the signs that indicate public opinion, pointed in the direction of the resolution under discussion. As to the remarks of his friend from Opelousas—all very well. He had no objection to a self-denying ordinance: only let it be a general thing. He knew that Bro. Brown contributed largely to the Missionary Society: understood he was the main pillar of liberality on his circuit. Such men might talk without suspicion of selfishness. His Rev'd. Bros. Harp and Goodwyn, had been more fortunate than himself. Not since 1848 had he received an adequate support from the Church, any one year. His lay-friends from the Crescent City must forgive him for this deposition. (Mr. Waters: But you are right, give it to us—deserve it.) He had lived, it is true, but had been obliged more or less to other means than a pastor's income in order, to use a homely phrase, to make buckle and strap meet at the end of the year. He had almost lost confidence in our pastorate, as a means of support. It required faith like Peter's walking upon water, for a man of family to trust it. Sometimes feared he was near that point when the only provision made for him by the Church he served was—location. Thousands had already availed themselves of it, and would, unless there were a change. If stewards habitually evaded the Discipline which allowed mere table expenses, beyond quarterage, it was to their credit, but not to be left so. Legalize their liberal action. Putting congregations to the necessity of acting illegally in order to act justly was, to say the least, putting law and justice in singular attitudes to each other. Evasions were demoralizing to the public conscience. Evade law in one point and why not another? He had four children—five ones, too, he thought—valued each one at $100,000. But the Discipline put them down at $16 apiece! It was this $100 and $16 and $24 figure that keyed every thing down in the financial estimates of Methodists, not only touching ministerial support, but in everything else. The idea of a cheap Gospel had gone abroad and was extensively gloried in by some who mistook the sacrifices of others for their own. A late writer called it the $100 yard-stick. As a standard it was behind the times and did injury to the preachers and injustice to the wealth and liberality of Methodist people. The proposed alteration made, the difficulty of collecting, as has been said, would still remain, but it would be a recognition of a right and ground for a claim, where now was none. It would bring our theory at least up to the level of the Bible on this subject, where it is not—"The laborer is worthy of his hire." This we can do if no more—hold the law of the Church guiltless of ministerial starvation.

At 9 1-2 o'clock P. M., the question was taken on the resolution as amended and passed by a vote of 24 yeas and 4 nays—the last including two preachers and two laymen.

The Committee rose.

NOTE.—The resolution above was subsequently reported to the Conference and adopted. Also that on Conference beneficiaries, which finally stood thus:

ORPHAN'S AND WIDOW'S PER CENT.

The members of the Louisiana Annual Conference acknowledge with shame and tears their past neglect in the support of their worn-out brethren and the widows and orphans of those who have died in the work. Therefore, looking to the favor of the Lord and the hearts of the Methodist people,

Resolved, That at this session the Conference will estimate for the year following what amount will be needed to provide for the support of its superannuates, widows and orphans, and what per centage that amount is of the sum of the entire salaries of the members of the Conference.

Resolved, That the Conference will at its next session collect of each preacher such a per cent. upon his entire receipts for the year.

Resolved, That the Stewards of circuits and stations are hereby requested to add such a per cent. to the salary of each preacher and provide for it accordingly.

Resolved, That those works which may be supplied be requested to collect in the same manner the sums per centage upon the whole amount of their actual receipts, and send up to the next session of the Conference.

THE PRIZE ESSAY.

The offer of two hundred dollars for a prize Essay, by the Louisiana Conference, will arrest some attention. It will doubtless draw forth an elaborate, full and practical Essay on Methodist Economy that will be useful to the body calling for it, in developing its benevolent operations, and other Conferences. Our connexional character admits this.

Several Essays are already out that have done good in all the Churches—quickening the springs of benevolence and systematising charity. But none of these have a specific adaptation to Methodism. Such an one it is now designed to secure. The material is rich and ample and the opportunity for doing great good will be an inducement, infinitely above the prize, for the very best writers to enter the field. It is a disideratum. The whole subject needs putting in order. What has been done and projected, was by "fits and starts"—without generally understood principles—united action—large design or permanent operation.

Within the limits of each Annual Conference there is room and wealth and need for developing and sustaining nearly every institution peculiar to Methodism—high schools, male and female—a college—an endowment for the education of the ministry and their children—a fund for Church extension, and a broad, strong basis for evangelical operations. If these things were projected and worked on the scale of an Annual Conference, connexionalism would not suffer. There are other hands to secure it: and grandplans, ambitious unwieldly schemes, halting alliances, joint ownerships between which the victim is mismanaged or dies of neglect—these would be less talked of—and more would be accomplished.

Dr. C. G. Young, who offered the resolutions, promptly and with his accustomed generosity, gave $100—half the prize. The balance was provided.

But for a specific and authoritative description of the Essay, we refer to the Resolutions which may be found in the report of the proceedings of Committee of Whole.

MISSISSIPPI SYNOD.—The Creole gives the proceedings of this body, which met last month in Jackson:

A New Presbytery Formed.—A new ecclesiastical judicatory was erected, to be called the "Presbytery of Red River." Boundaries: A line to run due west from mouth of Red River to the Texas line; another by the Red River, &c., to the eastern line of Morehouse parish, and thence to the Arkansas line—to include all of Louisiana within that angle, embracing nine churches and four ministers.

PUBLICATION HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS.—The report of the corporation, having the interest in charge, was presented in print, by the Rev. N. G. North, of New Orleans, and 800 copies were distributed among the members. The measures of this Board were approved—their purchase of a publication house (effected July, 1853) highly commended—and it was enjoined upon the four Presbyteries to take the proper steps for raising the balances accruing on the notes maturing in the spring of 1854-'55-'56.

TRIUMPH OF PEACE.—This age leaves behind the sword and spear, as means of war: ploughshares and pruning-hooks as emblems of peace. The prophet know not of villainous saltpetre and railroads. But the following item of news looks like fulfillment. Would that it were universal and the nations forgot the art of war! Says an exchange: "Bonnett, Murshall & Co., of Pittsburgh, have recently made a purchase in Canada of eleven large iron cannons. They intend using them in the manufacture of railroad iron. The cannons were used against the United States throughout the whole of the war of 1812, and it is said made sad havoc among our troops at Lundy's Lane."

THE BEDINI RIOT.

It will be perceived that the fanatic Gavazzi, who is the sole and violent accuser of Bedini, is for the second time, by his furies, the cause of bloodshed. Against the Nuncio, nothing appears in this country, except this fierce exmouk's allegation that Bedini, in Italy, might have prevented the execution of some of the Italian patriots. Bedini answers that he is not responsible: for that these things were done by military and civil governors, over whom he, as merely an ecclesiastic, had no control. The answer looks much more reasonable than the accusation. But, at any event, it is monstrous that we, in this country of toleration, are to have mobs raised and the blood of citizens spilt, about the quarrel of two priests.

PREPARATIONS FOR A RIOT AND BLOODSHED.

We little dreamt, when we, late on Sunday night, wrote, with all the settled indignation of a sober, experienced and just citizen of this country, where nothing but God himself should be so venerated as the laws, our yesterday's notice of the Bedini riots in Cincinnati, to awake in the morning, and find the fences and blank walls of this gay and good-hearted city plastered with fiery-red placards, exhorting, in four different languages, our people to give to Cardinal Bedini, when he shall next week arrive here, the same sort of welcome which the brewers of London gave to Hayneau.

The English portion (if English it can be called) of this lawless document, is literally as follows:

"SIGNOR BEDINI, THE BUTCHER OF BOLOGNA!

Is coming to this city next week: we have received here General Lafayette, Kossuth, Kinkel and other heroes for freedom with unequalled enthusiasm: the escape of Fr Meagher, O'Brien, Smith and O'Conner, those patriots of Green Ireland from a tyrannic prison has been greeted with the utmost joyces; Bedini, the tigre, who is guilty of the murder of hundreds of patriots, their wives and children in Italia, who ordered that Ugo Bassi, the patriotic Katholic priest, be scalped before he was executed; will this abominable servant of despoty receive the same honors, as the heroes of freedom, or will be followed the action of the Brewers of London against Haynau?"

Then comes, in French, the subjoined appeal to the passions of that nation:

"SIGN. BEDINI. HORROR! HORROR!

"Arrival of the monster Bedini! Of the assasin of Bologna! Of the hangman of Ugo Bassi!

"What has this Bedini done? What has he done? He scalped Ugo Bassi. He skinned his hands! After that punishment he caused him to be strangled. He assassinated women and children! This is the monster who is walking, in triumph through our towns, as if to brave us as if to say to us, Lo! 'tis thus the friends of Liberty should be treated! Men who have hearts, friends to humanity, freemen, will you suffer this insultar of the people, this audacious wretch, to profane our soil? No! You will treat him as man treat a wild beast. The people of London chastised Haynau, the people of New Orleans will chastise Bedini."

Next comes, in Italian, the following:

"ITALIANS,

"The renegade, my lord Bedini, the assassin of Ugo Bassi, the betrayer of the liberties of Italy, is about to arriva in New Orleans. Italians! Receive him as is fit. Do your duty."

Then follows a like inflammatory exhortation, in the languags of Germany, and addressed to her usually good and kindly people, in the hope of stirring them up to trample upon our laws and the lives of all such good citizens as will defend those laws to the death:

"LORD CARDINAL BEDINI, THE BUTCHER OF BOLOGNA.

"This wild beast, who as papal legate in Bologna, suffered to be murdered with the cruelest tortures hundreds of man, women and children of the republican party, who allowed the head and hands of the patriot Ugo Bassi to be skinned before he was beheaded, is travelling about in the United States, and will, in the course of the coming week, exhibit himself in New Orleans. The fists of the brewers of London gave to Master Haynau, the hyena of Brescia, a proper token of their sympathy; shall not the same honors be awarded here, to Master Bedini?"

Let it now be remarked that the several originals of this extraordinary polyglott betray plainly the fact that the French and German only have been composed by those who understand those tongues; that the Italian is not by an Italian; that the English is by a Frenchman grossly unacquainted with our tongue. Whoever they be that have laid their heads together for this sweet piece of authorship, it is clear that they cannot, even by general contribution, raise English enough to convey otherwise than most ludicrously their bloody purposes. Men, then, who have not learnt even our language, are about to set themselves up to overturn our laws!

And now, citizens of Louisiana! all you that are God-fearing or law-loving, what say you to this extraordinary document? Are you prepared to see such movements as this let loose among you, from Heaven knows whom or where, and your city given up to riot, certain to end in bloodshed, at the pleasure of any man who hates and wants to persecute another? Are mobs, directed by unseen strangers, to usurp the supreme authority here and tread upon your insulted society?

Who shall be safe when seditious once begin? Where shall they stop? Be think you of those to whom, if you suffer these things, the spirit of sedition may descend. Heretofore, you have been famed for your politeness, your kindly, your hospitable, your generous spirit; shall we, at the bidding of any unknown incendiary, cast aside all that is good in us, and renounce for ourselves all the benefits of the law, in order to let men (certainly as cruel as those they accuse) seize at their pleasure a perhaps innocent victim and drag through the dust of your forever disgraced town, greyheaded men and priests, of whom you really know nothing but that their age and calling, not less than the sacredness of your laws, claim that they should be as safe amongst us, as if they were clinging to the horns of all the altars that piety and mercy ever consecrated as refuges for the distressed? But at least these wise rioters have given you a week's notice. Profit by it; and do not let your city be in any manner endangered or disgraced.

Such language holds the Crescent of 9th and 10th inst. In its denunciation of riots and the plotters of riots, we heartily coincide. Thus warned, our police, from Mayor down, should be held to the most rigid accountability for any disturbance the peace of the city may suffer from the contemplated visit of Cardinal Bedini, or any violence done to himself. Of the two evils, mob-law is worse than Pope-law. Nothing is safe or sacred before a mob—property, limb or life; and therefore no punishment violated society can inflict is too severe for the perpetrators of it.

Even a Protestant official travelling in Tuscany or the Italian States would not be exposed to the uncovenanted mercies of a mob. Dungeons would keep him out of harm's way.

The Crescent has in this matter taken ground every true American stands upon and will maintain. We wish we could equally approve the tenor of its remarks and insinuations touching the personal merits of the case. They are gratuitous and offensive; and in so characterizing the editorials now quoted and others that have appeared in that journal, we speak the sentiments of many. "The fanatic Gavazzi"! The editor takes special pains to spot Guvazzi's name whenever passing it. Bedini is a very proper man! He is charged with blood and refined cruelty. Against Gavazzi, "nothing appears in this country" but lectures against Popery. For this, he was mobbed by Pupists. May be the "fanatic" deserved it!

The "fierce ex-mouk's allegation" is a heavy one and will hardly be silenced by the answer of the Nuncio—that "as merely an ecclesiastic," &c.,—since cardinals are civil governors also.

But if Bedini was guilty of all the blood of Italian patriots shed in 1848—he must not be treated as was Gavazzi.

Will our readers bear it when we tell them there is good reason to suspect the whole of this placarding and indignation is a Jesuit trick to secure Bedini a public reception and parade! It is like them—working by indirection and reaction. The notice was certainly early enough if a riot was meant. A significant fact, and taken with this view of the case, an amusing one, is that our six leading journals came out with editorials about this threatened riot: all shooting at once and taking the same shoot. It looked very like the Crescent, Delta, True Delta, Picayune, Orleanian, and Courier, had enjoyed a confidential interview with the same person and accepted suggestions, &c., &c. Each thought to be found on the morning of the 10th the party of order, the asserter of Catholic right, &c., &c. Each was to be alone in his glory and in advance of his cotemporaries. Lo, these six editors woke up in the morning and find their magnificent leaders all set to the same tune!

Well, it was a skillful hand that did that.

SCARCITY OF FUEL.

The tax levied upon every fireside would soon build the railroads we need. At this writing the coal in our grate burns at $2 25 per hhl. The latest cart-load dumped at our door was at $8 50 per cord. In the price of both these articles of consumption there is an upward tendency. The weather is in favor of them that sell. The following appeared in a city paper early in the week:

COAL AND COLD.

It is one of the agreeable results of this climate and location that we rarely suffer from excessive cold, and are exempt from the numerous necessities imposed by it. There are many houses in this city constructed without fireplaces or chimneys, and very few, even of the better order, are too well contrived for protection against such biting blasts and wintry weather as we have experienced for a few days past. During by far the greater portion of the year fires would only be a discomfort, and the few weeks when they are desirable are passed by nearly all the poorer population with but slight additional expense for fuel. If the amount of wood and coal used for cooking purposes, and the amount taken up by steamboats could be subtracted from the total amount sold, it would leave a residue surprising to every citizen as well as every stranger. With such small need it is not at all wonderful that there should be something of improvidence associated, and that those who obtain their daily bread by their daily labor should postpone to the last the purchase of an article which is usually needed last. Such at any rate has been the case the present winter, and cold weather coming on with unusual severity has found every one short of fuel. Owing to the low state of the Ohio and Mississippi very few coal barges were able to come down and very little drift wood has been swept within reach. The natural and necessary consequences of such a state of things has followed. The pressing need for fuel and the slight amount on hand immediately sent the prices up to such a mark that only the better class could afford to purchase it, and the remainder had to suffer and endure the inclemencies of yesterday and the two days previous. They could not afford to expend from three to four bits for the material for a single fire and less than that they could not obtain it. Coal, which has an average value in this city of about six bits per barrel, which we have had by contract for some years at fifty-five cents, and which is provided for the steamships leaving this port at sixty cents, went up a dollar—to a dollar and a half—to two dollars—to two dollars and a half, and is now sold at about three dollars with some likelihood of ascending to five. The consequence of this state of things may be imagined but cannot be described. Suffering and privation run out from it as circles in still water from a disturbing pebble. Every family and every individual either directly or indirectly, personally or pecuniarily feel the results—and the poorer people feel them bitterly.

During the earlier part of the winter, coal was actually scarce and worth the price demanded. Since then, however, it has been more abundant, and the coal merchants have had and have it in their power at any moment to turn this want into plenty and at rates sufficiently remunerative to themselves. They have nevertheless complained of the shortness of their stock and convinced any incredulous individual, by a walk to the Levee and an exhibition of the few flats fastened there, of the truth of their allegations. We were convinced in the same manner, but mindful of some previous transactions in this market, and aware of some antecedent occurrences, our convictions led us to explore the coast between the foot of Canal street and the great crevasse—a distance of about fifteen miles. Our explorations were rewarded by the discovery of nineteen flatboats fastened to this and the opposite shore, and freighted with cargoes of coal averaging 4500 barrels—amounting in the aggregate to 85,500 barrels! which in this cold weather would be very acceptable in the city. We do not charge upon the coal merchants that they own these flats and have fastened them above with the idea of keeping up, if not farther raising, the price of coal, although it has been so stated to us; but we take the liberty of publishing the fact and apprising our readers of a probably very considerable reduction in the price of coal.

We may add to the above, the fact that there are twenty-four more barges between this city and Baton Rouge, all deeply laden with coal; and that from Memphis to Pittsburg the river is black with stranded flatboats—only waiting a rise in the river to reach our levee.

THE YEAR 1854.—It is something worthy of remark that the present year (1854) begins on Sunday and ends on Sunday. There are five months in the year that have five Sundays, and there are fifty-three Sundays in the year. Such a coincidence, we believe, will not occur for about thirty years.

The clergy of the Roman States, including monks and nuns, number sixty thousand. Their united incomes amount to ten millions and a half dollars. The population of the Roman States is about equal to that of the State of New York. So says Father Gavazzi in his new paper, the Crusader.

THE AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.—From a report of the American Sunday School Union before us we learn that that Association is in a most prosperous condition. During the past summer 214 young men were engaged in its service, and 695 new schools have been by them established, and 24 203 children receiving instruction in these schools. In these schools 4417 persons acted as teachers, and it is estimated that over 200,000 volumes of moral and religious teaching have been distributed.

AN INCIDENT.—Speaking of the tightness in the money market, says the Philadelphia correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, a little incident came under my notice on Wednesday, which is worth relating. I stepped into one of the fashionable jewelry stores in Chestnut street and saw a lady purchase a lot of diamonds worth $625, and ordered them to be sent home. A few minutes afterwards I met the husband of the lady in a broker's office, in Third street, negotiating a note of five thousand dollars at a shave of four per cent. per month.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

JEWISH FESTIVALS.

PASSOVER.

On the morning of the fifteenth day of Nisan is "Holy Convocation," (Ex. xii. 16,) and the family repair to the synagogue about 8 A. M. Various prayers and hymns are added to the ordinary ritual, and oven this is chaunted in more joyful tune. These "hymns," or Piutim, (a corruption of the latin poeta and poema,) were chiefly composed by Spanish Jews of the 11th and 12th centuries, and their language is now but little understood and less appreciated. Several copies of the Law are taken out of the "Ark," and the passage of the Pentatauch enjoining this festival is then read aloud.

There is one remarkable feature in this day's ritual which I must not omit: "The blessing of the Priests," which takes place at every festival. The lineal descendants of Aaron assemble near the door, take off their shoes and have their hands washed by the Levites, and then lay their fingers very mysteriously with the fringes (Numb. xv. 38) of their Tabith or veil; and at the call of the minister they approach the Ark, and turn toward the congregation, who out of awe and reverence look in the opposite direction, so as not to behold the priests while engaged in this solemn service. The benediction used is that prescribed for the purpose in Numbers, vi. 22-27: "The Lord bless thee, and keep thee: the Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee: the Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace." The priests chaunt every word singly and slowly, giving the congregation time to repeat a silent prayer during the saying of each. This service can only be performed by lineal descendants of the house of Aaron, or, what is paramount to it, by those who believe themselves such.

The services close about noon. In the afternoon they again go to the synagogue for about half an hour, and have Vespers. At night the same services and ceremonies are used as on the preceding evening, both at the synagogue and afterwards in the family circle. The second day is in all respects like the first, and so are the seventh and eighth, though different. "Piutim" are appointed for each. The canticles or Song of Solomon, is read on one of these days. For this no special reason can be assigned.

The four intermediate days come under the rubric of semi-festivals, as all ordinary and necessary labors may be performed on them. These days, called "Chol Hamoed," (the common or secular part of the feast,) are spent as Christmas-week with us, or Thanksgiving day in New England—that is in visiting friends and going on pleasure excursions, &c. Dancing being a favorite pastime among the Jews of Germany, France and Poland, as well as with their Gentile brethren in those countries, they devote a great part of these holidays to this amusement.

The seventh day is considered the anniversary of the Passage through the Red Sea, and in commemoration of it the Song of Triumph (Ex. xv.) is chanted.

On the eighth and last day after the reading of the Law a manuscript volume is brought forth and read aloud by the Hazan, or minister. This record contains the memoirs and eulogies of such reported worthies, martyrs to the faith, liberal testators and pious ascetics, as have lived and died in the neighborhood. Every congregation lays claim to any antiquity has such a "Book of Remembrance." Generally nothing is known of these heroes beyond the meagre record in this book. No additions are now made to these lists; why, I cannot conjecture, unless it be that the days of persecution are over, and these prosaic times of ours are not very favorable for attaining a martyr's crown. These memoirs are read three times a year only: on Passover, Pentecost and the Feast of Tabernacles.

I mentioned above that the two first and two last days of the Feast are now kept holy, although the Law only directs the First and Seventh to be celebrated by "holy convocations;" the reason assigned for this deviation from the "Old Paths," is, that as the Jews are dispersed all over the face of the globe, it would be very difficult for them to observe the changes of the moon with sufficient exactness to be able to keep the Passover at one and the same day all over the world. By celebrating two days in place of one, they think to meet the difficulty, as "out of two one must be the right one." It must be remembered that the Jewish months are lunar entirely, and their almanacs and astronomical tables calculated by the meridian of Jerusalem. This doubling the day takes place also on Pentecost, New Year and the Feast of Tabernacles; and such is the force and authority attached to these traditions, that the modern reformers—who have thrown out these Second Days as being inconvenient to the shop-keeping and exchange-frequenting part of their congregation—are excommunicated by all orthodox rabbis.

The following may serve as a specimen of the prayers for these festivals. The translation from the Hebrew is as liberal as the idiom of the English will admit of: "We have been driven from our country and distanced from our land, and we can no longer go up, and appear before thee, bow down unto thee, or offer up our sacrifices in the house of thy choice—that great and holy temple which was called after thy name. May it please thee, O Lord, our God and God of our fathers, merciful King, to turn and have mercy upon us, and upon thy sanctuary, in thy great mercy: to build it speedily, and increase its glory! Our Father and our King, reveal the glory of thy kingdom soon unto us, shine upon us, and lift us up in the eyes of all living; hasten our deliverance from among the Gentiles, and gather us, dispersed, from the ends of the earth. Bring us to Zion, thy city, in rejoicing, and to Jerusalem, the house of thy sanctuary in thy joy of the world, and there we will offer up before thee the sacrifices as appointed, the perpetual offerings in their order, the additional sacrifices as prescribed, and we will offer up also the additional sacrifices of this feast of Passover [or whatever the feast may be] in love according to the commandment, as thou hast written in thy Law, thro' the hands of Mosee, thy servant, as follows."

Then follow the enumeration of sacrifice appointed for the day.

The following is another, shewing like the foregoing, the great yearning of the nation for their restoration to the Holy Land and the rebuilding of the Temple. This sentiment pervades all their prayer: "Our God, and God of our fathers, merciful King, be gracious unto us; return unto us in the greatness of thy mercy: and for the sake of our fathers who did thy will, build the Temple, as it was in the beginning, and erect thy sanctuary upon its foundation; and show us its erection, and make us glad in its rise; replace the Priests in their ministry, and the Levites to sing and to praise thee; and bring back Israel to their dwelling-places; and then we will go up, appear before thee, and bow down three times a year as it is written in thy Law: (Dent. xvi. 16,) 'Three times in a year shall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God in the place which he shall choose; in the feast of unleaven bread, and in the feast of weeks, and in the feast of tabernacles; and they shall not appear before the Lord empty.'"

I should have liked to give some specimens also of the Piutim, but have not the material at present, being situated in the country where I can have no access to the literary treasury of a Bohnina, nor even to the ordinary liturgies for the festivals. But I venture to say that my readers congratulate themselves on this my mishap, as they have already been bored sufficiently by the dryness of these papers without my superadding the dulness of those Spanish-Hebrew poems. Even so let it be then.

Columbia, S. C. JOSEPHUS.

THE CHURCH SETTLEMENT.

From the Commercial Advertiser, New York, we take the particulars of this case; the main points having been previously given our readers, through one of the Southern Commissioners, Dr. Smith:

PROPERTY QUESTION SETTLED.—The undersigned, a committee appointed for the purpose of preparing a statement for publication of the action of the Commissioners upon the question in litigation between the M. E. Church, and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in relation to the property of the Book Concern in New York, report the following:

The Hon. John M'Lean, having voluntarily undertaken a correspondence with the Commissioners of the M. E. Church and the M. E. Church, South, and having received assurances from both parties of a disposition to come to an amicable settlement of the matter in litigation, and having been invited to be present at a meeting of the aforesaid Commissioners, and to aid them with his counsels, met with them at the Mission Rooms, 199 Mulberry street, New York, on the 26th ultimo, and, by the unanimous request of the Commissioners, acted as chairman.

After a careful and most friendly examination of the whole question, the Southern Commissioners made a proposition for a settlement of their claim, which the Commissioners for the New York Concern accepted. Nothing now remains to be done to consummate this desirable adjustment of a most troublesome litigation, but the execution of the necessary papers, and the arrangement for a final decree of the United States Court for the Southern District of New York, now in session in this city.

This settlement has been agreed upon by the parties without the arbitrament of a third party, and is to each entirely satisfactory. The conclusion of this settlement was followed by thanksgivings to God, and most hearty expressions of Christian love and mutual confidence. The feelings which prevail among the commissioners of the two churches, we may hope, is a true type of that which will prevail hereafter throughout the bounds of Methodism, North and South.

Much credit is to be awarded to his Honor, Judge M'Lean, for his agency in the completion of this important and desirable arrangement; and we doubt not but this act will stand promiuently among those of his long and brilliant career, which have given him so enviable a position before the Christian public.

The details of the settlement will be made known to the public when the final decree of the court shall transpire.

GEORGE PECK.
WILLIAM A. SMITH.

The above report was unanimously adopted.

Z. PHILLIPS, Secretary.

The following is a synopsis of the term of settlement. The commissioners of the M. E. Church retain all the property belonging to the Book Concern, including the depositories at Boston, Pittsburgh, and Charleston, S. C., with the papers at Auburn and Pittsburgh, and pay to the commissioners of the M. E. Church, South, their pro-rata dividend, amounting to the sum of $69,062 59; and for their interest in the above property the sum of $121,037 41. Whole amount to be paid the South $191,000.

The South retain their newspaper presses, with about $40,000 in old notes and book accounts, within the bounds of the M. E. Church, South.

It will be seen that this settlement does not embrace the Western Book Concern in Cincinnati, which will have to be the subject of an independent arrangement.

Since the above was in type we have received the following:

On Thursday, Dec. 8, in the U. S. Circuit Court, the Judges made a final decree in the case of the Methodist Church upon the following agreement:

"And it is further agreed by the parties that $70,000 shall be paid as follows:—$10,000 on the filing of this decree, $40,000 on the 5th day of January next, and the remaining $20,000 on the first day of March next. The residue of the $191,000, amounting to the sum of $121,000, shall be paid as follows:—$16,000 on the 1st of February, 1855; $15,000 on the 1st of February, 1856; $15,000 on the 1st of February, 1857; $15,000 on the 1st of February, 1858; $15,000 on the 1st of February, 1859; $15,000 on the 1st of February, 1860; $15,000 on the 1st of February, 1861; and $15,000 on the 1st of February, 1862; all of said payments to be made by the defendants to the legally constituted agent of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; the defendants to pay the interest every year on the deferred payments at the rate of five per cent; and at the same rate on the payments to be made on the 1st day of March ensuing."

The decree further ordered the sums to be paid to the South to be a charge on the real estate of the Book Concern, that the North should pay the costs of suit which have accrued, and that the cause should be continued until the first Monday in April next, to allow an opportunity for the Western Book Concern to come in and make part of the arbitration.

NOTICES.

Quarterly Conferences for Montgomery District:

Salem Station,	January	7—8
Tuskegee,	"	14-15
Auburn,	"	21-22
Crawford Circuit,	"	28-29
S. Uchee and N Uchee Col. Miss.	"	28-29
Montgomery Circuit,	February	4—5
Montgomery Colored Mission,	"	....
Montgomery Station,	"	11-12
Montgomery Colored Charge,	"	....
Catoner Colored Mission,	"	....
Tuskegee Circuit,	"	18-19
Andrew Colored Mission,	"	....
Hayneville,	"	25-26
Big Swamp Mission,	"	....
Orion Circuit,	March	4—5
Union Circuit,	"	11-12
Lafayette,	"	18-19

S. ARMSTRONG, P. E.

First round of Quarterly Meetings in Columbus District, Alabama Conference:

Eutaw, January 14 and 15,		1854.
Forkland and Pine Grove, Jan. 21 and 22,		"
Columbus Station, February 4 and 5,		"
Abeus Circuit,	" 11 and 12,	"
Mt. Zion Circuit,	" 18 and 19,	"
Buttehatchie "	" 25 and 26,	"
Columbus Circuit, March, 4 and 5,		"
Pickens "	" 11 and 12,	"
Greene "	" 18 and 19,	"

Notice to Teachers.

THE PLAQUEMINE FEMALE SEMINARY is now closed in consequence of the removal of the late Principal, and it is desired to procure a suitable person to open and conduct a Female School of a high order.

The buildings are large and commodious, capable of accommodating at least fifty boarding scholars.

The location is one of the best in the State and will command a good school if well managed.

Any gentleman wishing to embark in the business can get further information on the subject by addressing the undersigned, forwarding statement of qualifications and reference. EDWARD J. GAY.

Plaquemine, Iberville Parish, La., Jan. 2, 1853.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square, first insertion	$1 00
Each subsequent insertion	50
One Square, one year	15 00
One Square, six months	10 00
Two Squares, one year	25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

General Intelligence.

MEETING OF THE LEGISLATURE OF MISSISSIPPI.—Both Houses of the Mississippi Legislature met at Jackson and organized on the 3d. J. S. Pettus, of Neshoba, was elected Speaker by the following vote: Pettus 14, Acker 7, Green 1, Ellet 1, Ramsey 1.

M. J. Bunch, of Monroe county, was elected Secretary on the 6th ballot, and W. B. Cavanah, of Lowndes, Doorkeeper.

In the House, Hon. H. Cassedy, of Franklin, was elected Speaker on the first ballot, he receiving 60 votes, Mr Starke 11. Mr. W. P. Anderson 1.

E. P. Russell, of Hinds, was elected Clerk by acclamation, and Mr. Flannagan, of Tishamingo, Door-keeper.

The Message of Gov. Foote was then read and referred to a Committee of the House.

GOVERNOR FOOTE'S MESSAGE.—The valedictory message of Governor Foote to the Legislature of Mississippi, previous to his departure for California, is one of the ablest documents which has emanated from his pen. The Governor declines, under the circumstances in which he is placed by the results of the late election, and the feelings of political opposition to his course, with a large majority of the members of the Legislature, to make any recommendations at length upon those topics which he thinks especially demands the action of that body. The message is hence little more than a vindication of his past political course. He however finally recommends the following measure for the consideration of the Legislature: The restoration of State credit; the establishment or a system of education; the extension or the system of railroad improvements; the reformation of criminal jurisprudence; suppression of intemperance by wholesome legislation; the adoption of means for the final settlement of State indebtedness by conventional action, for the preservation of State honor from lasting degradation; and the necessary increase of certain official salaries. He adverts to the location of the swamp lands by authority of warrants issued in accordance with the acts of March and October, 1852, and with these suggestion he dismisses the consideration of the subjects for the reason alleged.

☞ The Trustees of the Mississippi State Hospital, at Natchez, have appointed Drs. Davis and Holcombe, Homœopathists, Physicians and Surgeons of that institution, for the year 1854. This is the first instance on record of a long-established Allopathic Hospital passing over to Homœopathic auspices. The Trustees think themselves justified in their act by the successful treatment of yellow fever by the new school of medicine.

EMIGRATION FROM ALABAMA.—The Selma (Ala.) Sentinel says relative to the emigration which is going on from that State:

No one has any idea what large numbers of emigrants leave Alabama every year. On Wednesday morning last there were over five hundred on board of the steamer Wetumpka, nearly all from Alabama; and there is scarcely a single boat that passes down the river but there are more or less persons aboard going to Texas, and that too from Alabama. If the people were all, we would not care a feather, but with them they carry their property, the very basis of the wealth and importance of the State as a political body. Since the first of last October we have little doubt but that the number of persons who have moved from within the limits of Alabama have averaged five hundred a day, and will average that number until the first of February, which will be one hundred and fifty-one days, making seventy-five thousand five hundred inhabitants of the State who have air-ady and will leave the State the last fall and the present winter. The amount of property carried out of the State by these emigrants will average $600 to each, making the enormous sum of $36,350,000. It is true this amount is offsetted by a few persons emigrating into the State, and locating principally in the counties of East Alabama But the number emigrating to the State will not amount to one thousand during the fall and winter, nor will the property they bring to the State average more than two thousand dollars to each emigrant. It is also true that those who are emigrating to the State consist of a superior class, in point of intelligence to those who are moving away, and in all probability will make better citizens. But the loss of the great quantity of wealth is to be felt soon, unless some plan is fallen upon by which this great tide of emigration can be stopped.

SNOW AND COLD WEATHER IN ALABAMA.—The Macon (Tuskeegee Co.) Republican of the 5th says:

On Saturday last we were visited by a most delightful snow, which continued to come down nearly all day; and if the ground had been dry, it would have lain from three to six inches deep. As it was, however, it melted as fast as it fell, except on the roofs of houses, or the grass, and other places which had become dry. The boys about town had a great time snow-balling, and for the first time in our life, the sheriff got after us. However, we don't think he made any thing off of us, and hereafter we hope he will be satisfied to let us alone.

On Sunday morning the view was beautiful. The fields were white, and the dark branches of the pine trees were covered with a pure mantle of snow, and every thing was glistening in the first rays of the morning sun.

It is not often we have so much snow in this latitude, and it is probably the last for this winter.

THE HOMESTEAD BILL.—The Washington Union gives the following provisions of the Homestead bill which has been reported to the House, which has been made the special order of the House for the second Tuesday in February:

Any person, male or female, who is the head of a family and a citizen of the United States, is entitled to enter a quarter section of unappropriated land, or a quantity equal thereto, to be located in a body, in conformity with the legal subdivisions of the public lands, after the same shall have been surveyed. No certificate of such entry in the given, or patent issued, until after the expiration of five years from the date of the entry; and in case of the death of the party, the widow or heirs of the deceased become invested with all the rights of the person making the entry. The land acquired under the act is in no event to become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts contracted prior to the issuing of the patent therefor. In case of abandonment of the land before the expiration of five years, it reverts to the government. Aliens who have declared their intention of becoming citizens may avail themselves of this benefit of the act, provided they complete their naturalization before the expiration of five years. Persons entering land under the act are to be confined, as near as practicable, to alternate quarter sections, and to land subject to private entry. The present pre-emption laws are not impaired.

SNOW.—We were greeted Wednesday morning, on looking out of our window, with the sight of a snow which had fallen during the night, three or four inches in depth. Before breakfast the streets were alive with negroes and little urchins, snow-balling each other with vigor. This is the first snow we have seen in Greenville for several winters. There was a snow here last spring, but we were not at home, and did not see it. We have frequently made the remark that there does not fall as much snow in this region of country as formerly. We can remember when the snow fell heavily every winter, and remained for weeks on the ground. [Greenville (S. C.) Patriot.

There are at present in the Senate of the United States but two members who have served ten years consecutively, to-wit: Mr. Atchison, of Missouri, (now President pro tempore) and Mr. Pearce, of Maryland. Their present terms will expire on the 3d of March, 1855.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival of the Perseverance we have received Galveston papers of the 6th, and from the interior as late as June.

Business is very active in Galveston, and the town is so much crowded with strangers that the Hotels and boarding houses find it difficult to provide room for their guests. A thousand persons had arrived within the last ten days. The carnival has been acquitted.

The Galveston News says the steamer Magyar, Captain R. Swa, which left Mobile on the 7th of December for Galveston, has been lost:

This steamer left Mobile on the morning of the 7th ult., and was detained at different points by northers and bad weather, so that she did not reach Vermillion Bay till the 20th ult, when she was compelled to put in by very hard weather. She remained there till the 24 inst., on which day she left with fine weather and a light breeze from land—passed Sabine on the 31, at 8 o'clock A. M. the weather still being very fine. At 8 o'clock A. M. she came in contact with a heavy sea, a strong wind from the east having suddenly sprung up. At 8 o'clock A. M. the steam pipe broke, being then about two miles from land. An anchor was thrown out, but the cable was obliged to be slipped in account of a heavy sea which broke over her. She then drifted ashore, high on the beach, and filled directly with water in about ten hours. Every thing unsaleable was promptly got on shore. She had no cargo on board. She is expected to be a total loss. She was intended for the Trinity trade, and was fully insured.

Col. Hay left San Antonio with an efficient train and escort on the 20th ult., on his way towards El Paso. Col. Hay comes as the agent of the New York Pacific Railroad Company, and will explore the country towards El Paso with a view to its adaptation to railroad purposes.

At Boston, cotton continued to arrive freely, and business is stated to be very active for the season.

The Galveston News of the 6th has the following items:

The steamer Jack Hays, in going up the Trinity river struck among a small distance from the bar, and filled with water in about five minutes; her bow is out of water and her stern settled on the bottom about ten feet. The loss is said to have occurred in the same place where the steamer Judge Mellean was snagged in 1848, and another steamer in 1840; these losses call loudly on the people interested in trade, for cleaning of the river.

There are now a number of the planters and merchants join the Brazos in our city, who have come for the first time to make sales of their cotton, sugar, etc., and to purchase their supplies. This is the first time they ever made Galveston their market, and the reason is that it is the first time they have ever had the opportunity of coming by a railroad. They say they have saved a large amount in freight and other charges, as well as in time, in most of their purchases. The planters are appreciating the advantages of the Harrisburg Railroad, therefore, though they have to haul a considerable distance to get to it. The terminus is ten miles from Richmon, but the contractors are pushing it forward to that point, when, it is believed, it will command the trade of a considerable section of the Colorado. We are glad to be able to say that the practical benefits of railroads are now beginning to be felt.

Mr. Dunn, on the 27th ult., introduced the following joint resolution into the Senate:

Whereas it is extremely desirable, both as an act of justice to the creditors of Texas, and expedient on the part of the State, that the reserved five millions in the Treasury of the United States should be in some manner appropriated to the payment and discharge of the liabilities of Texas, by the legislature of the State of Texas, be it

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States be requested and authorized to make any arrangements with the Government of the United States and the creditors of Texas, touching the said five millions, which they may deem consistent with the honor and interest of the State.

Mr. Allen introduced a bill to incorporate the Texas Steamship Company, the third section of which provides that the Comptroller of Board of Commissioners shall pay over to the company out of the money set apart to be loaned the sum of $500,000, after they shall have built three first-class steamships worth from $125,000 to $150,000 each. The sum of $100,000 to be paid upon the completion of each one of the steamships, and delivery of the same in the port of Galveston—company to give bond with mortgage on ship for the repayment of money—interest at eight per cent. per annum, to be paid semi-annually—in case of failure to comply, the steamships to be sold on sixty days' notice.

In the House, on the 28th, the bill donating eight sections per mile of the Galveston, Houston, and Henderson Railroad, passed the House, under a suspension of the rule, without a dissenting voice.

Senator Paschal introduced a bill to incorporate the Western Texas Insurance Company. Main office to be at San Antonio; capital stock not to exceed $100,000; fifty per cent. to be paid on subscribing, the balance subject to call.

A bill to incorporate the Grand Temple of Honor of the State of Texas and subordinate Temples under its jurisdiction, passed the House by 56 to 5.

An election for city officers was held in San Antonio on the 16th ult. which resulted as follows: John. M. Carolan, Mayor; C. D. D. Lytle, Collector; J. H. Lyons, Treasurer; and Messrs. Navarro, King, Guilbeau; Ulrich, Hecket, Oswald, Sellingsloh and Urutia, Aldermen for the ensuing year.

The Austin State Times has the following item from the Rio Grande:

Mexicans report that the Indians lately crossed the Rio Grande about thirty miles below Laredo, went down the river some ten miles, killing people, and taking all the horses. They then turned out to the Rancho of San Antonio Viljo, passed up by the Gate, where they killed some citizens and drove off all their animals.

Stock is remarkably high and scarce. None to be had near the frontier. The frequent irruptions of the Indians, the selling to Americans, and the late demands for animals from Santa Anna, are the causes producing the scarcity. Good mules are held at forty dollars, and other stock in proportion.

Crops.—The fall crops on the Lower Rio Grande have turned out good. The supply of corn will answer all demands.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer, 27th ult.

The Cincinnati Riot.

A Riot Quelled—Threatened Attack on Bedini, the Pope's Nuncio—One Man Killed—Several Wounded—Two Policemen Wounded—Arrest of Sixty-three Persons.—Since the arrival of the Pope's Nuncio, Bedini, in this city, a great excitement has prevailed among the German portion of our population, known as "Liberals" and "Freemen." On Friday last, an article appeared in a German paper called the Hockenauchter, edited by Mr. Frederick Mausersek, denouncing in the most severe language the Nuncio of the Pope, and recommending for him a treatment similar to that received by Hayman in London. On Sunday night the "Society of Freemen" met in their hall, on Vine street, between Twelfth and Thirteenth, and formed in a procession, numbering about eight hundred or a thousand strong. In the meantime, information had been received by Captain Lukens, Chief of Police, that the "Freemen were about to attack the Bishop's residence, in the rear of the Cathedral, on Ninth street. Shortly after ten o'clock the "Freemen" and "Liberals" left their hall and marched down Vine street to Ninth, along Ninth to Plum. The procession was preceded by a drum, and in it were carried a number of transparencies, a few of the inscriptions on which we copy:

"Down with Bedini!"

On the reverse side, in German,

"The Gellows-bird Badini."

"No Priests," "no Kings. On one end of this transparency was painted a sword and spear, and on the other a musket.

Another with the inscription,

"Down with the Roman Butcher!"

On others—"No Popery!" "Love, Liberty and Fraternity." "Equality," etc.

In the procession was carried a light frame work scaffold, having an effigy of Bedini hanging by the neck from it, and a mitre upon his head with the cross embiazoned thereon.

At the front of the procession was running down Plum street towards the Cathedral, the police force, headed by Captain Lukens, emerged from the watch house. They proceeded towards Plum street, separating into two divisions, one part taking the north and the other the south side of the street. As the police force was crossing diagonally from the corner of Plum and Ninth streets, a shot was fired from the procession, when at a signal from Capt. Lukens they immediately rushed among the "Freemen." A desperate fight ensued, during which upwards of fifty or sixty pistol shots were fired on both sides, and stones, clubs, slung-shots and weapons of every kind were freely used.

Henry Carroll, a watchman of the Second Ward, was shot in the right leg above the knee. The wound is not serious.

Lieut. Hedsman was struck on the head with a club and had his thumb broken. Those in the procession fared the worst. A German named Engleberger was shot in four places, one ball entering his breast, the other three his legs. He was conveyed to his boarding house on Walnut street between Twelfth and Thirteenth, where he died during the night.

Andrew Getsenger, German, was shot in the left leg, the ball passing through the flesh. He was one of the arrested parties and his wound was dressed in the watch house.

The following persons received severe, though not dangerous wounds from the maces of the policemen—George Haberman, Wm. Sherbeer, Christian Berkser, Michael Fisher and Frederick Smith. A number of others were slightly wounded by the police.

The fight raged fiercely for about five or ten minutes, but those composing the procession finally gave way and fled from the scene of action, leaving the ground strewed with pistols, clubs canes, hats, cloaks, etc.

Judge Spooner was on the ground and made one or two arrests personally. The police arrested sixty-three persons. They were all lodged in the watch house during the night, and the scene in that place in the morning is beyond description. Every cell was filled and how the crowd managed to sit down, much less to sleep, is beyond our comprehension.

THE ERIE RAILROAD DIFFICULTIES.—The New York Tribune of the 29th says:

Erie Railroad Troubles continue. We learn that the Harbor Creek Riot of Tuesday was worse than reported, and great excitement prevails. Some officers of the Company went to Harbor Creek to superintend the repairs of the track injured by the mob the day before. On their arrival some six or seven hundred men confronted them. Mr. Boffin, a conductor on the Pittsfain and State Line Road, being recognized, was attacked; he succeeded in wounding one of the rioters in the head. The Railroad men then retreating to the cars were intercepted, some badly maltreated, and one nearly killed. The mob than attacked the cars, swearing if they caught Mr. Dennis they would hang him to the first telegraph pole. Some of them forced the cars, seized Mr. Dennis, but the train being started they jumped off. It would seem to be necessary for the General Government to put a stop to this disgraceful and barbarous state of things.

LAUNCH OF A STEAMSHIP.—The steamship Vera Cruz, for Harris & Morgan's line of New Orleans and Vera Cruz steamers, will be launched from the shipyard of Jacob A. Westervelt & Co., foot of Seventh street, East river, tomorrow at half-past 9 o'clock, A. M. She will be commanded by Capt. James Lawless, formerly of the Texas, and will leave this port for New Orleans about 1st of February next. [N. Y. Herald.

It is reported that it was the son of one of the editors of the Union who delivered copies of the President's message to certain printing offices before it was delivered to Congress.

The Clayton-Bulwer Treaty.

The President on the 4th communicated to the Senate, in response to the Cass's resolution of the 12th December, the following papers from the British Government relative to the construction placed upon the Clayton and Bulwer treaty touching Central American affairs. The one, a letter from Lord Clarendon to Mr. Crampton; and the other, from the Queen's Advocate to Lord Clarendon. These letters are a review of Mr. Clayton's speech in the Senate last spring

FOREIGN OFFICE, May 27, 1853.

SIR—As a great misconception appears to prevail, not only among the people of the United States, but also among persons placed in high and responsible situations in the Government of that country, with regard to the true nature of the engagements into which Great Britain entered by the Convention of Washington, of April 19, 1850, with respect to her present and future relations with Mosquito, and the other nations of Central America; and as that misconception, if not immediately corrected, might lead to serious misunderstanding between Great Britain and the United States, I think it highly desirable that that question should, without delay, be put upon its right footing by a clear and distinct explanation of the views which her Majesty's Government take of it, and of the conduct which they intend to pursue with regard to it.

Article 1, of the Treaty which treats of this matter, runs thus:

"The Governments of Great Britain and the United States hereby declare that neither the one nor the other will ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive control of the said Ship Canal; agreeing that neither will ever erect or maintain any fortifications commanding the same, or in the vicinity thereof, or occupy, or fortify, or colonize, or assume or exercise any dominion over Nicaragua, Costa Rica, or the Mosquito Coast, or any part of Central America, nor will either make use of any protection which either affords, or may afford, or any alliance which either has or may have to or with any State or people, for the purpose of erecting or maintaining any such fortifications, or of occupying or fortifying or colonizing Nicaragua, Costa Rica, or the Mosquito Coast, or any part of Central America, or of assuming or exercising dominion over the same."

To every stipulation contained in this article her Majesty's Government will faithfully adhere. They will neither seek to obtain any exclusive control over the ship canal, if ever formed, nor will they erect any fortification commanding, or in the vicinity of that canal; nor will they occupy or fortify or colonize, or assume or exercise any dominion over any part of Central America. Nor will they make use of any protection which they afford or may afford, or any alliance which they have or may have or with any State or people for the purpose of occupying, fortifying or colonizing any part of Central America, or of asserting or exercising dominion over the same. All those engagements Great Britain will religiously keep, as she does not doubt that they will be religiously kept by the United States. But Great Britain has nowhere, in the treaty of April, 1850, renounced, nor ever had any intention to renounce, the full and absolute right which she possesses over her own lawful territories in Central America, such as that designation was distinctly understood and declared by the negotiators of the treaty; nor has Great Britain renounced, by the treaty, the protection which she has for centuries past afforded and still affords to the Mosquito Territory, with a view to relieve the question of the Mosquito Territory, or whatever there may be of indebtitude about it, and place it upon a satisfactory footing; which will be equally advantageous to Mosquito itself and to all the powers which are in any way connected with or concerned in it. Her Majesty's Government have already, on many occasions, within the last twelve months, made overtures of the fairest and most liberal and practicable character to the United States Government to go hand in hand with the Government of Great Britain, in devising and establishing a scheme of adjustment by which the affairs of Central America, Mosquito included, shall be satisfactorily and permanently settled, and the honor of Great Britain, as the ancient protector of Mosquito, shall be preserved intact.

Her Majesty's Government are still ready and desirous, at any moment, to enter into a friendly communication with the United States Government, on this important matter, and they are of opinion that the sooner such negotiation is opened and terminated the better it will be for all the parties concerned, and the greater will be the security for the maintenance of the friendly relations which now so happily subsist between Great Britain and the United States. But, until such settlement be finally concluded, it is obvious that Great Britain cannot abandon the present position with regard to Mosquito, nor can she permit either Nicaragua or Honduras to assert, and still less to attempt to establish by force of arms, over any part of Mosquito, a right of possession, which Great Britain has always denied and still denies. And if either Nicaragua or Honduras were still to contribute to make aggressions on the Mosquito territory with that object, it must be at their own peril.

Such are the views which Her Majesty's Government entertain with respect to Central America as affected by the treaty of Washington of the 19th of April, 1850, and such is the course of conduct which Her Majesty's Government purposes to pursue with respect to that country, and to the various questions which have arisen, or may arise under that treaty. I will, however, add that Her Majesty's Government have no intention of disturbing or departing in any way from the arrangement entered into between the two Governments for the maintenance of the de facto Government and position of Greytown. You will read this dispatch to the United States Secretary of State, and you will at the same time repeat to him the earnest desire which is felt by Her Majesty's Government to proceed through the whole of this matter cordially and in the most unreserved manner with the Government of the United States.

I am with great truth and regard, sir, your most obedient, humble servant. (Signed.) CLARENDON

To J. F. Crampton, Esq., etc., etc.

DOCTOR'S COMMONS, April 15, 1853.

My Lord—I am honored with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Addington's letter of the 7th inst., stating that he was directed to transmit to me a dispatch from Mr. Crampton, Her Majesty's Minister, at Washington, enclosing a report of a speech made in the Senate of the United States by Mr. Clayton, by whom, when Secretary of State for the United States, the treaty for the construction of an inter-oceanic ship canal between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, across the Isthmus of Nicaragua, was signed with Sir Henry Bulwer, at that time her Majesty's Minister at Washington, and with reference to the construction put by Mr. Clayton upon the first act of that treaty, namely, that Great Britain is thereby prohibited from protecting by force of arms any State in Central America, notwithstanding any alliance between Her Majesty and either of those States. Mr. Addington is pleased to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion upon the interpretation given by Mr. Clayton to the provisions of that article.

In obedience to your lordship's commands, I have taken the matter into consideration, and have the honor to report that I am of opinion that the interpretation given by Mr. Clayton to the provisions of the first article of the enclosed Treaty Convention, signed at Washington, April 19, 1850, is in some respects incorrect. His statement that Great Britain cannot place an armed soldier in the territory without violating the treaty, is, in my opinion, incorrect, and I can see nothing in the treaty which affords any foundation or color for such a statement. The first article expressly recognizes the fact that Great Britain has and may have alliances with, and affords and may afford protection to States and people in Central America, and only stipulates that neither shall be made use of for the particular purposes therein forbidden, and the maxim of construction, "Expressio Unius est exclusio alterius," applies to this article.

Great Britain therefore may, in my opinion, protect any State or people, including Indian tribes, in Central America, even by force of arms, if needful, without violating the treaty, provided only that she, in affording such protection, wholly abstains from occupying, fortifying, colonizing, or assuming or exercising any dominion beyond her own territory, in Central America. Neither does there appear to me to be anything in the treaty which would prevent Great Britain from sending a fleet or army, if necessary, into any part of Central America, or from conducting any naval or military operations, either aggressive or defensive, and either alone or in alliance with any other nations or States in any part of Central America. She may certainly do so if she abstains from occupying or fortifying, or assuming or exercising dominion in that, beyond her own territory.

There is not in the treaty any stipulation, for instance, that Great Britain shall abstain from preventing, by force of arms, other nations from occupying or fortifying, or assuming dominion over, any portion of Central America, or that she shall not destroy such fortifications, or subvert such dominion, if once established therein.

I understand Mr. Clayton also to assert, that, by the treaty, Great Britain has abandoned all dominion in the whole of Central America, which assertion is, in my opinion, incorrect, and at variance with the fact, at least as regards Belize and its dependencies, if indeed this exception was not intended by him. I have the honor to be, etc. (Signed.) J. D. HARMIND.

To Lord Clarendon.

NEW TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—A dispatch from Washington states that a treaty with Mexico has been negotiated by General Gadsden, and is now before the President, and will probably soon be communicated to the Senate:

The first article of the treaty, it is said, provides that Mexico shall give to the United States such a boundary as will enable us to protect Mexico from the incursions of the frontier Indians.

The second article provides for a right of way for a railroad to the Pacific, "as a means"—to quote the language of the treaty—"of forming a commercial barrier against the attacks of the Indians."

The third article provides for an abrogation of the eleventh section of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, which guarantees the defense of the frontier in consideration of money given, which is to be in full of all past depredations.

The fourth article provides for the specific enforcement of the Tehuantepec right of way.

The fifth contains an alternative proposition to the second article, to the effect that Mexico shall cede to the United States a boundary which will include the route known in Lieutenant Parke's map as "Lieutenant Colonel Cooke's Wagon Route," extending nearly to the thirty-first parallel, and going due West, so as to give us a large accession of territory, and taking in the whole of the peninsula of Lower California, including Sonora, upon the payment by the United States to Mexico of fifty millions of dollars.

WORK FOR 1854.—The New York Sun, speaking of the questions awaiting solution the present year, sets out the following work for Congress. The job is rather an extensive one, and involves many intricate questions:

First. The Railroad to the Pacific.

Second. The Annexation of Sandwich Islands.

Third. The Population of Cuban Independence.

Fourth. A new settlement with Mexico, including the Mesilla Valley and Tehuantepec disputes, and Santa Anna's Imperial pretensions.

Fifth. The practical assertion and vindication of the Monroe doctrine, against British colonization schemes in Central America.

Sixth. Opening the Valley of the Amazon to American trade and enterprise.

Besides these, there are purely local questions of great interest, such as: Tariff Amendment; Naval Reform; Public Land Distribution; Cheap Postage; Increased Ocean Steam Mail Communication; Formation of New Territories; Mint in New York, etc.

SNOW IN ARKANSAS.—The Pine Bluff Republican of the 31st ult. says:

We have once more been greeted with that white though unfrequent visitor, snow. During a portion of the night of the 23d, and during nearly all the day of the 25th, snow fell incessantly and copiously.

Our streets were thronged with persons of all classes, ages and sizes. Sleigh riding, and almost all other snow and Christmas amusements were resorted to and freely participated in.

The amusements and festivities of the unusual scene passed off with hilarity, friendship and the best feelings.

Details of the News by the Africa.

*Resignation of Lord Palmerston—The Battles in the Black Sea—Another conflict between the Turks and the

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

NATURE MORE THAN SCIENCE.

[From the Cabinet of Reskell.]

I have a thousand thousand lays,
Compact of myriad myriad words,
And so can sing a million ways,
Can play an air on the chords;
Of tuned harp or heart;
Yet is there one sweet song
For which in vain I pine and long;
I cannot reach that song, with all my minstrel-art.

A shepherd sits within a dell
O'er-canopied from rain and heat;
A shallow but pellucid well
Doth ever bubble at his feet.
His pipe is but a leaf.
Yet there above that stream,
His plays and plays, as in a dream,
One air that steals away the senses like a thief.

A simple air it seems, in truth,
And who begins will end it soon;
Yet, when that hidden shepherd youth
So pours it in the ear of Noon,
Tears flow from those anear.
All songs of yours and mine
Condensed in one were less divine
Than that sweet air to sing, that sweet, sweet air to hear!

'Twas yesternoon he play'd it last;
The hummings of a hundred bees
Were in mine ears, yet, as I pass'd,
I heard him through the myrtle trees.
Stretch'd all along he lay,
Mid foliage half decayed,
His lambs were feeding while he play'd,
And sleepily were on the stilly Summer day.

A MODERN PROMETHEUS.—Alexander Dumas, the Great, has published a daily paper in Paris called the Mousquetaire. As may be imagined, it is written entirely by himself, and is intended as a medium for conveying his tales, novels, plays, essays, critiques, etc., etc., etc., to the world. He is, moreover, going to have a theatre built, in which nothing but his own plays shall be acted; and it is more than probable that he will give a new five act drama every night. Where is this to stop? A boundless space bursts upon our view that we can neither grasp nor comprehend. Dumas creates papers and theatres, which he writes and fills. If he lives twenty years more, he will build a city, in which he will be government, news, banker—in short, every thing. Another twenty years—"vingt ans apres"—and he will create a world, and people it with beings who shall read nothing but Dumas. The present population of our earth will have become too limited to pervade his works; they will be swept away by a new deluge of romances, and a fresh race will spring into existence, modelled after the heroes and heroines of the author himself. The gentlemen will kill every body who looks at them, and cheat every body who trusts them. The ladies will be continually falling in love with handsome cavaliers without a penny, and be continually abducted violently by ugly fellows with lots of money. Religion will be epigrammetized, and the duel sanctified. Such will be the great Dumas Millennium. [Montgomery's Pictorial.

MRS. OPIE.—The death of Mrs. Opie, at the advanced age of eighty-five years, has recalled to the minds of the English journalists a great many curious reminiscences, and quite revived the literary age that is just passed. Her maiden name was Alderson, and she was the only child of Dr. James Alderson, a physician of no great mark professionally, but of liberal tastes and fond of literary society. She married John Opie, the artist, and after his death she commenced her literary labors. Mrs. Opie had other accomplishments, however, than any manifested by her pen. She sung finely—ballads sung with heartfelt impulse and pathos, and without accompaniment. A person who seems to have known her, says:

"Those who, as children, heard her sing 'Lord Ullin's Daughter,' will never forget it. They cannot now read the 'come back' of that ballad, without feeling again the anguish conveyed in those heart-rending tones. The Prince Regent heard them. He went to a supper somewhere to hear Mrs. Opie sing—not long before the change which stopped her singing every where but beside her old father's chair. When she began to grow elderly, Amelia Opie became devote. The face never lost its brightness, nor the heart its youthfulness and gayety. She was a merry laugher in her old age, and even, if the truth be spoken, still a bit of a romp—ready for a bopseep and hide-and-seek, in the midst of a morning call, or at the end of a grave conversation. She enjoyed shewing prim young Quaker girls her ornaments, plumes and satins, and telling when she wore them; and, when in Paris, she ingenuously exhibited in her letters to her Quaker friends, the conflict in her feelings, when Lonie Phillippe, attended by his staff, stopped to converse with her in the streets of Paris, and when the Queen of the French requested her to appoint an evening for a party at the Tuileries. She made a pleasant joke of the staring of the Parisiens at her little gray bonnet, and sighed and prayed that she might not be puffed up by all the rest. She was not really spoilable, and her later years were full of grace and kindness. She suffered much from rheumatic lameness, but with a great cheerfulness, on the whole—almost merrily."

THE BRIDE.—Weddings seem to be "as plenty as blackberries" in these days—and the custom of having the ceremony performed in a church is becoming more frequent every year. Irving, whose writings abound in pictures, which for delicacy, truth, and taste, have never been surpassed, thus describes the appearance of the bride on one of these interesting occasions:

"I know of no signs more charming and touching than that of a young and timid bride, in her robes of virgin white, led up trembling to the altar. When I thus behold a lovely girl, in the confidence of her years, forsaking the house of her fathers, and the home of her childhood—and, with the implicit confidence, and the sweet self-abandonment, which belongs to woman, giving up all the world for the man of her choice—when I hear her in the good old language of the ritual, yielding herself to him 'for better for worse, for richer for poorer, in sickness and in health, to love, honor and obey till death us do part'—it brings to mind the beautiful and affecting devotion of Ruth: 'Whither thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God.'"

WHAT THEY WON'T OWN TO.—Punch says, in his Pocket-Book for 1854, "there are several things which you never can by any accident get a lady—be she young or old—to confess to." Here are some of them: "That she laces tight. That her shoes are too small for her. That she is ever tired at a ball. That she paints. That she is as old as she looks. That she has been more than five minutes dressing. That she kept you waiting. That she blushed when a certain person's name was mentioned. That she ever says a thing she doesn't mean. That she is fond of scandal. That she can't keep a secret. That she—she is of all persons in the world—is in love. That she doesn't want a new bonnet. That she can do with one single thing less when she is about to travel. That she hasn't the disposition of an angel, or the temper of a saint—or how else could she go through one-half of what she does? That she doesn't know better than every one else what is best for her. That she is a flirt or coquette. That she is ever in the wrong."

THE TYRANTS OF THE HOUSEHOLD.—For his rule over his family, or for his conduct to his wife and children—subjects over whom his power is monarchial—any one who watches the world must think with trembling sometimes of the account which many a man will have to render. For in our society there is no law to control the king of the fireside. He is a master of property, happiness, life almost. He is free to punish, to make happy or unhappy, to ruin, or to torture. He may kill a wife, gradually, and be no more questioned than the Grand Senior who drowns a slave at midnight. He may make slaves or hypocrites of his children, or friends and freemen, or drive them into revolt and enmity against the natural law of love. I have often heard politicians and coffee-house wiseacres talking over the newspapers, and railing at the French King and the Emperor, and wondered how these (who are Monarchs, too, in their own way,) gavera their own dominions at home, where each man rules absolute! When the annals of each little reign are shown to the Supreme Master, under whom we hold sovereignty, histories will be laid bere of household tyrants as cruel as Amaruth, and as reckless and dissolute as Charles. [Thackeray.

MESSELRODE PUDDING.—Take as much gammon as will lie in the compass of a diplomatic; and mince along with butter, sugar and pigeon's milk in equal quantities. Add olives, well bruised, in sufficient proportion to flavor, and when thoroughly incorporated, mix the whole with puff paste and flummery made into a mass. Mould in a twisted shape, and plunge into hot water, where allow it to bubble, the longer the better. Turn it out when thoroughly done, and serve cool with sauce a la Tartarufe. [Punch.

Touching Reminiscence of Washington.

The Revolution was over. Eight years' conflict had ceased, and the warriors were now to separate for ever, turning their weapons into plowshares, and their camps into work-shops. The spectacle, though a sublime and glorious one, was yet attended with sorrowful feelings; for, alas! in the remains of that gallant army of patriotic soldiers now about to disband without pay, without support, stalked poverty and disease. The country had not the means to be grateful.

The details of the condition of many of the officers and soldiers of that period, according to history and oral tradition, were melancholy in the extreme. Possessing no means of patrimonial inheritance to fall back upon—thrown out of even the perilous support of the soldier at the commencement of winter, and hardly fit for any other duty than that of the camp—their situation can better be imagined than described.

A single instance, as a sample of the situation of many of the officers, as related of the conduct of Baron Steuben, may not be amiss. When the main body of the army was disbanded at Newburgh, and the veteran soldiers were bidding a parting farewell to each other, Lieut. Col. Cochran, an aged soldier at the New Hampshire line, remarked with tears in his eyes as he shook hands with the Baron:

"For myself I could stand it; but my wife and daughters are in the garret of that wretched tavern, and I have no means of removing them."

"Come, come," said the Baron; "don't give way thus. I will pay my respects to Mrs. Cochran and her daughters."

When the good old soldier left them, their countenances were warm with gratitude—for he left there all he had.

In one of the Rhode Island regiments were several companies of black troops, who had served through the whole war, and their bravery and discipline were unsurpassed. The Baron observed one of these poor negroes on the wharf at Newburgh, apparently in great distress.

"What is the matter, brother soldier?"

"Why, Master Baron, I want a dollar to get home with, now the Congress has no further use for me."

The Baron was absent for a few moments, and then returned with a silver dollar, which he had borrowed.

"There, it's all I could get. Take it."

The negro received it with joy, hailed a sloop which was passing down the river to New York, and as he reached the deck, took off his hat and said—

"God bless you, Master Baron!"

These are only single illustrations of the army at the close of the war. Indeed, Washington had this view at the close of his farewell address to the army at Rocky Hill, in November, 1793. "And being now about to conclude these his last public orders, to take his ultimate leave in a short time of the military character and to bid a final adieu to the armies he has so long had the honor to command, he can only again offer, in their behalf, his recommendations to their country, and his prayer to the God of armies.

"May ample justice be done them here, and may the choicest of heaven's favors, both here and hereafter, attend those who, under divine auspices, have secured innumerable blessings for others.

"With these wishes and this benediction, the Commender-in-Chief is about to retire from service. The curtain of separation will soon be drawn, and the military scenes to him will be closed forever."

The closing of the "military scenes" I am about to relate:

New York had been occupied by Washington on the 25th of November. A few days afterwards, he notified the President of Congress, which body was then in session at Annapolis, in Maryland—that as the war was now closed, he should consider it his duty to proceed thence and surrender to that body the commission which he had received from them seven years before.

The morning of the 5th of December, 1783, was ushered in heavy one to the remnant of the American army in the city of New York. The noon of that day was to witness the farewell of Washington—he was to bid adieu to his military comrades forever. The officers who had been with him in solemn council, the privates who had fought and bled in the "heavy fight," under his orders, were to hear his commands no longer. The manly form and dignified countenance of the "great captain" was henceforth to live in their memories.

As the hour of noon approached, the whole garrison, at the request of Washington himself, was put in motion, and marched down Broadstreet to Francis' tavern, his head-quarters. He wished to take leave of private soldiers alike with officers, and bid them all adieu. His favorite light infantry were drawn up in line facing inwards, through Pearl street, at the foot of Whitehall, where a barge was in readiness to convey him to Powell's Hook.

Within the dining room of the tavern were gathered the generals and field-officers to take their farewell.

Assembled there were Knox, Green, Clinton, Steuben, Gates and others, who had served with him faithfully in the "tented field;" but alas! where were others that had entered the war with him seven years before? Their bones crumbled in the soil from Canada to Georgia. Montgomery had yielded up his life at Quebec, Wooster fell at Danbury, Woodhull was barbarously murdered while a prisoner at the battle on Long Island, and Mercer fell mortally wounded at Princeton; the brave and chivalric Laurens, after displaying the most heroic courage in the trenches of Yorktown, died in a trifling skirmish in South Caroline; the brave but eccentric Lee was no longer living, and Putnam, like a helpless child, was stretched upon the bed of sickness. Indeed, the battle-field and time had thinned the ranks which entered with him on the conflict of Independence.

Washington entered the room—the hour of separation had come. As he raised his eye and glanced on the faces of those assembled, a tear coursed down his cheek, and his voice was tremulous as he saluted them. Nor was he alone. Men, "albeit unused to the melting mood," stood around him, whose hands uplifted to cover their brows, told that the tears which they in vain attempted to conceal, bespoke the anguish they could not hide.

After a moment's conversation, Washington called for a glass of wine. It was brought to him. Turning to the officers, he thus addressed them:

"With a heart full of love and gratitude, I now take my final leave of you, and I most devoutly wish your latter days may be as prosperous and happy as your former once have been glorious and honorable. He then raised the glass to his lips, and added, "I cannot come to each of you to take my leave, but shall be obliged to you if each of you will take me by the hand."

General Knox, who stood nearest, burst into tears, and advanced, incapable of utterance. Washington grasped him by the hand, and embraced him. The officers came up successively, and took an affectionate leave. No words were spoken, but all was the "silent eloquence of tears." What were mere words at such a scene? Nothing. It was the feeling of the heart—thrilling though unspoken.

When the last officer had embraced him, Washington left the room, followed by his comrades, and passed through the line of light infantry. His steps were slow and measured, his head uncovered, and tears flowing thick and fast, as he looked from side to side at the veterans to whom he now bade adieu forever. Shortly an event occurred more touching than all the rest. A gigantic soldier who had stood by his side at Trenton, stepped forth from the rank, and extended his hand.

"Farewell, my beloved General, Farewell."

Washington grasped his hand, in convulsive emotion, in both of his. All discipline was now at an end. The officers could not restrain the men as they rushed forward to take Washington by the hand, and the violent sobs and tears of the soldiers told how deeply engraved upon their affections was the love of their commander.

At length Washington reached the barge at Whitehall, and entered it. At the first stroke of the oars he rose, and turning to the companions of his glory, by waving his hat, bade them a silent adieu. Their answer was only in tears; and the officers and men, with glistening eyes, watched the receding boat till the form of their noble commander was lost sight of in the distance. [N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

NEW YEAR'S DAY.—In most of the Northern cities New Year's Day was generally marked by an entire suspension of business. A heavy fall of snow being upon the ground the streets were alive with sleighs, rendering the occasion one of uncommon enjoyment.

London Mechanics.

The condition of a mechanic in London is so different to that of the American artisan as to merit notice. Here, as a rule, workmen have but few of the domestic comforts enjoyed by the same class in the States. And in point of intelligence and behavior, taste and manners, the English mechanic sinks immeasurably below the American. True independence is not often exhibited by the English operative, and if he have inventive genius, he oftener uses it to enrich his master than himself.

The spare hours of too many of the London mechanics are passed in gin palaces and low theatres or discussion rooms. Their homes are not houses but rooms, and in these, usually termed apartments, their families dwell. The furniture of such palaces is extremely meagre, and, if there be a carpet at all, it is of the coarsest description. The mother of a family usually has a sorry life of it, and her pleasure is very often the gin bottle. One half, at least, of the customers of the London gin palaces are women, and they not only go there and get the liquor, but they frequently drink it raw and diluted at the bar. Of these females, many are mechanics' wives, and the majority are of the working classes. The use of beer by this portion of the English people is almost universal, and that beverage takes the place, very often, at their tables, of coffee and tea. It is given to children unhesitatingly, and nothing thought of the custom. By beer, I mean porter.

"Sunday dinner" is a phrase an American may not exactly understand. To our ears the term is likely to convey the idea that he who talks about a "Sunday dinner" gets no dinner during the week. And that is its legitimate definition. The poor workmen of this city, and in fact of all the larger towns of England, buy on Saturday night, if they can, a joint and some vegetables, and have them prepared for a "Sunday dinner." That day is the mechanics' feast, and the mug goes then once at least to the beer shop. The meal is about the only hot one enjoyed by the man during the week, and he makes the most of it.

With such people there are but few comforts They appear to be content with their position, and seldom make an exertion to rise above it. Their rooms are cheerless, and to decorate or improve them never enters their heads. In fact they act as if they think they have no right to improve their condition, and many of them really do think so. If they have pictures they are of a coarse, unmeaning character, and in frames of wood. Attempts to embellish their abodes are few and tasteless, and they live as their fathers lived, in too many instances, satisfied with their lot, or careless to improve it. To hold a permanent situation is their aim. Once in such a place, they are content. A desire to rise rarely distinguishes one, and the conduct of the majority, except in extreme cases, is that of servility to the "masters," as all employers are very improperly, but commonly called.

The custom of living in rooms is productive of evil The house is not under such rules as are in force in Paris, where a porter is at the gate to watch and keep the stairways and entries cleanly. One of the tenants is principal renter, and he sub-lets the apartments so as often to get his own quarters free. His lodgers pay their rents as may be agreed upon, weekly, monthly or quarterly; and if they fail to meet their engagements to the day, and cannot give a good excuse for so doing, he ejects them in a very short time. Turn-outs of this kind are frequent. Many families have but two rooms. In these they cook, eat and sleep, and oftentimes work. Thus, what they call home is a mere lodging, and their living is only an existence, devoid of enjoyment or the solace of retirement and repose.

Nearly all the food of this class is purchased in small quantities. A few cents worth of tea, butter, bread, bacon or flour, constitutes the heaviest purchase in the way of provisions. If a family of this caste were to get a barrel of flour it would be trumpeted throughout the neighborhood as a piece of unheard-of good luck or extravagance. What they use of that article is bought in very small quantities. Their meals are necessarily limited as to variety and even quantity. Breakfast is always made without meat, and so, also, is the evening meal. Coarse bread, coffee, or a cup of beer with a herring, or something equally trifling, constitutes one or both of these in the majority of cases.

This may be considered a fair sketch of the condition and mode of living of the mass of English artisans. That there are exceptions to the rule cannot be denied, and where they occur, they are honorable. The well-informed mechanic is generally a gentleman, and his house is comfortable, but he is very rare. The miserable state in which the masses live is quite as chargeable to the master as to the man, for the reason that the employer makes it a point to keep his workmen in dread of him, and inculcates, as far as possible, the doctrine that a workman has no business to attempt to better his condition, it being his place to be content with his lot, be it what it may. He must honor his superiors, fear God, and worship and dread wealth and the king. [Philadelphia Register.

AMERICAN HABITS.—Bunn in his new book thus alludes to the habits of our people:

We have no intention to write a diatribe on costume, nor to play punster by talking of customary habits as ordinary clothes, or of abandoned habits as cast off clothes, and such like ribaldly; neither do we purpose making any references to the organization of society, or the general phases it presents. We herein only refer to the existence of certain peculiarities, as we have met with them, whether they relate to habit as dress, or habit as custom. There are no beings under the sun who are more the creatures of habit than the Americans; and in seeing one, you may say, in many respects, you see them all. To appearance, they are one and the same person; they dress upon the same principle and after the same fashion, especially in the same style of hat, which they wear in the same manner. They all smoke, they are all industrious, and yet, (curious anomaly!) they are all indolent to the last degree; they prefer the same viands and wines, and have all the same mode of eating and drinking them; their carriages, horses and harness are alike, and they all loll about in rocking chairs, the men using extra ones to put their feet upon; and, as a further oddity (which may enable them to do this with greater comfort, the women wear no stays, and the men wear no braces, generally speaking. They know one another in every town, in every State of the Union: they all disparage one another, but allow no one else to disparage them; they are all "posted up," as they term it, in every thing concerning their own country, and are all of opinion that it is the first in the world. There is no earthly reason why they should not, for, upon the same principle that "every crow thinks its own the blackest," the people of every other think their own the greatest. We only mention these bare facts—not doubting, for a moment, that the Americans can trace an equal amount of peculiarity in us, to that we cannot avoid detecting in them.

A FASHIONABLE PARTY IN NEW YORK.—A New York city papers gives the following condensed description of a fashionable party:

Soirees have their established "programme," and all our readers will recognize it instanter. Printed cards, two weeks in advance, for large parties, written notes for medium, and verbal invites for small; at intervals of from one to five days' notice; carriage at eight o'clock; fruit room, second story, for gentlemen—back room for ladies (that the latter have not to pass the former, which will be kept open, and will smell of brandy and cigars;) ladies fuming over pinonshions and tight slippers—gentlemen agonizing with e stiff hair brush and intractable gloves; meetings at head of stairs, and entering room together; no bowing to most intimate friends until hostess is approached and devotions paid; chairs and comfort for wall-flowers; dancing and small-talk for light-heels; old tops in the basement, at cards; matrons under the windows, comparing daughters; gabble-gabble, hop-hop, music and lemonade, for three hours; slight odor of fried oysters, and tura'ng for promenade; grand march of victims in parti-colored costumes, like the actors in a Spanish auto-da-fe; rush of gentlemen for plates and forks; screams of ladies about dresses; oysters, salad, and sandwiches, followed by champagne, ice-cream and jelly; smashing of plates and subdued swearing of waiters; destruction of waltz kids; alarming volley of small-talk; incipient dyspepsia, relieved by adjournment to dancing rooms for exercise; confusion a la champagne; old tops high; matrons low with fright; belles and beaux getting on famously; host yawns; carriages driving up; shawls and overshoes; empty rooms; smell of stale food; two hundred nodding night-caps. Finis.

The following stanzas, long out of print and almost forgotten, deserve remembrance, not less for their exquisite beauty than for their truth. They close a "Hymn of Life" in one of the older English annuals:

Our Youth was spent in visions fair
In lavishing our wealth of heart,
Our Manhood had life harder care
Of watching all these dreams depart

What was there left for sad old age
Except in useless grief to rue
The errors of a pilgrimage
It could not, if it would, undo!

We needed some diviner call
To teach our hearts alike to shun
The lovely fault of trusting all,
The bitter crime of trusting none!

Take home this lesson—it is such
As turns Life's darkness into light—
Oh, we can never love too much,
If we will only love aright!

COMPULSORY A CRIME.—The ancient Spartan paid as much attention to the rearing of men, as the cattle breeders in modern England do to the breeding of cattle. They took charge of the firmness and looseness of men's flesh, and regulated the degree of fatness to which it was lawful, in a free State, for any citizen to extend his body. Those who dared to grow too fat or too soft for military exercise and the service of Sparta, were soundly whipped. In one particular instance, that of Naucilis, the son of Polybus, the offender was brought before the Ephori, and a meeting of the whole people of Sparta, at which his unlawful fatness was publicly exposed, and he was threatened with perpetual banishment if he did not bring his body within the regular Spartan compass, and give up his culpable mode of living, which was declared to be more worthy of an Ionian than a son of Lacedæmon.

ADVERTISING.—In one of the proverbs of Solomon, says the New Bedford Mercury, we find the most comprehensive and satisfactory exposition of the philosophy of advertising that ever was or could be written, viz:

"There is that scattereth and yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

And the words of Paul to the Corinthians aptly express the same idea:

"He who soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he who soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully."

Every one has admired Parthenia's definition of Love, to Ingomar:

"What Love is, if thou would'st be taught,
Thy heart must teach alone—
Two souls with but a single thought,
Two hearts that beat as one."

Some profane cynic, having no fear of Cupid before his eyes, has sent us the following villainous parody:

Love is a night-mare with one foot;
Two children with one bun;
Two turnips with a single root;
Two cabbage-heads as one!

EDUCATION.

To Persons Out of Employment.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED, TO SELL PICTORIAL AND USEFUL WORKS FOR THE YEAR 1854.

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS A YEAR!

WANTED, in every section of the United States, active and enterprising men, to engage in the sale of some of the best BOOKS published in the country. To men of good address, possessing a small capital of from $25 to $100, such inducements will be offered as to enable them to make from $3 to $5 a day profit.

☞ The Books published by us are all useful in their character, extremely popular, and command large sales wherever they are offered.

For further particulars, address (postpaid)
ROBERT SEARS, Publisher,
de24 181 William st., New York.

Teachers Wanted.

A Gentleman and his Wife, or a Brother and Sister, (provided they will keep house,) thoroughly educated, are wanted to take charge of our Public School. Salary, $1000, certain, and whatever else can be realized from Music and other extra studies, and boarders from beyond the township. The last Teachers increased their salary several hundred dollars by these means.

Address, Rev. D. S. Goodloe, Livingston, Madison county, Miss. Postage paid. dec10

WANTED.

A lady who performs well on the Piano and sings well, and also a gentleman who performs well on the piano and violin. Satisfactory testimonials must be given of character and qualifications. They are desired as assistants in the Music Department of the Alabama Female College, at Gainesville, Ala. Address, stating terms,

W. R. POINDEXTER,
dec04-4t Gainesville, Ala.

SITUATION WANTED.

A Young Lady well qualified to teach the common English Branches of Education, desires a situation as Assistant in a Female High School, or as private Teacher in an agreeable family. Address "M. H. H., Richland, Holmes, Mississippi. nov5 8t

EMORY and HENRY COLLEGE,

WASHINGTON COUNTY, VA.

THE SPRING SESSION of this Institution will commence on the 12th January, 1854. There is, we believe no College in the South offering stronger inducements to young men desirous of a thorough course of collegiate instruction.

TERMS:

Tuition per session of 5 months			$15 00
Board	"	"	31 50
Washing	"	"	5 00
Fuel	"	"	2 00
Contingent charge	"	"	1 25
			$54 75

With a location famous for health, with ample Libraries and Apparatus, with a full and efficient Board of Instruction, and with a degree of cheapness unparalleled, to any young man with limited means, fair abilities and proper energy can here acquire a superior, liberal or business education. For further information address

E. E. WILEY, President,
jan6-6t Emory Post-office, Va.

GREENSBORO' FEMALE COLLEGE,

GREENSBORO', N. C.

FACULTY:

CHARLES F. DEEMS, D. D., President and Professor of the Natural Sciences and Belles-Letters.
REV. TURNER M. JONES, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and the Ancient Languages.
MONS. ERNEST JOUANNE. (of the College of Henri IV., Paris,) Professor of the French Language and Literature.
THEODORE WOLLE, Esq., Professor of Music.
MISS N. JANE SPEER, Miss NANNIE T. SPEED and Miss LIBOY McGEE, Assistants in the Literary Departments.
MISS AUGUSTA M. HAGEN, Madame JOUANNE and Miss CAROLINE A. BLAKE Assistents in the Department of Music.
MISS R. L. SIMPSON, Drawing and Painting.
THOMAS O. BLAKE, Esq., Steward.
MRS. T. O. BLAKE, Governess.

This Institution is situated in a healthy part of Central North Carolina. It is under the charge of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In the selection of the Faculty the Trustees have had reference first of all to superior qualifications, and as far as practicable have obtained ladies and gentlemen of Southern birth and education.

The course of study is as full and as thorough as that in the best Female Seminaries. While particular attention is paid to the solid branches of education, sufficient regard is had for the ornamental; but above all the culture of the morals of their pupils is considered the great work of the teachers. Special reasons of economy are inculcated. The pupils are not allowed under any circumstances to contract debts. Parents deposit money in advance. All the expenditures of the scholars are under direct supervision of the President, and their purchases are made by their teachers. Perhaps in no similar institution of its numbers have the bills of the pupils been so small in the aggregate as at this College during the past year.

The department of Natural Science is furnished with excellent apparatus, some of the instruments being of the highest finish, with all modern improvements. Lectures are delivered on Chemistry by the President, and on Natural Philosophy by Prof. Jones, weekly, and are accompanied by experiments. In the selection of the Professor of French regard was had to purity and accuracy of pronunciation, and the present incumbent of that chair possesses more than ordinary qualifications for his office. The practical use of the language in conversation is the aim of daily lessons.

In the department of Oil Painting the teacher does not seek to give her pupils simply a "pretty picture" at the close of the session, but the principles of the art are assiduously taught in the expectation that those who have special talent for design may prosecute self-culture after leaving the school.

All the principal teachers have had much experience in the business of their profession, and "thoroughness" is the motto throughout the whole Institution. The Faculty are working under this formula: "We are striving to make not the largest but the best school in the land."

TERMS:

$70 a session (of 21 weeks) for Tuition and Board, including washing, fuel, lights, furnished rooms and attendance; $20 extra for music on the Piano or Guitar, or for Oil Painting; $5 for Drawing or French or Latin. The Trustees believe that no school of its grade at the South offers such advantages on such favorable terms.

For further particulars application may be made to the President of the College.

The next session will open December 23 1853. ja6-6t

Re-opening of the Baton Rouge Famale Seminary.

Parents and others concerned in the education of misses and young ladies, are respectfully notified that the epidemic having disappeared, the studies at the Baton Rouge Female Seminary were resumed on WEDNESDAY the 9th inst. [n26] M. W. READ, Principal.

PORT GIBSON COLLEGIATE ACADEMY,

FOR YOUNG LADIES,

INSTRUCTORS.

REV. A. J. EDGERTON, A. M., Principal.
REV. W. F. CONRAD, A. B.
REV. C. D. DeCORNIEL, Professor of Piano, Herp and Guitar.
MRS. S. C. EDGERTON. MRS. H. CONRAD.
MISS ELLEN FOSTER, Teacher of Music.
MISS MARVIN. MISS HADNETT.
MRS. GILMAN, Matron.

The Next Session will commence on Monday, the 7th day of November.

TERMS—PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

For Boarding, per session of twenty weeks..... $50
For Fuel, Washing and Lights, do. 10
For Bed and Bedding, if not provided, do. 5

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

Tuition—Juvenile Class, per session twenty weeks... $15
" Second Division, do. do. ... 20

COLLEGIATE DEPARTMENT.

Tuition—English Studies, per session twenty weeks.. $25
" Latin and Greek, or either, do. .. 15
" French, Italian or German, do. .. 15
Stationery, in either class, do. .. 1

MUSICAL DEPARTMENT.

Instruction Piano or Guitar, per session twenty weeks, $30
Use of Pianos, do. 5

ORNAMENTAL DEPARTMENT.

Drawing in Perspective and Painting in Water Colors, do. ... $10
Fancy Embroidery..... do. 5

No deduction for absence, except in case of protracted sickness.

Boarders are expected to have their wearing apparel marked, and to come furnished with Towels, Hair and Tooth Brushes, and Silver Dessert Spoon and Fork.

The location of the Institution is regarded as one of the best in the State. The buildings were erected at a cost of near $30,000, affording capacious and airy rooms for the inmates, and all under the immediate eye of, Mrs. E. and Female Assistants.

The course of Study will be as extensive and thorough in Natural Science, English Literature, Ancient and Modern Languages and Mathematics, as in the best Colleges of the kind.

Lectures will be delivered regularly before the Young Ladies, on Natural Science.

Prof. DeCORNIEL, who has the reputation for being one of the best musicians in America, will give lessons on the Harp to any young Ladies who desire it.

☞ Vocal Music will be taught free of charge.

PORT GIBSON, Oct. 21, 1853. dec10-4t

FEMALE MASONIC INSTITUTE,

Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama.

Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.

TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY, we would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the true interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence a liberal support.

The Principal has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his tutelage.

The services of Miss MARY W. HOWER, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and felicitous manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.

The Musical, French, and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competent and skillful Teachers, and all due attention given to the arts and accomplishments that so beautify and adorn the gentler sex.

The Primary Department will be confided alone to a choice and gifted Lady, for we design to attend carefully to that sadly and mischievously neglected class of Pupils.

The Scholastic year is divided into Two Sessions of nearly Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Examination Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils received at any time, and charged to the end of the Session. For fractions of Sessions each week is counted one twentieth.

The School is not Sectarian or denominational; and the only religious tuition embraces the principles of a pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible.

The Principal and his wife have charge of the Stewards Department, and will tenderly care for the health, manners and morals of those who Board in the Institute. Each boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved subject of parental solicitude, and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet, Discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful restraints of family government will be thrown around them.

CHARGES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Primary Class	$12 50
Preparatory Class	15 00
Junior and Senior Class	20 00
Music on Piano, Guitar and Harp, (each)	25 00
Drawing, Painting and Embroidery, (each)	10 00
French and German, (each)	15 00
Incidentals	1 00
LATIN included in the Regular Course.
BOARD (including Washing, Fuel and Lights) per month	10 00

Each Boarder must furnish her own Towels, Brushes and Combs, and have each article distinctly marked with her full name.

AN INVARIABLE RULE.—Board and Tuition one-half in advance, and the balance at the end of each Session; and every account must be closed at the end of each Session, by Cash, or by Note.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.

Each Lodge in Marengo County is entitled to select within its jurisdiction, a worthy object of benefaction, and have her taught in the Institution without charge, provided said Lodge secure the payment of her Board and supply her with Books and Stationery.

As the Principal is so extensively known, the Committees have forborne to speak of his character and qualifications, and refer Parents and Guardians to the persons named below.

JNO. H. PRINCE, Chairman.
FRANK H. PRINCE, Secretary.
JABEZ YORK, Treasurer.

REFERENCES.

Hon. J. F. H. Claiborne, New Orleans.
Rev. H. N. McTyeire, New Orleans.
Prof. A. R. Holcombe, Mobile.
Hon. R. A. Baker, Mobile.
Hon. J. O. Monette, Bay St. Louis.
Hon. S. B. Pierce, Bay St. Louis.
Dr. John E. Purnell, Selma.
Abner Jones, Selma.
Rev. A. H. Mitchell, Summerfield.
Rev. T. J. Ramsey, Summerfield.
Rev. J. A. Heard, Dayton.
Hon. J. M. McClanahan, Shelby County.

Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama, September 1, 1853. oct1

MARION FEMALE SEMINARY.

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALABAMA.

FACULTY.

REV. JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, A. M., Principal, and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Science.
H. M. DALY, A. M., Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
MISS E. L. HASKILL, English.
MISS M. J. MONDRANT, English.
MISS PHEBE FULLER, Drawing, Painting, French and Guitar.
MISS J. V. CLARK, Primary and Preparatory Department.
MRS. L. J. ARMSTRONG, Governess.
MISS REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice, one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and for elegance, convenience of arrangement—for number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentleman and his lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of this position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great amiability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and untiring faithfulness, secures to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, chargeable from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady, for the entire session, in the collegiate department; one hundred and seventy-four dollars will embrace the languages, two hundred and thirty-five dollars will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the piano, and in the languages.

The above estimate does not include books, stationery, sheet music, ornamental materials and lights; all of which articles are furnished by the Principal on moderate terms.

The Institution is furnished with a new and complete Chemical, Philosophical and Astronomical apparatus. It also has a large collection of globes, terrestial and celestial; and celestial maps, atlases, charts plates and diagrams, for simplifying the various branches of Natural Science.

The Library consists of more than one thousand volumes, embracing a choice collection in every department of Literature, Art, Science, History, &c., &c.

The Cabinet consists of several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with a large and superior assortment of musical instruments.

The Church and Sabbath school facilities are unsurpassed by any school in the country. Of the number that have entered its walls during the past session, more than seventy were or have become professors of religion.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, &c.

Visitors are not received, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The usual regulations of the best boarding schools are enforced respecting visiting, correspondence, pamphlets, periodicals, novels, and dental operations.

They retire and rise at regular hours through the year.

Great attention is paid to exercise in the open air, or within doors, when the weather is inclement.

Every Saturday morning is devoted to plain sewing and the repairing of clothing, under the direction of an officer.

No accounts will be opened in Marion, but with the expressed permission of patrons. When articles are to be purchased, it must be done with approbation and under the eye of the lady of the Principal.

The wants of pupils should be supplied from home, as far as practicable. All jewelry is prohibited. All pocket money, or other sums for the use of pupils, should be deposited with the Principal. They are allowed to spend fifty cents of their pocket-money per month.

Social entertainments, composed of invited married gentlemen and ladies, the teachers and more advanced boarding pupils, are held monthly, which afford the young ladies a healthful and pleasant recreation, opportunity for musical exercise before a select audience

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, H. WALK

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor

J. HAMILTON, D. D. T. W. DOSEMAN. W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME III. NUMBER 51. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1853. WHOLE NUMBER, 155.

THE BRIGHTEST LAND.

I oft have heard of other lands
Across the swelling main,
Where winter frosts no'er blight the trees,
Nor desolate the plain;

And where the cloudless summer sky
Is of a deeper blue,
And all the flowers which paint the plain
Of brighter, richer hue;

And where, o'er sands besprent with gold,
The rivers roll their tides,
And deep within the mountain's breast
The sparkling diamond hides.

And oft I've thought how beautiful
Those sunny lands must be;
How pleasant wandering 'mid their groves
And valleys, wide and free!

But ah, though bright and beauteous are Those lands across the waves,
The plague of sin has reached them too,
And studded them with graves.

Yet we may find a brighter land,
Where sorrows never come;
A land of love—a cloudless land,
Where sin or death's unknown.

A city stands amid its plains—
A city built by God,
With walls of jasper, gates of pearl,
And streets of purest gold.

And through those ever-shining streets
A crystal river flows,
On either side the tree of life
In fadeless beauty grows.

No flowers are there which fall and die—
No joys which fade away;
Eternal summer decks its plains—
Its pleasures ne'er decay.

And there the glorious throne is placed,
And Jesus, too, is there,
Even he who died that we might live,
And in his glory share.

O, look to him—to Jesus—now,
While yet he waiting stands;
Be his, and happiness is thine,
And thine that "better land."

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

SABBATH SCHOOL REPORT.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The Committee on Sabbath Schools would respectfully submit the following report:

Your Committee have been able to gather the following items of information in relation to the Sabbath School cause within the bounds of the Louisiana Conference. Stations and Circuits have reported and we find the aggregate to be: 33 schools, 28 superintendents, 250 Teachers, 1627 scholars, 8679 volumes in libraries, $667 30 money raisad, 737 Visitors taken.

Your committee have not been able to obtain any satisfactory information in relation to the state of the Sabbath School enterprise in our church within the Southern States. The Sunday School Editor has not been able to secure the statistics of but a fraction more than half of our Conferences in the South. These tables do not give favorable indications of the state of the work. A great degree of neglect seems to have characterized our ministers in reporting to their several Conferences the state and condition of the Sabbath Schools in their charge, and when the reports are complete, we regret to say a state of things exist unworthy of so great, so noble and so important an enterprise. A deplorably small number of children are receiving Sabbath School instruction, showing that both our pastors and the parents in these Conferences that have reported, have grossly neglected the children and the cause. We regret also to say that these remarks will apply with equal force to our own Conference. Many stations and circuits have made no report at all, and such as have show also a lamentable state of things, indicating plainly an almost entire indifference and neglect of the duties and responsibilities which have rested upon them.

Your committee hope that the meagerness of these reports as contrasted with the detailed fulness and accuracy of the reports of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, will stimulate us to increased diligence, and that we may consider one another, and be provoked unto love and good works. We would state that every one of their thirty-four Conferences makes a complete report of every statistical item connected with the Sabbath School works, and we subjoin a few of their most interesting facts indicating the state of the work. They report 9974 schools, 98,081 officers and teachers, 504,679 scholars, 1,102,010 volumes in libraries, 100,584 copies of the Sunday School Advocate, and 13,243 conversions last year.

The Northern and Eastern States we are aware have advantages for the promotion of the Sabbath School over us, because of their dense population, numerous cities, towns and villages, and superior mail facilities, but we fear we have allowed them to surpass us in their zeal and industry in this labor of love. Let us then arouse from the lethargic state that has characterized us to increased diligence and faithfulness in this good work.

We ask leave further to say that we cherish an abiding and increasing interest in the great Sabbath School enterprise. We regard it by emphasis as the great enterprise of the age—yielding to none in importance unless it be this great mission of preaching Christ crucified as the only hope of a perishing world. The Sabbath School is the moral California of the Church, from whence her wealth must be mined—the nursery in which must be trained her future ministers, editors and teachers. In a word, it is the source from whence all the varied and sanctified agencies for the evangelization of the world must draw their most eloquent advocates and able supporters; as so, also, the most Scripturally organized and best organized portion of the church membership. Their admitted truisms establish beyond question the high and imperative claims of the enterprise upon the Church, and especially the ministry. It is a matter of devout congratulation that the Sabbath School institution is establishing itself in all the continents of the earth, and in a thousand isles that dot the mighty deep: that it has found a home and is training the rising millions in more than a hundred tongues to read the word and hymn the praise of God. And it is a matter also of grateful recollection to us as a Church, that Mr. Wesley was the first in all Europe to adopt among his societies the noble system of gratuitous teaching, without which the Sabbath School never could have reached its present high position or accomplished a tithe of the good it has conferred on millions.

Now that Romanism has thrown off the mask with which she had long disguised her dark and hideous moral deformities, openly opposing our Republican and cherished system of common schools and the reading of the Holy Scriptures, it behooves us as Christians and patriots to awake to the vast importance of training the children committed to our spiritual care to read the blessed Bible—that it may be said of all and of each, in coming years, as of Timothy, "From a child thou hast known the Scriptures."

Nothing can save the pure doctrines of Christ from corruption nor the institutions of the country from perversion and overthrow, but a moral and enlightened people. Wherever Romanism is the dominant religion, there superstition, pauperism and despotism are found and hosts of priests and bireling soldiers, alike the abettors and supporters of despotic power, oppression and taxation.

With a view to the progressive improvement with our people in this great work, your committee would respectfully suggest that our religious editors and our ministers more frequently urge upon the people the importance of the work and the dignity of the Sabbath School teacher, and urge them to engage in it. We must give more attention to training teachers for the work by Bible classes and teachers' meetings; we must labor to rouse the people feel the importance and the duty of giving liberally to sustain and advance the interest of the enterprise; and by our exhortations and recognition in public prayer, impress upon our people the high importance and solemn duty of more effectual and fervent prayer for the continued blessing of God upon the work. God has largely honored this instrumentality of good. The Methodist Church, North, report 47,000 conversions in the past five years in their Sabbath Schools, and doubtless, among ourselves, our labors have been rewarded corresponding with the amount of labor bestowed.

Your committee, closing their report, would suggest the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Sabbath School cause has claims upon us for increased efforts to increase its interests; that we will use every influence in increasing the number of Sabbath Schools and aid in their formation, and that we will endeavor to give greater prominence and importance to them, and particularly to Sabbath School collections by suitable addresses and sermons upon the subject.

Resolved, That we recommend the appointment of a Sabbath School agent, whose business shall be to travel through the bounds of the Conference and establish Sabbath Schools wherever ten children can be brought together for the purpose: that he promote the circulation of the Sunday School Visitor, and that his expenses be paid out of such collections as he shall be directed to make.

Resolved, That we recommend our preachers to favor Methodist Sunday Schools wherever practicable, and that we use the books of our own publication; that we deem the organization of Union Sunday Schools where Sunday Schools under our control can be organized, unadvisable if not injurious.

Resolved, That the superintendents of our Sunday Schools be requested to favor Juvenile Missionary Societies in said schools, and take up regular monthly collections. All of which is respectfully submitted.

A. E. GOODWYN, Chairman.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

JEWISH FESTIVALS.

PENTECOST.

Or the Feast of the Weeks, is the next in course. In Lev. xxiii. 16, it is written, "And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the Sabbath; from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave-offering; seven Sabbaths shall ye complete: Even unto the morrow after the seventh Sabbath shall ye number fifty days." The words "ye shall count" are taken in a literal sense, and in accordance with this interpretation of the text, they begin to count on the eve of the second day of Passover and continue so every evening for fifty days; thus for instance, on the eve of the eighteenth of the second month, Iar, they say: "This is the thirty-third day of the numbering, making four weeks and five days." To omit this counting on any evening is considered a transgression of the law.

Tradition tells of a pestilence that raged during this season among the pupils of Rabbinkibo, a famous talmudical teacher. These disciples, twelve thousand (!) in number, all died, as the Rabbi thought, in consequence of a divine judgment, sent to punish them for the envy and jealousy entertained by one-half of them towards the other half. In spite of the admitted justice, however, of this sentence, the later rabbis, always anxious to increase the number of ordinances, and to make the already heavy yoke still more unbearable, decreed that all Israel should commemorate this calamity by various observances indicating mourning and sadness. Hence all orthodox Jews will let their beard grow from Passover to Lag B'omer, (the thirty-third day of the counting,) and again from this day to Pentecost. On this Lag B'omer there is said to have been an intermission of the pestilence, and hence it is celebrated as a semi-festival. No weddings or other occasions of rejoicing can take place in these seven weeks except on this day.

The Feast of Pentecost (or Shebuoth, 'weeks,' as the Jews call it) commences on the eve of the sixth day of the third month, or Sivan. The Hazan with sundry assistants are usually at work for several days previous in decorating synagogue with flowers and green trees of various kinds, called Mani. This as well as the kindred Christian usages of ornamenting the church in a similar manner on Easter or Christmas, are doubtless derived from the heathen rites of Greek and Roman antiquity. In every Jewish house the rooms are almost filled with flowers, and neither trouble nor expense are spared in procuring an ample supply of this fragrant remembrancer of the present festive season.

The services at the synagogue are nearly the same as those used on Passover, excepting of course the aforementioned Psalm, which are expressly designed for the two days of Pentecost. The passages of the Pentateuch, bearing on the giving of the Law, but especially the Ten Commandments, are chaunted on both days with great solemnity. The Book of Ruth is also read; as this is supposed to be the season of the year in which the chief parts of that pastoral were transacted.

I will not enlarge on the double interest this Feast should have to every reflecting Christian on account both of giving the Law on Sinai, but more especially from the first outpouring of the Holy Spirit having taken place in this feast.

Columbia, S. C. JOSEPHUS.

Appointments by the Georgia Conference.

AUGUSTA DISTRICT.

John W. Glenn, P E; Savannah Trinity, W M Crumly; Wesley Chapel, Joshua G Payne; city mission to be supplied; Andrew Chapel, to be supplied; Chatham Mission, Edwin White; Springfield, John M Bright; Sylvania, Albert G Rowland; Screven Colored Mission, to be supplied; Wayuesboro', John W Yarbrough; Burke col'd mission, Alex Averett; Fair Haven mission, Alex Gordon; Louisville, Robt A Conner; Jefferson colored mission, W D Bussey; Richmond, Thomas F Pierce; Augusta, James E Evans; City Mission to be supplied; Augusta colored mission, Richard J Harwell; Columbia, T S L Harwell; Columbia colored mission, Jno S Dunn; Wilkes, Wesley P Arnold; Washington, Samuel Anthony; Warrenton, F F Reynolds; Sparta, Caleb W Key; Hancock, Josiah Lewis; Hancock colored mission to be supplied.

ATHENS DISTRICT.

John W Talley, P E; Athens, Jos S Key; Athens colored mission, John H Graghan; Watkinsville, Jesse R Littlejohn and Thomas Beriug; Factory Mission, W H C Cone; Monroe, David Crenshaw; Covington and Oxford, Geo C Clarke and Albert Gray; Madison, Jas L Pierce; Morgan, J B Wardlaw; Kingston Mission to be supplied; Greensbro', W A Florence; Green colored mission, to be supplied; Lexington and Oglethorpe colored mission, W J Parks and Oliver P Anthony; Elberton, H H Parks, J H Harris; Broad River colored mission, Henry Cranford; Carnesville, W J Cotton and J G Worley; Geo F Pierce, President Emory College; W J Sasnett, Professor Emory College; J H Echols, Professor Madison F College; G J Penree, Agent American Bible Society; A Means, President Masonic Female College at Covington.

DAHLONEGA DISTRICT.

George Bright, P E; Dahlouega, Dennis O Driscoll and David T Holmes; Gainesville Lawrenceville, Isaac N Cravin and 1 sup.; Canton, John H Mashburn; Clarkesville, W Lively and Jas H Reese; Elijay Mission, W G Allen and 1 to be sup; Murphy Mission, J Chambers and 1 to be sup; Blairsville mission, E L Stepheus; State Line, Tyre Harbeu; Clayton, W H Thomas.

MARIETTA DISTRICT.

J B Payne, P E; Marietta Station, C A Fulwood; Marietta Circuit, Alfred Dorman, 1 to be sup; Cassville, M A Clentz; Iron Works and Eutaw mission, C A Crowell; Dallis Mission, John Strickland; Rome, D D Cox; Cave Spring, Andrew Neese and R Waters; Subligna, W F Conley; Lafayette, Henry P Pitchford; Dalton, Milton C Smith; Calhoun, W M D Bond; Spring Place, W P Clentz; Summerville, W Brewer; Dade mission, John W Brady.

LA GRANGE DISTRICT.

Joseph C Simmons, P E; La Grange, W H Evans; West Point Station, W R Foote; Troup, Jackson Rush; Troup colored mission, to be supplied; Greenville, Leonard Rush and one to be supplied; Merriwether colored mission, Robt Stripling; Franklin, David Stripling; Carrollton mission, W J Wardlaw and Myles W Arnold; Newman, D Kelsey; Palmetto, Claiborne Trussell; Atlanta, John P Duncan and James M Austin.

Decatur, J H Ewing, and 1 to be supplied; Fayetteville, Morgan Bellah; Tebulou, Noah Smith; Griffin, Lewis J Davies; McDonough and Jackson, S M Smith and L Q Allen.

MACON DISTRICT.

A T Mann, P E; Macon and Vineville, E W Speer and L G R Wiggins; Macon colored mission to be supplied; Clinton, Daniel J Myrick; Milledgeville and Bethel, Charles R Jewett; Bethel colored mission, Franklin L Brantley; Eatonton and colored mission, Jno W Knight and Thos H Jordon; Monticello, R Lane; Forsythe, Edmund P Burch; Culloden, Wesley F Smith; Culloden colored mission, to be supplied; Knoxville colored mission, to be supplied; Fort Valley, Jas Jones; Fort Valley colored mission, to be supplied; Perry, Robt H Foster; Ocmulgee colored mission, to be supplied; Jeffersonville, M H Hubbard; E H Myers, President Wesley Female College, O L Smith and John M Bonnell, Professors.

COLUMBUS DISTRICT.

J P Turner, P E; Columbus, and colored mission, W G Connor, W D Shea and W R Branham, supn; City mission, Loviok Pierce; Factory Mission, Wyat Brooks; Buena Vista, J B Smith; Oglethorpe, Jas M Dickey; Lanier, Elijah H Clarke; Talbotton, James W Hinton Talbotton circuit, Benj W Clarke; Talbotton colored mission, Raleigh Green; Thomaston, John M Marshall; Upson colored mission, to be supplied; Hamilton Thomas H Whitby and Robt N Cotter; Harris colored mission, John P Dickinson.

LUMPKIN DISTRICT.

W Kox, P E; Lumpkin, James B Jackson; Stewart Joseph D Adams; Stewart, Harvey McHan Chattahoochie colored mission, Jos T Turne; Cuthbert, Wayman H Potter and John H Caldwell, supn; Fort Gaines, Jamieson Scaife; Randolph colored mission, Thomas R Stewart Starkesville, Young F Tiguor; Americu, D Williamson; Sumpter and Lee colored mission, W M Watts; Vienna, Marshall F Maltsby; Worth Mission, A J Deavers, Charles W Thomas, Chaplain in U S Navy.

SANDERSVILLE DISTRICT.

Wiley J Parks, P E; Sandersville, Jos T Smith; Dublin, Jno B McGehee; Irwinton, Lewis B Payne; Jacksonville, John E Santell; Reidville C Harris; Hiuesville, Silas H Cooper; Darin and McIntosh mission, Noah Palmer; Emanuel Mission, F W Flanders; Bulloch and Bryan, W B Mellan, Smith C Quillinn, Wills Mathews, Thos C Colsman, Jas W Traywick and Chas L Huys, left without appointment, on account of feeble health.

David Blalock and Albert B Smith left without apointment and without clnim.

The Neglected Bible.

The following specimen of the pulpit eloquence of the seventeenth century is preserved in the work of John Howe, one of the eminent divines of that period, to whom it was related by another non-conformist minister, a great man in his day, Dr. Thomas Goodwin, President of Magdalen College, Oxford. Mr. Howe says:

"Dr. Goodwin told me that being himself, in the time of his youth, a student at Cambridge, and having heard much of Mr. Rogers, of Dedham, in Essex, purposely he took a journey from Cambridge to Dedham to hear him preach on his lecture day—a lecture then so strangely thronged and frequented, that to those who came not very early there was no possibility of getting room in that spacious large church. Mr. Rogers was, as he told me, at the time he heard him, on the subject of discourse that hath been for some time the subject of mine—the Scriptures. And in that sermon he falls into an expostulation with the people about their neglect of the Bible—I am afraid it is more neglected our days. He personates God to the people, telling them:

"'Well, I have trusted you so long with my Bible; you have slighted it; it lies in such and such houses all covered with dust and cobweb; you care not to look into it. Do you use my Bible so? Well, you have my Bible no longer.' And he takes up the Bible from the cushion, and seemed as if he were going away with it, and carrying it from them; but immediately turns, and personates the people to God, falling down on his knees, cries and pleads most earnestly, 'Lord, whatsoever thou doest to us, take not thy Bible from us; kill our children; burn our houses; destroy our goods; only spare us thy Bible.' And then he personates God again to the people: 'Say you so? well, I will try you a while longer, and here is my Bible for you; I will see how you will use it, whether you will love it more; whether you will value it more, whether you will observe it more, whether you will practice it more, and live more according to it.'

"By these actions, as the doctor told me, he put all the congregation in so strange a posture as he never saw any congregation in his life; the place was a mere Bochim, the people generally, as it were, deluged with their own tears; and he told me that he himself, when he got out, and was to take horse again to be gone, he was fain to hang a quarter of an hour upon the neck of his horse weeping before he had power to mount, so strange an impression was there made upon him, and generally upon the people by having been thus expostulated with for the neglect of the Bible."

MASON AND DIXON'S LINE.—"What is meant by Mason and Dixon's line?" asked a bright blue-eyed girl of twelve years of age, when sitting at her father's table, a few days ago. The answer was, "It is a phrase usually employed to describe the boundary line between free and slave States." "But why do they describe in that way?" was her inquiry. The answer may be worth giving to some of the younger readers of the Watchman and Reflector.

In the seventeenth century, James II., of England, then the Duke of York, gave certain lands both to Lord Baltimore and to William Penn, and a difficulty sprung up as to the proper owner of these lands on the Delaware. Again and again was the affair carried into the courts, till the year 1760, when George III. came to the crown, the Lord Chancellor of England made a decision; but new difficulties sprung up in drawing the boundary lines. The commissioners finally employed Messrs. Mason and Dixon, who had just returned from the Cape of Good Hope, where they had been to observe the transit of Venus. They succeeded in establishing the line between Delaware and Maryland, which has ever since been called Mason and Dixon's line. [Watchman and Reflector.

THE INTEREST ARGUMENT.—The rum organ's staple argument is the vast interest at stake—so many men and so much property invested in the business, that it must not be touched. That argument was well answered by Lord Chesterfield in the British House of Lords:

"My lords," said he, "allow me to wonder at the different conceptions of different understandings. It appears to me that since the spirits which the distillers produce are allowed to enfeeble the limbs, vitiate the blood, to pervert the heart, and obscure the intellect, that the number of distilleries should be no argument in their favor, for I never heard that a law against theft was repealed or delayed because thieves were numerous. It appears to me, my lords, that really if so formidable a body are confederated against the virtue or the lives of their fellow-citizens, it is time to put an end to the havoc, and to interpose while it is yet in our power, to stop the destruction."

PRESERVATION OF THE EYES.

We copy a portion of a well-written article from the Scalpel, a New York medical monthly, on the eyes. The eye is the most delicate organ of the human body, and also one of the most indispensable, and its preservation is, therefore, of great interest and importance. We submit the article to the perusal of our readers:

There is a tradition at least as old as the Talmud, that the eyes are strengthened by drawing the fingers across the eyelids in a horizontal direction. Ex-President Adams, who was affected with an obstruction of the tear-passage, used this method to get rid of the accumulating fluid, and the ancient practice was brought into greater notice by the example of the illustrious statesman. The obsolete theory that the anterior surface of the eye-ball becomes flattened as age advances, was again revived, and it became a business instruction for kneading the organ into shape with the fingers!

It cannot be expected that operations founded on a false theory can be safe in practice. It is untrue that the outer surface of the eye becomes flatter with advancing age; and therefore manipulations to restore what is not wanting, in an organ so delicate in structure that a rude push may be followed by perpetual darkness, should be avoided.

The principal lens of the eye is situated behind the pupil, and kept in proper position by membranes finer than the finest gold-beater's skin. These delicate membranes are liable to be ruptured by blows, falls or other causes, and the lens, which is naturally clear as crystal, becomes white and opaque. Opacity of the lens, or what is called cataract, may be produced without laceration of the membranes, by merely interfering with the circulation of the vessels which supply it. The writer was lately called to visit an aged female who had been suffering acutely for months after submitting, while in health, to the manipulations of a rejuvenating itinerant. The lens was dislocated and pressed on the sensitive nerves at the margin of the pupil. The pain occasioned by pressure of this kind may be compared to that produced by pressing the exposed nerve of a tooth with a toothpick, but in the former case the pain is continuous, and not so easily removed as the latter. Other cases of injury attributed to manipulation, such as cross-eyes, double-vision, etc., have come under the writer's notice. Last month, in presence of the editor, he operated for cataract in the case of the lady, whose vision, with the aid of spectacles, was perfect till she was induced by plausible advertisements to pay for a course of lessons. After the third lesson vision became indistinct, and blindness ultimately followed. Beer was called to examine a gentleman who had always excellent sight, till it was lost in a moment; the patient had been at a party of friends, when a person stepped suddenly behind him, and covering both eyes with the hands, wishing him to guess who it was. The former, without speaking a word, endeavored to escape from the pressure, and when the eyelids were opened, he was entirely bereft of sight. Although there was not the least appearance of injury, the sufferer remained hopelessly blind. From this melancholy example, Beer concludes that the eyes are liable to injury even from moderate pressure.

There is a popular notion, sanctioned even by medical men who ought to know better, that the eyes are preserved by opening them every morning in a basin of cold water. Some of the worst cases of petergium or film on the surface of the eye have been witnessed in those who boasted of this practice. When a drop of water gets into the windpipe, the nostril, or the ear, irritation is produced, and when the eyes are opened under water, the sensation is anything but agreeable. The eye is lubricated by a secretion admirably adapted to facilitate the motions of the lid over its surface, and as this secretion is partially soluble in water, it is as inconsistent with common sense to wash it away, as it is to remove the oil from the wheels of machinery. It is unquestionably important that the cleanliness of the organ be maintained; yet this may be accomplished in the usual manner, without opening the lubricating surfaces. When the secretion is vitiated by cold or other causes, quince-seed tea, or milk and water, are preferable, for ablution, to water alone. Avoid eye-waters, many of which contain lead, as there are ten chances to one they will produce an incurable film. To make this clear, dissolve a little sugar of lead in water, and pour the transparent solution in a wine-glass containing a watery solution of common salt. When the fluids are mixed a white precipitate of chlorid of lead falls to the bottom of the glass. When eye-waters containing lead are permitted to pass to the surface of the eye, the tears furnish common salt, and the lead is precipitated. The transparent portion of the eye is sometimes extensively tatooed with this white leaden powder, and vision becomes indistinct or even destroyed.

When the general health is robust it is astonishing what an amount of labor the organs of vision will endure; yet when it is depressed, especially by mental disturbance during a periodical function, they are easily deranged by too close application to business. When they have become weak, much of their preservation depends on the proper management of the light to which they are exposed. When the light is in excess it should be diminished; and when it is deficient labor should be discontinued. The light blue of the sky and the verdure of the fields are the colors to which the organ of vision is naturally adapted, and which it will endure with most ease. The flame of a good oil lamp is more regular than that of gas or candles, and is, therefore, to be preferred. The intermitting flickering of gas is particularly injurious, as it produces constant contractions and dilations of the pupil, and undue exercise of the whole organ. By placing a shade of light blue tissue-paper over the lamp the light is ameliorated; for artificial light contains an superabundance of the yellow and red rays, but is deficient in the violet. By allowing it pass through the bluish medium it approaches nearer to the light of day and is better adapted for continued application of the organs of vision.

The gist of the whole matter is just this: Let your eyes alone, and they may serve you all your days. Should they become out of order, apply to that very important personages, your family physician, and he will instruct you how to "mind your eyes."

CHESTERFIELD and WILBERFORCE.

A CONTRAST.

The most polished Englishman of the last century was Philip Dormer Stanhope, the fourth Earl of Chesterfield. High-born and well-bred, clever, eloquent and witty, and endowed with a large amount of natural amenity, he was bent on distinction. To dazzle his contemporaries was the business of his life. He was a man who made his own model. From the speeches of Cicero, from the epigrams of Martial, from the saloons of Paris and Versailles, he gleaned the several ingredients of classic grace and modern refinement, and sought to combine them in the courtier, the statesman and orator. He had no God. In the shrine where the Most High should be, there was a dim outline which looked very like a colossal Stanhope carrying a young Chesterfield in its arms; but, unless this mixture of self-idolatry and son-worship deserve the name, there was no religion in the man. He had his reward. At a levee, or in a drawing-room, he moved "the admired of all admirers." Few made such formidable speeches in Parliament. None uttered so many brilliant sayings in society. He got ribbons, plaudits, diplomatic appointments, the smiles of the fair, the envy of his peers; everything except true human affection; everything except the approbation of God. Should any one wish to repeat the man, the mould is still extant. It will be found in Lord Chesterfield's "Lettere to his Son"—a book of which our great moralist said, in effect, that "it inculcates the morals of a profligate with the manners of a dancing-master." But before taking more trouble, it is well to know the result. At the close he confessed that his life had been as joyless as it had been selfish and hollow: "I have recently read Solomon with a kind of sympathetic feeling. I have been as wicked and as vain, though not as wise as he; but now I am old enough to feel the truth of his reflection: 'All is vanity and vexation of spirit.'" Repartees sparkled on his dying lips, but all was dreary within, all was darkness ahead. The fame for which he lived expired before himself; and now truth declines to write his epitaph, and virtue has no garland for his grave.

Still a boy, while this old worldling lay dying, William Wilberforce soon grew up, and the grace of God made him a Christian. That is, it taught him to live not to himself, but to the glory of God. It taught him to worship. It showed him that he was not his own proprietor; that he had no right to make his own enjoyment his chief pursuit; and that he must put all his faculties at God's disposal. In the Bible he found the model on which God would have him form his character. He studied it. He prayed over it. He watched himself and struggled with his evil tendencies. God's spirit strengthened him, and gave him wonderful self-conquest. Retaining all his natural elasticity, his wit, his bright fancy, his melodious voice and fluent speech, his random hilarity was exchanged for conscientious kindness, and all his gifts of mind and station were devoutly laid at the feet of his Redeemer. With his pen he expounded to the highest classes that system of vital piety which Whitefield and Wesley had already preached to the populace; and carrying it to the dinner tables of Clapham, and the evening assemblies of Piccadilly, many who fancied religion too severe in the sermons of Bishop Porteus or the strictures of Hannah More, confessed to its lovelines in the life of Mr. Wilberforce. Then, in his public career—keeping himself on purpose 'pure'—avoiding office, never using for personal ends the vast ascendancy over others which his fascinating goodness gave him, any more than the prestige of his mighty Yorkshire constituency; alike on the floor of St. Stephen's and on the platform of Freemasons' Tavern, he consecrated to every humane and Christian cause "a persuasive and pathetic eloquence, chastened by a pure taste, varied by extensive information, enriched by classical allusion, sometimes elevated by the more sublime topics of Holy Writ—the thoughts and the spirit "That touch'd Isaiah's hallow'd lips with fire."

How much the individual advocacy of one so loved and honored effected for Missionary and Bible Societies, it would be difficult to tell; but it is hardly metaphor to say that Africa wept when he died. His country will never forget him; for although poets, warriors and statesmen in numbers repose under the roof of the Abbey, England recognises no originality more illustrious, no heroism more patriotic, than his who led the campaign of humanity so long, and who achieved the abolition of the slave trade. [Rev. Jas. Hamilton, D. D.

A LEAF OF MEMORY LOST.—An old man's memory is a queer place. Indeed, it resembles an old-fashioned garret, full of relics and souvenirs of the past; the rubbish of to-day, but the riches of yesterday.

In conversation yesterday with an old man, who has passed a long and useful life, and with whom now it is Indian summer, we were impressed with a remark he incidentally made. He had seen the opening of near seventy springs; at first, the winters came and went, but by and by, unmelted snow-flakes lingered in his hair, and he saw them drift over the graves of one after another, whose feet with his, had brushed the morning dews together. At last, they whitened over his old wife's last resting place—over her who knew him when the shadows fell to the westward and "the day was before" them both—who never thought him old, though all the world pronounced him so. Everybody said when she died, "It is a terrible blow for the old man," and a few did all they could to make him forget, but there was no need of that, "for," said he, "they didn't seem to know where the blow fell, they so deplored—they didn't think how much I missed somebody to help me remember!"

Those few words, indeed, contain a world of meaning. He did miss the other leaf from memory's tablet. Two pairs of eyes had but one rainbow; but one pair beheld it now. Two hearts had lived over again the past; but one remembered it—and imperfectly now. Who would have life's little thread extended 'till he, too, should be compelled to take up the words and say, "I miss somebody to help me remember!" [N. Y. Tribune.

EDITING A NEWSPAPER.—Many people estimate the ability of a newspaper, and the industry and talent of its editor, by the editorial matter it contains. It is comparatively an easy task for a frothy writer to pour out daily columns of words—words upon any and all subjects. His ideas may flow in one wishy-washy everlasting flood, and his command of language may enable him to string them together like bunches of onions, and yet his paper may be a meagre and poor concern. But what is the toil of such a man who displays his leaded matter largely, to that imposed on a judicious, well-informed editor, who exercises his vocation with an hourly consciousness of his responsibilities and duties, and devotes himself to the conducting of his paper with the same care and assiduity that a sensible lawyer bestows upon a suit, or a humane physician on a patient, without regard to show or display. Indeed, the mere writing part of editing a newspaper is but a small portion of the work. The care, the time employed in selecting, is far more important, and the tact of a good editor is better known by his selections than any thing else, and that, we all know, is half the battle. But as we have said, an editor ought to be estimated, and his labors understood and appreciated in the general conduct of his paper, its tone, its temper, its uniform, consistent course, its principles and aims, its manliness, its dignity and propriety. To preserve these as they should be preserved is enough to occupy fully the time and attention of any man. If to this be added the general supervison of the newspaper establishment, which most editors have to encounter, the most wonder is how they find time to write at all. [National Intelligencer.

THE HUNGARIAN GIPSIES.—The social life of this outlawed race, now numbering about 4000, bears the impress of great moral depravity. Under a tent, or a narrow hut, containing one single room, a whole family lives, however numerous, without any furniture, even without a bed. In the middle of this room, a fire, their never-failing companion, burns alike in winter and summer, over which hangs the large soup kettle on two forked sticks. Into it they throw pell-mell all the eatables they procure during the day, consisting of the most curious medley of gipsy dainties—from a rotten egg to a dead cat.

As soon as the boy enters manhood, he seeks for a companion amongst the swarthy beauties of his tribe, and after a short courtship makes his proposals to the object of his choice, the consent of parents being not much cared for by either of the parties. On the wedding day, the bridegroom and bride don their best apparel—the former's consisting of a hussar-cloak, probably older than himself, of a red or green color, furred and braided, and on which, if the owner be wealthy, glitter large zinc or silver buttons. The bride wears a red petticoat of many folds, and a white skirt with short, full sleeves, her hair and neck adorned with copper coins. If they are not compelled to go to church, the matrimonial ceremony is performed in a hut by the chief, or the oldest father in the band, the bridegroom pledging his faith in the following manner: "I take thee for my hut companion as long as thou canst carry the szaytor"—a sort of basket—that is to say, till death; for a gipsy woman is never without her szaytor, in which she collects all the odds and ends she picks up during her rambles. Then comes feasting and dancing, in which each member of the tribe shares. On the third day, the merry-making terminates, and the newly-wedded couple build a hut, procure the implements for forging, and commence their domestic life, with all its piquant daily occurrences of begging, pilfering, idling, etc.

OLD MAIDS IN PARIS.—Old maids are scarcely known in French society. Young girls do not appear without their mothers, and maidens of two or three score years may not have mothers able to chaperone them. Hence those who from lack of fortunes, (the one thing needful in a French marriage,) cannot contract a suitable alliance in her youth—slip into blue stockings, or slide behind the curtains of a Convent, Hospital, Pension or Charity School. They are said to coif St. Catherine at 25, and each year afterward of single life, adds a new fold to her cap. It is pleasant to see with what zeal they emulate the virtues of their martyred sisters, and, instead of growing viragoish and whisen-visaged, in contemplating sour grapes, they rejoice in the glorious examples of the milk-veined troop who have gone up before them—from great tribulations, clothed in the white garments of righteousness, and warm their hearts with Platonic love for saints ascended—and sing and talk of sacred loves and heavenly unions in rapturous strains, that Solomon himself would have exulted in. Thanks to the faith of Mme Guyon and the Dames of St. Cyr, for the comfortable mantle it has dropped on the hearts of French spinsters!

The Sisters of Charity and Sisters of the Sacred Heart are models of immaculate virtues, which no one dare assail. During the last revolution they were the only persons safe in the streets. They passed as angels of mercy to succor the wounded and the poor, and tend the sick. Now, they are assiduous in Hospitals and Schools for free instruction. They wear by their side a long tinkling chatelaine of praying beads, blessed relics, crosses, scissors and thimble. On the head a white-winged bonnet, like the dove of the Holy Spirit. Their dresses are of gray woolen cloth with large straight sleeves, into which, when in the street, they slip their bare hands as into a muff; the length of the skirt is pressed into plaits, which they never derange, for when they want to sit down they kneel.

PRETTY LITTLE THOUGHT.—The Squirrel jumps from branch to branch, the Flirt from beau to beau.

SELF-RELIANCE.—There is a time in every man's education, when he arrives at the conviction that envy is ignorance; that imitation is suicide; that he must take himself for better, for worse, as his portion; that the wide universe is full of [illegible] corn can come to him [illegible] but he knows when [illegible] that plot of ground [illegible] power which resides in [illegible] but he knows what [illegible] know until he [illegible] character, one [illegible] another zone.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, January 21.

BURIAL REGISTER.—The enterprising proprietor of the True Delta, 103 St. Charles street, has published the cemetery returns of this city from last May to October. It shows in alphabetical order every name of persons buried and the burial place, and of what disease. An elaborate essay on yellow fever, by Dr. McFarland, accompanies it. Pamphlet form, 50 cents.

☞Rev. Peter Cartwright, the eccentric but talented veteran minister, of the M. E. Church, died in Illinois on the 16th ult.

CHARTER FUND.—The Trustees of this fund in Philadelphia have agreed to the claims of the Church, South. The principles of settlement, and the legality of the act, were examined and approved by the Supreme Court Judges, in Washington City, and will be incorporated by Judge McLean into the decree of Judge Nelson on the New York property case. The amount coming to the Southern Church by this arrangement is about $20,000.

☞The Rev. Dr. Aldor, formerly one of the secretaries of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, was ordained to the ministry of the Church of England, by the Bishop of Gibraltar, on Sunday, Nov. 20th, in the cathodral of that city. The event is a matter of surprise to those who are aware of the circumstances under which the doctor withdrew from the Wesleyan ministry.

TEXAS CONFERENCE.

This body met at Huntsville, Texas, 21st Dec. adjourned 27th. Bishop Andrew presiding.

Six preachers were admitted on trial and two transfers received. A considerable increase of membership in every District. Nearly $4000 missionary collection. The Conference resolved, in view of the wants of Germans, and to promote its influence among this growing class of citizens, to recommend a religious weekly newspaper in that language, and Rev. Peter Mœlling was authorized to bring out a prospectus.

J. W. Phillips, J. W. Whipple and F. A. McShan were appointed a committee to memorialize the Legislature to pass a law similar to the Maine Law.

Delegates to General Conference are instructed to vote for the removal of the Ninth Section from our book of Discipline.

N. A. Cravens being transferred to the Louisiana Conference the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That it is with feelings of deep regret that we part with our much beloved brother and fellow-laborer, Rev. N. A. Cravens, who transfers to the Louisiana Conference, and that we follow him with commendations and prayers, and should he, in the Providence of God, return to our conference, we will receive him with open arms.

Texas is bound to be an Empire State. Methodism is spreading over those prairies. The increase of membership past year in East Texas was over 2000; in West Texas nearly 2000.

The following figures on ministerial support. For all the preachers—

Quarterage claim	$9,480 00
Table expenses	7,077 00
Total claim	$16,557 00

RECEIPTS.

Quarterage claim	$8,113 39
Table expenses	5,410 75
Total receipts	$13,524 14
Leaving a deficiency on the quarterage claim of	$1,366 61
Table expenses of	1,666 25
Total deficiency	$3,032 86

Delegates to General Conference.—R. Alexander, J. W. Whipple, H. S. Thrall.

Reserves.—W. A. Smith, W. C. Lewis.

APPOINTMENTS.

GALVESTON DISTRICT.

R. W. Kennon, P. E.; Galveston station, Garrett L Patton; Galveston Ger. mis., Peter Moelling; Houston station, J E Ferguson; Africa mis., to be sup.; Lynchburg, John W Addison; Columbia and Brazoria, Ivy H Cox; Oyster Creek African mis., D W Tuly; Brazoria African mis., to be sup.; Richmond and African mis., James W Cooley; San Felipe and African mis., A M Box, J H Davidson, supernumerary; Matagorda, Wm F Kidd; Old Caney African mis., to be supplied.

RUTERSVILLE DISTRICT.

James M. Weston, P. E.; Rutersville and LaGrange, Joshua H Shapard, 1 to be sup.; Navidad mis., Geo Tittle; Columbus, Geo H Gatewood; Brenham, W C Lewis; Wheelock, W G Foote; Caldwell, W G Nelme; Cameron, R Y King; Caldwell African mis., John W Devilbiss; Egypt, A C Delaplain; H S Thrall, agent of the American Bible Society.

HUNTSVILLE DISTRICT.

R. Alexander, P. E., and Agent of the Chappell Hill Institute and the Andrew Female College, at Huntsville; Cold Spring, to be sup.; Montgomery, P M Yell; Trinity mis., to be sup.; Leona, W. Williams; Anderson, B D Durheill; Retreat, J W Leadbetter; Rock Island, B F Peel; Washington, T. Wooldridge; Chappell Hill, to be sup., by J H Walsh; Andrew Female College, J M Follansbee, Principal.

SPRINGFIELD DISTRICT.

M. Yell, P. E.; Springfield, W F Hubert, F P Ray; Waxahatchie, S S Yarborough; Cedar Hill, J J Wright; Waco, J H Addison; [illegible] mis., J W Chalk, [illegible] T G Gilmair; Centerville, M D Hubard.

AUSTIN DISTRICT.

J. W. Whipple, P. E., and Agent of the Bastrop Academy; Austin, John W Phillips; Austin circuit, W A Smith; Bastrop station, F A McShen; Bastrop circuit, I G John; Bastrop col. mis., to be sup.; Seguin, J S M'Gee; San Marcos, W P Reed; Sun Antonio station, W H Seat; Medina mis., R H Belvin; Georgetown mis., T F Windson; Fredericksburg Ger. mis., C Grote; Braunfels German mis., H P Young; Gold Diggings mis., to be supplied.

VICTORIA DISTRICT.

Daniel Morse, P. E., Victoria, to be sup., by C F Spencer; Goliad, A B F Kerr, and Agent of Paine Female Institute; Lavaca and Indianola, to be sup., Lavaca circuit, T F Cook; Giholo, to be sup., (by R H Tiell;) Gonzales, Danl Carl; Texana, J H D Moore; Colletto, A C Fuirmnn; Victoria Ger. mis., E Schneider: Corpus Christi mis., H. S Lafferty; Brownsville mis., O M Addison.

J G Johnson and F Smock left without appointments, on account of ill health.

N A Cravens transferred to Louisiana Conference.

Next Conference to be held at Chappell Hill.

METHODIST PRESS.

THE EPISCOPACY.—The Richmond Advocate thinks that the hurried action and the abrupt termination of the session of 1850, will develve a large amount of "unfinished business" upon the session of 1854, besides the multitude of minor matters always superinduced by the changing circumstances and local necessities of the Church. With this view of the approaching General Conference our contemporary cuts up and dries a few leading points that must come before it. In discussing the Episcopacy, as to strengthening it:

That this will be done, we presume no one will donht. But to what extent is the question of interest to the church. Among the various propositions to meet this exigency, the following are prominent: 1. Such an addition to the present number of Bishops as will allow one for each Annual Conference. 2. A division of the work into Conference districts consisting of from three to five Conferences, and appointing a Bishop to each district to preside over it for periods of four years. 3. An increase of from three to six new Bishops, and distributing the work among them, with smaller annual circuits, upon the present plan of operations. We cannot now discuss the relative merits of these different plans; and there is no necessity for it: as, with whatever favor either the first or second might be considered, or whatever the advantages either might offer, the approaching General Conference is almost shut up to the necessity, if not of deciding against them, at least of postponing action upon them until the removal of constitutional difficulties. The obligation imposed on the General Conference to maintain "an itinerant general superintendency," in the present position of the subject compels a resort to the third plan to meet the case. But what number of new Bishops shall be created? It seems to us that three is the very least number that ought to be thought of; and there are valid reasons for adopting a higher number. The church may get along with three: it can scarcely do so, and derive benefit—mercy and not sacrifice—from the Episcopacy. From all we can learn there is so general a concurrence in the opinion that three new Bishops will be ample for the present demands of the church, that we will not now press a higher number upon the consideration of our readers.

QUALIFICATIONS.—Those remarks will meet a general response as to age:

The extremes of early manhood and declining years should be alike avoided. The one is defective in experience, the other incompetent for service, i. e. such active and continued service as the office demands and the church requires, to accredit the wisdom of the selection and repay the expense of maintaining it. The office ought not to be regarded as a reward for long service or services of any kind, but as a distinction of merit conferred upon the most worthy, who may possess qualities promising the longest and most efficient service. The human mind is generally matured and the character formed at about the age of thirty. Under this time of life it would be scarcely prudent to select a man for the office. All things considered, it would be better if suitable men could be found, not to go a great deal beyond it. Yet there are exceptional cases. Generally we would prefer one about forty—the prime of life—but, with a good constitution, we would not regard fifty too old. A great deal of active life, enterprise and endurance is found in persons of this age; and the church might show her wisdom and be amply compensated in selecting those thus advanced. Advancing beyond this period, we should think very little, beside confering an honor, could be aimed at in the selection or hoped for from it.

The following reasons for elevating to the Episcopacy one who possesses besides safety of character and administrative talent, high pulpit qualifications are so much to our mind we add them to these already long extracts:

Aside from all the reasons growing out of the eminency of the office, its power and usefulness, it is beyond contradiction that 'those who are without," as St. Paul says, will form their estimate of the intellectual standing of the church from the character of the preaching of these head men of the fraternity. Besides, the entire ministry of the church will be enhanced or disparaged, according as our Bishops are weak or strong in the pulpit. Other churches select their strongest men for the Episcopal office; and comparisons are and always will be instituted between men of the same class in different churches, and the comparison will always enure to the damage of those whose Bishops are deemed wanting in pulpit ability. The decision also depreciates the character, and injures the popular usefulness of the body of ministers thus adjudged. There is yet a stronger reason for the exercise of "a sound mind" in the selection of these officers. It grows out of their relations to and influence over our junior ministers, who are excited to emulate the highest endowments of the ministry, or are satisfied with a floundering mediocrity, as these chief shepherds are eminent or mediocre, strong or feeble in the pulpit. Conference occasions and Bishops' sermons and addresses are excellent and powerful for stimulating or repressing the intellects of young preachers. An uniutellectual Bishop would scarcely think of using it for such a purpose, and if he did, he possibly might provoke a smile while seeking to rouse a dormant energy; and in the depths of many a heart might be born the thought, 'physician heal thyself.' A right kind of Bishop's sermon is powerful as a means of edification to the church. A sermon of sound doctrine, fulness of thought, a flowing style, bearing on its broad surface the treasures of a cultivated mind, uttered, too, in "sound speech that cannot be condemned;" these, not disjointed fragments of truth, a hurly-hurley of thoughts, a medley of fact and fiction, antiquated anecdotes and fabulous cases, are what the pulpit of the age demands, and the food with which the Bishops should feed the flock of God.

A LOCAL HABITATION.—Dr. Lee thinks these General Superintendents ought to have a local habitation, and proposes a distribution:

Our present Bishops reside all of them along the Southern line of the church, as in South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi and Tennessee. Leaving the whole Northern line without the local presence and influence of any member of the Episcopacy. Now if the office is one of influence and usefulness to the church, as it undoubtedly is, it ought to be more generally distributed. They ought to be ranged along the Northern line, or in the centre, as well as in the South. We think, therefore, that regard should be had to this necessity in the selection of Bishops by the next General Conference. There ought to be a distribution of the Episcopacy on some such plan as the following: A Bishop ought to reside either in Virginia or North Carolina; one in Kentucky or Missouri, and one in Arkansas, Louisiana or Texas. Such an arrangement would be of great utility to the church, and well adapted to Episcopal exigencies in attending conferences. We do not insist that the conferences named must furnish the Bishops, though they are doubtless ready and willing to do so; but we insist that the arrangement ought to be made for the good of the entire body. Before the election comes on the General Conference ought to resolve that the Bishops shall have their "local habitation" at points selected by themselves within these limits. The trial will be made to secure it.

The Northern Advocate has talked very ugly about the settlement of the Property case—an event that praying and devout men rejoiced in. He must feel ashamed of this, when cool, for its openness to severe retort. After giving the figures—what has to be paid the Church, South, he says:

So much for the sin of fellowshipping "the sum of all villanies." Slavery is a costly iniquity. And if either Church or State can get rid of the abomination by parting with everything but life and the hope of heaven, we think the deliverance will be cheaply purchased. The rapacity which robs the colored man will be sure to rob the white man, if it can get a chance. There is no way to escape such troubles, but to do business hereafter with honest men—such as hate robbery and oppression. "Evil communications corrupt good manners." If we would save money or credit we must reject the slaveholder with that abhorrence which is so eminently due to his high crimes.

On the subject of forming denominational insurance companies—a project that is attracting attention among Northern Methodists—the Advocate says:

The suggestion is worthy of attention. Something of the kind might save to the church a vast amount of expense. We advise everybody to keep clear of the common insurance offices, particularly those got up on the mutual plan. Such companies are altogether the most expensive in the long run. But the best insurance companies are a moth. In this city there is probably fifty thousand dollars paid annually for insurance, and the yearly loss by fires is not over five thousand dollars. Thus the city actually loses forty-five thousand dollars every year. It is obvious, therefore, that the rates of insurance might be greatly reduced, if the business could be got out of the hands of speculators. We speak on this subject from painful experience.

BACK DIVIDENDS.—In the absence of the editor the locum tenens of the S. C. Advocate, (Dr. Summers) offers some plans and suggestions. Why not let the Bishops come before the living Churches, too, as well as other claimants? Chief pastors, they ought to feed from the altar as others. This would be a connexional bond. Do not remove the Bishops from the people. They love the Episcopacy and love to support the Bishops:

The question is frequently asked, What disposal shall be made of the back dividends and the proportion of the chartered fund coming to the Southern Methodist Church, amounting to near $100,000? Three plans have been suggested: 1. To divide the money between the annual conferences to be invested by them for the benefit of the superannuated preachers, widows, orphans, &c. 2. To invest the whole as a fund for the support of the Bishops. 3. To invest it with the principal in the Book Concern, so as to enable the agents to cheapen our publications, paying out no dividends except for the support of the Bishops. We incline to the third course, and the rather, as it embraces substantially the second. We apprehend the first suggestion would not meet with general favor. We do not favor it because it would not tend to strengthen our connexional bonds, which, we fear, are weaker than they formerly were. Besides, we would have the aforesaid claimants supported by the annual contributions of the church. This is but sheer justice; and we are happy to know that it is so considered by our members and friends generally. No collections meet so much popular favor as those for the parties in question; and when it is known that there are no dividends to fall back upon, and that no claims but theirs are to be met by those collections, it will not be difficult to secure their full disciplinary allowance.

REVIVAL.—Dr. Parsons, on the Louisville side of the N. and L. Advocate gives an encouraging account of the Church:

"The work is looking up throughout the city. Bethel has enjoyed a precious season of revival. Brook street has witnessed quite a number of conversions and additions, so, also, of Shelby street, 8th street and 12th. Third street is looking up. Hancock street is in a blaze of revival, the missions are prosperous and near one hundred have been added to the Walnut Street (old 4th) since conference. Altogether we never knew a more promising state of things among the churches in Louisville.

MINUTES OF 1853.—The Western Christian Advocate has been at some pains digesting the Minutes of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, for the last year, and presents this summary:

Members	648,680
Probationers	103,957
Total	752,637
Increase	23,937
Traveling preachers located this year,	70
Died	51
Preachers admitted on trial	544
Superannuated preachers	444
Supernumerary preachers	162
Effective preachers	4,497
Total traveling preachers	5,100
Local preachers	6,061
Amount raised for missions	$210,447
Average for each member 27 and 3-10th cents.

The increase is 23,937 for the year, which is only 3 and 7-10ths of advance on the year 1852.

The entire number of members east of the mountains is 395,588, and west of the mountains is 356,823. This gives east of the mountains 38,765 members more than west of the mountains.

The amount of money raised east of the mountains for missions was $12,416, and west of the mountains $90,031. The average per member for missions in the whole church is 27 and 3-10th cents. The average per member for the east is 30 and 3-10th cents, while the average in the west is only 25 cents.

The amount of deficiency for quarterage alone, as reported at the conferences, is $157,359 12. The appropriations to meet these, from the fifth collection and the Chartered Fund is only $42,145 34, leaving a balance unpaid, and never to be paid of $115,-031 68. This refers to the quarterages alone. The deficiencies in house rent and table expenses must be equal at least to that on quarterage, so that the ministry, for the current year, is about $230,000 deficient of a moderate support.

STATE TEMPERANCE CONVENTION

It is gratifying to publish the Temperance proceedings of Alabama. The cause must succeed when those who espouse it are among the most prominent and influential citizens of the State.

This body assembled in the hall of the Metropolitan Division, in the city of Montgomery, on the evening of Wednesday, the 4th inst., and was organized by the election of the following officers:

B. I. HARRISON, of Dallas, President.

N. B. Powell, of Macon,
W. B. Harrison, of Lowndes,
J. McCalsb Wiley, of Pike,
Price Williams, of Mobile,
A. B. Clitherall, of Pickens,
O. Dudley, of Barbour,
} Vice Presidents.

T. J. Russell, of Tallapoosa,
P. T. Graves, of Lowndes, } Secretaries.

Wm. Poe, of Montgomery, Treasurer.

The convention was opened with prayer by the Rev. Mr. Norton, of Montgomery.

On motion of Mr. T. Leake, of Autauga, a committee of five was appointed by the President to prepare business for the action of the convention. The committee consisted of Messrs. Leake, Williams, R. H. Powell, R. L. Haralson and Poe.

Messrs. Williams and Clitherall offered resolutions, which were referred to the above committee.

On motion of Mr. Williams, a committee of five was appointed to report a plan for a permanent State Association of the friends the Temperance Reform.

Said committee consists of Messrs. Williams, N. B. Powell, Pfister, E. S Norton, W. B. Haralson—and on motion, the President was added.

The convention then adjourned to meet in the Military Hall, on Thursday evening, at 7 o'clock.

Thursday Evening, Jan. 5.—The convention met pursuant to adjournment, and was opened with prayer from the Rev. Mr. Ferguson.

Mr. Leake, from the committee to prepare business for the action of the convention, reported the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, from the numerous resolutions of divers religious assemblages and organizations, as well as from memorials, numerously signed, presented to the General Assembly, it is evident that much dissatisfaction exists against the present mode of providing for licensing the retailing of vinous and spiritous liquors; and as many modifications of the existing laws have been proposed, to some of which constitutional objections have been raised. And, whereas, also the licensing of the retailing of intoxicating liquors is not deemed a proper subject of taxation for the purpose of raising revenue for the State. In order therefore to avoid all constitutional objections to sever the State from the traffic, and to give to communities which desire to have liquors retailed among them, the privilege of selecting the person who is to retail—therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by this convention to present this preamble and resolution to the present General Assembly, and that this convention request said body to pass a law embracing the principles above set forth, requiring a majority of voters and heads of families in each city, ward, town, village or election precinct to recommend to the Probate Courts, the persons applying for license to retail.

The report was fully discussed by Mr. Price Williams, the Hons. D. G. Ligon, W. P. Chilton and John D. Phelan, of the Supreme Court, Messrs. R. H. Powell, Tichenor and Clitherall, each in support of the proposition. The report was unanimously concurred in.

Messrs. Price Williams, David G. Ligon, R. H. Powell, Tillman Leake and Alex. B. Clitherall, were appointed the committee raised under the above resolution.

And then the convention adjourned until to-morrow at 7 P. M.

Friday Evening, Jan. 6.—The convention met pursuant to adjournment, and was opened with prayer by the Rev. Mr. Tichenor.

Mr. Price Williams, from the committee to report a plan for a permanent State organization, reported a series of resolutions setting forth the constitution of the "State Reform League," and recommending said League as the permanent organization. Also, recommending the officers of the League to call a meeting of the same to be held in Montgomery on the 31st day of May next, and that the friends of Temperance throughout the State to assemble in mass meeting on that occasion. Also, providing for a regular publication committee. Also, raising a committee of three to forward said resolutions to the President of the League and request their adoption by the said body, and that said committee have power to call a State Convention on said 31st of May at Montgomery, if the League fail to do so, and that said last committee act as the publication committee.

The convention was addressed by Messrs. Price Williams, Clitherall, Ferguson, R. L. Hanalson, James E. Belser, J. M. C. Wiley and P. T. Graves.

The report of the committee was unanimously concurred in.

Messrs. R. H. Powell, Price Williams and B. J. Harrison were appointed by the convention to constitute said committee.

The President then addressed the convention, and after prayer by the Rev. Mr. Norton, the convention adjourned sine die.

B. J. HARRISON, President.

T. J. Russell, P. T. Graves, Secretaries.

A lady given to tattle, says she never tells any thing except to two classes of people—those who ask her and those who don't.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

From the committee reports, published at length in the N. and L. Advocate, we condense the notice of this Conference on the various Church interests:

EDUCATION.

The committee proposed to Conference these pertinent remarks on turning the tide of patronage to our own schools. They must be brought before the public. If a minister of the gospel be in the line of duty teaching pupils, others cannot be out of it in sending them to him. It takes them all at work, in their various places, to control this matter answerably to their responsibility. Says the Conference, speaking by their committee:

The children of Methodist parents especially, being our heritage, ought to be educated at Methodist schools, under Methodist example and influence. Again, for emphasis, we say, the ministry, as prime movers, have this work to do; none too great, none too small, no circuit or station too poor: the primary steps may be taken in the piny-woods as well as in the city full. But say you, how is this work to be done? We answer, practically thus: Preach on the subject and importance of education, on the obligation to build up and support our schools and colleges, both by donations and patronage; and do this to parents and children, whether in the church or out of it, do it from the pulpit, at the table, and around the fireside. Circulate our catalogues, and the information they contain. When you find a young gentleman or young lady that can be educated, encourage parents to send such child to our schools. This our institutions merit; this the cause of education demands; and much can be done in this way, without cost to our preachers, to build up our schools, to establish others and to advance the cause of education amongst our people. Is not this work prescribed in the spirit of that excellent rule of discipline—instruct the children in every place. Strange as it may appear, there are circuits in the bounds of this conference in which the names of our schools are hardly known. Does not the fault, in part at least, lie with us? Could we not, by a little labor, have turned the attention of many a father or young man from a northern or a Catholic college to our own institutions, which are struggling for an existence, and which, while they gratuitously educate our children, only ask in return this cheap labor. We owe a debt, let us pay it; it is but justice, independent of the relation these schools sustain to our church and of our interest in and duty toward the rising generation.

The following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, That we earnestly recommend to all the institutions under the patronage and fostering care of this conference more regular and thorough religious and Biblical instruction.

Resolved, That we will patronize and recommend to our people Centenary College of Louisiana, Sharon Female College, Raymond Academy, Wesleyan Female Institute, and the other schools mentioned in the above report.

Resolved, That we recommend the Bishop of this conference to appoint a visiting committee to Centenary College, Sharon College and Raymond Academy, and that we recommend the appointment of Rev. E. R. Strickland as general agent for educational purposes.

Resolved, That we hereby instruct the educational committee, appointed this year, to report to our next annual conference a plan of relation for this conference with church schools.

Our brother Strickland has a work that will fill his hands. The Conference has certainly been fortunate in its agent, and we doubt not the people and preachers will everywhere open the way for his important work and co-operate with him to a proportate extent.

ON THE BIBLE.

The adopted report concludes:

Resolved, That the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested to appoint a suitable agent for Southern Mississippi, and that when such agent shall have been appointed and entered upon his work, we will each, as far as practicable, lend him our aid and co-operation.

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of each preacher in charge, at some time during the early part of the ensuing conference year to preach at least one sermon, and raise at least one collection in aid of the Bible cause.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

The Sunday School Visitor is highly spoken of and its circulation recommended. These figures are given:

We are under the painful and humiliating necessity of reporting to this body that within the limits of the Mississippi Conference, where there must be, as we suppose, not less than a hundred thousand children who ought to be under regular Sabbath School instruction, while we have to report the following menger numbers:

Number of Sabbath Schools	59
" " Superintendents	92
" " Teachers	540
" " Scholars	2256
" " Volumes in Library	9057
Money collected	$913
Number of Sunday School Visitors	676

We report, with regret, our delinquency in this regard. We hope the like may never occur again.

BOOK CONCERN.

The peculiar facilities of Methodism for scattering abroad our publications is strikingly and happily stated. Why are we not doing more in this colporteurage?

We should also duly appreciate the great advantage which we, as a Church, possess over all others in the sale and distribution of books. Our itinerant system gives us a universal agency, and an almost ubiquitous occupancy of our whole territory, the advantages of which, in the distribution of books and other printed matter, is incalculably great. Private publishing firms would willingly, if they could, give thousands, yea, hundreds of thousands of dollars for the agency and patronage of our church in the sale of their books. They do now expend their thousands annually for agencies far less in value and influence than that which we already have, which costs us not one dollar. Shall we then use this agency for good, or shall we suffer it to lie idle? This is the question, and this question we must not only answer but are also reponsible for the manner in which we answer it.

The cheapening of our publications so as to remove the last obstacle (and the greatest) to their circulation seems to be everywhere called for. This is the position of Mississippi Conference:

It is also the belief of your committee that the principle of money-making should be entirely excluded from our publishing operations. We should open the doors to the press as wide and freely as we would open those which give access to the pulpit; and as we place the latter, so we should place the former, upon the principle of self-sustenance merely, bringing down the price of all printed matter to cost, with only such additional charges as will secure safety and solvency in the business.

Permanent location.

Resolved, That our delegates to the next General Conference be, and they are hereby instructed, in any question coming before that body respecting a permanent location of the Book Concern, to pursue such a course as they may deem likely to quiet sectional and geographical controversy and settle the mind of the church on some suitable place: and that they endeavor, as far as they can, to support the principles of the foregoing report.

PERIODICALS.

The Conference gives forth an opinion as to the conduct of Church papers that we like well:

Let our papers avoid strife between themselves, when there is no antagonism of interest and aim; let them exclude, as far as possible, from their column, long and bitter controversies, which gender animosities between brethren and sects; let the principle of money-making be excluded from our publishing operations, and the price of our periodicals be brought down to the standard of self-sustenance merely, and our ministry and laity will secure for them a circulation that will guarantee permanency and solvency.

The religious press receives encouraging and discriminating approbation:

We congratulate the friends of periodical literature on the high position our press has assumed, and on the happy influence it is wielding in the overthrow of error, the upbuilding of truth, and in its successful efforts to promote holiness amongst our people. Our press is alive to its responsibilities, and is adequate to the task of meeting them. The religious wants of our people—in so far as our papers are circuleted—are fully supplied. The errors, vices and bigotry of the age are rebuked, and the benevolent institutions and enterprises of our Church and age are vindicated, maintained and promoted. We may justly be proud of our Advocates, the Review, Companion, and Visitor. They merit and should receive our support. We would earnestly call the attention of ministry and laity to their claims. Let them be scattered broadcast over the land. Let them find their way into every family, and the Visitor into the hands of every child.

And now a resolution winds up this report that will do to wind up on. The New Orleans Christian Advocate comes in by a special clause, and we like it all the better. Rather not be "lumped." Brethren of Mississippi Conference, and laymen, too, send us down two thousand new subscribers this year. We must have the 10,000!!

Here follows the resolution:

Resolved, That we have the fullest confidence in our Review and Advocates, including the New Orleans Christian Advocate; and that we will do all we can to secure their circulation amongst our people, and the introduction of the Visitor into our Sabbath Schools.

Message of Governor Hebert.

Governor Hebert's first annual message to the Louisiana Legislature was delivered at Baton Rouge on Monday. It is a document of such length that we forbear publishing it entire. Below will be found a summary of its contents:

The message sets out with a fitting reference to the epidemic of the last year, and to those at home and abroad who regardless of danger or pecuniary loss, during the awful reign of the pestilence, contributed their consolation and aid to the sick and the needy. He then proceeds to call the attention of the Legislature to the sanitary condition of New Orleans, remarking that the subject is no longer one of local interest, but one in which the whole State is concerned, for in a few years when the chain of railroads which are to connect the remote parts of the State with the metropolis are completed, upon the health of New Orleans must depend the health of the whole State. The drainage of the swamps and morasses behind the city he considers extremely necessary, and recommends appropriations for that purpose.

The State debt proper, including the bonds issued for subscriptions of stock to the New Orleans and Jackson, the New Orleans and Opelousas, and the Shreveport and Vicksburg Railroad is $3,281,809 41.

Under the operation of the law passed at the last session of the Legislature, to provide for the deficiency of the State resources by a loan of $750,000, the receipts of the Treasury for the current year have amounted to $2.148,467 65. The expenditures for the same period, for the ordinary expenses of the Government and to meet the appropriations made by the last Legislature amount to $1,340,443 30, showing a surplus of receipts over expenditures of $808,024 35.

Commissioners have been appointed in compliance with an act of the Legislature for the drainage of the swamp lands, and he calls upon the Legislature to clear away the obstacles to action which they now meet on account of the Auditor's refusing to allow them to draw upon the fund appropriated for that purpose.

He announces that in obedience to the act of the Legislature he has issued seventy-six bonds of one thousand dollars each, in favor of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad; on the 30th of July ensuing, another series of forty-five bonds of one thousand dollars each; and in October, sixteen others of the same denomination were executed and delivered to that company. The New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern line received, on the 18th of August, one hundred and sixty-five bonds of the State, of one thousand dollars each.

Of the railroad enterprises commenced within the State he says:

"Obstacles not contemplated, and against which no provision could be made, produced embarrassments in the management of these enterprises, which I am glad to inform you are not of a serious character. Soon after the State bonds were issued, the money markets of Europe and of our own country assumed a material change, the rate of interest increasing to a considerable amount. The bonds were, in consequence, rendered unsaleable for the time; but neither this event nor the prevalence of the pestilence in the city dampened the ardor of the directors. They have not, I believe, suspended operations at any time, and are now putting forth all their resources to meet the expectations of the public, and protect the interests of stockholders."

The Free Banking Law passed at the Legislature has gone into successful operation, and it is believed will realize the expectations of its projectors.

Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars of State bonds have been sold at par to Corning & Co. for the relief of the Treasury.

The whole of the State's interest in the undivided surplus of the Union Bank has been sold to that institution for $62,000.

The inefficiency of the present system of internal improvements is noted, and the necessity of reform forced home strongly. He says:

"Many works of a local nature are ordered without any preliminary surveys, or examinations, and required to be finished in a given time, without any regard to their magnitude or importance. The natural consequence is, that the State hands after passing from Bayou to Bayou, and oscillating from point to point, leave no visible traces, or permanent improvement, behind them. The system has fallen in such disrepute, from its total failure to achieve the most insignificant results, that the fund itself, by which it is supported, is abandoned to the most unreasonable demands. Any drain upon it will receive the assent of the Legislature, either because experience has proved it to be valueless, or because many who do not live in the districts in which most of this fund is expended, suppose they have no interest in fostering or protecting it. It would be well, however, for all to reflect that when the sources from which this fund is derived shall have been exhausted, general taxation will have to be resorted to. From this there will be no escape. The fertile lands bordering upon the great net work of our Bayous, and streams, are daily receiving occupants, who will soon have the power of imposing upon the inhabitants of other parts of the State the penalty of their own improvidence. The Legislature will, it is hoped, apply a corrective. The internal improvement force of the State is too small to be divided: all human contrivances, looking to great ends, aim at the accumulation of power—the system now in force is based upon a contrary principle, it atomizes power. Besides no appropriation should receive the sanction of the Legislature before correct preliminary surveys have been made and a thorough conviction of the importance of the proposed improvement produced. The work should then be commenced and permanently completed, when a reasonable toll might be imposed for its maintenance."

"The Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind has been in successful operation during the past year. The new buildings delayed somewhat by the prevalence of the epidemic, are now being vigorously prosecuted. The number of pupils has considerably increased and want of adequate accommodations is beginning to be seriously felt."

Additional appropriations are recommended for the completion of the building and for the current expenses of the school.

An addition of twenty thousand dollars to the usual annual appropriations to the Charity Hospital in this city; for the purpose of making repairs which are now absolutely necessary, is recommended. We learn that this Hospital is not only free from debt but has a surplus on hand.

The lease of the Penitentiary he says expires in October next, and it will then become the duty of the Legislature to decide upon the expediency of re-leasing it or of placing it under the exclusive and immediate management of the State. He suggests that the proper course might perhaps consist in selling the lease to the highest bidder and reserving to the State the appointment of the officers and wardens of the institution.

In conclusion, adverting to the recent events in the Island of Cuba, and to the indications of the intended policy of Spain with regard to the blocks upon that Island, he speaks at length as follows:

"I have thus endeavored, fellow-citizens, to sketch rapidly the administrative history of the State for the past year and to offer such suggestions as would, in my judgment, promote the interests of our common constituents. But my duty to you and to the State at large would be but partially and imperfectly accomplished, if, confining myself entirely to questions of internal policy, I did not call your attention to a subject which, although not within your immediate jurisdiction, is of too vital importance to this and to the other Southern States of our confederacy to be passed unnoticed. It is impossible to resist the conviction produced by a close scrutiny of the events now transpiring in the Island of Cuba—events which were foreshadowed by the appointment of the present Captain General of that colony—that Spain, urged on by the interested counsels of England and France and by that blind fanaticism of hatred which has often marked her political and social history, has determined to follow the example of her powerful allies and to add another State to the black empire which would then extend from the mouths of the Orinoko to the outlets of the Mississippi.

"Under the pretext of a compliance with her treaty obligations, she has already inaugurated the new policy, and she is preparing to consummate it by the introduction of what she terms free laborers to supply the place of still larger numbers of emancipated Africans. The interested and ambiguous contradictions of European diplomatists cannot diminish the significance of these facts, and of the quasi-official declarations of the organs of the Cuban Government. Neither are the inferences drawn from them fairly and satisfactorily met by the argument that such a course would be suicidal to Spanish interests. The question of emancipation will not be decided in Cuba, but in Madrid, in London and in Paris, where opinions, widely different from ours, are entertained upon this matter; and by philanthropists who will bear no part of the consequences of their gratuitous benevolence; the Cubans will have no voice—no representation—in these councils. The truth of this is fully attested by the history of the West India Islands. The French and Danish possessions were precipitated into the abyss of emancipation even when the warning voice of the English Colonies could be heard from the depths below; and Brazil, although an independent Empire, and vast as her interests are in the maintenance of her present system of labor, is gradually yielding to the threats of England and to the influences of her transatlantic affinities. But Spain has another—an European—interest which she must consult, and which, coming home to the prejudices and pride of her governing classes, may outweigh any mere pecuniary consideration she might attach to the preservation of the actual order of things in Cuba—an interest whose cohesive action has produced remarkable, although apparently unpremeditated, concert between the monarchical powers of the old world in every difficulty which has arisen of late years between any one of them and our government. Jealousy of our increasing power and prosperity, and fear of the influences of our example, are the bonds of this union—to thwart and impede our progress, is the common advantage, and must be the common aim. Besides, of all the States of Europe, Spain is least able to resist the machinations of that Government which has parsned not only the emancipation, but the actual Africanization of some of her finest colonies, to an extent and by means which would stagger the easiest credulity—had they not been avowed and published to the world by their very authors. With a meagre treasury to provide for a proverbially profligate administration and a constantly widening chasm between her receipts and expenditures, her indebtedness to English subjects amounts to upwards of 50,000,000 pounds sterling, upon which the unpaid interest has been accumulating for many years.

"Threatened as she is by internal dissensions, circumstances may easily be imagined in which the action of the causes above enumerated would prove irresistible. Will the Federal Government, charged with the international interests of States, anticipate the threatened peril, or patiently and quietly await the occurrence of it? The evil would then be irremediable. Confiding as we may justly be in the firmness, patriotism and truly national spirit of the Chief Magistrate of the Union, the deliberate expression of the sentiments of the people of Louisiana upon this all-important subject would at once sustain the watchfulness of the administration and strengthen their hands in executing any measure for our preservation which they might deem necessary to adopt.

SABLE ISLAND.—Since the fearful catastrophe in the destruction of the Stafordshire, off Sable Island, the locality has become invested with much interest. The Island is about thirty miles long, lies just off Cape Sable, the extreme southern portion of Nova Scotia, and 124 nautical miles from Halifax. It is a narrow, horse-shaped island, with a sand bank at each end, NE and SW, and high sand hills which can be seen a considerable distance at sea. The island is about 85 miles from the main land, and during the winter it is seldom that there can be any communication with the main land, so that shipwrecked mariners and passengers are thus sometimes kept on the Island four months; last year more than one hundred passengers were thus detained.

In this connection it is worthy to note that Miss Dix, the noble philanthropist, after having visited Sable Island and made herself acquainted with its wants, has succeeded in procuring five life-boats, a life-car, with all the necessary apparatus, hawsers, cables, ropes, ammunition, harnesses, and outfits complete for the use of the Life-saving Station already established on that Island, which has heretofore been entirely destitute of all these improved means of saving lives. It is not unfrequently the case that hundreds are thus confined on the Island for a whole winter. For the information and amusement of these unfortunates, Miss Dix has procured from Boston about 600 volumes for a library. [Boston Bee.

Washington Irving, who has returned to his seat on the Hudson, in excellent health, after spending the summer and autumn with his friend, the Hon. John P. Kennedy, in Virginia, is preparing, for immediate publication, the concluding volumes, 16th and 17th, of the revised and uniform edition of his works.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—By Rev. J. Pipes, on the 27th Dec., 1853, Mr. SUGAR J. MATHEWS to Miss ELIZABETH MCELROY, both of Desoto, La.

MARRIED—On the evening of the 2d inst., in Caddo parish, La., by the Rev. Wm. E. Doty, Rev. HAZAEL A. SUGG, of the Louisiana Conference, late of the Arkansas Conference, to Miss MOLLIE KATE COOKE, formerly of Shelby county, Tenn.

OBITUARY:

DIED—Near Livingston, Ala., on the 21st of Nov. FRANK, youngest son of A. A. and Malvina Coleman, aged 6 months and 12 days. Even these Christian parents falter at the words, "Thy will be done."

Yet when the first wild throb is past,
Of anguish and despair,
To lift the eye of faith to heaven,
And think "my child is there!"

This best can dry the gushing tears
This yield the heart relief,
Until the Christian's pious hope
O'ercomes a parent's grief. E.

DIED—In Natchitoches parish, La., on the 13th Nov., 1853, Mrs. JANE B. CHILD, wife of Charles H. Child, aged 56 years.

She was a native of North Carolina, but for many years a citizen of Louisiana. She was about thirty years a member of the M. E. Church; her last end was peaceful and happy. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

JOEL SANDERS.

Departed this life on the 26th Nov., 1853, at Woodlawn, Arkansas, of Typhoid Pneumonia, Col. SAMUEL M. JOHNSON. He was born in Lancaster District, South Carolina, on 1st October, 1802.

Bro. Johnson attached himself to the Methodist Episcopal Church in the fall of 1832, and died in full assurance of the promises of the Gospel. His death has cast a long and deep shadow of sorrow over the home of his wife and six children, and the circle of relatives and friends. But they mourn not as those without hope, and rejoice in the confidence that their great loss is his gain. From his own lips under his illness they had assurance of his hope as an anchor to the soul, and they trust in the mercy of God, through the redemption that is in our Lord Jesus Christ, that they will once more be united with him in that glorious world to which he is gone.

☞ The Memphis Christian Advocate will please copy. W.

DIED—At her father's home, in Caddo parish, La., on the 31st of July, 1853, sister LOUISA ANN BUTLER, aged 23 years, wife of J. N. Butler and daughter of John and Esther Sullivan.

In January, 1838, her parents removed from Jackson county, Florida, to this parish. Preaching was then rare, and professors of religion few. She united with the M. E. Church in 1843, but did not experience her forgiven until 1845.

The united testimony of the Church and her worldly friends sustains her claims to Christian integrity. Just before her death she enjoyed the gracious presence of her Saviour, and a blest assurance of heaven. Just a year married, leaving a young babe of few weeks, and affectionate relatives, she yet felt "to depart and be with Christ is better." She sleeps in the grave waiting the voice of the Divine Master to bring her forth again; hence we sorrow not without hope.

CHAS. J. HALLBERG.

DIED—Of dropsy, on the 7th of November, 1853, in Shreveport, La., sister NANCY VANBIBER, aged 54 years.

She was the daughter of the Rev. Samuel Oak, of the M. E. Church, and was born in the district of Laurence, South Carolina, 1799. In 1817, was married to Bro. Henry Vanbiber. They afterwards moved to Georgia, at which place, in 1826, she embraced the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ, and united herself to the M. E. Church, of which she lived and died a devoted member. From Georgia they removed to Alabama, and from thence, ten or twelve years since, they emigrated to the town in which she died.

Sister Vanbiber by her kind, upright and social deportment had not only gained the confidence, respect and affection of her friends in the town where she lived, but had made many friends among the itinerants, whose hands on rending this will recur to the pleasant associations of other days, while enjoying the hospitality of her house. And particularly will many of our ministerial brethren, with their families, be reminded of past acts of kindness; for while her house has been emphatically the itinerant Methodist preacher's home, she has been a decided and devoted friend to him and his family.

During her illness, which lasted several weeks, her sufferings were intense, and were borne with much Christian fortitude and resignation. Sometimes during my visits she expressed anxiety for the time of her departure, but at all times seemed resigned to the will of God. She talked of dying a week before the time he calmly and with as much apparent composure as she would speak of taking a journey or of lying down to sleep. She requested me, in conjunction with Bro. Burrus, to attend to her funeral. I was deprived of the privilego of being with her in her last hours, but it is said by one, "Never saw a death-bed more triumphant; never was the sustaining power of the Christian's hope better illustrated. She could triumphantly exclaim with the apostle,

"O death, where is thy sting!
O grave, where is thy victory!"

J. A. IVEY.

Among the victims of the late epidemic which so fatally visited Lake Providence, La., many good and worthy citizens were stricken down, but none whose death caused so great a shock and was so universally mourned as that of Dr. NAPOLEON E. LARCHE, the subject of this memoir.

Dr. Larche was descended from an ancient and respectable French Creole family of Natchez; was born in the Parish of Concordia, 26th of May, 1804. In 1832, then arrived at manhood, he removed from the place of his nativity and settled in Carroll parish, on a new and sparsely inhabited portion of Ouachita. Here he lived to see this great and flourishing (as it was then) become extensive and valuable cotton plantations—the forest to fill up with a rich and intelligent population, and himself to be surrounded with a lovely and interesting family. Here in the midst of these happy affairs and eminently identified with them all, he departed this life, at his residence in this town, on the 6th day of Nov., 1853, not quite 50 years of age. It was in this parish that Dr. Larche applied himself to the study and practice of medicine, a profession to which he was enthusiastically devoted and for which he seemed by nature to have been peculiarly chosen, which he adorned, and in the successful prosecution of which he attained eminent distinction.

To a temper gentle and quiet, a mind of surpassing energy, a judgment rarely at fault, a soul filled with charity and replete with sympathies for other's woes was graciously added in the character of our beloved brother, one other yet brighter gem, the sublimity of religion. With these shining attributes of character it was no marvel that everybody loved Dr. Larche and everybody sorrowed for his death.

In 1834, God, for Jesus sake, granted unto him that absorbing want which his great soul desired—the pardon of his sins. He then connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, at this place, through the Rev. Richard Kearney, and it is not saying too much when we add that since that time he has been a great pillar in Zion's edifice. Many toilworn ministers of Christ will mourn when they chance to see this notice of their departed brother. The Lord graciously permitted our friend the full powers of his mind until the last day of his life; during the time allotted him he was much engaged in prayer—frequently expressing himself happy and always calm. The bereavement of his beloved wife and orphaned children occupied his attention to some extent, especially as his two eldest daughters were absent at school, but then he would say affectionately, "God will take care of my wife and children," and thus resigned, and thus prepared, surrounded by family, friends, relatives and servants, God took him.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

M. DUBOSE.

DIED—On the 15th inst., in Lowndes co., Ala., Mrs. MARY H. WILSON, daughter of Edward and Mary Dudley, and wife of Rev. L. M. Wilson, of the Alabama Conference. Born in Putnam county, Ga., 29th May, 1837; united in marriage 21st Nov., 1852.

Sister Wilson had advantages of which many are deprived, that of early training in the principles of Christianity. She was taught in early life to remember her Creator, to observe strictly private and public devotion, which impressed her young mind so solemnly with the importance of religion, that at the age of eleven years, she united with the M. E. Church, South, and grew up a devoted lover of the Church, a lover of God, a consistent and devoted Christian, and a constant attendant upon the means of grace. In her intercourse with others she exhibited much kindness of heart; in her manner she was modest and unassuming, and in her life and character were shed forth those virtues and Christian graces which adorn the female character. Such was her love for the Church and cause of Christ, that at no time during the past year did she murmur or complain at the absence of her affectionate husband, when away from her on his circuit attending to the work (on Cedar Creek circuit) to which he had been appointed, but would always insist on his attending to the work, while she was willing and ready to assist him in any way that she could. It is only doing justice to her to say that she was truly an itinerant, well adapted in mind and feelings for the wife of an itinerant preacher; willing to go to any point where God in his providence might cast their lots. Nothing but the grace of God is calculated to enable feeble woman to forego all the pleasures of stationary life and submit to all the hardships, toils, and privations incident to an itinerant. This Sister W. enjoyed in an eminent degree. Her career in this relation, however, was short but useful, for scarcely had twelve months passed by, when lo! God said to her, "It is enough, come up higher." A few days before the convening of the Alabama Conference, at Tuscaloosa, she was taken sick, which prevented Bro. W. from attending. During an illness of nineteen days she evinced more prominently the genuineness of the principles of the religion she professed, than at any other period of her life. She was calm, quiet, patient and resigned, and as the disease advanced and hopes of her recovery grew more uncertain, the subject of her approaching end was frequently introduced, which did not alarm or dismay her in the least; and when asked by her doating father "if she felt Jesus precious to her," she replied, "O, yes, precious; He is precious." On one occasion she requested her weeping husband to pray for her, which was promptly done; she then said, "pray again;" her father then joined in prayer for her; after this, said she to her little brothers James and Henry, "ho good boys, I want to meet you in heaven, brother John and brother Edward, too, and all the family;" then prayed that God would bless the whole household. Sometime after this, Bro. Wilson asked her if she still felt her trust and confidence strong in God. She remarked, "At times I have had some doubts of my acceptance with God, but now I have the assurance that He is with me in this dying hour." These were about the last intelligible words she uttered. Thus lived and died our beloved Sister Wilson, leaving behind an afflicted and bereaved husband, a little infant, father, mother, brothers, sister and many friends to lament her loss.

A. C. RAMSEY.

Allenton, Ala., Dec. 19, 1853.

THE EXTINCT AMERICAN RACE.—Amidst the plains of North America, some powerful nation, which has disappeared, constructed circular, square, and octagonal fortifications; walls, 6000 toises in length; tumuli, from 700 to 800 feet in diameter, and 140 feet in height, sometimes round, sometimes with several stories, and containing thousands of skeletons. These skeletons are the remains of men less tender and more stunt than the present inhabitants of those countries. On a vast space of ground at the Lower Oregon, as well as on the banks of the Cusiquiare, and between the sources of the Essequibo and the Rio Branco, there are rocks of granite covered with symbolic figures. These sculptures denote that the extinct generations belonged to nations different from those which now inhabit the same region. [Humboldt's Travels.

"WHAT'S IN A NAME!"—The Great Britain, six-masted steamer, was stranded on the coast of Ireland. The Columbia, Cunard steamer, was wrecked on Sea Island, a barren rock down East, where "the sons of freedom" who happened to be on board her, (among others, Hon. Abbott Lawrence and family,) kept tent on the 4th of July, from scarcity of food. The Britannia steamer, bearing a name which should "rule the wave," was overruled by the waves of the German Ocean, whose she foundered one day; and The Great Republic has, like the Republics of Greece and Rome, perished. The Ocean Monarch and Anglo Saxon, haughty names, occupy their places in that mournful diary of Lloyd's, whose motto is—"Every Day a Ship is Lost." [Salem Gazette.

The Spanish Court and its Morals.

The London Times, in a recent article on the averse reception given to the Queen of Spain at the opera, takes occasion to point out the cause of it in this wise. We have italicised a few passages that the meaning may be more clear, though it will perhaps be clear enough without that device:

We are now witnessing the spectacle of the decay and extinction of Spanish loyalty. That which the imbecility of the Fourth Charles and the selfish brutality of Ferdinand VII. could not effect, has been accomplished by a young woman, and a Queen. The task of extinguishing so remarkable a feeling as that of the loyalty of the Spanish name, was no easy one. Misgovernment would not have done it. Queen Isabella might have laughed at law, order, justice and humanity, and her subjects would not have hissed her in her opera box, as they did the other day. It was on the 18th of the present month that a Spanish Queen endured this last indignity at the hands of her people. There had not of late been more than the usual amount of corruption in the various departments of Government. What has happened in the last few weeks had happened twenty times before; but at the bull-fight and the opera, at the Almeda and at the gates of her palace, the Queen had enjoyed immunity from censure—for censure was insult. So great had been her offense—so deeply had she wounded the punto d'honbr of the Spanish race—that they had no alternative but to remain silent, or blow away the loyal traditions of the past eight centuries with a breath.

The Queen entered the royal box with her consort—with the consort of Louis Phillippe's finding. She stood prepared for the usual loyal demonstrations. The splendor of the scene was mechanically suspended that the Royal March, according to custom, might give time and harmony to the glad acclamation of her subjects. But from all sides of the hall—of a hall crowded with the most illustrious personages of Spain—a cry of aversion resounded. There should be no march played. There should be no glad cry of welcome. Where the Queen of Spain looked for cheers, her ear was greeted with hisses and expressions of disgust: "Basta; Basta, de eso." "We have had enough of this!" "Que continue la opera!" "Let the opera proceed!" Was it insensibility—was it scorn? The Queen did not change countenance. Not so the husband of the Queen by registry and in name. Not so another in that house, who at the present moment occupies a post at Madrid for which no name is given in the hierarchy of Spanish dignities, although a Spanish mulcteer would be at little loss to supply the requisite denomination. There stood the successor of Charles V., glancing down upon the people, who were cursing her in their hearts, and hissing at her with their lips, with no one to rely upon save the person who for the moment had succeeded to her favor. All this passed in Madrid on the evening of Tuesday, the 18th of the present month.

No single act of imprudence could have produced such a result. The loyalty of the Spaniard was so deeply seated that it could not be obliterated by a passing folly or a passing crime. It was necessary to drag the Spanish crown very long through very miry spots, indeed, before the nation would have risen against the repose of a private family. This is not the first time that the nation had witnessed the spectacle of notorious profligacy in the highest station. But, bad as have been the previous instances of self-disregard of all obligations, no Spanish Queen has yet loved to exhibit a living proof of her successive acts of shame before the eyes of a nation. Now, there is no poetry possible for the Heloise of many Abelards. What wonder, then, that the loyalty of the Spaniard, being such a passion as we have described it to be, should have been converted into its opposite by so shameful an exhibition! As the feeling was a personal one, so it is much to be feared the retribution may one day be. The conduct of the sovereign is felt as a personal disgrace by every Spaniard in the solitude of his own dwelling. Such is not quite the end of the "Spanish marriages"—of that politic scheme for the sake of which a great minister sacrificed his character for probity, and an able monarch one of the first crowns in Christendom.

THE DEAD IN ST. GILES'S CHURCH.—Two minutes scarcely elapsed after I rang the Sexton's bell at St. Giles's Church, Cripplegate, before that personage ushered me urbanely into the aisle. The roof of the building is modern, but the dark carvings on pulpit and choir indicate an age of two centuries. I stood at the altar where Cromwell and Ben Johnson were married; marked the pavement beneath which Fox, the author of "The Book of Martyrs," is buried; and read the inscription on the Lucy vault—a family satirized in the character of Shallow, and which incarnates for everlasting ridicule the sapient Justice who would have proved Shakspeare a deer-stealer. I examined the quaint old tomb of the historian Speede; and from a window, looked upon a fragment of a Roman wall—the greatest antiquity of London, hard by the venerable Cripplegate. Over against a pew, a familiar hust marks the spot beneath which are the mortal remains of Milton; and his epitaph is grand in its simplicity, "The author of Paradise Lost." He and his father before him were intendents of this church. How sublime to the imagination is this otherwise not remarkable temple, where that beautiful head was bowed in prayer? I recalled his image as it lay in youthful beauty, one summer afternoon, on the green sward, under the classic trees of the college lawn, when a fair lady hung entranced above the sleeper, and left a scroll in his nerveless hand.

I saw him in his prime, conversing with Galileo, and looking forth, with all a poet's rapture, upon Val d'Arno from the wooded summit of Fiesole. I beheld him, when time had silvered his flowing hair, with sightless orbs uplifted, as his fingers ran over the organ keys, and the calm of devotion softened the lines of care and grief in that majestic countenance. The picture he bequeathed of Eden, fragrant and dewy as creation's morning, the forlorn glory of Satan, and the solemn cadence of the verse that embalmed, in perpetual music, the story of "man's first disobedience," came vividly back upon my heart beside his sepulchre. Stern Cromwell's rugged visage grew mild as his marriage response woke again from the silence of years, and blithely sounded the footsteps of rare old Ben, as he walked again with his beloved, in my vision, up that solitary nave. What a changed aspect bears the world since Roger Williams talked with Milton of the prospects of religious liberty in America, and the latter pleaded for the freedom of the press; and yet, with all the triumphs of science, the revelations of the hard have lost not a ray of their spiritual beauty; his "high argument" remains in all its original significance; his mighty song wakes the soul to-day as when first its eternal symphony burst forth; his intact career, unwavering faith, and sustained elevation, reproach the serdid, and win the brave forever.

NELL GWYNN.—Nell Gwyn was, at her first setting out in the world, a plebean of the lowest rank, and sold oranges at the play-house. Some affirm that she was born in a night-cellar; certain it is that she rambled from tavern to tavern, entertaining the company with her songs. As early as the year 1667, she was admitted in the Theatre Royal, and was mistress to Hart, to Lacy, and to Buckhurst. She became eminent in her profession as an actress, and performed the most spirited parts with admirable address. The pert prattle of the orange wench by degrees refined into a wit, which pleased Charles the Second. She ingratiated herself into her sovereign's affections, in which she retained a place to the time of her death. Dryden was very partial to her, and greatly assisted her in her rise at the theatre; in return, when possessed of the power, she distinguished the poet by particular marks of gratitude. Many benevolent actions are recorded of her; and, perhaps, she was the only one of the king's mistresses who was never guilty of any infidelity towards him. It is ludicrous, perhaps, but it is nevertheless true, that Madam Gwynn (for so she was latterly called) piqued herself upon her attachment to the Church of England. She was low in stature and careless in her dress; but her pictures represent her as handsome. She died in 1687.

DEATH OF THE MARCHIONESS WELLESLEY.—The Marchioness, Wellesley died on the 17th ult., at Hamptou Court after a short illness. She was a daughter of the late Richard Caton, Esq., of Maryland, and grand-daughter of the celebrated Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. One of Lady Wellesley's sisters is Mrs. Medavish; another is Duchess of Leeds; and another, the Downger Lady Stafford. Lady Wellesley's first husband was Robert Pattison, Esq. In 1825 she married the late Lord Wellesley, eldest brother of the famous Duke of Wellington. Her ladyship was for many years Lady of the Bed-chamber to Queen Adelaide

NOTICES.

Quarterly Conferences for Montgomery District

Salem Sition,	January 7—8
Tuskege,	" 14—15
Auburn,	" 21—22
Crawford Circuit,	" 28—29
S. Uchee and N Uchee Col. Miss.	" 28—29
Montgomery Circuit,	February 4—5
Montgomery Colored Mission,	" ....
Montgomery Station,	" 11—12
Montgomery Colored Charge,	" ....
Calumner olored Mission,	" ....
Tuskegee Circuit,	" 18—19
Andrew Colored Mission,	" ....
Hayneville,	" 25—26
Big Swamp Mission,	" ....
Orion Circuit,	March 4—5
Union Circuit,	" 11—12
Lafayette,	" 18—19

S. ARMSTRONG, P. E.

First round of Quarterly Meetings in Columbus District, Alabama Conference:

Eutaw, Jnuary 14 and 15,		1854.
Forkland and Pine Grove, Jan. 21 and 22,		"
Columbus Station, February 4 and 5,		"
Ahens Circuit,	" 11 and 12,	"
Mt. Zion Ireuit,	" 18 and 19,	"
Buttehatchie "	" 25 and 26,	"
Columbus Ireuit,	March, 4 and 5,	"
Pickens "	" 11 and 12,	"
Greene "	" 18 and 19,	"

Notice to Teachers.

THE PLAQUEMINE FEMALE SEMINARY is now closed in consequence of the removal of the late Principal, and it is desired to procure a suitable person to open and conduct Female School of a high order.

The buildings are large and commodious, capable of accommodating at least fifty boarding scholars.

The locality is one of the best in the State and will commend a good school if well managed.

Any gentleman wishing to embark in the business can get further information on this subject by addressing the undersigned, rewarding statement of qualifications and reference. EDWARD J. GAY.

Plaquemine Iberville Parish, La., Jan. 2, 1853.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will ergather be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square, first insertion	$1 00
Each subsequent insertion	50
One Square, one year	15 00
One Square, 6 months	10'00
Two Squares, one year	25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

General Intelligence.

THE ASTOR LIBRARY.—The Astor Library, which was opened in New York on the 9th, contains about 80,000 volumes. The following statement given by the New York Times show the number of works in each of the departments in which it is divided:

Theology	3,752
Jurisprudence	3,107
Medicine	1,751
Natural Sciences	4,249
Chemistry and Hyrics	5,000
Metaphysics and Ethics	1,500
Mathematics	5,000
Fine Arts	2,500
Works on Language	2,100
Greek and Latin literature	3,100
Spanish and Portuguese	673
Italian	1,761
French	3,100
German	1,400
Scandinavian, Scavonic	1,000
English Literature	3,400
Historical Works	20,350
Bibliography	4,000
Miscellaneous	5,000
Parliamentary Journals	2,000
Total	75,343

☞ The Library, say the Times, is clearly intended not so much for cursory readers, or for mere entertainment, as for the use of professional men and students, in the various branches of human knowledge. This course will commend itself to the judicious, though it will doubtless incur the censure of those who supposed that Mr. Astor intended to provide simply a very large popular circulating library for indiscriminate readers. The books are arranged in alcoves, each of which is placed a table for the accommodation of visitors. The books will be handed down by assistent librarians, and are not to be taken from the building. Arrangements are made, we believe, for the accommodation of ladies. The completion of this magnificent Library will render New York more than ever a desirable residence for students, authors, and literary persons generally.

COMMERCIAL STATISTICS OF BALTIMORE.—The yearly statistics of trade and commerce made up by the Baltimore American show 1853 to have been one of the most prosperous that Baltimore has ever experienced. In all branches of trade, commerce and manufactures a steady and substantial increase is exhibited. Prominent among the articles of produce which this year sought a market at Baltimore, we may mention the following: Flour 1,234,748 barrels; wheat 1411:965 bushels; corn 3,906 494 bushels, 208,792 bags; only 400 of which now remain in first hands; leather, 305478 sides; sugar, 11,248 hogsheads New Orleans, 14 240 hogsheads West Indies, 11,400 bags Brazil; molasses, 2,900 hogsheads New Orleans, 4505 West Indies; tobacco, 48,667 hogsheads, of which 29,248 hogsheads were of Maryland growth. Of whisky, 146,500 barrels were sold during the year; many of the Southern States drawing their supplies from this market.

THE RUSSIAN FLEET.—The Russian fleet consists of five divisions, of which three are stationed in the Baltic, and two in the Black Sea. In the last war with Turkey, Russia had 32 vessels of the line, 25 frigates, 20 corvettes and brigs, 7 brigantines, 6 cutters, 84 schooners, 20 galleys, 25 floating batteries, 12 gunboats, making a total of 464 sail, and carrying 6000 guns. Since that time a great activity has prevailed in the Russian docks, and the result is that at the present lay the Russian fleet consists of 60 vessels of the line, of from 76 to 120 guns, 37 frigates of from 40 to 60 guns, 70 corvettes, brigs and brigantines, 40 steamers, 200 gunboats and galleys, the whole manned by 42,000 sailors and 20,60 marines, with 9000 guns.

OUR GLORIOUS NAVY.—On the receipt of the intelligence of the loss of the steamer San Francisco, which was carrying troops to California, says the New York Herald, the Navy Department was at its wit's end for want of steamers to go to her assistance. The Secretary had not a vessel he could dispatch to the relief of the wreck. Such is the desolate condition of the American Navy. Such is the fruit of the indifference of Congress and the apathy of the Executive. All alike are too busy in dividing the spoils to think of the public interest.

AN EDITOR EN ROUTE FOR THE SEAT OF WAR.—Edmond C Kemble, editor of the Alta California, the leading paper of the State from which it takes its name, sailed for Europe in the Pacific, which sailed from New York on the 7th inst. Mr. Kemble is on his way to the Seat of War on the Danube, for the purpose of collecting information for the paper which he is conducting.

GENIUS.—"I know no such thing; as genius," said Hogarth to Mr. Gilbert Cooper, "genius is nothing but labor and diligence." Sir Isaac Newton said of himself, that "if he had ever been able to do anything, he had effected it by patient thinking only."

SPEED OF OCEAN STEAMERS.—From a recapitulation of the trips of the Collins and Cunard lines of Liverpool steamers, during the past year, it appears that the average time of the Collins line in their Westward passages was 11 days, 18 hours and 33 minutes; average time of the Cunard line, 12 days, 18 hours and 11 minutes—in favor of the Collins line on each passage, 21 hours, 38 minutes. Average time of Eastern passages—Collins line, 11 days, 20 hours; Cunard line, 10 days, 22 hours, 46 minutes—in favor of the Cunard line on each passage, 1 hour, 43 minutes.

The quickest passage this year was that of the Arabia's August trip from Liverpool, which she accomplished in 9 days, 17 hours and 45 minutes. The longest one was that of the Asia's December trip of last year, occupying 13 days and 21 hours, she having to put into Halifax for coal. The Pacific also had a seventeen days' trip last December, from Liverpool, caused by very heavy weather. During the whole period there were but four passages under ten days, three of which were made by the Arabia—the Atlantic made the other one. [Baltimore American.

MARINE DISASTERS.—The land is filled with mourning. The disasters at sea with which the papers have been crowded, and under which the telegraphic wires have staggered, for the past fortnight, are fraught with more miseries than at first appear. In the centres of commerce, after the first shudder of sympathy is over, the value of the lost property is the remembered thing. But out along the sea coast, and farther back into the country than would be supposed are families sorrowing perpetually over the news that nestles in among our mail and marine items. These shrill winds that whistle around our corners and rattling our shutters heighten the enjoyments of home, sound out mournful melodies in the ears of many. Lost ships, men clinging to floating spars, dashed over by cruel waves, and uttering shrieks of despair—all are presented to the ears of the desolate, who, from one brief text—a "marine disaster"—are left to deduce endless chapters of domestic and heart-breaking misery. The past month and this are likely to be remembered as epochs of fresh sorrows around thousands of firesides for many years to come. [New York Times.

The schooner N. H. Gambrill, of Baltimore, brought to New York for being concerned in the slave trade, it is said, will be condemned. Her captain, and all but two of the crew, escaped. When captured, she was just preparing to receive her cargo. The bottom of the vessel was completely filled with water casks, which were all planked over. In addition to the regular stores for cooking provisions for the crew, a large galley had been put up the day previous. It is supposed that she would have received from 800 to 850 slaves in the narrow space between the deck and the planking over the water casks, a space in which a man could not stand erect.

Letter from Florence.

FLORENCE, Dec. 10, 1853.

The political intelligence which reaches this country from America is often the most astonishing compound of One would imagine, in reading it, that we were living in the age of Nebuchadnezzar, and that no such things as steamboats, railroads and telegraphs had ever been dreamed of. It was but a short time ago that the Italian public was startled by the intelligence gravely stated in the columns of the Monitore Toscano, the official paper of the Grand Duchy, that a serious difficulty had taken place in the American cabinet and that one of its most influential members, Mr. Bronson, had been summarily expelled. Not many days thereafter, under the head of important intelligence from America, it was stated that General Smith or General Jones or General Brown, I don't recollect which, had arrived safely in Washington. Doubtless the Grand Duke immediately called a Cabinet meeting to discuss the momentous question in all its bearings, and to deliberate whether it would not be best to send off a special courier to the Emperor of Austria for a reinforcement of troops. Italian newspapers are a mullity, and where is the wonder? Where there is no political independance there can be no independance of thought. The little Kingdom of Sardinia is, perhaps, as well governed and happy as any of the divisions of the Peninsula. The King, Victor Emanuel, has been on the throne but a short time, but he has already introduced many salutary reforms into the administration of the government, and seems inclined to profit by the example of his ill-starred miscreminding father, Charles Albert. One thing is certain, that he is very much loved by his subjects, and I do not wonder at it. But in Tuscany the case is altogether different. Three years ago there was not a more popular sovereign in Europe than the present Grand Duke. He equaled Augustus in his love of letters and his patronage of art. His subjects adored him and his munificence met more than his affability, and the unostentatious ease with which he was approached won him golden opinions from all men. The gloomy state-prison looking palace of the Pitti, the richest in the world in the number and excellence of its works of art, had never before thrown open its doors so easily, nor to more brilliant assemblages of beauty, wealth and talent. The old man frequently paraded, or rather walked, the streets of Florence, alone or attended by a single aid, and dressed in the most simple, unostentatious manner. Louis Napoleon, if is said, has also adopted this custom, and it is not long since he drove out to the Champs Elysie, unattended except by the Empress, lolloped round for an hour or so, and took occasion just when all eyes were turned upon him, and the sky being rent with cries of "vive l'Empereur," to draw out a cigar from his case and ask a ragged blouse near him if he would do him the favor to give him a light! You may imagine what a sensation this created. I overheard a groups of Frenchmen shortly after discussing the matter, and the spokesman of the party gave vent to the general feeling of admiration, by a sentence, short but brim-full of meaning: "Oh c'est un bon bourgeois, ca!" But Louis Napoleon knows that every time he thus walks out unattended he puts his life in imminent peril, and he must feel after such an excursion, if he has anything human in his composition, much like the performer on the tight rope after the performance by one of his most daring and terrible feats. But the Grand Duke of Tuscany at the time of which I speak, had no such cause of fear—in fact he had no cause of fear at all and his flight from his capital is one of the most unaccountable and, at the same time, one of the most ridiculous facts in history. It has entirely destroyed in the minds of his subjects the prestige of that majesty which is said to hedge round a throne, and the man who was formerly beloved not less than he was respected, is now neither the one nor the other. At present he never appears in the streets except in a carriage attended by a strong escort—a precaution entirely unnecessary, for I am persuaded that not one of his subjects would ever think of harming him. The Austrians with their white uniforms distinguishable everywhere in the streets, the cafés, and the theatres, are the only objects of implacable, well-digested, but necessarily disguised hatred. Their uniform is certainly the handsomest in the world; but this, I should think, would hardly reconcile the beauty-loving Tuscans to their hard lot.

About the only American papers seen in Europe are the Herald, Tribune and Times. But the Herald seems to bear away the palm—why, it is difficult to imagine, except that it perhaps contains as much news as any other, and has adopted a more efficient system for its circulation in the Old World. It is without any doubt the dirtiest, (I speak now of externals,) worst printed, ill-looking American sheet that ever finds its way across the Atlantic. It is with a well-printed, handsome newspaper, something as it is with a handsome woman: we pardon many things in both solely on account of their good looks; but this idea seems never to have drawled through the thin gray hairs of its nine times horse-whipped editor. Perhaps to take up my original figure, his paper might aptly figure the ragged, unwashed, unkempt harridan who stands at the corners of the streets and hesmears with a never-flagging discharge of obscene corruption every passer-by who refuses to solace her with a "few little shillings." Notwithstanding this, the Herald is more quoted by the European press than any other American journal, for the Times is as yet hardly known on this side of the water, and the Tribune, with its thousand and one crotchets, is by far too free-spoken and independent. Indeed it is amusing—perhaps disgusting would be the better word—to notice the implicit reliance placed by the European press upon the statements of what Mr. Greeley is pleased to denominate the "Satanic." Nor is a less high estimate placed upon its supposed high standing and authority at home. It is not many weeks since the whole Paris press was predicting the immediate downfall of President Pierce's Cabinet, because the New York Herald had at last, like Turkey, decided upon a declaration of war, and fulien upon Franklin accordingly. A newspaper has just been started in Paris under the singular heading of the Mousquetaire. It appears daily, and is of course edited by Alexandre Dumas. If is a purely literary paper, and will be filled for the most part with the long-winded but always interesting romances of its editor. He has adopted a new plan with regard to book and theatrical notices, which ought to be followed by every paper of the kind in Christendom. He informs publishers and theatrical managers that he shall never sell his criticisms—that he shall purchase his own books and his own tickets. The paper is furnished at two sous a number—just half the usual price of the Paris dailies. Though some of them are much more expensive. Galignani's Messenger, for instance, costs ten sous—or about two cents less than the great London dailies.

George Sand has just written a new drama entitled "Maupral," and it is now being performed at the Odeon, in Paris, with the greatest success. Dumas, who is a personal friend of the authoress, is unbounded in his admiration of this, her last production, and gives an amusing account in one of the last numbers of his new paper, of the manner in which the news of her triumph was conveyed to Madame Sand while she was sojourning at her country residence many leagues from the capital. If I had nothing better to write about, I will give you a translation of the piece in question. While I am upon literary topics, I may as well mention the new railroad library which has just been started in Paris by the enterprising publishing house of Hachatte & Co. These books are to be had in every station in the capital, and for ought I know, in France. They are elegantly printed and are furnished of the lowest possible price at which they can be afforded. They comprise works in every department of light literature, and as far as I have seen, the selections are for the most part judiciously made. I noticed and purchased in the collection a translation into French of two stories from the works of our greatest American literary genius, (so I rank him,) Edgar Allen Poe. The stories were the "Gold Bug" and "The Adventures of one Hans Pfaall." The translation was preceded by a short biography of the author, in which we are gravely informed after a long description of Poe's eccentricities, that he sat for the portrait of Francis Vivian in Bulwer's novel of "The Caxtons." This veracious piece of information is based entirely upon the fact that the translator, in looking over Griswold's biography of the poet, found some such expression as this, that "Poe resembled in many respects Francis Vivian," etc. An Italian translation of Poe's prose works is now being completed by a friend of mine in Florence, and is being published in the feuilleton of the Belle Arte. Poe has been accused (it must be said by men whom he had criticised perhaps a little too severely) of having borrowed the idea of his "Raven" from Mrs. Brownlug. Nothing can be more utterly absurd. At all events, I know that both the Brownings, who have been sojourning in Florence this winter and who have just left for Rome, speak in terms of eloquent admiration not only of the "Raven" but of all of Poe's writings, and consider him, very justly I think, not only as the most powerful but the most original literary genius that America has yet produced. H.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD.—The New York Tribune is out in a recent lengthy and able article in favor of the Texas Pacific Railroad route, and shows quite clearly that the late bill which has passed the Texas legislature quite knocks away all the props which have afforded a shadowy support to the friends of the Walker scheme. The Tribune adds that a company of really responsible men, most of them residents of New England, are about to organise and go ahead under the late act of Texas.

EMIGRATION TO FLORIDA.—The Pensacola Gazette, in noticing the successful establishment of the semi-monthly mail steamship line between Savannah and Key West, via Pensacola, Apalachicola, St. Marks, Cedar Keys and Tampa Bay, remarks that "the advantages resulting from this successful effort are being felt along the Gulf coast of Florida in encouraging a wealthy emigration from the sugar and cotton States of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, and securing a portion of the population that would otherwise be induced to go to Texas."

The steamship Empire City has been got off the rocks at Barnegat, and taken to New York for repairs, and will be ready to resume her usual trips in a few days.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival of the Louisiana we have received Galveston papers to the 13th. The Galveston News has the following items:

A BATTLE AT SAN PATRICIO—Killed and Wounded on both Sides.—A private letter from San Patricio to a gentleman of this city, says the Galveston News of the 13th instant, states that a great fight took place at the Round Lake, near the town of San Patricio, on the 30th ult. It seems that Patrick Hart had killed Henderson Miller in a fight in the month of September last, and a writ was issued for him. He at first evaded the civil authorities, but at length resisted them. The sheriff, having heard that Hart was at McFall's, (a brother-in-law,) where he was fortified, summoned fifteen men to go and take him; but when they arrived at the house of McFall, and ordered Hart to surrender, he replied, "Come and take me;" and then he and his friends fired their guns upon the sheriff's party, who retreated to a corral or pen, took a position there, and sent to town for supplies for a regular siege. Without effect, and after dark the house of McFall took fire, and the sheriff's party charged upon it when Hart and his friends fled, firing their guns upon the sheriff's party, who returned the fire, which killed McFall, severely wounded Buchanan, and slightly wounded Hart in the head, but who made his escape. Antonio Sanchez, one of the sheriff's party, was killed, and Sam Miller was slightly wounded. Miller and Hart are brothers-in-law.

Since writing the above we see a communication in the Victoria Advocate on the above affair differing in some important particulars from the above account. The writer of this says there were one killed and three wounded on Hart's side, and on the sheriff's side four Mexicans killed and four or five wounded. We have reason to believe that this is not exaggerated, as the above letter is from a gentleman of veracity and in a position to know all the facts.

Major E. J. McLean, one of the filibusters, on trial in the Federal Court, was acquitted on Wednesday, and left immediately on his return to the Rio Grande. The trial of the others is progressing.

We learn that the steamer Dr. Smith is now on the Trinity her on her way down with probably the last freight recovered from the steamer Jack Hays. The levee, we understand, is in a fair way to be raised. The entire loss cannot yet be ascertained.

The steamer J. H. Bell arrived from the Brazos on Monday evening last, with 121 hogsheads sugar, 158 barrels molasses, 237 bales cotton, 7 bales moss, 8 bales wool, hides, etc.

Hon. John Hemphill arrived in this city on Tuesday, and in conjunction with Judge Wheeler, opened the Supreme Court on Wednesday. Hon. Green, the clerk and other officers of the Court are present. Judge Ikpscomb is expected in a few days. This term of the Court is expected to continue till near April.

We have been told by a gentleman who ought to know, that three kegs of gunpowder were found in a box of dry goods on board of the Jack Hays, while her cargo was being taken out.

Hon. R. Cone, Representative from Brazoria county, writes to the Democrat of which he is editor, exp

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

NICHOLAS'S DREAM.

I wandered in a rosy dream,
Where Danube's waters pour;
And there I saw the Crescent gleam
Upon the farther shore.

When lo! it seemed to pale and wane,
And through the sky go down;
Athwart the flood I leaped amain,
And clutched a Turkish Crown.

Oh! trust not visions, when, to fill,
Ambition they incline;
That Crescent bright the horns will fill,
Whilst I shall draw in mine! (Punch.

The Horrors of the Knout.

Of all punishments, the knout is the most severe and sanguinary, but it is seldom inflicted, except for crime of the deepest dye. Although it may appear to the casual observer to be little worse than our punishment of whipping petty offenders, yet its effects are greatly increased, and death frequently ensues in consequence of the pains taken by the judicial authorities in Russia to perfect the executioners in their horrid occupation. The knout is a heavy thong, as thick as a man's wrist, and weighing from two to three pounds; the lash of leather about the breadth of a broad tape, narrowing at the end, and the handle is about two feet long. The place usually chosen at St. Petersburg for the public infliction of the knout is an open muddy plain, near the river Neva, and the execution is always attended with a military guard of Cossacks and other troops. As soon as the culprit arrives at the platform, a paper is read aloud which contains a description of his crime, and the sentence of the court before which he has been tried. In ordinary cases, the criminals, each in their turn, are fastened to an inclined post, having a ring at the top, to which the head is so tightly fixed, by means of a rope, as to prevent the patient from crying out. The hands are then closely tied on either side, at the bottom the feet are secured by means of two rings; the back is then bared to the waist, and the executioner commences his duty. The Abbe Chappe d'Auteroche relates an execution of a female in the reign of Elizabeth. He states that Madame Lapukin, who was one of the most beautiful women belonging to the court of that empress, had been indiscreet enough to mention some of the endless amours of her imperial mistress, and was therefore condemned to undergo the knout. The beautiful culprit mounted the scaffold in an elegant undress. She was surrounded by the executioners, on whom she gazed with astonishment; and seemed to doubt that she was the object of such preparation. One of the executioners pulled off a cloak which covered her bosom; at which she modestly took alarm; she started back, turned pale, and burst into tears. Her clothes were soon stripped off, and she was naked to the waist, before the eager eyes of an immense concourse of people, profoundly silent. Two of the executioners then took her by the hands, and turning her half round, raised her on their backs, inclining forwards, and lifting her a little from the ground, upon which another executioner adjusted her on the backs of his coadjutors, and placed her in the most proper posture for receiving the punishment. He then retreated a few steps, measuring the proper distance with a steady eye, and leaning backwards, he gave a stroke with the knout so as to carry a piece of skin from the knee to the bottom of the back: striking his feet against the ground, he made a second blow, parallel to the former, and in a few minutes all the skin of the back was cut away in small slips, most of which remained hanging down; her tongue was cut out immediately after, and she was banished to Siberia. In the time of the early Czars, the performers of this horrid task were regarded with so much respect that they were admitted into the best society. Nay, it is even said that in those days, morchants, thinking it honorable thus to pass into ranks above them, paid large sums of money to be allowed to perform the murderous duty. When their ambition was satisfied, they re-sold the vocation at an enormous profit. So expert are the executioners of the present day that they can handle the knout with much more readiness than our coachmen their whips. As a proof of their dexterity, a wager was laid by two Russian noblemen relative to the professional talents of two of them, and an eye-witness relates the following to be the result. The person who won the bet gained it by the following feat: He placed his companion at arm's length from him, and undertook to strike two hundred times with his knout, though he should not touch or injure his person, at each blow he promised to bring away a narrow strip of his friend's shirt, which he actually performed without inflicting even the merest scratch on his body. By way of expressing his gratitude for the patience his companion had elicited when he had finished the specified number of blows, he tirsed up his weapon, and in a playful manner appeared to give a slight flip towards the man on whom his skill had been exhibited; he hardly seemed to touch his body, but on an inspection, a wound at least a foot and a half in length was perceived, bearing an exact resemblance to one which might have been given by a razor or other sharp instrument. The one who received the blow seemed to take it in good part as a joke, coolly remarking that he should not be long in embracing an opportunity of returning an equivalent to the favor received. The two men positively asserted that they could, without any remarkable effort on their part, kill the strongest man with only three blows of this simple though dreadful instrument—THE KNOUT.

The Natives of Australia.

A writer in Fraser's Magazine, who has been "prospecting" among the natives of New South Wales, gives some curious accounts of their habits and customs. After referring to their dexterity in throwing spears, he describes their agility in climbing trees, which they perform in the following novel manner: "The native strikes on the trunk of the tree with his tomahawk, just two strokes, one obliquely downwards, the other horizontal, so as to cut out a little wedge of the bark, and leave a step just large enough to admit the great toe. On this he stands, and reaching up five feet, cuts another step. It is wonderful to see how quickly he will in this way literally walk up the trunk of a high tree, without ever touching the branches. Tree-climbing is an essential accomplishment to an Australian native, as much of their subsistence is derived from opossums, who swarm in every gum tree forest."

After this, the writer describes a camp of natives he subsequently saw in the Government domain at Sydney. We give it in his own words: "They are inferior in stature and muscular development to the Maories, and their black skins and woolly heads mark them as of the negro family; but I was agreeably surprised at the neatness of their figures, and their graceful, active motions. They are particularly good horsemen, and exceedingly fond of being about horses. But in all moral and intellectual qualities, they are farther below the Polynesean races, than these latter are below Europeans. The Australian never learns any of the arts of industry and civilization; he never has been known to cultivate the ground, or to build a house, or to reside permanently on any spot; he never accumulates money, nor has he indeed any notion properly speaking of earning it. Those who are employed by the settlers receive no wages—only their board and clothing, with an occasional present of money to buy tobacco and spirits. Even the native police, who are stationed on the border to keep down the depredations of the wild blacks, get only nominal pay. They are delighted to serve for short periods for the pleasure of riding about in uniform; but they stick to nothing long. Various attempts have been made to attach and fix them, but all have failed. Like the gipsies, they are untameable. They travel about the country, sleeping always in the open air, and living on yams and other roots, kangaroos—when they can get them—but above all, on opossums, and never encamping long in one place. Each tribe has its hunting-ground, and a trespasser is invariably punished with death if caught. They hang about towns and stations for the sake of the offal, etc., and occasionally do little jobs to earn as a reward spirits or sugar or tobacco. Like the Maories, their numbers are rapidly diminishing, which is not, as in the Maories' case, surprising or unaccountable. There is one other difference which is worth remarking, namely, that the Australian blacks are not, and never can be in the slightest degree formidable, as a nation, to the settlers collectively; because they have not the least capacity, or even idea, of combination, and because they never possess the means of procuring fire-arms or ammunition. The New Zealanders, on the contrary, with few exceptions, well armed with muskets, while, though there is not anything like a national feeling embracing all the tribe, still there is ample capacity for forming such alliance; indeed, I have no doubt at all but that it would be formed, if they had a cause which enlisted general sympathy.

"It is remarkable that neither in New Zealand, nor in Australia, does the simple contrivances of bows and arrows appear to have been adopted before the introduction of fire-arms. The use of spears and tomahawks as missiles prevailed universally; but these are very defective in comparison. There are, I am told, a good number of half-breeds who are good-looking and intelligent, but I hear also that they almost invariably prefer the savage to the civilized mode of life. I have heard one instance of a full-blooded native settling down into respectability, as a shepherd, and what is more wonderful, getting an Englishwoman to marry him. I mention this the more particularly, as I never heard of any similar case, and I never knew an instance in New Zealand of a white woman either marrying, or having illicit intercourse with a native. All the half-castes are whites on the father's side.

The Wife of Blannerhassatt.

Let us turn, for a time, from the man, to contemplate and gaze upon the person and character of his companion. History affords but few instances where so much feminine beauty, physical endurance, and many social virtues, were embodied, with so brilliant a mind, in the person of a female.

Her stature was above the ordinary height of her sex; her form well proportioned and beautifully symmetrical; her manners of the most captivating gracefulness, with sufficient dignity to repel familiarity and command respect. Her dark-blue eyes, beaming with love and affection, and "sparkling with life and intelligence," looked forth from beneath the long brown lashes, which hung as curtains to conceal their charms. Features of Grecian mold, embellished by a complexion whose carnation hue, health, and the hand of nature, had painted. Her hair, which was of a dark brown color, was usually concealed beneath a head-dress of rich colored silk, worn after the manner of the Turkish turban.

Her mind was not less polished than her manners; and the fluency with which she wrote and spoke the French and Italian languages, indicated a high degree of cultivation, which few, even in this golden age of science and letters, have ever attained to. Her taste for dramatic composition led her to adopt, as a favorite pastime, the rehearsal of Shakespeare's plays. These were usually executed with an effect which would have done honor to more professed connoisseurs, and exhibited a talent which needed only cultivation to have won laurels of lasting freshness in the theatrical world. Her familiarity with various French and English authors rendered her an agreeable companion for the man of letters, and proved a valuable assistant to her husband in recalling to mind some opinion or expression of an author which had escaped his memory.

She cultivated, to some extent, a taste for poetry, and produced several pieces which are still in existence. But it is only in the every-day affairs of life that we can gain a perfect knowledge of the true character of individuals. It was in this peculiar sphere that Mrs. Blennerhassett exhibited an uncommon degree of excellence, and won the affection of all within her influence. She adapted her customs to the society around her, and joined in their amusements and festivities with all the spirit of one accustomed to frontier life from earliest infancy. Riding on horseback was a delightful and healthy exercise, in which she frequently participated. At such times she was usually habited in a fine cloth dress, of scarlet color, richly bespangled with gold and glittering buttons. From her downy hat waved "the graceful plume of the ostrich," and the rich folds of her drapery fell gayly over the flanks of her noble steed. Over hill and through dale, with the fleetness of the deer, she took her course, and seldom did her attendant get a glimpse of his sprightly charge until she checked her speed to await his coming.

That she was capable of extraordinary physical endurance, was frequently demonstrated by the long and speedy walks she performed, whether on business or visiting some favorite friend. She has been known to accomplish a pedestrian tour, of from ten to twenty miles, with as much ease as other ladies would make their usual calls among city or village acquaintances. Bounding over them with astonishing agility, she carelessly pursued her way, as though treading the more familiar paths of the wild woods.

Although she participated in the various amusements through the country, and was the ruling spirit of every assembly, she never neglected the ordinary duties of her household; every apartment received her personal attention, from the kitchen to the chambers, and was duly cleansed and arranged according to her direction. By her were the daily tasks of the servants assigned, while she performed with cheerfulness the duties devolving on herself. In short, like Shakspeare's Portia,

"She was, indeed, a rich-souled creature, in whom the first germs of womanhood had blossomed forth, without a weed to shock, or a chill to blight their growth."

BALZAC'S MARRIAGE.—M. Balzac, the French novelist, exhibits another example of eccentricity in matrimonial affairs. According to a Parisian correspondent of an English paper, the arrival of this celebrated author from Germany caused an immense sensation in certain circles, owing to the romantic circumstances connected with his marriage. When Balzac was at the zenith of his fame, he was traveling in Switzerland, and had arrived at the inn just at the very moment the Prince and Princess Hanski were leaving it. Balzac was ushered into the room they had just vacated, and was leaning from the window to observe their departure, when his attention was arrested by a soft voice at his elbow, asking for a book which had been left behind upon the window-seat. The lady was certainly fair, but appeared doubly so in the eyes of the poor author, when she intimated that the book she was in quest of was the pocket edition of his own works, adding that she never traveled without it, and that without it she could not exist! She drew the volume from beneath his elbow, and flew down stairs, obedient to the screaming summons of her husband—a pursy old gentleman who was already seated in the carriage, railing in a loud voice against dilatory habits of women in general, and his own spouse in particular: and the emblazoned vehicle drove off, leaving the novelist in a state of self-complacency the most enviable to be conceived.

This was the only occasion upon which Balzac and the princess Hanski had met, till his visit to Germany, when he presented himself as her accepted husband. During these long intervening fifteen years, however, a literary correspondence was steadily kept up between the parties, till at length, instead of a letter containing literary strictures upon his writings, a missive of another kind, having a still more directly personal tendency, reached him from the fair hand of the princess. It contained the announcement of the demise of her husband the prince—that he had bequeathed to her his domains and his great wealth, and consequently that she felt bound to requite him in some measure for his liberality, and had determined upon giving him a successor in the person of Balzac. It is needless to state that the delighted author needed not a second summons; they were forthwith united in wedlock, at her chateau on the Rhine, and a succession of splendid fetes celebrated the auspicious event.

GENOESE MATCH-MAKING.—Marriage is at Genoa a matter of calculation, perhaps more so than any where else; it is generally settled between the relations, who often draw up the contract before the parties have seen one another; and it is only when everything else is arranged, and a few days previous to the marriage ceremony, that the future husband is introduced to his intended partner for life. Should he find fault with her figure or manners, he may break up the match, on condition of defraying the expenses incurred. But this is seldom the case; the principal object, that of interest, being once settled, the bride follows the portion as a matter of course, and is often scarcely minded. There are in Genoa marriage-brokers, who have pocket-books filled with the names of marriageable girls of different classes, with notes descriptive of their figures and their fortunes. These people go about endeavoring to arrange connections; if they succeed, they get a commission of two or three per cent. upon the portion. The contents of their memorandnus are often very curious.

THREE THINGS MODERN YOUNG MEN CULTIVATE.—The acquaintance of a young lady with plenty of money—shirt collars as high as a garden wall—and a moustache.

BIOGRAPHY OF MR. SMITH.—It is supposed by the learned antiquarians, that the illustrious subject of this memoir was of Asiatic antediluvian origin. Whether, however, he is a descendant of the White or Black Smiths, is a point which it is impossible now to decide. Like many other equally important facts, a knowledge of it was lost in the dark vista of ages concerning which we have heard so much and know so very little. It may, however, be affirmed, without fear of contradiction, that a Smith followed Alexander in his warlike expeditions; because, even now, in the world of letters, on the title-page of a beautiful book of poems, may be seen the words—Alexander Smith. That, also, a Smith talked with Plato; heard the Sermon on the Mount; licked up the spittle of Mahomet; came in with the conquerors; went out with the Crusaders; saw Shakspeare play the Ghost; heard him swear behind the scenes at the stupid personator of Hamlet; lighted a bonfire after the dismemberment of the Spanish Armada; made a muss during the "Great Rebellion;" was a Puritan martyr; fought with Charles XII.; fled with a great multitude of other generals; emigrated in the Mayflower; planted Pennsylvania; was saved from a sudden death by the bravery of Pocahontas; assisted Danton and Mirabeau in the composition of their speeches; had a hand in constructing every constitution in Christendom—all this and much more may, with perfect safety, be said. Enough of Smiths, who "have gone before." Our Mr. Smith was born all over—some say in the United States; but the English, with their characteristic impudence, insist that he is a British subject, and quote fifty folio pages of the smallest type of the London Directory to prove their assertion. Let the reader judge of this point for himself. He made considerable excitement in the political world by his first great book—the Wealth of Nations. Although this work is as witty a production as anything that Mr. Smith ever wrote, it was far too dry for our digestion. Whenever we feel inclined to laugh at an improper time, we think of it and grow grave again, instantly. His next feat was the capture of Acre; and at the same time when he was annoying Napoleon in Egypt, he wrote a series of satirical and humorous essays in the Edinburgh Review, which have since been collected into a volume. (Read it.) He then murdered a cockney peddler just by way of pastime, and in order to escape the pursuit of the police ascended Mount Blanc, on whose summit he wrote his greatly admired sonnets and other poems, which have recently been published in Scotland. We believe that on his return he engaged in the iron trade, and we have heard it said that he was regarded as an able Smith. The exercise he has made in the cause of suffering humanity have been almost superhuman. True, he did not sign the Declaration of Independence; but, then, he was before the illustrious Irish patriot himself in his endeavors to emancipate the Emerald Isle. Mr. O'Brien acknowledged this by invariably signing his own name after that of—Smith. His wife, we believe, (Mr. O. K.) is lecturing at N. O. on Woman's Rights and on Cleopatra's character. The last effort of Mr. Smith was the demolition of Little Knty's Biogrsphor, and we understand he is now engaged on a powerful drama designed to drive "Hot Corn" from the stage. On some other occasion we may follow the fortunes of this distinguished charsetor.

P. S.—I forgot to mention in the proper place that Mr. Smith was once unfortunately in love. He published his "Rejected Addresses;" and then, broken-hearted, and without further hope of happiness in this vale of tears or temple of cognets, emigrated to Australia, where he endeared himself to every friend of freedom by facilitating the escape of Mr. Mitchel. In sailing to California, he relieved the monotony of the voyage by writing a Mormon Bible. As soon as he landed at San Francisco, he started for Salt Valley, and founded a colony of Saint Smiths. His latest effort was a speech in the Broadway theatre at the Mitchel Banquet.

P. S. S.—In addition to his other enterprises, Mr. Smith carries on an extensive business in New York as the Great Metropolitan Bill-Sticker! [N. Y. Sunday Dispatch.

A PERFECT SPARTAN.—The Spartan women of Texas are not a few. The personal history and adventures of the few we know, were we permitted to relate them as given us by their own lips, would fill an octavo of a thousand pages with wild tales of truth, far more strange than fiction. The following clipped from one of our exchanges is a specimen:

A very interesting and romantic incident was related by Rev. Mr. Fontaine in one of his recent lectures at the Richmond Athenæum. Speaking of the early history of Texas, he gave an account of Gen. Long's effort to revolutionize that country in 1819. Gen. Long served under Gen. Jackson in the Seminole war, and at the battle of New Orleans. He married when 22 years of age, a celebrated beauty and heiress of Nashville, only 16 years old. When he formed the design to invade Texas, Mrs. Long entered fully into his plans, and placed at his disposal her immense wealth. With this he armed and equipped 300 men, entered the country, and was everywhere successful.

Near the Gulf coast he formed a fortification where he established his head-quarters. He was elected President of the Republic—a full Cabinet was appointed and a regular government organized. At that time Iturbide was overrunning Mexico with the design of making himself supreme ruler of that State. Being jealous of the success and power of Gen. Long, he proposed to him, through an agent, that they should unite their forces, which would enable them to strengthen and confirm their authority—the one over Mexico, the other over Texas.

Gen. Long unwisely heeded the traitorous proposition. Before leaving the fort he assigned to his wife seventy-five men, with directions to hold the place until his return. He soon after with the remainder of his small army, reached the head-quarters of Gen. Iturbide, who as soon as he got possession of his rival, caused him to be assassinated. Time passed on, Mrs. Long heard nothing of the sad fate of her husband. The seventy-five men under her charge became dissatisfied—provisions were well nigh exhausted, and they became clamorous to return to the "States." She told them that Gen. Long had directed her to remain until his return, and that she should do so, "dead or alive."

Every man deserted her to retrace their steps to their homes, leaving her with an infant and nurse, a young negro girl of twelve or fourteen years of age, the sole occupants of the fortification. She kept the flag of stars and stripes floating from the walls, fired the morning and evening gun and beat the daily reveille. The Mexicans and Indians thought the place was still garrisoned, and kept at a respectful distance. Time sped. A year elapsed, and still no tidings of her gallant husband reached her lonely abode. During all this space she had subsisted by gathering oysters from the beach and shooting birds which flew about the fort. In 1821 Gen. Austin invaded Texas, and seeing a flag floating from a fortification near the Gulf supposed the noted Lafitto had established himself there.

He sent in a flag of truce, and what was his surprise to find this place, in the midst of inimical Mexicans and savage Indians, manned by a solitary woman!

AN IMPERIAL BEDROOM.—The Paris correspondent of the Mirror of Fashion gives the following account of the bedroom of the Empress Eugenie, at the Tuileries, having seen it previous to her Majesty's recent return from Fontainbleau. We copy it by way of a suggestion for those who cultivate imperial splendor and luxury in the rich metropolis of the new world:

"The upholsterers have furnished it with a magnificent sky-blue silk tenture along the walls, which is fixed by gold frames, in the style of Louis XV. The arm chairs, chairs, sofas, and lounges, are of the same style and like silk. As for the bed, all made with gilt carved wood, it is covered with a couvre pieds of Malino lace, and the curtains, of blue silk lace, are hung down all around it, in the same manner as the old beds of our grandmothers. The carpet is also of a blue color, and so thick that one would take it for a bear skin. It was made at Aubusson, expressly for the place in which it lays. The ceiling of the room was painted by Mr. Bresson, and it represents a group of geninses throwing flowers from rich baskets. The painting is so well done that no one could believe that the figures are not alive. In short, this magnificent bedroom is the non plus ultra of riches and elegance. But what are the dreams under those laces?

THE HAPPIEST HUSBAND UNDER THE SUN.—Adam had one great advantage over all other married couples—an advantage which has been lost to us with Paradise—he had no Mother-in-Law!!!

Sinope or Sinoub, the Turkish port just entered by the Russians, is the birth-place of Diogenes.

OLD NEW YORK FAMILIES.—By a comparison of Valentine's History of the City of New York, in which all the families of the city in olden times (up to 1750) are given, with the Directory of the present year, we find less than 200 names which are no longer known. Many of these ancient citizens were men of note, in their day, but probably left no descendants to perpetuate their name. On the other hand, we find over 1,500 whose names are all found in the Directory. Since the times of the Knickerbockers, or the Dutch rule in this city, eight or ten generations have passed away, and of course the descendants of some of these ancient heroes are very numerous. The latest relic of the Dutch era was Vincent La Montagne, who was born in this city April 22, 1657, and died May 20, 1778, at the age of 116 years!

The Paris Charivari has an amusing hit at the American expedition to Japan. It represents a lean, lank, soap-looked, genteel, tobacco chewing Yankee, in a Panama hat and a turned down-collar, in the presence of the Emperor of Japan. "Mr. Emperor, here's lots of notions for you in return for your kindness in lettin' us in." "Letting you in—the devil! Come out from here—make yourself scarce—off with you and your presents!" "Oh, Mr. Emperor, how did I forget to say that if our cannon there are loaded with grapeshot, which we'll send you in case you send back our presents and refuse our company!" "Oh Americanne! if that is the case, come in, come in—I am delighted to see you."

THE ACTOR AND THE BISHOP.—Dr. Sheldon, Archbishop of Canterbury, in 1675 on an occasion when Betterton, the celebrated actor, was dining with him, said: "Pray, Mr. Betterton, inform me what is the reason you actors on the stage can affect your audience with speaking of things imaginary as if they were real, which our congregations only receive as if they were imaginary." "Why, my lord," replied Betterton, "with submission to your grace, the reason is very plain; all lies in the power of enthusiasm. We actors on the stage speak of things imaginary as if they were real, and you in the pulpit speak of things real as if they were imaginary."

THE GREAT REFORMER OF THE AGE.—To-morrow.

EDUCATION.

BARDSTOWN FEMALE INSTITUTE.

REV. A. A. MORRISON, A. M., Principal.

This institution is under the patronage of the Louisville Annual Conference, and is located in Bardstown, Ky. Bardstown is located on the turnpike from Nashville to Louisville, with a line of daily stages passing through, and is 30 miles south of the latter city. Bardstown is pleasantly located, and is proverbial for health. The Institute buildings are large and commodious, and the pleasure grounds attached pleasant and spacious.

The institution is furnished with a full Board of experienced and accomplished Teachers, and the course of study as select and thorough as can be found in any similar Institution in the land. The school is permanently established, and in point of healthiness of locality and facilities for a thorough Female Education, on reasonable terms—this Institution offers peculiar inducements to Southern Methodists and to the Southern community generally.

TERMS PER SESSION OF TWENTY WEEKS.
(Board payable in advance: Tuition at the close of the Session.)

Primary Department	$ 8 00
Junior Class	12 00
Middle Class	15 00
Senior Class	18 00
Music on Piano or Guitar	20 00
Vocal Music	4 00
Drawing and Painting	10 00
Greek, Latin, French or German	8 00
Boarding, including Washing, Lights and Fuel	50 00
For Fuel in school-room in winter	1 00

The next session will commence on the 30th of January next.

REFERENCES:

Rev. J. H. McFerrin, Nashville, Tenn; W. H. Hickpain, M. D., Rev. G. W. Hale, Bardstown, Ky; Rev. G. H. Parmele, Rev. E. Stevenson, Ky; Rev. E. W. Sehon, Rev. A. H. Redford, Louisville, Ky; and the Ministers of the Louisville Conference generally.

Bardstown, Jan 5 1854—6t

Teachers Wanted.

A Gentleman and his Wife, or a Brother and Sister, (provided they will have homes,) thoroughly educated are wanted to take charge of a Public School, salary $1000, certain, and whatever else can be realized from Music and other extra studies, and boarders from beyond the township. The last Teachers increased their salary several hundred dollars by these means.

Address, Rev. D. S. Goodloe, Irvington, Madison county, Miss. Postage paid. dec10

WANTED.

A lady who performs well on the Piano and sings well, and also a gentleman who performs well on the piano and violin. Satisfactory testimonials must be given of character and qualifications. They are desired as assistants in the Music Department of the Alabama Female College, at Gainesville, Ala. Address, stating terms,

W. E. POINDEXTER,
Gainesville, Ala.

dec4-4t

EMORY and HENRY COLLEGE.

WASHINGTON COUNTY, VA.

THE SPRING SESSION of this Institution will commence on the 12th January, 1854. There is, we believe no College in the South offering stronger inducements to young men desirous of a thorough course of collegiate instruction.

TERMS:

Tuition per session of 5 months	$25 00
Board " " "	31 50
Washing " " "	5 00
Fuel " " "	2 00
Contingent charge " "	1 25
	$54 75

With a location famous for health with ample Libraries and Apparatus, with a full and efficient Board of Instruction, and with a degree of cheapness unparalleled, any young man with limited means, fair abilities and proper energy can here acquire a superior, liberal or business education. For further information address

E. E. WILEY, President,
Emory Post-office, Va.

jan6-8t

GREENSBORO' FEMALE COLLEGE,

GREENSBORO', N. C.

FACULTY:

CHARLES F. DEEMS, D. D., President and Professor of the Natural Sciences and Belles-Letters.
REV. TORNER M. JONES, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and the Ancient Languages.
MONS. ERNEST JOOANNE, (of the College of Henri IV., Paris,) Professor of the French Language and Literature.
THEODORE WOLLE, Esq., Professor of Music.
MISS N. JANE SPEER, Miss NANNIE T. SPEED and Miss LUCY McGEE, Assistants in the Literary Departments.
MISS AUGUSTA M. HAGEN, Madame JOUANNE and Miss CAROLINE A. BLAKE Assistants in the Department of Music.
MISS R. L. SIMPSON, Drawing and Painting.
THOMAS O. BLAKE, Esq., Steward.
MRS. T. O. BLAKE, Governess.

This Institution is situated in a healthy part of Central North Carolina. It is under the charge of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In the selection of the Faculty the Trustees have had reference first of all to superior qualifications, and so far as practicable have obtained ladies and gentlemen of Southern birth and education.

The course of study is as full and as thorough as that in the best Female Seminaries. While particular attention is paid to the solid branches of education, sufficient regard is had for the ornamental; but as we all the culture of the morals of their pupils is considered the great work of the teachers. Special lessons on morality are inculcated. The pupils are not allowed under any circumstances to contract debts. Parents must make money in advance. All the expenditures of the students are under direct supervision of the President, and their purchases are made by their teachers. Perhaps in no similar institution of its numbers have the bills of the pupils been so small in the aggregate as at this College during the past year.

The department of Natural Science is furnished with excellent apparatus, some of the instruments being of the highest finish; with all modern improvements. Lectures are delivered on the study by the President, and on Natural Philosophy by Prof. Deems, weekly, and are accompanied by experiments. In the selection of the Professors of French, Greek and Latin purity and accuracy of pronunciation, and the present incumbent of that chair possesses more than ordinary qualifications for his office. The practical use of the language in conversation is the aim of daily lessons.

In the department of Oil Painting the teacher does not seek to give her pupils simply a "pretty picture" at the close of the session, but the principles of the art are assiduously taught in the expectation that those who have special talent for design may prosecute all culture after leaving the school.

All the principal teachers have had much experience in the business of their profession, and "thoroughness" is the motto throughout the whole institution. The Faculty are working under the female: "We are striving to make not the largest but the best school in the Land."

TERMS:

$70 a session (of 21 weeks) for Tuition and Board, including washing, fuel, lights, furnished rooms and attendance; $20 extra for music on the Piano or Guitar, or for Oil Painting; $5 for Drawing or French or Latin. The Trustees believe that no school of the South offers such advantages on such favorable terms.

For further particulars application may be made to the President of the College.

The next session will open December 29, 1853. jn6-6t

FORT GIBSON COLLEGIATE ACADEMY, FOR YOUNG LADIES.

INSTRUCTORS.

REV. A. J. EDGERTON, A. M., Principal.
REV. W. F. CONRAD, A. B.
REV. C. D. DECONEILL, Professor of Piano, Harp and Guitar.
MRS. S. C. EDGERTON, MRS. H. CONRAD.
MISS ELLEN FOSTER, Teacher of Music.
MISS MARVIN. MISS HADNETT.
MRS. GILMAN, Matron.

The Next Session will commence on Monday, the 7th day of November.

TERMS—PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

For Boarding, per session of twenty weeks	$50
For Fuel, Washing and Lights, do.	10
For Bed and Bedding, if not provided, do.	5

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

Tuition—Juvenile Class, per session twenty weeks	$15
" Second Division, do.	20

COLLEGIATE DEPARTMENT.

Tuition—English Studies, per session twenty weeks	$25
" Latin and Greek, or either, do.	15
" French, Italian or German, do.	15
Stationery, in either class, do.	1

MUSICAL DEPARTMENT.

Instruction Piano or Guitar, per session twenty weeks	$30
Use of Piano, do.	5

ORNAMENTAL DEPARTMENT.

Drawing in Perspective and Painting in Water Colors, do.	$10
Fancy Embroidery, do.	5

No deduction for absence, except in case of protracted sickness.

Boarders are expected to have their wearing apparel marked, and to come furnished with Towels, Hair and Tooth Brushes, and Silver Dessert Spoon and Fork.

The location of the Institution is regarded as one of the best in the State. The buildings were erected at a cost of over $30,000, affording capacious and airy rooms for the females, and all under the immediate eye of Mrs. E. and Female Assistants.

The course of Study will be as extensive and thorough in Natural Science, English Literature, Ancient and Modern Languages and Mathematics, as in the best Colleges of the kind.

Lectures will be delivered regularly before the Young Ladies, on Natural Science.

Prof. DECONEILL, who has the reputation for being one of the best musicians in America, will give lessons on the Harp to any young Ladies who desire it.

☞ Vocal Music will be taught free of charge.

Fort Gibson, Ct. 21, 1853. dec10-4t

FEMALE MASONIC INSTITUTE,

Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama.

Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.

TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY, we would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the true interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence a liberal support.

The Principal has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his care.

The services of Miss MARY W. HOWES, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and winning manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.

The Musical, French and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competent and skilful Teachers, and all that is valuable given in the arts and accomplishments that go to qualify and adorn the gentler sex.

The Primary Department will be confided alone to a choice and gifted lady, for we design to attend carefully to that sadly and most often only neglected class of Pupils.

The School session year is divided into Two Sessions of Forty Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Exhibition Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils receive at any time and charged to the end of the Session. Fractions of Sessions each week is counted one week in full.

The school is not Sectarian or denominational; and the only requirement is, embraces the principles of a pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible.

The Principal and his wife have charge of the Stewards Department and will tenderly care for the health, manners and comfort of those who Board in the Institute. Each boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved object of parental solicitude, and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful requisites of family government will be thrown around them.

CHARGES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Primary Class	$12 50
Preparatory Class	15 00
Junior and Senior Class	20 00
Music on Piano, Guitar and Harp, (each)	25 00
Drawing, Painting and Embroidery, (each)	10 00
French and German, (each)	15 00
Incidentals, (each)	1 00
LATIN included in the Regular Course.
BOARD (including Washing, Fuel and Lights) per month	10 00

Each Boarder must furnish her own Towels, Brushes and Combs, and have each article distinctly marked with her full name.

AN INVARIABLE RULE.—Board and Tuition one-half in advance, and the balance at the end of each Session; and every account must be closed at the end of each Session, by Cash, or by Note.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.

Each Lodge in Marengo County is entitled to select within its jurisdiction, a worthy object of benefaction, and have her taught in the Institution without charge, provided said Lodge secure the payment of her Board and supply her with Books and Stationery.

As the Principal is so extensively known, the Committee have forborne to speak of his character and qualifications, and refer Parents and Guardians to the persons named below.

JNO. H. PRINCE, Chairman.
FRANK M. PRINCE, Secretary.
JABEZ YORK, Treasurer.

REFERENCES.

Hon. J. F. H. Claiborne, New Orleans.
Rev. H. N. McTyeire, New Orleans.
Prof. A. T. Holcombe, Mobile.
Hon. R. A. Baker, Mobile.
Hon. J. O. Monette, Bay St. Louis.
Hon. S. B. Pierce, Bay St. Louis.
Dr. John R. Pursell, Selma.
Abner Jones, Selma.
Rev. A. H. Mitchell, Summerfield.
Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, Summerfield.
Rev. J. A. Heard, Dayton.
Hon. J. M. McClanahan, Shelby County.

Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama, September 1, 1853. oct1

MARION FEMALE SEMINARY.

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALABAMA.

FACULTY.

REV. JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, A. M., Principal, and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Sciences.
H. M. DALY, A. M., Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
MISS E. L. HASKILL, English.
MISS M. J. BONBURANT, English.
MISS PHEBE FOLLER, Drawing, Painting, French and Guitar.
MISS J. V. OLAIR, Primary and Preparatory Department.
MRS. L. J. ARMSTRONG, Governess.
MRS. REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice, one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and for elegance, convenience of arrangement—for number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentleman and his lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of this position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great amiability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and untiring faithfulness, secures to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, charges date from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady, for the entire session, in the collegiate department; one hundred and seventy-four dollars will embrace the languages; two hundred and thirty five dollars will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the piano, and in the languages.

The above estimates does not include books, stationery, sheet music, ornamental materials and lights; all of which articles are furnished by the Principal on moderate terms.

The institution is furnished with a new and complete Chemical Philosophical and Astronomical apparatus. It also has a large collection of globes, terrestial and celestial, and celestial maps, atlases, charts plates and diagrams, for simplifying the various branches of Natural science.

The Library consists of more than one thousand volumes, embracing a select collection in every department of Literature, Art, Science, History, &c., &c.

The Cabinet consists of several hundred specimens.

The institution is furnished with a large and superior instrument of musical instruments.

The Church and Sabbath school facilities are unsurpassed by any school in the country. Of the number that have entered its walls during the past session, more than seventy were or have become professors of religion.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, &c.

Visitors are not received, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The usual regulations of the best boarding schools are enforced respecting visiting, correspondence, pamphlets, periodicals, novels, and dental operations.

They retire and rise at regular hours through the year.

Great attention is paid to exercise in the open air, or within doors, when the weather is inclement.

Every Saturday morning is devoted to plain sewing and the repairing of clothing, under the direction of an officer.

No accounts will be opened in Marion, but with the expressed permission of patrons. When articles are to be purchased, it must be done with approbation and under the eye of the lady of the Principal.

The wants of pupils should be

New-Orleans Christian Advocate.

Publishing Committee of Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, T. B. WALK.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR

J. HAMILTON, D. D. T. W. DORMAN. W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee of Alabama Conference.

VOLUME III. NUMBER 52. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1854. WHOLE NUMBER, 156.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

JEWISH FESTIVALS.

FAST DAYS.

Pursuing the course of the almanac, we next come to the two fasts, observed one on the seventeenth of the fourth month, or Tamus, and the other on the ninth of the fifth month, or Ab. They both date back to the days of Zachariah, who in chapter viii, verse 19, says; "The fast of the fourth month, and the fast of the fifth, and the fast of the seventh, and the fast of the tenth, shall be to the house of Judah joy and gladness and cheerful feasts."

Both these days as well as the intervening three weeks, are celebrated in commemoration of the commencement and siege of Jerusalem, and the final destruction of the first Temple by Nebuchadnezzar, in 588 B. C. The ninth of Ab, moreover, is the anniversary of the destruction of the second temple by Titus, A. D. 70. During these three weeks a general sadness and mourning prevails among the Jewish people. They are not allowed to cut off their beard, wear new clothes or manifest pleasure in any way whatever.

Nine days previous to the great or black fast, (as some call it, since it is much more rigorous in its requirements than the other fasts,) the degree of mourning increases, and neither wine nor flesh meat of any kind can be partaken of during these nine days, (Sabbath always excepted.) Ordinary fast-days require an abstinence from all food and drink from daylight until the appearance of the stars. Hence it is customary for them to rise before daybreak and take a hearty breakfast. But on this (and on the day of Atonement, hereafter to be described,) the season of fasting continues from about sunset of the eighth till dark on the evening of the ninth of Ab, making it about twenty-five or twenty-six hours.

In the evening (of the eighth) they go to the synagogue in old and even torn garments and without shoes: sit on sacks or sometimes on the bare floor. All ornaments are placed out of sight; "the veil of the temple," or synagogue, is taken down, and the aspect of the whole scene expresses deep sorrow, and a strong sense of desolation. The Hazan then recites the Book of the Lamentations of Jeremiah, in a very plaintive and doleful voice. After which various Kinoth (poetical 'dirges'—most generally apostrophizing Jerusalem the fallen, and bewailing with her)—are chanted by different members of the congregation, out of a liturgy compiled expressly for the use of this day.

Tradition forbids the use of water for the ordinary ablutions in the morning. So great should be the grief and concern of every true son of Jacob, that his toilet and other such trifling matters should receive no attention whatever on this day. But I am glad to be able to say that the genius of modern civilization has put in his veto against this and all similar practices, whence they are now generally abandoned. They proceed to the synagogue very early and deliver the daily prayer without, however, putting on the Phylacteries. Kinoth are then again recited, as on the evening previous, and about noon the congregation is dismissed. In the afternoon they usually visit Keber Aboth—"the tombs of the fathers"—which custom shall be described in my next.

The Talmud states that in the days of Messiah all the fasts will be changed into feasts, and the ninth of Ab, commemorating the double destruction of the Holy Temple, will at its restoration become the greatest festival of the year. This is an exegesis of the above quoted passage of Zechariah, which is sincerely believed by most pious Jews.

The season of the year corresponding to above-named fasts varies from the first of July to sometimes the tenth of August. Among the very pious, and particularly among the learned who revere antiquity for its own sake, (as what sage does not? the fifteenth of Ab is observed as a semi-festival, because on this day the virgins of Israel used to display their charms by dancing before the male youth, and thus seek to secure or captivate a husband! Not very romantic this, certainly.

Columbia, S. C. JOSEPHUS.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

A WORD ON HOUSES OF WORSHIP.

MR. EDITOR:—I would respectfully call the attention of the Church to a subject that I regard of considerable importance to the cause of religion, which is the necessity of preparing our preaching houses for winter worship. The neglect of this is a source of much evil and calls for immediate and extensive reformation. There are very few of our churches that are at all prepared for worship in cold weather, and a large amount of the good accomplished by our revivals in the summer and fall is lost because of the long suspension of religious meetings, occasioned by the want of suitable places of worship during the winter.

Our people generally seem to have lost sight of this in the construction of houses of worship, and we scarcely ever see a Methodist church in the country prepared for the comfortable accommodation of a congregation in the winter. If a congregation assemblee they either have to adjourn to some school house hard by, where a fire can be made for the partial warming of the females, or a large fire must be built out of doors, to which the congregation resorts during the progress of the discourse, and perhaps a considerable proportion of them never leave it, preferring the chance of keeping their bodies warm to the prospect of having their souls benefitted while shivering under a discourse from the pulpit.

In consequence of this the congregations are greatly reduced, and often preaching has to be given up entirely. Class and prayer-meeting are suspended to the very great detriment of religion, and the Sabbath School falls a victim, and indeed, the whole of our operations are pretty much arrested. Were it not for a warm day occasionally the preacher might as well make himself comfortable at home and give up all efforts to accomplish any good until the opening of spring, and let the churches lay themselves down for an undisturbed nap of four or five months.

If our churches were so constructed as to keep out the wintry blasts, and supplied with good stoves, which would cost but little, all our church meetings might be kept up; congregations would not decline; and revivals of religion would be as common in winter as in summer and fall. Perhaps there is no season of the year in which it is more important that the meetings of the church should be kept up, because it succeeds the season for camp and protracted meetings, when the church realizes large ingatherings of young converts, who, in the first stage of their Christian career, need especial nursing and training. But how commonly is it the case that during the winter religious meetings are pretty much suspended, and for want of the means of grace and religious associations, these young Christians become cold and careless, or form habits of neglect and lukewarmness which follow them all through life, if they do not entirely backslide and give up religion altogether.

It is to be devoutly hoped that the time will soon arrive when no Methodist church will be considered fit for worship until it is ceiled or plastered, and provided with a good stove if it be a framed house, and if a log house, made close and comfortable and furnished with a stove, which any congregation could pay for; and if a stove can't be raised that there will at least be a chimney in which a good fire can be made for the comfort of the congregation. It is very true that "a stove in the pulpit" is an excellent thing to keep the church warm, but we need one in the congregation too.

Yours, GEO. SHAEFFER.

January 11, 1854.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

PRESENT TIMES AND PAST TIMES.

THE PAY OF ITINERANTS—CAUSE AND EFFECT—RISE IN PROPERTY AND DEPRECIATION OF MONEY, ETC.

With the conviction that I have selected an important topic to discuss, I feel incumbent on me, as a layman, who has long and closely observed the fluctuating value of money, to throw my thoughts together, hoping the representatives to our next General Conference will give them something more than a passing notice. I am admonished of that deference due to age and experience, as well as the ability of those I am addressing, which brings me to the necessity of assuring them that it is no part of my intention to treat of any of the duties peculiar to the ministers of Christ; but simply to discuss the points that legitimately belong, in part, to the finances of the church.

I suppose there are but few, if any, that will at this day insist on $100 being sufficient to sustain the necessary expenses of clothing, horse and cut-fit for an itinerant; and there is no necessity of reasoning to sustain a settled plan. And yet many may conclude that this conclusion would at once settle the question in favor of raising the pay without looking to the farther bearings of the question. Not so with me, for the time was that the itinerant's allowance was but $60 or thereabouts, and at that very time a coat cost more money than the same article would now; and the Methodist Church flourished as well then as now, and perhaps the depth of piety was greater than it is at this time.

So far it would seem that the pay is ample, but far from it. There is a vast change in the times, and this change is far beyond the control of the church. Of old a $10 jeans coat was certainly as passable as a $20 cloth coat is at present, and a $60 as good as a $125 horse, and these differences which go far to show the difference in times and the difference in the value of money is but a moderate portion of the vast change in times. One of the greatest changes and one that bears heaviest on the itinerant, is the change in domestic management and its consequent economy. Time was when nearly all of man's wearing apparel, especially in the country, was manufactured entirely at home, and the preacher was remembered, and even his wants, or rather his necessities, consulted and furnished free of cost; and in many cases there were overflowing wardrobes without one cent cost.

But alas, those days of meek simplicity are gone never to return. It was then that if the faithful minister had presented to him a coat more than he needed, he could swap it for a saddle or something else to meet his wants. How different now. Money must be paid in exchange for everything.

A case in point. My parents, only thirty years since, with seven or eight children growing up, and with 35 slaves only required about $300 to pay for their annual wants, including everything that was bought with money; but everything was not bought with money; articles of domestic manufacture were exchanged for other articles of necessity, to the extent of from $150 to $250. How is it now with me! With the same sized family, and equally as plain now according to the times as they were for their times, my expenses run up from $1,200 to $1,500; and, without laboring any harder than they did, I make the money; and also make a corresponding surplus; (i. e.) with 3 to 4 times the expense, I still make 3 to 4 times the clear profit they did; and these facts are not the result of guess work or in recollection, for accounts of expenses and profits have been kept in both cases. How great the change, and yet how completely beyond the power of the church to recall those days of pristine purity!

Then, without hinting farther regrets for the past, let us not for the present, and meet the present wants of the Church, that cannot be supplied by the regulations framed some 30 to 40 years since; far behind the wants of the present times. Some 30 to 40 years since, common laborers could be employed from $75 to $125 per year: but now, from $125 to $200; and can there be a substantial reason given given why an unmarried itinerant's wages should be less than a common laborer's, while the itinerant has to furnish himself!

But there are some, and probably not a small number, who are looking for a reversion of times, or such a revulsion as will materially lower the price of living and clothing. If I am right in this conjecture, I would say to all such that they have not studied well and profitably the subject of cause and effect; for it is certain that effect will follow cause. This brings me to give my views, as to the cause of the rise in the price of almost every thing, and that the same cause will continue yet to act for at least some time to come. There was a heavy rise in property between 1832 and 1839, caused by over-banking, over-trading, and a too great extension of credit without a specie basis to sustain it.

Now what are the causes that are at work, threatening to operate so powerfully, as to authorize a considerable change in the wages of the itinerancy? About 3 or 4 years since, a few persons ventured to give the opinion that the golden era had commenced; the opening of the vast mines of California being the only foundation for the expected rise of property, or which means the same thing, the general depreciation of money; and the change that has followed has fully justified the opinion: and now, instead of the gold mines then discovered, failing, as some predicted, the fresh discoveries of Australia and elsewhere, have added immensely, not to the probability, but to the certainty, that we are in, not the full grown, but about the fair beginning of the golden era.

The whole trading world has fairly begun to feel its effects, and the grand cause of the rise of property, and fall in the value of money, begets additional causes, which come in for a share of the causes to stimulate yet higher prices; the increasing abundance of money invariably inspires confidence, and confidence invariably extends credit; and confidence and credit are the legitimate seeds of extended banking, and the rapid extension of banking for the last few years, is small, compared to what must be produced by the causes now at work.

Some of the aged will no doubt be ready to ask, can it be possible for a people so intelligent as the people of the United States, and so well taught by the reverses of '39 and '40, so far to forget themselves as to plunge once more, and that so soon, into extravagant banking? Yes, not only possible, but inevitable. Human nature is the same in all ages, prone to forget the past and look to present gain; and if admonished by the experience of the aged, the ready answer is and will be: "Oh, we have got the specie now, we are not like the fools of '37 and '38, that plunged headlong into banking, without specie to bank on; and we now have the true and substantial basis of all credit."

Such arguments as these will go on conquering and to conquer, until not a State will probably be left to tell the tale of well-balanced prudence, when the final revulsion, or stop to a wild career does come. That such a day will come, I hold as inevitable, though the time is yet distant and uncertain, and will be protracted or shortened by circumstances.

In the meantime, partial or short revulsions, accompanied with a temporary fall in prices, may wake up cautious thoughts and wise conclusions, which will tend much to keep off the final day of sad reckoning. That the rapidly-growing abundance of specie will sustain banking beyond its present limits, need not be doubted. Credit and extravagant overtrading is sure to go hand in hand with overbanking.

When then will this important, but dreaded day come? I think the angels do not know, and yet, I will venture to give an index: There are now those who are laying up their surplus, expecting soon to reap a golden harvest, by purchasing property at half its present price. All such are doomed to disappointment; for after hoarding their pile until it loses half its value by the price of property rising double, then this fact will so wake them up as to examine the natural workings of cause and effect; this will exhibit itself by their consulting their friends, and every one will go to confirm them of their error; and thus they are sure to grasp the other extreme, by trotting out their hoarded pile, and paying such prices as they had often declared they never would give. Whenever the spirit of trotting out seizes the miserly, it will turn loose an additional amount of capital, which will cause prices to rush higher and faster than ever, for a short time.

This is my index; look out, the time of bankruptcy and want is nigh. I have lived through one such scene, and expect, if I live 15 or 20 years longer, to live through another: but I have no idea of living to see property as low as I have seen it. But if I live a few years longer, I expect to see it sell about twice as high as now.

That the next General Conference will be disposed to raise the wages of her traveling preachers I have no doubt: yet there may be so great a difference of opinion about the details, that I apprehend more danger of a failure from this cause than any other; and I will venture a thought or two about the details. I believe it would take about 40 per cent. on the present allowance, to make out a bare competence, especially for single preachers, say for single preachers..$140 00

Married.....$240 00

And a like increase of per centage for children. Now, my lady readers, say not that I am unfair towards you, until you hear me a little further. It has been a complaint in our Church that her itinerants marry too young, and that their usefulness is much abridged thereby, and even the plea of justification has been urged that the pay of the married preachers is better than that of the single; and this plea is no doubt correct, where the Stewards perform their part well in providing table expenses. Then it is high time to nip the ungodly plea, that the Church may be no longer shorn of its jewels of usefulness by the plea of pinching necessity; for it is a stubborn fact, well known throughout the connection, that a very large number locate in a short time after marriage. Then, in order to retain them longer, their wages should be so arranged as to afford them no temptations, fortified by the plea of necessity, to take upon themselves such burdens as either drive them to or excuse them for locating.

Some of the foregoing remarks would indicate a greater increase in the wages than recommended; but it should be borne in mind that the General Conference will meet again in four years, and then will be the proper time to make farther provisions for wants, that now lie too far in the future, to be correctly provided for; and this subject should be handled with that caution which will insure its not resulting badly, by running too far to the other extreme, which might engender the idea, among the laity, (the purse-string holders) that an extravagant allowance had been made; and nothing could be more fatal than the apathy that might follow such a conclusion.

Up to this time, the Methodist Church has maintained one virtue that we can triumphantly point to as being unsurpassed by anything the history of the world affords, with a just comparison of circumstances: that is the extreme low rates that her lawmakers have named their own pay; and the highest authority are allowed no greater wages than the lowest! The world has indeed given instances of as great self-denial, but not in the money-making age and the same countries where all the laws of Methodism have been enacted. Let her maintain this virtue inviolate; then so long as this Church and the world stands, this Church can still be pointed to as the nursery of Holiness.

MODERATE LAYMAN.

Arkansas, Dec. 25, 1853.

FLORIDA CONFERENCE.

The Florida Conference met in Monticello Fla., on the 4th inst. Bishop Paine was prevented by family affliction from meeting with us. R. H. Howren was chosen President, and P. P. Smith Secretary. Most of the Preachers were in attendance.

J. W. Jackson, R. J. McCook, W. Peeler, B. McHan and A. Johnson were received on trial. C. Raiford, W. Hall and W. T. Harris we readmitted. R. S. Tupper and T. W. Cooper located. We have a nett increase of 1341 members, settled with deficient preachers' widows and orphans at 68 cents on the dollar. Missionary collection, over $3,000. being about 50 cents for each white member. Sunday Schools increasingly prosperous. "Fletcher Institute" and "East Florida Seminary" report themselves in a healthy and prosperous condition.

In all respects, this young Conference is in an improving condition; yet there is very much land to be possessed, and we could employ profitably 20 additional preachers in the conference district.

The Conference closed on Monday evening, the 9th inst., and the preachers have gone to their respective fields of labor in good spirits, but one of our number has fallen during the year. Herewith you have the appointments:

TALLAHASSEE DISTRICT, S. P. Richardson, P. E.

Tallahassee, R. McC. Tydings.
Quincy, W Cheice.
Leon, James Peeler.
Chalsers and Leon miss., W. T. Harrison.
Wakulla, to be supplied.
Gadsden, W. M. Kennedy.
Bainbridge, J. P. Richardson.
Albany Station, P. P. Smith.
Newton, to be supplied.
Blakely, J. H. M. Gardner.
Milford mis., J. B. Jackson.
South Gadsden miss., J. W. Mille.
Baker mis. to colored, to be supplied.
Agent A. B. Society, E. L. T. Blake.

MADISON DISTRICT, R. H. Howren, P. E.

Madisea, J. W. Rhodes.
Monticello, T. W. Cooper.
Thomasville Station, W. W. Griffin.
Thomasville Circuit, O. B. Stanley.
Tronprille, C. Raiford.
Hamilton, J. W. Carlton.
Columbia, J. M. N. Low, T. Taylor.
Newmansville, T. N. Gardner.
Newmansville miss., J. L. Jerry.
South Madison mis., to be supplied.
Suwannee, mis., to be supplied.
Santafee mis., to be supplied.
Aucilla mis. to colored, A. Peeler.
Principal F. Institute, R. H. Lackey.

ST. MARY'S DISTRICT, F. E. Steward, P. E.

St. Mary's, J. C. Ley.
Black Creek, Wm. Peeler.
Jacksonville, T. Gardner.
Brunswick, S. Woodberry.
Centerville, W. Hall.
Waresboro', S. G. Childs.
St John's mis, W K Turner.
Clinch mis, R J McCook.
Irwin mis, W Edwards.
Holmesville, P B Bedford.
Glynn mis to colored, to be supplied.
Satilla miss., J. J. Richards.

TAMPA DISTRICT, G. W. Pratt, P. E.

Tampa, T J Sealy.
Key West, J T Rivers.
Manatee, S A McCook.
Ocala, to be supplied.
Pilatka, A M Mellan.
Orange miss., to be supplied.
Sumpter, mis, to be supplied.
Hillsboro miss., T Allis.
Hernando miss., F Johnson.
J M Valentine, J Carraway, John Penny and G W Fagg left without appointments, on account of ill health.

SUPERANNUATED DELEGATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.—P P Smith, R H Howren, M Redell and F. Stewart.

RESERVED DELEGATE.—John Penny.

Next Conference to be held at Jacksonville, East Florida.

HAPPY DEATH OF A LITTLE BOY.

A Christian lady of Mobile, who has taken an interest and done a work for the Sabbath School in one of its suburban villages, that can only be repaid by its own fruit, sends us an account of the happy death of one of her scholars. We should be untrue to the editorial instinct to let such an account pass out of our hands, even if we designed nothing further than making the Advocate interesting. But there is a lesson here, a deep and blessed philosophy. We durst not forbid this little one's testimony for Christ. We publish it for parents' sake and for their children.

Our correspondent writes:

Brother McTyeire.—If you are willing to put anything in the Advocate for children, do let me tell you something of the death of one of the finest little boys I ever knew—Manly McMorris. He was buried on the 28th August—not twelve years old, and the only son of his mother. His name was Manly, and it was a suitable name, for he was a manly boy: so obedient to his parents. R. [her son] went to school with him last winter, and often he and F. [his sister] would tell me of him. He dearly loved Sunday School, and to take his little hymn book about, to sing and read. They moved from town to get away from yellow fever, and in three days he was taken sick, and in a few more died. His sister, about thirteen, wrote off some of his expressions. His mother told me she had often read of happy deaths of young children, but thought it was exaggerated, but now she knows a child can die a happy Christian. I will copy just what I find of his sister's account, hoping you will tell it so as to encourage Sunday Schools, for his father thinks much he got by attending.

M. E. C.

We cannot "tell it" better for the end proposed than by copying the account:

Death-bed Scene of my Brother.

Though deeply written on my mind, yet fearing that time may remove some of the useful things that he taught me, I will commit a few of them to paper. He was taken ill on Monday night, and continued to grow worse until Thursday; he became speechless about 12 or 1 o'clock; mother said: "My son, do you know me? Speak one word of comfort to your mother." He answered with a look and a deep groan, and remained speechless for some hours. By the use of restoratives he revived. He was seen making an effort to turn over; he said: "Father, I cannot get upon my knees; will you not pray for me?" Father prayed as earnestly as he could. Mother said: "My son, God can hear you pray on your back as well as on your knees." A paroxysm of pain lasted a short time, then, with such an expression of countenance as I never saw before, he said: "God Almighty, have mercy on this poor little boy, for Jesus Christ's sake!" Then paroxysms of pain all day, with intervals of rest. During some of the moments of rest, he laid his dear little hands in mother's, and said: "Mother, you will not have these hands long."

He seemed engaged in prayer every moment of rest that he had. Though his sufferings were great, he never murmured or complained; he frequently entreated father and mother not to grieve for him; they never left his side for a moment, night or day; we thought he could not live through the night. Friday, we hoped he was better, but he soon grew worse; mother said in a whisper: "He cannot last long!" He replied: "Yes, mother, I have a long road to travel—many thousand miles. "When he was suffering the greatest agony, father or mother would say: "Remember Jesus!" He would calm down instantly and look peaceful. Once he said: "Remember, Lord, thy dying groans, and then remember me!" Frequently singing parts of hymns; said: "Perhaps tomorrow, I will be in heaven." One of the old servants came in; he said: "Aunt Lizzy, are you ready to die?" He told her God had heard his prayer; he said: "I have seen Jesus; he looked up with a heavenly smile and said: "That blessed face I see above!" He said: "O Lord, have mercy on my father and mother, my sisters and brother, (a half brother,) the poor blacks and all my friends; I want them all to follow me to heaven." His sufferings were great all Friday night; Saturday morning he told me the little Angels were around his bed, tried to point them out to us, but our poor sinful eyes could not behold them.

Mother said: "My son, how do you feel now?" He waved his little hands, and replied: "Glory to God! I feel like I was going to Heaven." Mother said: "Son, do you know what you are saying?" He said: "Yes, my mother. I do feel like I had a golden crown in my hand, and I was going to Christ to put it on me." Father said: "My son, to-day is Saturday." He replied: "My first day in Heaven will be Sunday, and I shall meet Jesus, as fresh as the lark in the field."

Six o'clock Saturday night he breathed his last. I have frequently read of happy deaths of children, but thought it fiction; but I never can doubt again a child may die a Christian. I am a child myself, but Oh, grant that I may die as bright a Christian as my little brother, is the prayer of his sister,

L. R. M.

The New York Journal of Commerce states that a seaman who was left on board the ship Chauncy Jerome, Jr., wrecked near Sandy Hook, drank to excess, became delirious, and killed a shipmate and a passenger. He also attempted the life of Capt. Cone.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

WESLEYAN SOCIETY OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

At the late session of the Alabama Conference the junior members of that body organized themselves into a "Wesleyan Society," designed for their spiritual and intellectual improvement. To carry out the object of their association they requested Brothers Hamilton, Carter, and the undersigned, to make out a list of books for study, supplementary to the Conference Course. That committee has not yet been able to meet to confer together on the subject, but Brothers Hamilton and Carter have agreed to recommend for the present year's study—On the office and work of the ministry: Vinet's Pastoral Theology with Bungener's Preacher and the King. On Baptism: Taylor's Apostolic Baptism and Summers on Baptism. On Church Government: Coleman's Apostolical and Primitive Church and Stevens's Church Polity. These works are to be carefully studied, and examinations had on them at the next meeting of the society. The committee, at their earliest convenience, will endeavor to comply with the wishes of their brethren in regard to the general course of study which they wish them to indicate.

THOMAS O. SUMMERS.

The second Anniversary of the Alabama Bible Society held its meeting in the Presbyterian Church of this city on Sabbath evening last. An able report was read by the Secretary, which was listened to with great attention.

Inspiring and eloquent speeches were delivered by Hon. H. W. Hilliard, Hon. Wm. L. Yancey and Rev. A. A. Lipscomb, D. D. This is a noble cause our citizens are engaged in, and may it well succeed. The Bible is the light of the world, let us put it into the hands of all in our reach.

The annual election of officers took place and resulted in the election of—

President, E. A. Holt.
Secretary, Richard Jones.
Treasurer, Wm. B. Bell.
Vice Presidents, H. W. Hilliard, Wm. L. Yancey, James H. Smith, Henry Lucas, Thos. M. Cowles.
Directors, Abner McGehee, Wm. Poe, Chas. T. Pollard, John Whiting, F. M. Gilmer, E. C. Hannon, I. W. Roberts, B. S. Bibb, Jack Thorington. [Montgomery Adv., 12th inst.

[From the Charleston Courier.

Florida and her Resources.

Welaka, (Fla.,) Dec. 15, 1853.—The frequent inquiries made relative to Florida, especially by South Carolinians, induces me to address you a letter containing some general information upon the subject, and if you think it will prove interesting or valuable to any who are directing their attention to our State, you are authorized to copy it into your paper.

It is an enigma to many who observe the topographical position of Florida, that with an area of 38,000,000 of acres, she had in 1850 but 349,000 acres of improved land, and a population of only 88,000; about 47,000 of that number whites.

A review of her history will explain it. For the last century Florida has not enjoyed repose under any government of twenty years' duration. In 1763, the Spaniards gave up the Floridas to England. In 1783-4, the English returned them to Spain, by which government they were held until 1821, a treaty having been made for their cession to the United States in 1819.

While these political changes were taking place, internal difficulties occasionally occurred with Indians, and invasions were made upon the provinces several times. In 1812 and 1818, East Florida was invaded by a body of quondam patriots, who were protected by the United States flag, under the pretence that it was a republican movement on the part of the inhabitants; but it was an arranged plan to obtain possession of the peninsula—our government apprehending its occupation by the English during the war then pending.

This invasion was most disastrous to East Florida. Every plantation in the district was devastated, either by the United States troops and patriots, who were together, or by a lawless handitti, who remained in the province after the troops left. The province did not recover from this, before the cession to the United States, and upon the change of flags in 1821, almost every Castilian departed for Cuba.

The chief reason why a wealthy and enterprising population did not at once follow our flag into Florida, was that titles to land were uncertain. Grants and donations having been made by England and Spain to their respective subjects, upon many of which conditions had been imposed, and no evidence could be readily obtained to show whether or not they had been complied with. In 1828, our Government appointed a Board of Commissioners to attend to the investigation of claims for grants and donations, and those were confirmed which were perfected. After this Board ceased to act, other claims of the same character were acted on by the U. S. Court. The most important grants were the Arredondo grant of 20 miles square, and that to the Duke of Allagon, of about 17,000,000 acres. The former was confirmed, and the latter rejected. Titles to land in Florida can now be easily ascertained.

The war with the Seminoles from 1835 to 1842, was a serious drawback upon the prosperity of the Territory generally, but more especially upon the Eastern District, it being the seat of war. Many sugar and cotton plantations were destroyed upon the Atlantic as well as in the interior, which were in beautiful operation. When the war ceased in 1842, a verbal understanding was had with the Indians, that they might remain undisturbed if they remained peaceful in certain boundaries assigned them. Their conduct has been such as to give confidence of their intention to be quiet, and the public mind generally is at rest respecting any hostile action by them. It is true that some are found who apprehend the State is unsafe while any remnant ever remains in it; but I am impressed fully with the belief that it is from mistaken views of policy, or from selfish motives, that any will advise hostilities against them at a time when the population and prosperity of the State is so rapidly increasing and advancing. Indeed, was it not referred to, it would not be known that there are any Indians in the State, as they never mingle with the whites; and with the exception of a few "outsiders," who straggle about to hunt, they remain continually within their boundary line.

Another objection to capitalists investing money in Florida, previous to her becoming a State, was that bonds had been issued by the Governor, (under authority of law,) to the amount of several millions of dollars, for certain banks in the Territory. The banks failed, and it was supposed that the inhabitants would be taxed to redeem this pledge of their Territory. The question, however, was definitely settled by a provision in the Constitution of the State, when she was admitted into the confederacy in 1845, which states distinctly that the people of the State shall not be taxed to pay them.

Thus have all serious difficulties been adjusted and confidence in the resources of Florida is shown by the tide of emigration which is now flowing within her limits.

The principal planting counties in East Florida are Columbia, Alachua, Marion, Sumter, Hernando and Levy. The three first named are the most populous and thriving.

Marion county, within the past 3 years, has added several thousand to her population from South Carolina alone, and the result of the planting interest generally has fully met the expectations of those engaged in it.

The settlers in the vicinity of Ocala and Micanopy, being chiefly from the "South State," that district is given the sobriquet of "New Carolina," and the number of wealthy and respectable planters there form a nucleus highly desirable for "annexation."

In this vicinity, the lands are fertile and in large bodies; but equally good lands may be found further south and west, at much lower prices than sales are made at there.

I think a moderate estimate of the wild land in East Florida fit for general cultivation is 2,500,000 acres—one-half of this first quality. At present the improved land in the State does not exceed 600,000 acres.

The products of the State are sugar, long and short staple cotton, tobacco, turpentine, and yellow pine, live oak, red cedar, and cypress timber.

The shipment of yellow pine lumber from the St. John's river the ensuing year will reach 50,000,000 feet. The value of which will be at the mills about $600,000. The ensuing crop of East Florida, which will pass out at the St. John's, will amount to about $750,000. More than half of this will come from Marion, Sumter, and the lower part of Alachua counties. The succeeding crop will be much increased, as lands are being opened to a large extent, and every steamer from Charleston is filled with emigrants and hands for the planting districts.

Within an area of twenty miles square around Micanopy there are prairie and swamp lands which could be reclaimed at an expense of from $80,000 to $100,000, sufficient to raise 100,000 hogsheads of sugar, and notwithstanding the cultivation of long cotton is so favorable, I believe that the principal crop of East Florida, before many years, will be sugar.

Of the towns in East Florida, Jacksonville is the most thriving. Population about 2,500. The business of the place is chiefly from the influence of fifteen steam saw mills, in its vicinity—their shipments amounting to about 40,000,000 feet. St. Augustine, about 2000 population, does but a small business. It is the most healthful city in the United States, both summer and winter. Middleburg, on Black Creek, is a small village, but ships a large quantity of cotton from Alachua and Columbia counties. Palatka is the county site of Putnam county, is the terminus of the steamers from Charleston and Savannah, and the depot for the produce and merchandise received and forwarded for the interior counties, and upper St. Johns. It is prospering. The population was about 150 a year since, it is now about 500. Welaka, about 25 miles above Palatka, is a place just springing up, which bids fair to become a depot for the produce from Oclawaha river, as it is situated immediately opposite the mouth of that stream, upon a high and pleasant bluff. Big Lake George and Anzie Island, lies 12 miles above Welaka, and about 80 miles further is Lake Munroe, upon which are situated Enterprise and Millerville. Ocala, the county site of Marion county, is in the interior, 55 miles from Palatka, and 30 miles from the celebrated Orange Springs. This is a business place of about 800 population. There is a seminary under good direction, with about 100 male and female pupils. Micanopy is a village of 150 population, surrounded by a very respectable planting community, and most fertile lands.

Upon the Oclawaha, Silver Spring is the head point of navigation, and ships the produce from the country around Ocala. For Brooke, on the Oclawaha, is of some importance, as it will be the shipping point of most of the produce raised in the vicinity of Orange Lake, Micanopy, and the Alachua prairie.

Newnansville, the late county site of Alachua county, is further interior, about seventy miles from Palatka, and forty-five from Middleburg. It is a town of some standing and trade, and ships her produce and receives merchandise at Middleburg.

Gainesville is the new county site of Alahua county, situated about fifteen miles Northwesterly from Micanopy, and is in the midst of the richest section of planting lands.

Lands in East Florida, but more particularly in Marion county, have advanced from one hundred to five hundred per cent. Some tracts of land sold at $8 per acre, three years since, have been lately sold at $15 to $20 per acre. There is much good land to be had now at from $6 to $5 per acre, but it must be hunted out. Land seekers should not trust to steamboats and stages when they want land, but bring with them their saddle horses and camping blankets.

Business capital is small in East Florida, compared with the amount of trade; but as the country is prospering, it suffices for ordinary purposes, there being no extensive operations in produce. There is not any bank in Florida, nor will there probably be any, as the banks of South Carolina and Georgia are in good standing, and can supply all the money facilities required for legitimate business transactions, and an agricultural country is better without banks.

The population of Florida increased from 1840 to 1850 fifty-six per cent. It will increase more than one hundred per cent. in the present term of ten years.

To refer to the climate of Florida would be superfluous, as it is so well known to be salubrious and healthy. The census of 1850 reports her as the most healthy State on the Atlantic and the fourth in the confederacy, including the new Western States, which are not on an equality, as their population is chiefly of a firmer character.

In my endeavor to be brief in this communication, and yet wishing to be general, I feel I have not done justice to Florida, nor, indeed, to myself; but it is so lengthy I must conclude it, and shall do so with a few comments.

There is no State in the Confederacy which presents greater permanent inducements to the emigrant or capitalist than does Florida at this time. Every one who is industrious, prudent and attentive to their business is prospering, no matter in what channel his energies are directed. Florida is yet but a wilderness—every day develops some new source of interest or profit. With a soil and climate adapted to the productions of most northern, as well as most tropical plants and fruits, the advantage over Cuba is a great one, because social relations are better, and the facility of communication with every place is easier.

The connection with the North, afforded by the elegant and safe steamers from Charleston and Savannah, is of great consideration, and the comforts they supply alone induce persons to visit Florida; and to see the noble St. John's, "The River of Lakes," flowing in its majestic tide from a source over 300 miles from its outlet, will well repay the voyager for the time expended.

To Charleston, East Florida is justly becoming a district of much commercial importance. The character of her produce is adapted to the Charleston market, and the sympathy between the two places is strong, from the circumstance of so many of Florida's best citizens being emigrants from South Carolina.

The internal improvements of Florida are not yet commenced, but she will not long be. The proposed railroad from C... on the Gulf of Mexico, to the ... will soon be carried on, ... highest advantage, not only to ... Florida, but to the ... the country at large. ... ing for the development ... eats as well as ...

With much respect, ...

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1.50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, January 28.

FLORIDA CONFERENCE.—By mistake the minutes of this Conference, as published by the Southern Advocate were worked off upon our first page. They differ from those we have received from the Secretary of the Conference, which will be found in another column.

In the first setting up there is a queer error—"Superannuated Delegates to the General Conference." The thing is impossible of course, but the description of it a discovery. One of the names set down as a delegate should stand with the word "Superannuated" Brother M. Redell.

DIED.—ALEXANDER MCKENZIE, the clerk of this office—the second one we have lost by death in six months.

Mr. McK. won upon all about him by his accommodating ways and his diligent attention to business. His disease was consumption; rapid, yet gradual enough to give him timely warning. The last few weeks he was often engaged in prayer, and there is reason to hope that the Lord saved him. He was about 27 years of age, and left a wife and little child to feel, in poverty, his long absence.

REV. DR. WINANS.—We learn that an addition of three sermons has been made to those already prepared by this able divine: one on Repentance, one on Salvation by Faith, and one on the General Judgment; and that the whole will form a 12mo. of 500 pages. Would not our book agent do well to secure this work, the result of the experience and labor of one so extensively and deservedly well known throughout the Methodist Church, both North and South?

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

A letter from the Rev. W. H. Watkins, Secretary of the Board of Trustees, informs us of the election of the Rev. H. C. Thweatt, to the Presidency of the Centenary College, in place of Rev. R. H. Rivers, who goes to a more northern climate in the hopes of restoring the health of his wife.

This election will give great satisfaction to the friends of Brother Thweatt, who have long known him as a scholar and an able and experienced teacher of youth.

The college has at present 180 students and more are coming in daily. Notwithstanding the detention at home of a number of its students and other drawbacks from the recent epidemic, which was worse everywhere in the State than at Jackson, the present term promises to be a very full one and as favorable to the reputation of the college as any preceding.

The following resolutions passed the Board unanimously. Will the Nashville and Louisville Advocate please copy:

Resolved, That the Board of Trustees and Visitors have received with regret the resignation of the Rev. Dr. R. H. Rivers as President of the Centenary College.

That they part with him believing that his ability and devotion to the duties of his office, during the past five years, have greatly advanced the interests and the reputation of the college.

That they heartily sympathise with him in the family affliction which has made his removal to a colder climate necessary.

That their hearty wishes accompany him for his happiness and usefulness as President elect of Lagrange College, and assurances of their continued interest in him as a friend and educator of youth.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the New Orleans and Nashville Christian Advocates, and in the Jackson Mirror.

W. H. WATKINS, Secretary.

WRITING PRAYERS.—A correspondent from Virginia sends us the following, with appropriate vouchings of its truth: "At the breaking of the ground for the commencement of the Lynchburg and Tennessee Railroad, at Lynchburg, the Rev. J. E——, by appointment, acted as chaplain on the occasion. At the time appointed for prayer the chaplain raised his hands and said: 'Let us pray.' In an instant all hats were doffed, and the chaplain commenced, slowly and solemnly, to read a very appropriate manuscript prayer, which he had previously prepared. During the reading of the prayer an old negro man, who had been engaged with his spade, was resting with one foot on the spade and his arms on the handle, looking very intently in the chaplain's face. At the conclusion of the prayer, the old negro, straightening himself, remarked audibly: 'Well, I recon dat's de fust time de Lord has ever been written to on de subject of railroads!'"

IRELAND.—The Dublin Nation remarks: "The Irish nation is fast dissolving, as the Jewish nation dissolved before the curse of God; as the Carthagenian nation dissolved before the Sword of Rome; as the red Indian race silently dissolves before the face of the white man. Ireland is ceasing to be a [illegible] Catholic nation." Priest Fitzgerald, in a recent speech, admits, "Our nation and our church are perishing." An organ of Romanism asks, "Shall the coupers and tract-distributers accomplish the work which all the force of England for three hundred years has been unable to effect?

[illegible] MISSION CONFERENCE.—Delegates to the [illegible] Conference—Revs. David B. Cumming, [illegible] Lt. McAllister. Reserve, [illegible] B. Rabb.

A METHODIST IN SEARCH OF A BISHOP.

"And so you never saw a Bishop?" "No, not a Methodist one. Have tried right hard too; crossed the track once or twice tolerable warm, but never saw a Methodist Bishop in my life."

This is a scrap of the conversation held last week with one—just come to town. To the inquiry whether or not one was now in the city, we replied, "No; that if he had only been a week or so before, he might have gratified his eyes with the sight of a live Bishop. One had passed through going East, but only spent an hour or two. Another was going West and took the first steamer leaving port after his arrival.

Our friend came into our sanctum to pay his subscription and have a chat, and as he was doomed never to set eyes on a Bishop, he would not die without sight of an—Editor; though, mayhap, they were some kin. His mistake was corrected at sight, and he accepted the assurance that Bishops and Editors stood at different ends of the ladder ecclesiastical. We condoled with him and got as much as possible into his views and history.

He had seen a good deal and lived Methodism with a loyalty it was refreshing to contemplate. A native of North Alabama, he had strayed on through Arkansas, and after living awhile there had gone on and lived as long in Texas. While in the last State he went some distance to attend a Conference, but the Bishop didn't come that time; and to use his own expressive phrase, "One of the Presiding Elders acted." Our friend was a plain, hard-sense man and joined the Church of his first love when twenty years of age. He did admit to have travelled more than was profitable for a man "that wasn't a speculating or anything so," and hinted something about the rolling stone. But all this had never brought him in sight of a Methodist Bishop. Rather curious for a member of a Church bearing upon its banner "EPISCOPAL."

How many there are among the thousands of Methodists to whom this distinctive and apostolical part of its economy is never brought near enough to be seen much less to be felt.

We regret to see some of our cotemporaries of the press (in the older States) who struck for a higher number, giving in "to a general concurrence in the opinion that three new Bishops will be ample for the present demands of the Church." The younger and frontier Conferences, that need most Episcopal superintendence, and have suffered most for the lack of it, will not fall to this lower figure so readily. Put off from General Conference to General Conference; we are of opinion they will take resolute stand in May next, to persist in this request, whether it be granted or not.

The distribution proposed by our cotemporary at Richmond and accepted by that at Charleston, that a Bishop have his domicil in one of the two old Conferences—say Virginia or North Carolina—and in one of the three new Conferences—say Louisiana, Arkansas or Texas—does not recognize a principle which stamps Methodist Episcopacy as a working office and not a sinecure to the man; a necessity and not a luxury to the Church. If there be any difference it ought to be in favor of the new Conferences—the expanding, forming population. In the old, affairs are in train. Experience and influence and precedence are there. Episcopal superintendence is good and useful, but its absence or temporary failure is a less serious calamity. Moreover, in the old, traveling facilities are greater. A Bishop could bestow more of his personal labors and presence throughout the two of the other Conferences, where railroads and stage lines and steamboats run from point to point with regularity and speed, than he could do in the same time in one of the new. And in these new Conferences, struggling to grasp the ever-receding frontier or supply the rapidly filling up population, and called to meet the varying exigencies of shifting enterprise—here is need for prospecting and the guidance of a controlling and riper wisdom.

Very much to our mind, and with slight adaptations, well suited to the condition of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in those new and fast settling up States, she is laboring to make spiritual provision for, are the words of the Edinburgh Review, of October. We quote from page 156. The writer detailing the causes of distraction and inefficiency in the Church of England of late times and the few saving measures that have counteracted them and promoted vitality and growth in the face of so much evil, comes to what we would call strengthening the Episcopacy:

"The movement for establishing Bishoprics in the Colonies has attracted greater public attention and has met with more unqualified success. In the last thirteen years fifteen new Bishoprics have been founded, and the complete organization of the Church transferred to as many nascent empires. We need not say that our satisfaction at this result springs not from our attributing any miraculous powers to the Episcopal office. We value it not as the source of thaumaturgic influence, but as an instrument of good government; not for its magical but for its moral energy. The superintendence of any central authority can do much by combining and harmonizing the isolated efforts of individuals; the superintendence of zealous and intelligent man can do more. Nor does he only render more efficient the labors of those amongst whom he comes to preside: his presence attracts more laborers into the vineyard. Those who would have shrunk from the isolation of independent action, now gladly go to work under a chief pastor, on whose wisdom they rely and on whose affectionate sympathy and encouragement they depend. That this is no mere theory is proved by the fact, that in thirteen years the number of clergy in these fifteen new Episcopates had increased from 274 to 503."

THE FOUR RICH MEN.

A thirst for great wealth is often abated in considerate minds by reflecting upon those who have been most fortunate in its ens pursuit. The conclusion comes unsought, in unison with the declaration of Him who knew all things, that a man's life consisteth not in the abundance which he hath. Life—real life—life that is something more than locomotion and lung motion is not compassed by any quantity of material things. See the rich going away as he came. He brought nothing into this world; he carries nothing out. What treasure after death is his must have been transferred in life to the heavens, in holy living and generous doing. Death comes and there is no defence. No bribe can buy delay. The rich man begins to give away, now here, now there, to this, to that object. Go it must.

This unsatisfying character of great wealth is enhanced in most cases by the absence of those domestic and family endearments that contribute to the most exquisite relish of being and test the finest emotions of the heart. The one great pursuit has swallowed up all else. Extremes meet. And the millionaire, like the pauper, dies unwept. Though dazzled by the power of such munificence as theirs, few can so deliberately abrogate their human nature as to envy their lot.

For fifty years, without a days absence, except when he was fighting in its defence, under Gen. Jackson, has New Orleans felt the quiet but sagacious energy of an Israelite—Judah Touro. The citizens of late days have been familiar with the noiseless footwalks of the old man in Canal street, about the neighborhood of the Synagogue. He died on the 20th inst.

Mr. Touro was the last of the four richest of our citizens who have died in this city during the last four years without families. John McDonogh, Joseph Fowler, Cornelius Paulding, were the other three. The combined fortunes of these four citizens reached the sum of nine millions, about one-eighth of the property of the whole city. They were all bachelors, and lived to an extreme old age. Mr. McDonogh died at seventy-two, Mr. Paulding at seventy, Mr. Fowler at sixty-five, and Mr. Touro at seventy-nine. They had all been constant residents of New Orleans, and enjoyed a remarkable degree of health and vigor. Except Mr. Fowler, the shortest lived of the four, none of them had ever left the city.

In another column is his will. We make no apology for devoting so much space to such a document. In many respects it is instructive and commendable—altogether interesting. The Alms-House provided for will be a substantial public benefit. The Charity Hospital receives the sick, but as yet there is no refuge for the starving. After they are dismissed from the hospital as cured, in such destitution and weakness as to be soon returned on the sick list. Unlike the will of McDonogh we judge this will go at once to its beneficiaries and not be eaten up by courts—a burlesque upon posthumous philanthropy. The personal bequests show a spirit of geniality in the solitary old man. The friend who picked him up, bleeding to death on the battle field, and bore him away to a place of safety at the risk of his own life, now receives half a million. This act of kindness was done thirty-eight years ago, to one then poor.

A SINGULAR INQUIRY.

"Whom can I call on to pray? Does Brother —— pray in congregation?" Such inquiries are familiar to every pastor on taking charge of or conducting service in a new congregation. To go into a prayer meeting without the knowledge elicited by the above inquiries would be a hazardous business. Nothing safer than going into the pulpit without a text. Worse: for a text will answer if called for; and if one wont another will.

But is not that a singular inquiry, common though it be? Why should it not be taken for granted that every one in that assembly of Christians can pray and will, if called on? Are any dumb—speaking an unknown tongue—or otherwise disabled? So the question would seem to imply. Is the gift of prayer a peculiar gift or special privilege, to be exercised by some and denied to others, that a stranger must be posted up with a list of names he can call upon?

A correspondent who has been exercised on this subject sends us this pithy paragraph. May He that heareth prayer bless it to His people's reproof and improvement:

"Common it is at present to hear Christians (or those professing to be such,) say they cannot pray aloud, and we know many children brought by the mercy of God into the church, who have never heard their professing parents pray. And at seasons of revivals, ministers dare not call on church members to offer prayer, without first inquiring if they can pray; for notwithstanding the assertion of an eminent divine 'that it is as natural for a believer to pray as it is for a child to cry,' it appears that to many of our latter day Christians the gift of prayer is not vouchsafed. A gift of criticism, however, seems common to all, for not only do we hear sermons criticised freely, but prayers also condemned or approved of, as if they were a performance got up to please the ear of a fellow being, instead of importunity with God for needed blessings.

JANE C.

We learn from the Trinity Advocate that an effort is being made for the formation of a new parish, to be called Trinity, out of territory belonging to the parishes of Concordia and Catahoula.

PROGRESS OF THE BIBLE HOUSE.

The most interesting reunions the Protestants of this city enjoy are such as take place at Odd Fellow's Hall. The New Orleans and South Western Bible Society meetings. The first was a year ago, at the same place. The address on that occasion and abstract of the Secretary's report were given our readers at that time. For reasons not necessary to mention our report of the meeting of the 13th instant has been delayed this long. Almost $1,600 were collected. The demonstration was massive and powerful. It was good to be there. No such congregations are ever assembled in New Orleans. The principal Protestant Churches being closed for that evening, the weather fair, the hall elegant and commodious, the programme tempting, the cause good, our readers may judge of the following.

Mr. Shepard, the Secretary, submitted those statistics:

The Depository.—The stock of Bibles kept on hand has been increased during the year, so as to range from $3,000 to $4,000. The Board acknowledges its almost entire dependence for this on the parent society at New York; but expresses the hope that the S. W. B. Society, instead of being dependent, will yet be able to sustain its own work and help the parent society also. Bibles and Testaments issued in 1853, 8,000, in eleven different languages, valued at $4,358; increase upon 1852, 1,700 copies, worth $1,721. More than 24,000 copies have been issued in the three and a half years of the society's existence.

Bible House.—This structure has not yet been commenced, owing partly to the late epidemic. The building fund is, however, in a very cheering condition, amounting to nearly $5,000; of which $3,500 is drawing eight per cent. interest on ample security; $1,500 is in the notes of doners, available whenever needed. Other subscriptions, deemed to be reliable, run the amount up to $6,000. For good reasons the amount required to erect the Bible House has been augmented from $8,000 to $10,000, so that $4,000 must yet be raised before the Board can feel justified in laying the foundation. Specifications and estimates have been procured from an architect, with a chaste and imposing plan; and the Board only wait the raising of the $4,000 to begin the house at once.

Colportage.—In the early part of the year only one colporteur was employed, and he only for three months, supplying 199 families. In November one was employed, able to speak several European languages, besides the English, to distribute the Bible among emigrants ne they land. Money is not so much wanted as faithful, devoted men, willing to engage in this description of service.

Gratuitous Distribution.—In this line of doing good, a wide door is opened in this city through our public societies, hotels, steamboats, hospitals, asylums, prisons and especially among the emigrants from Europe. In 1853, 1,141 Bibles were donated to the principal hotels, the fire department and the house of refuge.

Agencies.—There has been only one special agent employed the last year, Rev'd H. C. Thweatt, whose services are highly commended, especially his success in obtaining funds for the Bible House.

Auxiliaries.—The ladies of the Bible Society of New Orleans, are spoken of with praise, for their noble work of supplying the destitute with the Bible. Regular reports have been received also of the co-operation of the Ladies' Bible Society of Baton Rouge and the East Feliciana Bible Society; but, in view of the many facts of interest and encouragement which might be evolved, a regret is expressed that full reports have not been received from all the auxiliaries.

Finances.—Receipts on account of Bible House fund, $3,356 59; disbursements, none. Receipts on donation fund, $235 43; disbursements, $594 43, being an excess of expenditure over receipts of $359. General fund, receipts $915 95; expenditures, $967 01, an excess of expenditure over receipts of $48 94. Sales and donations, $4,358 56. Total disbursements, $5,720 22. The Board relies with confidence upon the sympathies and support of the christian public for an increase of donations for the supply of the destitute.

Conclusion.—The report concludes as follows:

"The land is full of vice, and drunkenness, and bloodshedding. How shall we stay these evils unless by lifting up a standard against them? And what one so potent as the banner of the cross? Besides, every breeze wafts to our shores a mighty tide of ignorance, superstition and infidelity, threatening to destroy the fair fabric of our religious freedom. We should present to this tide of emigration a holy, united front, meeting it at the very threshhold, and endeavering through the blessings of God, to leaven it with those principles of rational liberty and righteousness without which no nation can be truly great, and no people prosperous and happy."

APPOINTMENTS OF EAST TEXAS CONFERENCE.

SAN AUGUSTIN DISTRICT, J. P. T. Irving, P. E. San Augustine circuit, H. D. Palmer. San Augustine Station, Alex. Henklo.

JASPER DISTRICT, J. C. Wollam, P. E. Shelbyville, M. D. Simpson. Panola, Edw. F. Thwing. Henderson, H. B. Hamilton. Henderson Station, William Craig. Salem circuit, Acten Young. Nacogdoches circuit, Noill Brown. Agent Fowler Institute, S. A. Williams.

MARSHALL DISTRICT, N. W. Burks, P. E. Marshall Station, J. B. Tullie. Marshall circuit, J. N. Hamill, A. C. McDougle. Jefferson circuit, J. R. Bellamy, W. Coons; Mt. F. Cole, Sup. Mount Pleasant circuit, Wm. McCarty. Gilmor circuit, Job M. Baker. Harrison county, African Mission, Preston W. Hobbs. Wood county Mission, to be supplied. Cypress Mission, to be supplied. Upshur Mission, Henry Fullingim.

CLARKSVILLE DISTRICT, A. N. Ross, P. E. Clarksville circuit, Samuel W. Robbins, C. Cock. Paris circuit, Samuel Lynch, J. S. Vann. Bonham circuit, M. C. Robinson, J. G. Hardin. Grunville circuit, N. S. Johnson. Dallas circuit, to be supplied. Grayson circuit, Andrew Cumming.

PALESTINE DISTRICT, O. Fisher, P. E. Palestine circuit, Jeff Shook, Johnson McMillen. Jacksonville circuit, William E. Georgs, J. Scruggs. Tyler circuit, J. K. Hawkins. Athens Mission, S. D. Sansom. Rusk circuit, S. C. Box, one to be supplied. Knoxville Mission, James Green. Milwood Mission, E. P. Chisolm.

WOODVILL DISTRICT, William K. Wilson, P. E. Woodville Mission, Bennet Elkins. Marion Mission, H. W. Cummings. Livingston circuit, A. W. Goodjion. Liberty station, David M. Stovall. Liberty circuit, to be supplied. Crockett circuit, A. L. Kavanaugh, John McMillon. Beaumont and Sabine Pass, H. C. McElroy. Madison circuit, Jarvis L. Angel. Indian Mission, William P. Janson. George West and Francis Wilson, superannuated.

J. Simpson left without an appointment, on account of pecuniary embarrassment.

The next conference to be held at Tyler, Smith county.

Delegates to General Conference—S. A. Williams, O. Fisher, Jefferson Shook. Reserve Delegate, N. W. Burks.

IT IS THE PREACHER, AND NOT THE CIRCUIT.

Mr. Editor.—As a privilege of the press is to expose error, and insist upon the claims of truth, I ask for this article a little place in your columns. The error of which I wish to speak, as well as the correction of it, was exhibited under the following circumstances, viz: Whilst the call was being made at the last session of the Alabama Conference, for the amount collected for missions, some surprise was manifested at the small sum reported from a certain circuit, which heretofore had sent up large collections. Various reasons were offered for the falling off, all of which charged the blame upon the circuit. But our very vigilant secretary remarked: "No, no, brethren: it is the preacher, not the circuit." And turning over the leaves of the large book containing the Conference minutes, continued: "By references to this book, it will be seen that the delinquency is very often properly chargeable upon the preacher rather than the circuit." As I was looking on, and listening with much interest, I waked up to some reflections which have not been unprofitable to me, and, as I believe, may be of some benefit to others, I present them. When I hear of a circuit failing to pay the preacher his quarterage, thinks I to myself: "It is the preacher, and not the circuit." When I hear of class meetings being abandoned, and a general opposition to them, says I: "It is the preacher, and not the members." When I hear of the Sunday school languishing, and no Visitors taken, I suspect the fault is in the pastor and not the society. When I hear of circuits having no parsonage, I am led to believe it is the fault of the preacher, and not the circuit. When I hear of a circuit which takes none or very few of our religious periodicals, especially the "New Orleans Christian Advocate," at $1,50 in advance, says I to myself: "It is the preacher, not the people." When I hear of a circuit which has had no revivals, when the country all around has been blessed with them, I cannot help but exclaim; "The fault is not in the gospel, but in the preacher." And thus I might mention a thousand minor errors, attributable to the preacher, which are charged upon the Church; and most of which that tell-tale book of the Secretary discloses. That book, that book, brethren! while it contains a record of our labors and success, with almost mathematical correctness, it not only shows us, but hands down to posterity our delinquencies. What a book! A vast mirror, which not only shows us as we now are, but as we used to be and have been, all through our itinerant career. Think of it, brethren, when you are trying how little labor you can get along with. Think of it, when you are making one sermon serve you all round your circuit. Think of it when you fail to fill your appointments. Think of it when you fail to talk to and chatechize the children. Think of it when you propose in a single instance to falter in the great duty of a traveling preacher. That book daguerreotypes all we do, whether we are away off in some piney-woods, obscure circuit, or important station. And besides this, it is not a sealed book—it is open to the gaze of the world. Now some of us may think with regard to many of our neglects and failures as an old brother told me once; said he, "I'll tell you what, I've thought and perhaps done many a thing that I would not have any one to know for the world; and nobody knows it but God and myself; and he'll never tell it, and I know I won't." But, brethren, his name was never in this book. Now, in this, the beginning of the conference year, let us bear in mind that, should we live, we'll see that book and hear it read in Talladega next winter, pointing out her errors. I desire not to conceal from those to whom this applies, that it is written by ONE OF YOU who has been in some degree

A DELINQUENT.

Ala., Dec. 23d, 1853.

GROANING AND CRYING.—The introduction of chloroform and ether, with a view to prevent the pain of surgical operations or blunt the effects of nervous diseases, is hailed every where as a great blessing to mankind! This view, however, is questioned by a French surgeon, who not long since published a dissertation, in which he takes the ground that the more groaning and crying during a painful surgical operation the better it is for the nervous system. From the benefit which hysterical and other nervous patients derive from groaning and crying, he supposes that by those processes of nature the superabundant nervous power is exhausted, and the nervous system is thereby rendered calm, and even the circulation of the blood greatly diminished. He relates a case of a man who by means of crying and bawling reduced his pulse from one hundred and twenty to fifty in the course of two hours! That some patients often have a great satisfaction in groaning, and that hysterical patients often experience great relief from crying, are facts which no person will deny. As to restless hypochondriacal subjects, or those who are never happy but when they are under some course of medical dietetic treatment, the French surgeon assures that they cannot do better than to groan all night and cry all day. By following this rule and observing an abstemious diet, a person will effectually escape disease and may prolong life to an incredible extent.

FLORIDA CONFERENCE.

The Florida Conference met in Monticello Fla., on the 4th inst. Bishop Pains was prevented by family affliction from meeting with us. R. H. Howren was chosen President, and P. P. Smith Secretary. Most of the Preachers were in attendance.

J. W. Jackson, R. J. McCook, W. Peeler, B. McHan and A. Johnson were received on trial. C. Raiford, W. Hall and W. T. Harris were re-admitted. R. S. Tucker and T. W. Cooper located: We have a nett increase of 1425 members, settled with deficient preachers' widows and orphans at 68 cents on the dollar. Missionary collection, over $3,000. being about 50 cents for each white member. Sunday Schools increasingly prosperous. "Fletcher Institute" and "East Florida Seminary" report themselves in a healthy and prosperous condition.

In all respects, this young Conference is in an improving condition; yet there is very much land to be possessed, and we could employ profitably 20 additional preachers in the conference district.

The Conference closed on Monday evening, the 9th inst., and the preachers have gone to their respective fields of labor in good spirits, but one of our number has fallen during the year. Herewith you have the appointments:

TALLAHASSEE DISTRICT, S. P. Richardson, P. E.
Tallahassee, R. McC. Tydings.
Quincy, W Choies.
Leon, James Peeler.
Chairs W. T. Harrison.
Wakulla, to be supplied.
Gadsden, W. M. Kennedy.
Bainbridge, J. P. Richardson.
Albany Station, P. P. Smith.
Newton, to be supplied.
Blakely, J. H. M. Gardner.
Milford mis., J. W. Jackson.
South Gadsden miss., J. W. Mills.
Baker mis. to colored, to be supplied.
Leon miss. to be supplied.
Agent A. B. Society, E. L. T. Blake.

MADISON DISTRICT, R. H. Howren, P. E.
Madison, J. W. Rhodes.
Monticello, S. Woodberry.
Thomasville Station, W. W. Griffin.
Thomasville Circuit, J. Slade.
Troupville, C. Raiford.
Hamilton, J. W. Carlton.
Columbia, J. M. N. Low.
Newnansville, T. N. Gardner.
Alachua miss., J. L. Jerry.
South Madison mis., to be supplied.
Suwannee, mis., to be supplied.
Santafee mis., to be supplied.
Acilla mis. to colored, A. Peeler.
Principal F. Institute, R. H. Luckey.
Agent E. F. Seminary, J. M. Hendry.

ST. MARY'S DISTRICT, F. E. Stewart, P. E.
St. Mary's, J. C. Ley.
Black Creek, O. B. Standley.
Jacksonville, T. Gardner.
Brunswick, W. Hall.
Centervillage, W. Peeler.
Waresboro', S. G. Childs.
St John's mis, W K Turner.
Clinch mis, R J McCook.
Irwin mis, W. Edwards.
Holmesvills, P B Bedford.
Glynn mis to colored, to be supplied.
St. Ills miss., J. J. Richards.

TAMPA DISTRICT, G. W. Pratt, P. E.
Tampa, J J Sealy.
Key West, J F Rivers.
Manatee, S A McCook.
Ocala, to be supplied.
Pilatka, B McHan.
Orange mise., to be supplied.
Sumpter; mis, to be supplied.
Hillsboro miss., F R C Ellis.
Hernando A Johnson.

J M Valentine, J Carraway, John Penny
G W Fragg and J Taylor left without appointments, on account of ill health.

DELEGATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.—P P Smith, R H Howren, and F. Stewart.

RESERVED DELEGATE.—John Penry.

Next Conference to be held at Jacksonville, East Florida.

P. P. SMITH, Sec.

Will of the Late Judah Touro.

Be it known that on this sixth day of January, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and fifty-four, and of the Independence of the United States of America, the sixty-eighth, at a quarter before ten o'clock A. M.

Before me, Thomas Layton, a Notary Public, in and for the city of New Orleans aforesaid, duly commissioned and sworn, and in presence of Messrs. Jonathan Montgomery, Henry Shepherd, Jr., and George Washington Lee, competent witnesses, residing in said city and hereto expressly required

Personally appeared Mr. Judath Toure, of this city, merchant, whom I, the said Notary, and said witnesses found sitting in a room, at his residence, No. 128 Canal street, sick of body, but sound in mind, memory and judgment, as did appear to me, the said Notary, and to said witnesses; and the said Mr. Judah Touro requested me, the Notary, to receive his last will or testament, which he dictated to me, Notary, as follows, to wit, and in presence of said witnesses:

1. I declare that I have no forced heirs.

2. I desire that my mortal remains be buried in the Jewish Cemetery, in Newport, Rhode Island, as soon as practicable after my decease.

3. I nominate and appoint my trusty and esteemed friend Reuen Davis Shepherd, of Virginia; Aaron Keppell Josephs, of New Orleans; Gershom Kursheedt, of New Orleans, and Pierre André Destrac Casenave, of New Orleans, my testamentary executors, and the detainers of my estate, making, however, the following distinction between my said executors, to wit: To the said Aaron Keppell Josephs, Gershom Kursheedt and Pierre Andre Destrac Casenave, I give and bequeath to each one separately the sum of ten thousand dollars, which legacies I intend respectively, not only as tokens of remembrance of those esteemed friends, but also as in consideration of all services they may have hitherto rendered me, and in lieu of the commission to which they would have been entitled hereafter in the capacity of testamentary executors as aforesaid. And as regards my other designated executor, my dear, old and devoted friend Reuin Davis Shepherd, to whom, under Divine Providence, I was greatly indebted for the preservation of my life when I was wounded on the 1st of January, 1815; I hereby appoint and institute him, the said Reuin Davis Shepherd, after the payment of my particular legacies and the debts of my succession, the universal legatee of the rest and residue of my estate, movable and immovable.

In case of the death, absence or inability to act of one or more of my said Executors, I hereby empower the remaining Executor or Executors to act in carrying out the provisions of this my last will; and in the event of the death, or default, of any one or more of my said Executors before my own demise; then and in that case, it is my intention that the heirs or legal representatives of those who may die, act this life before my own death, shall inherit in their stead the legacies herein above respectively made to them.

4. I desire that all leases of my property and which may be in force at the time of my demise, shall be faithfully executed until the same shall have expired.

5. I desire that all the Estate, Real, Personal and mixed, of which I may die possessed, shall be disposed of in the manner directed by this my last will or testament.

6. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation, the "Dispersed of Judah" of the city of New Orleans all that certain property situated in Bourbon street, immediately adjoining their Synagogue, being the present school-house, and the residence of the said Mr. Gershom Kursheedt, the same purchased by me from the Bank of Louisiana; and also to the said Hebrew Congregation, the two adjoining brick houses purchased from the heirs of David Urquhart, the revenue of said property to be applied to the founding and support of the Hebrew school connected with said Congregation, as well as to the defraying of the salary of their Rabbi or Minister, said property to be conveyed accordingly by said Executors to said Congregation with all necessary restrictions.

7. I give and bequeath to found the Hebraw Hospital of New Orleans the entire property purchased for me, at the succession sale of the late C. Paulding, upon which property the building now known as the "Touro Infirmary" is situated; the said contemplated Hospital to be organized according to law, as a charitable institution for the relief of the indigent sick, by my executors and such other persons as they may associate with them conformably with the laws of Louisiana.

8. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Benevolent Association of New Orleans five thousand dollars.

9. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation "Shangarai Chased" of New Orleans five thousand dollars.

10. I give and bequeath to the Ladies Benevolent Society of New Orleans the sum of five thousand dollars.

11. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Foreign Mission Society of New Orleans five thousand dollars.

12. I give and bequeath to the Orphans' Home Asylum of New Orleans the sum of five thousand dollars.

13. I give and bequeath to the Society of Destitute Orphan Boys in the Fourth District five thousand dollars.

14. I give and bequeath to the St. Armas Asylum for the relief of destitute females and children the sum of five thousand dollars.

15. I give and bequeath to the New Orleans Female Orphan Asylum, at the corner of Camp and Perdido streets, five thousand dollars.

16. I give and bequeath to the St. Mary's Catholic Boys' Asylum of which my old and esteemed friend, the Rev. Anthony Reech, is chairman of its Executive Committee, the sum of five thousand dollars.

17. I give and bequeath to the Milne Asylum of New Orleans five thousand dollars.

18. I give and bequeath to the Firemen's Charitable Association of New Orleans five thousand dollars.

19. I give and bequeath to the Seamen's Home, in the First District of New Orleans, five thousand dollars.

20. I give and bequeath, for the purpose of establishing an Alms House, in the city of New Orleans, and with a view of contributing, as far as possible, to the prevention of mendicity in said city, the sum of eighty thousand dollars, (say $80,000) and I desire that the Alms House thus contemplated shall be organized according to law; and further, it is my desire that after my executors shall have legally organized and established said contemplated Alms House, and appointed proper persons to administer and control the direction of its affairs, then such persons legally so appointed and their successors in office, conjointly with the Mayor of the city of New Orleans, and his successors in office, shall have the perpetual direction and control thereof.

21. I give and bequeath to the city of Newport, in the State of Rhode Island, the sum of ten thousand dollars, on condition that the said sum be expended in the purchase and improvement of the property in said city, known as the Old Stone Mill, to be kept as a public park or pleasure ground.

22. I give and bequeath to the Redwood Library, in Newport, aforesaid, for books and repairs, three thousand dollars.

23. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew congregation, Obarley Shalome, of Boston, Massachusetts, five thousand dollars.

24. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation of Hartford, Connecticut, five thousand dollars.

25. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation of New Haven, Connecticut, five thousand dollars.

26. I give and bequeath to the North American Relief Society, for the Indigent Jews of Jerusalem, Palestine, the City and State of New York, (Sir Moses Montefiore, of London, their agent,) ten thousand dollars.

27. It being my earnest wish to co-operate with the benevolent Sir Moses Montefiore, of London, Great Britain, in his deserving to ameliorate the condition of our unfortunate Jewish brethren, in the Holy Land, and to secure to them the inestimable privilege of worshipping the Almighty according to our religion, without molestation, I, therefore, give and bequeath the sum of fifty thousand dollars to be paid, by my executors for said object, through the said Sir Moses Montefiore, in such manner as they may select as best calculated to promote the aforesaid objects; and in case of any legal or other difficulty or impediment in the way of carrying said bequest into effect, according to my intentions, then and in that case, I desire that the said sum of fifty thousand dollars be invested by my executors in the foundation of a Society in the City of New Orleans, similar in its objects to the North American Relief Society for the Indigent Jews of Jerusalem, Palestine, of the City of New York, to which I have before referred in this my last will.

28. It is my wish and desire that the Institutions which I have already alluded in making this will, as well as those to which in the further course of making this will, I shall refer, shall not be disqualified from inheriting my legacies to them respectively made, for reasons of not being incorporated, and thereby qualified to inherit by law; but on the contrary, I desire that the parties interested in such institutions and my Executors shall facilitate their organization as soon after my decease as possible, and thus render them duly qualified by law to inherit the premises according to my wishes.

29. I give and bequeath to the Jews' Hospital Society of the City and State of New York twenty thousand dollars.

30. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Benevolent Society Mashobat Nafesh of New York, five thousand dollars.

31. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Benevolent Society Gemeleet Chased, of New York, five thousand dollars.

32. I give and bequeath to the Talmath Tora School Fund attached to the Hebrew Congregation Shaareth Israel, of the City of New York, and to said Congregation, thirteen thousand dollars.

33. I give and bequeath to the Educational Institute of the Hebrew Congregation Bnai Jeshurum of the city of New York, the sum of three thousand dollars.

34. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation Shangarai Tefila, of New York, three thousand dollars.

35. I give and bequeath to the Ladies' Benevolent Society of the city of New York, the name of which is Richey Levy was a directress at the time of her death, and of which Mrs J. B. Kursheedt was first directress, 1850, three thousand dollars.

36. I give and bequeath to the Female Hebrew Benevolent Society of Philadelphia, (Miss Grate, Secretary) three thousand dollars.

37. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Education Society of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, twenty thousand dollars.

38. I give to the United Hebrew Benevolent Society of Philadelphia, aforesaid, three thousand dollars.

39. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation Ashaiat Israel, of Fell's Point, Baltimore, three thousand dollars.

40. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation Beth Shalome, of Richmond, Virginia, five thousand dollars.

41. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation Shaareth Israel, of Charleston, South Carolina, the sum of five thousand dollars.

42. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation Shangarai Shamoyen, of Mobile, Alabama, two thousand dollars.

43. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation Mikee Israel, of Savannah, Georgia, five thousand dollars.

44. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation of Montgomery, Alabama, two thousand dollars.

45. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation of Memphis, Tennessee, two thousand dollars.

46. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation Adas Israel, of Louisville, Kentucky, three thousand dollars.

47. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation Bnai Israel, of Cincinnati, Ohio, three thousand dollars.

48. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew School Talmud Yeladim of Cincinnati, Ohio, five thousand dollars.

49. I give and bequeath to the Jews' Hospital of Cincinnati, Ohio, five thousand dollars.

50. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation Tiferath Israel, of Cleveland, Ohio, three thousand dollars.

51. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation, Bnai Eli, of St. Louis, Missouri, three thousand dollars.

52. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation of Beth El, of Buffalo, New York, three thousand dollars.

53. I give and bequeath to the Hebrew Congregation of Beth El, of Albany, New York, three thousand dollars.

54. I give and bequeath to the three following Institutions named in the will of my greatly beloved brother, the late Abraham Touro, of Boston, the following sums:

First. To the Asylum of Orphan Boys, in Boston, Massachusetts, five thousand dollars.

Second. To the Female Orphan Asylum of Boston aforesaid, five thousand dollars.

Third. And to the Massachusetts Female Hospital, ten thousand dollars.

55. I give and bequeath ten thousand dollars for the purpose of paying the salary of a Recorder or Minister officiate in the Jewish Synagogue of Newport, Rhode Island, and to endow the Ministry of the same, as well as to keep in repair and embellish the Jewish Cemetery in Newport aforesaid; the said amount to be appropriated and paid, or invested for that purpose in such manner as my executors may determine concurrent with the approbation of Newport aforesaid, if necessary. And it is my wish and desire that David Gould and Nathan H. Gould, sons of my esteemed friend the late Isaac Gould, Esq. of Newport aforesaid, should continue to overseer the improvements in said Cemetery and direct the same; and as a testimony of my regard, and in consideration of services rendered by their said father, I give and bequeath the sum of two thousand dollars to be equally divided between them, the said David and the said Nathan H. Gould.

56. I give and bequeath five thousand dollars to His Catherine

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—On Wednesday morning, 11th January, 1854 by Rev. J. E. Newman, Mr. R. J. GLENN, of Aulangn county, to Miss HARRIET, daughter of Wm. Ware, Esq., of Perry county, Ala.

MARRIED—On the evening of the 16th instant, by Rev. R. J. Harp, Mr. CHARLES ARMITAGE to MRS. LUCY FOSTER, of Lafourche Interior.

MARRIED—On the evening of the 19th inst., by Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, Mr. MATTHEW ALLEN to Miss JANE DIAMOND.

OBITUARY:

ROBERT FOSTER FREEMAN was born in Georgia, in 1816. He emigrated to Texas in 1852, and died on the 22d of July, 1853, aged 37 years.

He professed religion at a camp-meeting held near Fayettville, Ala., in his 18th year, and lived a consistent member of the M. E. Church, acting as a Class-leader for some ten years. During his last illness, his confidence in God was unshaken; at times his soul rejoiced in the love of God; he delighted to hear his friends sing the praises of God and join in prayer. A short time before his departure he called his family, and relations, and friends around his bed and exhorted them to be faithful to the service of God. He assured them that the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ was sufficient to support us in the trying hour of death, and thus fell asleep.

* * *

DIED—Of consumption, Nov. 30th, 1853, in the Parish of Natchitoches, Miss LOUISIANA SMITH, in the 16th year of her age. She was the eldest daughter of Capt. Wm. and Sarah Smith, whose house for many years has been a home for the Methodist itinerant, and familiar to many of the Louisiana Conferences.

Among her earliest impressions was that of religion. With a high degree of intellectual training, her tastes and habits had been moulded into a perfect conformity to the principles of Christianity; serene and tranquil as a lake embosomed in the mountains, reflecting with twilight mildness a sweet and joyous light over her whole short life. It is high praise, but not too high to say that cheerfulness and goodness never found their dwelling within a lovelier form.

Notwithstanding her pious impressions in early life, she did not unite with the Church until about three months before she died, under the labors of Rev. Wm. Manly. From that time her leading thoughts were of Heaven; her absorbing desire that she might be prepared for its enjoyments. As her symptoms grew worse, she was called to reflect upon their issue; and that she might depart in perfect peace. She prayed her parents to forgive her, if in anything she had ever been disobedient. Of course this was done with all the gratitude of their hearts. A short time before she closed her eyes in death, she expressed an entire resignation to the will of God, and felt no ties of earth stronger than those of Heaven. True, she loved her parents dearly, but she comforted them by a reasonable hope in Christ, that their loss was her gain. As a last token of tenderest regard, she requested the whole family separately to meet her in Heaven. And while the graces of the spirit dwelt upon her lips, she closed her eyes. The sweet expressive features evinced that she had only "fallen asleep in Christ."

T. N. M.

☞ Natchitoches Chroniole please copy.

DIED, At the residence of her father, Rev. M. D. Thomason, Toulminville, Ala., on the 13th Jan., 1854, Miss JULIETTE A. THOMASON, aged 24 years and 6 days.

She was, in a very peculiar and forcible sense, the subject of affliction. A severe illness in early childhood, came near depriving her of the power of speech, and left, as a legacy to the unfortunate, a weak and enfeebled constitution for life. When only nine years old, God converted her soul and sustained her through all the trials of life. A short time before she died, she told me she was not conscious of any intentional or criminal backslidings: that the presence of God in her heart had kept her in continued peace.

The preaching of the word, prayer meetings, class meetings, love feasts and the holy sacrament, she paid strict attention to. Her associate teachers and the scholars can well attest the regularity and punctuality of her attendance upon the Toulminville Sabbath School. Her ministrations around the couches of the sick and dying were unceasing, and of the kindest character. During the prevalence of the dreadful epidemic last season, she was more than a Sister of Charity—she was an angel of mercy. In this work of love, self was entirely lost sight of, so absorbed was she in promoting the comfort of others. While thus engaged, the fever laid hold on her delicate frame, and for nearly four months has she been called to battle with the destroyer. Her many friends—and who was not her friend?—engaged hands and hearts to comfort the afflicted. I frequently visited her and engaged in devotional services in her room. To me it proved that "it is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting."

When the final conflict came, she was as calm as a summer evening, and undaunted she met the last enemy. Fully equipped with the whole armor of God, she entered the dark valley grappling with the foe, and ascending from the shores of time, she sent back to her anxious friends a note of victory in her last words: "All right!"

T. W. MATTHEWS.

☞ Nashville and Louisville Christian Advocate please copy.

DR. YOUNG.—Whipple, the lecturer, says that Dr. Young, the author of Night Thoughts, was in society a brisk, lively man; that his main theme was the nothingness of worldly things, but that his favorite pursuit was rank and riches. From this and other illustrations which his cites, he concludes that a man of letters is often a man with two natures—one a book nature, and the other a human nature; for Seneca wrote in praise of poverty on a table made of solid gold, with two millions of pounds let out at usury.

MELANCHOLY COINCIDENCE.—The ill-fated steamer San Francisco cleared from New York December 17th, and we find on examining the Shipping List, that on the same day the following ships cleared, all of which have met a similar fate: Ships Commerce, Singapoore and Borneo, besides ship Saxony disabled, and put into Halifax.

NOTICES.

NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT, QUARTERLY MEETING.

Felicity street; Sacrament Jan. 27, L. Feast 30, Q. Conf. 31.

New Orleans Circuit: Feb. 5, at Algiers, L. F. 3 P. M., Q. C. 4th, 5 P. M.

McGehee: Feb. 12, L. F. 13th, Q. C. 7th.

Germon Missions, Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4: Feb. 19, at Piety street, L. F. 3 P. M., Q. C. 17th, at Dryades street.

Thibodeaux: Feb. 25th and 26th.

Wesley, Soule and Wiams Chapels: Q. C. Feb. 10, L. F. 12th, 3 P. M.

Lafourche and Bayou Black Circuit and Mission: March 4th and 5th, at Donaldsonville.

Plaquemine and Pointe Coupee: March 11th and 12th, at Plequemine, also Protracted Meeting at Pointe Coupee March 25th and 26th.

Baton Rouge: March 18th and 19th.

Moreau street: April 2, L. F. 3d, Q. C. March 30th.

J. C. KEENER, P. E.

Quarterly Conferences for Montgomery District:

Salem Station,	Jenuery 7—8
Tuskegee,	"	14—15
Auburn,	"	21—22
Crawford Circuit,	"	28—29
S. Uchee and N Uchee Cel. Miss.	"	28—29
Montgomery Circuit,	February	4—5
Montgomery Colored Mission,	"	....
Montgomery Station,	"	11-12
Montgomery Colored Charge,	"	....
Catomen Colored Mission,	"	....
Tuskegee Circuit,	"	18—19
Andrew Colored Mission,	"	....
Hayneville,	"	25—26
Big Swamp Mission,	"	....
Orion Circuit,	March	4—5
Union Circuit,	"	11-12
Lafayette,	"	18—19

S. ARMSTRONG, P. E.

First round of Quarterly Meetings in Columbus District, Alabama Conference:

Eutaw, January 14 and 15,		1854.
Forkland and Pine Grove, Jan. 21 and 22,		"
Columbus Station, February 4 and 5,		"
Ahens Circuit,	" 11 and 12,	"
Mt. Zion Circuit,	" 18 and 19,	"
Buttahatchie	" 25 and 26,	"
Columbus Circuit, March, 4 and 5,		"
Pickens	" 11 and 12,	"
Greene	" 18 and 19,	"

Notice to Teachers.

THE PLAQUEMINE FEMALE SEMINARY is now closed in consequence of the removal of the late Principal, and it is desired to procure a suitable person to open and conduct a Female School of a high order.

The buildings are large and commodious, capable of accommodating at least fifty boarding scholars.

The location is one of the best in the State and will command a good school if well managed.

Any gentleman wishing to embark in the business can get further information on the subject by addressing the undersigned, forwarding statement of qualifications and reference. EDWARD J. GAY.

Plaquemine, Iberville Parish, La., Jan. 2, 1853.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Squnre first insertion	$1 00
Each subsequent insertion	50
One Square, one year	15 00
One Square, six months	10 00
Two Squares, one year	25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

General Intelligence.

MARINE DISASTERS ON THE FLORIDA REEF.—Twenty-eight vessels, it appears from a record kept at Key West, were wrecked on the Florida reef during the last year, and twenty-nine arrived at Key West in distress. The estimated value of these vessels and their cargoes was $2,082,850, of which only about $330,000 was the loss of underwriters. The amount paid for salvage was $17,350, and for repairing, etc., $155,750.

RIVERS RISING.—We understand from several late arrivals that all the upper tributaries are rising, and that there is much improvement in the lower. The Yazoo and the Wabash are both filling their channels and making ready for the freights which await their rise.

GEORGIA U. S. SENATOR.—A dispatch from the Savannah Georgian, dated Milledgeville, says:

The balloting for United States Senator was resumed this morning with the following result in the 12th ballot: McDonald, 30; Dawson, 98; McAllister, 99

McDonald's chances for the Senatorship are improving, although the friends of Dawson are confident of his success. Cobb's defeat is certain.

SUBSTITUTE FOR METROPOLITAN HALL.—The new Opera House at New York will have a magnificent room designed as a ball-room, of capacity exceeding that of the hall just burnt. Its dimensions will be 107 by 93 feet, and it will have three galleries, or are more than Metropolitan Hall. The latter would seat but 4000 persons, whereas the Opera House concert-room will accommodate 4500 with seats, and admit an audience of 5000 persons, crowded. The room will be superbly decorated. The floor will oscillate on pivots in the centre, by simply removing blocks at the sides, and all the seats may be removed or replaced in a short time by adjusting screws in the bottoms. The Opera House will cost about $25,000, exclusive of the ground.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT—By and with the advice and consent of the Senate—William Crosby, of Ohio, to be Consul of the United States for the port of Talcahuano, in Chili. Thomas Rainey, of New York, to be Consul of the United States for the Republic of Bolivia.

A REMARKABLE PASSAGE.—The yacht schooner Pride of the Seas, of New York, made the trip from that port to Melbourne in eighty-six days. Her passage from the Cape to Melbourne was two days the shortest of any on record.

IMMENSE FRAUDS ON THE REVENUE.—The New York Times states that it has been ascertained that several reputable merchants in that city have lately perpetrated immense frauds on the government by smuggling costly goods from Europe; and that on the 13th inst. a custom house officer obtained a search-warrant for the store of Messrs. Lovejoy & Bro., and made a seizure of diamond stones, watches, pearls and other costly foreign articles of jewelry, claimed to be smuggled through during the late voyages of the steamships Africa, Asia and Arabia, of the Cunard line. The property thus secured is valued at about $90,000. Another seizure was made in Jersey City, and consisted of nearly one hundred fine watches, a double handfull of diamonds and some other minteriuls of great value. The amount of the frauds, it is said, exceed $200,000.

Diamonds to the value of $60,000 were also seized on board the steamer Rattle the same day.

The steamer Alps has been under seizure, but was permitted to sail. Her steward, who was charged with smuggling, has absconded.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival of the Perseverance we have received late papers from Texas.

The Galveston News of the 20th has the following items:

The firmas is still very low with no appearance of rise, and the water is perfectly clear and transparent, the reddish turbid character having entirely disappeared. This is quite a rare phenomenon in the Brazos and one that has seldom been witnessed by the earliest settlers. We have never heard any satisfactory answer assigned for it.

Late accounts represent the Trinity river as rising at some points. The recent unsettled weather here affords some ground to hope there may have been some rain up the country, which may render our rivers navigable.

From an extra of the San Antonio Western Texan, of the 15th, we copy the following intelligence from El Paso:

The mail from Santa Fe and El Paso arrived here about noon. With it come Lieut. Thomas, formerly of the U. S. Army, who goes to Austin for the purpose of delivering to Gov. Pease important communications from Gen. Merriwether, of New Mexico, in relation to Indian affairs in that territory. We are not officially informed of the precise nature of the mission of Mr. Thomas, but it is not a far fetched supposition that the object is to effect a co-operation between this State and the territory of New Mexico in case of serious difficulties with the Comanche Indians—difficulties which, under the present aspect of affairs, may be anticipated at any moment.

Gen. Garland is at El Paso. He is bringing the troops stationed in New Mexico around him in such a manner as to be able, within four or five days, to concentrate them at any point for any emergency—either to repel or make an attack.

It is generally believed in that section of the country that another war between Mexico and the United States is inevitable.

Everything is at present quiet in the Mesilla Valley. It is the understanding between the two Governments that no troops shall be stationed there while negotiations are pending.

Mr. Gadsden, our Minister in Mexico, has addressed five several communications to Gen Garland, using the Mexican mails for their transmission. Four out of the five had been broken and resealed when they reached the General, who has intimated to the Minister to send all future communications of importance by special express.

Latter from Mexico.

By the arrival of the schooner Red Fox at this port, from Vera Cruz, we have received papers from the city of Mexico to the 7th of January.

Senor Anne publishes a decree by which the pay given to the Deputies and Senators ceased as soon as the General Congress of the State legislature ceased to exist. Judicial cases which were pending before the late changes in the Courts will be transferred to corresponding ones under the new system.

By another decree, it is ordered that the Governors of the Departments shall preserve the title of "Excellency;" the Prefects of Districts and the political Chiefs of Territories that of "Signori," the members of the Municipal Assemblies of Mexico, and of Vera Cruz shall be entitled "Excellency;" those of the Departments and Territories that of "Very illustrious," and those of inferior towns, "Illustrious."

The old District of Aguascallentes has been re-erected into a Department.

Another decree establishes a new Commissariat of Imports, direct and indirect, and organizes completely all the branches of that service.

Another decree regulates the national tax upon playing-cards, and the service and organization of the government manufactories of these small libraries of the devil.

An order of the Secretary of War forbids all dismissal of soldiers except where they have become disabled or their term of service has expired.

The Siglo of the 4th says that it is understood that his Serene Highness the President is about to make a journey to the Department of Vera Cruz; and that he will reside, for some days at one of his country seats, accompanied by two of his Ministers, the other four remaining in the capital. The Siglo, however, cautiously adds that it personally knows nothing about the matter.

The Eco del Commercio of Vera Cruz recommends a project for a canal between Vera Cruz and Alvarado. The work would be of great importance. Its cost is estimated by Senor Iberri, the engineer, at $143,000.

The office of Secretary of War still remains vacant, various candidates are spoken of, among whom is General Le Vega.

It is proposed to erect another column in honor of Santa Anna, in place of the not very admirable monument of 1842. It is proposed that it shall be an obelisk standing on a pedestal adorned with inscriptions, trophies and allegorical designs. The cost of the proposed work would be $76,000.

The Orden says, under date of the 28th of December, "We have seen a letter from Coloye which says that as a party consisting of two ladies and a gentleman, Marie Antonio, Marie Tapen and Jose Maria Manoyed, were passing from that place to the house of Donna Margaretta Melino De Castro, aunt of the two first, a body of robbers fell upon them firing six times at them. Donna Maria Antonia and Don Jose Maria were badly wounded, and Donna Marie Tapen was killed on the spot."

The Universal publishes the following:

"Indemnities claimed of the United States for Damages done by the Indians. With this important object has been established in this capital, under the auspices of the Supreme Government, an agency destined to facilitate the means which may be most effective for the above purpose. It will be represented by sub-agents in the departments of Tamaulipas, New Leon, Coahuila, Chihuahua, Durango, Sonora and Zacatecas. It will communicate with the North American Government through the Mexican Legation at Washington. Don Jose Cristobal Remeltas, and Don Vicent Lenches Vergara, Counsellors of State, will be at the head of the establishment.

"The sub-agents will collect of the planters and other persons who may have claims of this nature, the documentary evidence necessary to support them, making them first acquainted with the forms and terms required by the United States, in proof of injuries or losses inflicted by the Indians; these will afterwards be delivered to the agency in order that it may have offered to the papers the attestations necessary to authenticate papers that are to go abroad.

"There needs no commentary on these reasons. Heretofore the efforts made by a few claimants have been very costly and one of a doubtful success. Nor have the greater part of those who have been injured been able to make applications. The agency, on the contrary, reacts no advances, and, aided by the influence of the Government and our Legation at Washington, counts on greater probabilities of success.

"The Government will speedily publish notices designating the sub-agents in the departments which have sus-red."

Notice of political amnesties extended to various offenders is published in the Siglo and other papers. The newspapers continued to call for other like pardons; which, indeed, Santa Anna seems seldom to refuse.

Speaking of the Mesilla Valley and of the new treaty, the Trait d'Union says the Convention concluded between Mexico and the United States, cedes to the latter the Valley of Mesilla; and further, contends for a compensation the eleventh Article of the treaty of Guadaloupe, which imposes on the United States the duty of repressing Indian ravages upon our population." The Trait d'Union adds, that it cannot state the exact amount of the sum which the United States are to pay, but that it is reported at from $18,000,000 to $26,000,000.

The official journal of New Leon gives notice of the annual fair at Sluces, extending from the 22d of February to the 1st of March. During all that time there will be daily "bull fights of the best cattle, fireworks, solemn worship in the church of our lady of Guadaloupe and other disgusting shows."

An order of the 28th December was issued to the Departments, except those of Puebla, Jalisco Oaxaca and Vera Cruz to establish electric telegraphs, communicating with the line already in existence. We believe that line extends through the Departments just mentioned.

European Intelligence.

By the mails of yesterday we received the foreign news brought to New York by the Europe. From the New York papers we copy the following intelligence:

GREAT BRITAIN.—Letters have been received in Dublin from Mr. Smith O'Brien, written at New Norfolk, bearing date the 18th of September, three days later than the date assigned for his escape. The reports of his escape, emanating from Limerick, are therefore destitute of foundation.

The London Times has commenced a series of elaborate papers on the seventh census of the United States.

Parliament was ordered to be further prorogued from the 3d of January until Tuesday, the 31st of January, 1854, and a proclamation was at the same time issued, summoning both Houses to meet on that day, "for the dispatch of public business."

On the 25th of December, the waters of St. James's Park were so strongly frozen over that four thousand persons were skating and otherwise amusing themselves upon the ice. On the Serpentine, about 3,000; on the "Long Water," Kensington Gardens, 800; on the "Round Pond," 1250, while on the Regent's Park the ice swarmed with partakers in these pastimes.

On the 23th of December, the screw steamer Era, from Greenock to Ameriet, founders, about fifteen miles from Lambey, on the Irish coast. Only seven of the crew were saved. The captain, his wife, and her sister, the second mate and five seamen were drowned.

Alexander Smith, the newly discovered poet, author of "A Life Drama, etc.," is a candidate for the Secretaryship of Edinburgh University.

Charles Dickens read his "Christmas Carol" and "Cricket on the Hearth," in the Townhall at Birmingham, on the 28th ult., in aid of the fund of the Birmingham and Midland Institute.

A petition is in progress for a Charter of Incorporation of the Central American Steam Navigation Company.

Two railway accidents are recorded during the week. The first happened on the Lancashire and Yorkshire railway, between Liverpool and Manchester, where an express ran into a passenger train, and smashed several of the cars, but without throwing them off the track. One young lady was killed and several other persons were wounded. The other casualty occurred on the Taff Vale Railway, Wales, where the rope that drew the cars up an inclined place broke, and the whole train fell back, and running over the embankment, plunged into the river Taff. Several persons were injured, but strange to say, only two were killed.

Col. Brownlow Villiers, formerly Member of Parliament for Carlow, Ireland, committed suicide at Dublin, on the 27th ult., by cutting his throat. Verdict, temporary insanity.

The New Quarterly Review has a long and able article in favor of continuing the search for Sir John Franklin and his men. Everything (says the article) indicates that they will be found by prosecuting the search of Wellington Channel.

FRANCE.—The Moniteur publishes a decree abolishing the restrictions imposed by the rescript of the 8th of February, 1826, on raw cotton imported into France from Great Britain and the British possessions in Europe. According to the said rescript the produce of Asia, Africa and America, sent from England and her European possessions into French ports, was to be admitted for re-exportation only.

The Emperor has expressed to the Mayor of St. Germains his intention of restoring the palace of St. Germains.

The following seditious placard we found posted on Christmas night in several parts of Pera: "The tyrant, to amuse public opinion, which is manifesting itself against him, is preparing a coup de police. Let ill-good citizens be on their guard."

SPAIN.—Accounts from Madrid of the 24 inst. state that the Queen's confinement was daily expected.

Napoleon III. has conferred the decoration of grand officer of the Legion of Honor on S. Calderon de la Barca, on the occasion of the conclusion of the literary treaty with France. This treaty is limited among other things, to stop the American trade in Spanish books via Paris.

RUSSIA.—Gen. Radowitz died at Berlin, at noon on Christmas day. He has left a very large circle of loving friends, and the whole German public has long been accustomed to regard him as one of the celebrities of the Times.

Count Pourtales, formerly Prussian minister at Constantinople, is in London on a special mission relative to the Eastern question.

ITALY.—There has been a threatening riot at Barge, Piedmont. It does not appear to have had a political origin, but was connected with the high price of corn. The rioters seized several sacks of maize in the market, but they were finally dispersed by the military.

SWEDEN AND NORWAY—Stockholm, Dec 16—King Oscar has invited the Diet to nominate a small number of its members possessing its entire confidence, to whom, as a secret committee, the Government may make an important communication.

It is believed that the Government wishes, in this unceremonious manner, to bring some momentous facts connected with foreign affairs to the knowledge of the Diet.

The King has re-organized the Admiralty department of the military and naval administration, with a view to securing greater unity and efficiency in the event of hostilities.

Berlin, Dec 24—Diplomatic negotiations are pending between the Governments of Sweden and Denmark, having for their object the conclusion of an league, offensive and defensive, between the two States. Sweden is arming by sea and land, and Denmark will immediately fortify her coasts and place Copenhagen in a state of defense.

There are eleven daily newspapers in San Francisco.

Arrival of the Steamship United States.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

IMPORTANT FROM LOWER CALIFORNIA

LATER FROM OREGON AND WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The steamship United States, Capt. Lucas, from Aspinwall on the 18th, arrived at this port on last Tuesday evening at 6 o'clock, having made the river in five days and twenty hours. She brings one hundred passengers and $51,000 in treasure.

The Ohio was to sail for New York the succeeding day with three hundred passengers and $1,000,000.

The sloop of war Albany, Capt. Berry, arrived at Aspinwall on the 14th and sailed on the 17th for San Juan.

The United States brings the mails received at Panama the 17th, by the Oregon from San Francisco the 1st.

Advices had been received from Walker's party to the 16th December. The accounts received are very contradictory. All agree, however, in saying that the Filibusters were besieged in the adobe house by about one hundred Mexicans and Indians from the 5th to the night of the 14th, when they being a cold rain falling the party of the Filibusters attacked the chilled and drowsy besiegers, who fled, leaving arms, horses, a brass field piece and all their camp equipages. The Filibusters deny having robbed and pillaged the natives. The Anita had not arrived; she was seen off San Pedro on the 21st, and would probably arrive at Ensenada about the 25th. It was expected that immediately upon their arrival a descent would be made upon San Tomas.

A rumor was current in San Diego that after the events above mentioned, Walker's command had been captured by an overpowering force of the regular Mexican army, which had been recently landed in Lower California, and were being conducted as prisoners to Sonora, when the force under Col. Watkins, comprising 280 men, opportunately arrived at Ensenada, and engaged the Mexicans utterly routing them, capturing much of their baggage some guns, making prisoner of the Mexican General, and liberating Col. Walker's party.

The Alta California of the 31st ult. has the following

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE FORTNIGHT.

The politicians are busy in speculating upon the course of the Legislature, which will meet on the 2d, in regard to the Senatorial question, removal of the Capital, Stamp Act, Extension, and some other proposed measures very interesting to individuals. In Klamath Valley there is a pretty strong feeling for the formation of a new State, to reach from the Umpqua to Cape Mendocino. We believe that the people south of the Umpqua Valley prefer to remain under the present government; and this movement for a new State is looked upon as premature. It will be proper enough when the proposed territory shall possess sufficient territory to become a State. The present population may be 10,000.

There is some excitement prevailing on the subject of the land speculating practiced under the School Land Warrants issued by this State, and memorials will be addressed to Congress on the subject.

The Stockton Journal appeared as a daily on the 28th, and two other dailies are to be established within this week. A week ago the only papers were two tri-weeklies. With these the total number of daily papers in the State will be twenty.

The Sacramento prostitute, Ida Brower, who murdered Mary Bee, has been tried and acquitted in the face of all law and evidence, to the general surprise and indignation. The papers are passing round the names of the jurymen.

A paper is to be started at Crescent City. A newtown has been laid out on the coast about fifteen miles above that place.

The farmers are sowing a great deal of wheat, particularly in the southern portion of the State, which is now beginning to prosper as a farming country.

Superintendent Beale is at the Tejon Reserve, and has his Indians busy putting in large fields in grain and small vegetables. He has 30 plows going. The Indians pretend to be highly pleased with the home chosen for them and the treatment they receive. Lieut. Beale treated them to a great fiesta, or celebration, which was attended by several thousand Indians from all the tribes in the South of the State.

The people of San Diego began on the 8th to celebrate for two weeks the day of the [illegible] with bull fights, ceremonies, balls, &c. [illegible] seriously brought into requisition.

It is reported that [illegible] filibusters are in the course of formation [illegible] points in the interior.

A singular mortality is raging [illegible] birds and beasts. Many sea gulls, pelicans, chickens, [illegible], dogs and cats, have been taken sick and have died; the deaths among the sea birds being very numerous.

The surveying party sent out by the Railroad Convention, which examined the Sierra Nevada at the head of the Stanislaus, have reported that there is a practicable pass there.

All the Pacific Railroad surveying parties have arrived. The engineers speak highly of the southern route, and the general opinion in the State is in its favor. Lieut. Parke has started overland by the Gila for Washington.

The has been some difficulty with the Four Creek Indians. One of them committed a crime, and the chief have been arrested until they deliver over the offender. In taking the chiefs several Indians were killed.

THE MINES.

The weather has been delightful during the fortnight, with the exception of one or two days of rain. The miners are very much dissatisfied at there being far from enough water to fill the canals or to permit washing in the small gulches. The dry weather, however, has driven the miners to work in the banks, which in some places have been found to be very productive. Tunneling is coming more and more into practice. In several cases, by punching with the ancient bed of rivers and gulches have been discovered under the hills, and have been found to be very rich.

The news from the Klamath mines is very favorable.

New diggins have been found on one of the eastern head branches of the Sacramento.

The Tuolumne Hydralic Company is involved in an apparently endless lawsuit.

The Quartz Creek Canal, a work some twenty miles in length, which is intended to furnish water to some of the richest and most extensive dry diggins in the State, is progressing rapidly and will soon be completed.

Great numbers of Chilooneu have gone to Chasta, and the miners are talking of rising to expel them.

There is a growing feeling that some legislation will be necessary to define more clearly the rights of miners and mining companies.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The city has been lively during the fortnight.

On the 17th news arrived that the Filibusters still, managed to maintain themselves at Ensenada. A good deal of excitement prevailed, but there has been no aid sent to them since the affair left. Reports are in circulation that another vessel is being fitted out, but it is doubtful; since public opinion and the press are disposed to consider the expedition and its objects as criminal, not by the letter of the law only, but likewise by the spirit.

The exports of gold for the year as manifested in the Custom-house, was $67,878,505. The total product of the mines during the five years ten months and a half, since the discovery, is estimated at $250,000 000

The arrivals of passengers by sea during the year, as shown by the Custom-house records, have been 35,185 and the departures 30,316; the population having thus increased 4,869.

During the year 1028 vessels, of 555 794 tons, entered this harbor, and 1,091, of 635,489 tons cleared, being an increase of 22 per cent. on last year. San Francisco claims to be the second commercial city in the Union.

A couple of very large auction sales of water property belonging to the city and State were made on the 28th and 29th. The property brought about 1,500,000. It plainly showed that the confidence of the people in the future prosperity of the city is higher than ever.

A new license ordinance was passed on the 28th by the Council. It does not tax merchants or bankers.

A German Society to encourage immigration has been formed.

On the 19th an election was held for Senator in place of Brannan, resigned. D. S. Mahoney was elected by about 3040 majority.

Peter Gilgrass, a Frenchman, was shot in a row at the Mission, on the 20th. Three persons, one of them a policeman, are bound over for trial.

On the 23d Henry Smith was sentenced to twenty years in the Penitentiary for robbery. It appeared by the testimony that he was in the habit of watching at the Intelligence offices, and of taking persons in search of employment out of the city as pretenses of giving them work, and when out in the hills or brush he would knock them down and take their money. The verdict has been received with much satisfaction.

The works for the fortification of the harbor have been commenced on Alcatraz Island and Fort Point. The former position will have 40 heavy guns, the latter 160. Another appropriation is wanted for the completion of the fortifications. The works on Lime Point, opposite Fort Point, have not been commenced.

The Welsh Presbyterians are about to build a church in which the services may be conducted in their own language.

OREGON.

Dates to the 24th December are received from Oregon. The Oregon papers of the 24th say that sufficient snow was on the ground to give it a white covering.

The New England celebration, on the 22d November, at Portland, was an interesting reunion, according to the Oregonian.

The Season.—The exceeding mildness of the winter so far has been of great advantage to the grain of fall sowing. Wheat everywhere, we are told, looks remarkably well. [Spectator.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The total population of Washington territory, as reported by the United States Marshal, Col. Anderson, is 3,965, including this year's emigration.

Gen. Stevenson has recently issued his proclamation through the columns of the Pioneer. The day for the election of members of the Legislature and the first delegate for the Territory is to take place on the 29th of January, 1854, between the hours of 9 A. M. and 6 P. M. The Council will be composed of 9 members, and the House of Representatives of 18 members.

Political parties are being organized in Washington Territory, previous to the election in January. Col. J. P. Anderson, Mr. Chenoweth and Hon. William Strong are candidates for the position of Congressional Delegate.

Later from South America, Australia and the Isthmus of Panama.

By the arrival of the United States on Tuesday, we have received Panama papers of the 17th inst. and Valparaiso of the 15th December, which contain later news from South America and Australia.

PERU.—The principal items of interest from South America are from Peru. Four provincial districts have proclaimed for one Linares against Echeedique, the acting President, who had left the Seat of Government for the suppression of the movement.

Don Domingo Elias had collected nearly 2,000 men, had seized government arms and ammunition, and had been reinforced by a considerable number of government troops who had gone over to him. Some $500,000 had been sent on board a vessel at Callao, by the government, and it was generally believed that it would all be handed over to Elias. Elias is said to have declared that he did not want the Presidency. Gen. Castilla and Gen. Ducetus are among those spoken of for the Presidency.

The feeling of those who act is so strong against the government—and that of those who do not, so indifferent—that it is believed it will be deposed with but a very slight struggle.

Peru has done nothing against Bolivia as yet, at least nothing open.

No news of importance from Chili.

Ecuador.—The Ecuadorian Congress has gone so far as ready to destroy the agreement with British holders of Peruvian bonds.

FROM AUSTRALIA.

By the arrival of the British steamer Regota at Panama, from Valparaiso, the Herald of that place of the 1st November I.

The journals are occupied in discussing the new constitution. In the meantime Executive should [illegible] of Victoria. It is proposed that the united respectively, the one of two Chambers to be designated Senate. A correspondent says the House of Representatives and the Senate, "the American model and the Sydney Morning Herald than the British."

Capt. Cadell's expedition has successfully navigated the Murray river to one hundred miles beyond the Swan Hill.

Port Phillip gold is quoted at £3 15s. 6d. to £3 17s. 6d. New South Wales £3 14s 9d to £3 15s.

Great excitement was caused at the Ovens diggings, by reported large finds at the Buffalo Ranges, and numbers had left for that place. The weather was such as to prevent extended operations at the diggings.

A monster petition had been sent to the Governor for the Queen, against the new constitution, to which she had given no decisive answer.

The legislative council had strongly expressed itself against the supplementary expenditures.

The gold regulations are highly satisfactory to the diggers generally. There are some districts, however, where the police had to arrest unlicensed diggers.

THE FIELD.—The general report from the mines is unfavorable, but there are few exceptions.

Labor still continues to demand and the agricultural districts. The rush to the mines causes a complete drain. Good mechanics and domestic servants in great request.

The Sydney Herald of the 1st of November has the following paragraphs:

NEW CALEDONIA.—The French have taken possession of this beautiful group. On the 23d of September, the French war steamer Phoque arrived there from Tahiti. The vessel is understood to be under orders from the Commander-in-Chief of the South Pacific Station. The John Fort Jackson yesterday, has brought up two French officers; one of them an officer belonging to the Administration, and the other attached to the above French war Steamer, for the purpose of purchasing supplies for the new French settlements. The American vessel which has been chartered for the purpose, and is only ten days from New Caledonia, will return in mediately.

The increase of the revenue of New South Wales, for the quarter ending September 30, is £91,018.

FROM THE ISTHMUS.

The transit from Aspinwall to Panama is now made in seven hours.

The ship Ben Nevis arrived at Aspinwall, says the Courier, on the 8th instant, from Cork, after a fine run of thirty days. She had on board 360 Irish laborers for the Panama Railroad, all of whom were in perfect health.

The Aspinwall Courier learns that the U. S. sloop of war Cyane was to leave Carthagena in a few days for Port Escocos, with the Corps of Engineers and other agent to explore the route for an Oceanic Canal across the Isthmus of Darien.

A Masonic Lodge is soon to be opened in Aspinwall.

The Panama Herald has dates from Bogota to the 24th of Dec. It says:

Gen. Cerbeleon Pinzon has been named Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

Gen. O'Leary, the British Minister, has returned to Bogota to resume his official duties.

Mr. Orton, Charge d'Affairs from the United States Government, presented his credentials on the 10th, and on the 20th the exequatur was granted for the appointment of Col. Thomas W. Ward, as United States Consul at Panama, and George W. Fletcher, as Consul at Aspinwall.

Col. Cadwalader with 200 soldiers and 50 pioneers, has been ordered to join the Darien expedition, and will leave Carthagene by the next steamer.

The Aspinwall Courier of the 17th has the following items:

We are authorised to say that Mr Fletcher, the U. S. Consul at this place, has received his Exequator from the Department of State of New Granada.

The first steamer of the Australian Pacific Mail Steam Pocket Company is appointed to be dispatched on the 16th of January. On arrival at Sydney she will take up her position on the Pacific to open the Panama line.

The Panama Railroad is progressing more rapidly than ever before—the best employees of the Company are outdoing themselves, and surpassing their own promises or expectation. Instead of twenty-four miles, the train is running with regularity daily thirty miles. There is no sickness among the laborers. This fact, the recent large accessions of horses and the alacrity and tact with which all portions of the road under work are now advancing, give us every confidence of its completion during the coming autumn.

By a new law of the New Granada Congress, which came into effect on the 1st inst., the owners or consignees of vessels carrying passengers to or from the port of Aspinwall, are taxed ten per cent on their estimated profits. The steamships have all ceded to, or rather paid this tax since its imposition, both here and at Panama. This will secure a considerable annual income to the New Grenadine Government, to the amount of some $50 000.

The taxes of our city have been raised from the ratio of last year, and we hear it rumored that our City Council intend to impose several additional heavy impositions, and that the Railroad Company will come in for a share.

The rents of buildings in our city have been reduced very much during the past season, and justly too, for they were formerly exorbitant indeed. We recommend our friends among the owners to reduce still more, if necessary to secure occupancy, for they must bear in mind that their rapid decay will scarcely permit much in be made of them by the time their lease runs out, and they decay more when empty than with even an ordinarily careful occupant.

The Panama Herald says that by the British mail steamship which left that port on the 7th inst for Caltao, [illegible] proceeded with the intention [illegible] going to the Amazon for exploring [illegible] districts, which the Peruvian papers give so favorable a [illegible] stunt.

From the Panama Herald of the 17th, we learn that dispatches received there the day previous from Com. Pawcet, of H. M.'s ship Virago, dated Jan. 7, state, that the boat four men, three of whom had been murdered by the Indians—and one was missing. Com. P. with twenty men, having explored to the Cordilleras, found on his return three dead bodies near a provision depot, where he had stationed four men. He has cut a good road and well marked twelve stations.

The Virago was to sail immediately for Valparaiso.

Don Jose Maria Urrutia Anino entered on his duties as Governor of the Province of Panama on the 1st inst.

From the New York Herald of the 14th.

Loss of the Steamship San Francisco.

Full particulars of the Disaster—Nearly Two Hundred Lives Lost—Noble conduct of a British and two American Captains.

After a painful suspense of several days we have received news of the fate of the steamship San Francisco, and those who left this port in her for California. The British ship Three Bells, Capt. Creighton, arrived last night, with the sad intelligence of the total loss of the San Francisco, with about two hundred lives, and the joyful news of the saving of over five hundred—officers of the crew, their wives, passengers, soldiers, and officers and crew of the steamer.

The details of the terrible disaster are given in the following:

STATEMENT OF LIEUTENANT WINDER, U. S. ARMY.

SHE TAKES FIRE. At 8 o'clock, Friday Jan. 6, 1854 the steamer San Francisco, as you are aware, sailed from New York on the 22d of December, with United States troops, bound for California. The day was beautiful, and every thing promised a pleasant and prosperous voyage. The ship was well provided with every thing which could render us comfortable, and every luxury that could be procured was placed on board. All these things, together with the gentlemanly and efficient officers of the ship, and pleasant company in the cabin, served to render

The New Orleans Christian Advocate

...By Joseph Holman Dashe.

...to their sight,
...sion of very there,
...ge of the lake,
...blended white
...intening light.
...in the sun
...down,
...hand
...land;
...cloud,
...form,
...ge loud
...driven,
...of the storm,
...of heaven
...then His given
...of the free,
...rushes,
...ather,
...of war;
...shall dy,
...high,
...tone,
...and wet,
...and mist,
...gently turn,
...ly moment;
...born glorious morn;
...ge trance,
...vengeance from the glance,
...the battle shroud,
...and fall
...of death on midnight's pall!
...my master glances glow,
...then shall shrines below
...of death...to!

On ocean's wave
...and home!
...Pilgrim
...to valor given;
...lift the welkin dome,
...were born in heaven.
...that standard sheet!
...ather the foe but falls before us,
...God beneath our feet,
...Freedom's banner streaming o'er us!

...nteresting About Newspapers.

...manage things strangely about news-...in London, and by reason of this man-...t get the Times daily, for little or noth-...The modus operandi is thus described: ...ou subscribe at a newspaper hall for it to be left for you at nine o'clock—for, say one hour. Punctually at ten, the person of whom you hire it calls, and furnishes the same number to some other customer who wants it at that hour. At eleven o'clock, another gets it, and so on, frequently until twelve or one, and even as late as two or so. You can have it furnished thus by the week, month, quarter or year. It is left promptly at the hour bargained for, and you must expect to give it up on "sight call." Perhaps you are in the middle of the Paris correspondence, or the debates, or late foreign intelligence. It makes no difference; you must stop when your hour is out, or buy an extra copy.

...the city readers are through with the ... it is mailed off to the country. You are ...to cut the paper, and if it becomes defaced must pay for it. In Liverpool, well-to-do people will climb for one copy of the daily Times, and a phlegmatic John Bull will read the paper the day after his neighbor, for years, perfectly satisfied to exist one day behind the ...

America every man has, or ought to have, his own paper. It must come to him fresh and untouched. He reads it thoroughly, and it becomes part of his existence. He talks about ...s news, and is proud of its success. ...field of competition is created. A ... of merit and enterprise is sure of success, ... advertiser is a living, talking, walking advertisement and special agent.

A man never values a paper he gets for nothing. There is something in the fact of having paid for it which gives it particular attraction in his eyes. He regards it as his property, looks upon the editor as merely a person serving his (the subscriber's) business.

...is a great deal in the well-known face ... A man who is devoted to a journal ... read for years ceases to prize it if ... proprietor changes its appearance.

The editor himself may die or change; the ...oprietors may pass away, but the ... if it is still taken; its sentiments re...ed; its words listened to, and its news re...ed. A ... with a thousand subscribers ... ten thousand ... can revolutionize England is at the mercy ... In the United States, no one ... such way, but any paper, however ... if in the right, can crush any influence, ... powerful, if in the wrong.

...—The name of Garibaldi, whose ...ging the siege of Rome were so famous, ... more familiar in men's months, as if, ... storms are gathering in the horizon, ... great agitators carried with them some ... strange charm. The poor, and most unquestionably brave, fellow appears, since he left the gates of the Eternal City, to have led a life of romantic wandership. It seems that after the ... he collected some four or five thousand followers, and attempted to fight his way to the Adriatic, thus hoping, by sea, to reach Venice, where still lingered the last ray of Italian independence. Watched and dogged by the Austrians, he contrived to make his way to the little republic of San Marino, where many of his followers resigned their arms; the republic stooping to make terms for them with the Austrians. Terms were made only to be broken. The men were rendered prisoners, many of them shot, others flogged and sent to Mantua. Garibaldi himself, with about 300 followers, reached the shore, and, by the aid of some fishing boats, made for Venice. The night befriended them, ... whooping dawned, the wind fell, and two ... steamers were seen. Escape was ... possible; some of the boats were taken, ... ; only two reached Romini, in one ... which were Garibaldi and his wife, whom ... entreaties could induce to leave her husband. ... little band separated for better protection, ... the fatigue and sickness of Garibaldi's wife ... him to ask for water at the door of a ... cottage; his request was granted, but ... he lifted the draught to her lips she ex... Both he and the remnant of his band ... hunted through the forest like wild ... and few survived to tell the tale. Garibaldi himself, under innumerable disguises, ... his way through the Austrians, and ... arrived at Genoa, the place of his birth, ... these escaped to the United States. Correspondence N. Y. Herald.

...Sir Isaac Newton.—The following has appeared in the English journals:

Her Majesty and Prince Albert have signified their intention of subscribing £100 toward the erection of a monument to Grantham, in memory of Newton. The town of Grantham has raised £600 for this purpose."

The erection of the monument in memory of the immortal author of the Principia, did such a memory need a monument, is somewhat late, it seems to us. Her Majesty and Prince Albert might have made a better use of their money, by giving it to feed the hungry and clothe the naked; but still the object of the donation is one that cannot be disapproved, notwithstanding the fame of the man to be honored with a monument is far above, and far beyond, any possibility of being increased by brass or marble; for Newton might have said with at least as much—perhaps more—truth than Horace,

"Exegi monumentum Resilientius ære."

His fame will endure as long as the world probably; while it may happen that the Horace may one day go out of fashion, ... of it depends upon circumstances. ... may be variable. Not so with the ... Hers is based upon the discovery ... important truths—truths which will ... have stirred up the people of Grantham to the ... movement to Newton at this ... and thirty-five years ... appear. Perhaps they ... their neighbors, the Normans, ... a year or two ago to ... between seven and eight ... his death. We may next ... been erected at Athens to ... or some one of his many ... wished more than two thousand ... Washington Globe.

...Leather.—Russian Hides ... Oscar Pasha & Co., Exporters ... Molde-Wallachia.

Capabilities and Resources of Sonora.

The province of Sonora is bounded on the north by the river Gila, on the south by the river Majo, on the east by the province of Chihuahua, and on the west by the Gulf of California; its length being about seven hundred miles north and south, and in breadth about two hundred miles. It is covered by six streams, which are the principal ones only—all others being but mere arroyos, and losing themselves in the more arid districts, or entirely drying up during the summer season. A large portion of the coast lands are dry, barren, and rocky, with districts of several miles extent, entirely covered by sand or dry gravel. Farther in the interior, the soil becomes more arable; but land suitable for cultivation will not be found to any extent until some sixty to ninety miles from the coast; in the northern portion of the State, and commencing near the thirtieth parallel of north latitude, there is scarcely an acre of ground suited to agricultural purposes, except in some few isolated sections. After leaving Altar, traveling north, water becomes exceedingly scarce, and at the distance of one hundred miles north of that place, it is scarcely met with in a day's travel.

South of thirty degrees north latitude, and sixty or eighty miles from the coast, the land is the least favored with water is extremely fertile, and the plains and rolling grounds have an excellent supply of timber, the most of which is oak, with some varieties of the palm tribe intermingled, while the trees that skirt the streams are for the most part the cottonwood and willow. The oak predominates mostly upon the more elevated regions towards the mountains; and among them a variety occurs, the fruit of which is pleasant and agreeable, having much the flavor of the chesnut when ripe, and is often found for sale in the markets on both sides of the mountains. The Yanqui valley is by far the most valuable portion of Sonora, in an agricultural point of view, and is capable of producing all the varieties of fruits and grains that are grown in any part of the world.

This valley is about 130 miles in length, and with the lower hills at the base of the mountains is near seventy miles in breadth, but is used for scarcely any other purpose than that of grazing. The inhabitants generally cultivate but little more than is necessary for their immediate wants, and consequently have very little for sale; this consisting mostly of a small quantity of barley and corn, and, occasionally, wheat. In some of the gardens, the pear, olive, fig, and some few dates and tamarinde, are cultivated. Notwithstanding the natural capabilities of the indigenous trees of the country in producing fruits, but little attention is paid to their cultivation.

The mineral resources of the province are, perhaps, unequaled by any other part of Mexico; it contained the central, western and northern portions of that extensive series of metallic veins for which the republic of Mexico has been so truthfully noted in the history of the world; the product from these mines of silver alone amounting to about sixteen million dollars.

The extent of this mineral district will be better understood when it is stated that its length is not far from eight hundred miles, and about ninety-five in breadth; and follows the mountainous districts to their base, and in some instances into the plains. A line drawn through Pfombea, Villa Fuerta and extended to Culiacan on the south, and through Nacori, to Tucson on the north, will very nearly include the sections in which silver and gold is found. On the coast line of hills, large quantities of the ores of copper are known to abound, and many localities produce the native copper. The population of the province comprises about 55,000 persons. [San Francisco Traescript.

...The Canton River.—Of all the extraordinary scenes which can be witnessed, nothing can be more surprising or astounding to an European, than the appearance of the Canton river; for let him have traveled "far and wide," nought can give him an idea of the scene but ocular demonstration. Myriads of boats float on the waters, some devoted to handicraftmen of all descriptions; others to retailers of edibles, cooked and uncooked; boats laden with chests of tea piled one upon the other, tier above tier, until the eido of the boat is level with the water's edge; mandarin boats forcing their way authoritatively through the crowd; war junks at anchor; while here and there is an European boat, manned by sailors who give vent to their excited feelings by attering dry and divers ejaculations, not particularly complimentary to the good seamanship of the natives, or expressive of kindly feelings toward them. Flower boats, and others belonging to artisans, venders of food, peddlers, merchants, poultry and sand-pans, are wedged together in one solid mass, apparently impenetrable; while the air is filled, and the ears stunned with the deafening sounds of gongs and wind instruments, discouring most unearthly music, accompanied by the yelling, screaming, gabbling, and clamor of hundreds of thousands of human tongues, producing a hodge-podge of sonnde, unrivaled and uncqualed since the building of the Tower of Babel. As there is no part of the world so densely populated as Chiea, so there is no part of China so thickly populated as Canton; the population of the city of Canton and its suburbs being estimated at above one million; and the denizens of the river, who habitually reside in their boats, are said to exceed two hundred thousand.

...Signs for Marriageable Ladies.—"If a man wipes his feet on the door-mat before coming into the room, you may be sure he will make a good domestic husband. If a man, in snuffing the candlee, snuffs them ont, you may be sure he will make a stupid husband. If a man puts his handkerchief on his knee whilet taking his tea, you may be eure he will be a prudent husband. In the eame way, always mistrust the man who will not take the last piece of toast of Sally Lunn; but prefere waiting for the next warm batch. It is not unlikely he will make a greedy, selfish husebend, with whom you will enjoy no "brown" at dinner, no orust at tea, no peace whatever at home. The man, my dears, who wears goloshee, and is careful abont wrapping himself up well before venturing into the night air, not unfrequently makes a good invalid husband that mostly stops at home, and is easily comforted with slops. The man who watches the kettle, and prevents it boiling over, will not fail, my dears, in the married state, in exercising the same oare in always keeping the pot boiling. The man who doesn't take tea, ill treats the cat, takes snuff, and etands with his back to the fire, is a bruts whom I would not advise you my dears, to marry upon any copeidgeration, either for love or money, but decidedly not for love. But the man who, when the tea is over, is discovered to have had none, is sure to make the best husband. Patience like hie deserves being rewarded with the best of wives, and the best of mothere-in-law. My dears, when you meet with such a man, do your utmost to marry him. In the severest winter he would not mind going to bed first. [Punch.

...Elopement of Arab Ladies.—Ben-Ayet, the wealthy ex-minister of the Bey of Tuels, writes a Paris correspondent, has been to Marseilles to fetch his three wives, and has brought them in triumph to Parie. These ladies have adopted the French costume and appear in Paris without veils. The Bey le furious. You are aware that he accuses Ben-Ayet of having plundered his treasnry to an immense amount. Since the minister's flight his widowed epouses have been detained as precious hostages by the Bey. The police never quitted the door of their house, and only a few women were allowed to visit them. It appears, however, that they whiled away the weary hours of captivity by trying on and learning to wear French dresses, and when they became perfect in tee art, they one day coolly walked past the sentinels, who mistook them for visitors. Once at large, they were enabled by the assistance of their friends to obtain a pacsport from the French Consulate, and with this they sailed for Marseilles. Tha rage and disappointmeut of the Bey, whose health has long been in an almost desperate condition, will, it is thought, bring on a fatal fit of apoplexy.

...Set Your Own Rate.—It le a maxim worthy of all acceptation, that a man may have that allowance he takes. Take the place and attitude which belong to you, and all men acquiesce. The world must be just. It leaves every man, with profound unconcern, to set his own rate. Herd or driveller, it meddlee not in the matter. It will certainly accept your own measure of your doleg and being, whether you sneak about and deny your own name, or whether you see your work produced to the compass sphere of the heavens, one with the revolution of the stars. [Emerson.

Louisiana Legislature.

The following are the committees of the House:

On Judiciary—Messrs. Davidson, Durard, McWhorter, Roberts of Orleans, Morrison, Heard, Becober, Ferrot, Villere, Phillips and Baker.

On Commerce—Messrs. Janes, Lawrence, Drummond, Summers, Richard, Thayer and Cronan.

On Finance—Messrs. Phillips, Pierce, Hardesty, McCormack, Davidson, Williams, Lawrence, Hotch and Chilton.

On Contingent Expenses—Messrs. Oliver, Smart, Floyd, Gardner, Crosst, Sentner and Lose.

On Parochial Affairs—Messrs. Robertson, Wempla, Brisaat, Vae Hook and Gill.

On Enrollment—Messrs. Rossier, Lose, Treme, Lacoul, Mary, Cyrille and Briant.

On Agriculture—Messrs. Trepagnier, Truxillo, Lagrone, Bains, Bertrand and Gauthier.

On Militia—Messrs. Crenan, Cooper, Weishcimer, Berlin and Gneory.

On Claims—Messrs. Nixen, Hardesty, Kimball, Tanner, Van Hook, Jones, Lagroue, Woods and Baker.

On Propositions and Grievances—Messrs. Olney, Millaudon, Newman, Sompyrac and Dejean.

On Public Education—Messrs. Pugh, Stephens, Welles, Dirmeyer, Bronssard, Renaldson, McDonald, Briant, Forge, Wemple and Cormier.

On Library—Messrs. Harrison, Welles and Williamson.

On Banks and Banking—Messrs. Caldwall, Brecher, McWhorter, Haralson, Summers, Dullard, Nixon, Campbell and Denner.

On Public Printing—Messrs. McCormack, Jordan, Kimball and Armitage.

On Amendments to the Constitution—Messrs. Pearce, Nixon, McWhorter, Heard, Campbell, Hatch and Morrison.

On Federal Relations—Messrs. Wagner, Villere, Harang, Woods and Baker.

On the Penitentiary—Messrs. Phillips, Cooper, Miller, Corcoran, Tanner, Gardner, Williamson, Bethel and McDonald.

On Revival and UnOnished Business—Messrs. Robertson, Renaldson, Green, Deacon and McCullough.

On Public Lands—Messrs. Miller, Davidson, Jones, Waddill, Baird, Cronan and Lacroix.

On Elections—Messrs. Roberts of Orleans, Pugh, Grandmont, Brousserd and Favrot.

On Internal Improvements and Levees—Messrs. Campbell, Jones, McDonald, Smart, Morrie, Williams, Hardesty, Cormier, Richard, McCormack and Oliver.

On Charitable and Public Institutions—Messrs. Pearce, Corsoran, Boatner, Sueenaau, Stephens, Heard, Labat, Dirmeyer and Morrison

On Public Buildings—Messrs. McKeon, Jones, Boatner, Seales and Kearney.

Special Committee on Health—Messrs. Williamson, Suseneau, Kearney and Williams.

Congressional.

Senate.—Washington, Jan. 10.—The Presiding officer laid before the Senate several communications from the War Department, showing the expenditures of that department, the number of arms made at the national armories during the last fiscal year, etc.

Mr. Benjamin submitted a resolution, calling upon the President of the United States for any correspondence that may have taken place between the Government of the United States and that of Mexico, respecting the right of way across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, not embraced in the communication made by President Fillmore to the Senate in July, 1852. Mr. B. briefly explained the reason of the resolution; and, at his request, it was considered and adopted.

Mr. Benjamin, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill confirming certain land claims in Louisiana, in the Bastrop grant, reported it back without amendment, and recommended its passage.

Mr. Benjamin, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Albert G. Howell, praying the confirmation of the title to a certain tract of land to the legal representatives of William Weeks, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 102) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of William Weeks, which was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. Benjamin from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Charles Derbigny and others, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 103) confirming a certain land claim in Louisiana, known as the Flourian claim, which was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. Foot submitted a resolution, which was agreed to, in relation to the repeated detention of the mails between the cities of New York and Washington, calling upon the Postmaster General for information as to the causes of such detention, and whether any action of Congress was required in relation to the subject.

An Incident of the San Francisco Disaster.—Captain Creighton of the Three Bells was hailed by the San Francisco with the following question: "Will you charter your ship? We are loaded with men, women and children. Name your price." He reply was with the true Scotch accent: "What does the man mean? It's not money that I am after—I am stoppling for humanity's sake." On the third day in reply to another question he again responded: "I will stand by you if I sink."

As has already been stated, measures are being taken to present a national testimonial to this whole-souled seaman. So far, in reply to the cordial greetings of the country are showering upon him the numerous marks of their consideration, responds, with quiet composure: "What have I done but my simple duty?"

A correspondent of the New York Journal of Commerce also suggests "that as a suitable testimonial Capt. Creighton be presented with a ship (an American ship)—a present worthy so noble a sailor. New ships can be bought, but such would be an appropriate present from New Yorkers, and show to the world that they are not insensible to true valor and disinterested philanthropy when it has been so prominent as in this instance."

Capt. Rober. Creighton is a genuine Scotchman. His age is thirty-two years. He was born at Port Glasgow, about twenty miles from the city. He has a wife and one child in Scotland. He has been seventeen years engaged in trade and other extra studies, and boarders from beyond the boundary line. For two years Teachers increased their salary several hundred dollars by these means.

Address, Rev. D. S. Goodloe, Livingston, Madison county, Miss. Postage paid. dec10

Recorded Death of Ma. Soule.—The Paris correspondent of the London Morning Chronicle writing on December 26, says: "It has been very currently reported to-day that a telegraphic dispatch has been received from Madrid, announcing that a third duel has taken place in consequence of the unhappy affair at M. de Turgot's ball. The principals on this occasion were the Duke of Alba and Mr. Soule, the father of the combatant in the first duel. The dispatch is said to state that Mr. Sule is killed. I was in hopes that there was no truth in the report, as I had seen a gentleman who had spoken to Mr. Mercier (Mr. Soulo's brother-in-law,) this morning, who had said nothing on the subject, and who certainly would have done so if he had been in possession of any such intelligence. But, alas! I have just learnt that, at a dinner party given at the Palace of the Tuileries last evening, the Emperor himself stated to the Grand Duchess of Baden that he had received a dispatch to that effect. It is still to be hoped that the report may turn out to be incorrect, and I only mention it because the subject has obtained a great deal too much notriety. I therefore give the reports as they have reached me.

How willful ie that judgment which shute the door against Love, and opens it to his rival. The affectione lap modesty, as always distrusting themselves, and fearing to obtrude. But hypocrisy is never without pretension, and we too frequently yield to audacity what is only due to prayer. Love may be likened to the humble mendicant, who looks his unworthiness while he entreats your bounty. It is passion and selfishness only, which, assuming his name, assail you on the highway, with their "Stand and deliver!" claiming as their right, the boon which is only precious as a charity. [Egeria.

Remarkable Preservation from Death.—The Paulding (Miss.) Clarion says:

As Mrs. John Richer was riding home from Hopewell Church, in this county, on Sunday last, a large Black-Jack tree fell athwart the road, striking her horse centrally on the back, and forcing him to the ground. Fortunately, the lady noticed the first inclination of the tree, and promptly leaned forward—a movement which saved her life. The horse was killed.

The Importation of Iron in France, in 1852, was forty million pounds of ore, ninety million pounds of unwrought metal, and sixteen million pounds of bare, sheets, etc.

During the year 1853, thirty-three steamboats were built at Cincinnati.

Mr. Ericsson states in the New York Express that every thing seems favorable to the complete success of his new caloric ship.

The construction of a ship, exactly like the Great Republic, lately destroyed by fire, has been commenced in Boston.

Efforts are making at Norfolk Va., to establish a manual labor school, for which a farm costing $10,000 is to be purchased.

Another California steamship, called the Orizaba, of 2,000 tons, built by Howland & Aspinwall, was launched at New York on the 14th.

Jenny Lied's baby, in which all creation takes an interest, begins to manifest signs of musical capacity. So says the Musical World.

Ancient Hymns.—St. Hilary, bishop of Poitiers, is said to have been the first who composed hymne to be sung in churches. The Greek hymns, attributed to Homer, are the oldest known, addressed to the pagan deities. They were enconiastic, and recited the supposed virtues of the gods and goddesses, to whom they were especially addressed. The oldest sacred hymns addressed to the trus God, of which we have any knowledge, are the Psalms of David and certain passages in the book of Job.

Cromwell.—A person in England, lately rummaging among his family documents, found written on the back of an old deed some words indicating that a pot of gold was buried in a certain place in the garden. It was at first regarded as a hoax, but on digging in the spot an iron pot came to light, containing fifteen thousand guineas, and a scrap of parchment much decayed, on which was written: "The devil shall have it sooner than Cromwell."

Boudoir.—This word is a derivation of the word "bouder," i. e. to pout. There was a time when ladies, dissatisfied with themselves or others, used to indulge in that amiable failbleese, inale "nous avons changé tout cela." We have changed all that, for ladies do not conceal that weakness now, but inflict that enjoyment sometimes on their friends without concealment. Boudoir, therefore, meane pouting-room, the door of which is not, as in days of old, hermetically sealed against intruders.

The Song of Spring.... By Eliza Logan.

In the grove where the orange and citron are blooming,
And scenling with perfume the balm-breathing air,
My ardent relation, Dame Summer's assuming
The tasks which, unfinished, I left to her care.

As my light step is bounding o'er valley and mead,
The harebell and daisy peep up from the sod;
For they feel that their delicate bosome are freed
From the earth, which I lose with my magical rod.

I breathe in the forest—it's life I renew—
The blood of the oak rushes up thro' its veins;
And the robe it puts on bears the very same hue
As that which I lavishly spread o'er the plains.

Its voice to the ice-fettered brook I restore,
And send its freed waters rejoicing along;
The grove, into se silent, is tuneless no more,
For I've taught every feather-clad warbler a song.

The brief be my life, yet, unlike fragile mortals,
Decay to my heart no destruction can bring;
Even flow'ret can bud, I throw open death's portals,
And start from the tomb—a new, glorious Spring.

Education.

Bardstown Female Institute.

Rev. A. A. Morrison, A. M., Principal.

This Institution is under the patronage of the Louisville Annual Conference, and is located in Bardstown, Ky. Bardstown is located on the turnpike from Nashville to Louisville, with a line of daily stages passing through, and is 30 miles south of the latter city. Bardstown is pleasantly located, and is proverbial for health. The Institute buildings are large and commodious, and the pleasure grounds attached pleasant and spacious.

The Institution is furnished with a full Board of experienced and accomplished Teachers, and the course of study as select and thorough as can be found in any similar Institution in the land. The school is permanently established, and in point of healthiness of locality and facilities for a thorough Female Education, on reasonable terms—this Institution offers peculiar inducements to Southern Methodists and to the Southern community generally.

TERMS PER SESSION OF TWENTY WEEKS.

(Board payable in advance; Tuition at close of the Session.)

Primary Department	$ 8 00
Junior Class	12 00
Middle Class	15 00
Senior Class	18 00
Music on Piano or Guitar	20 00
Vocal Music	6 00
Drawing and Painting	10 00
Greek, Latin, French or German	8 00
Boarding, including Washing, Lights and Fuel	40 00
For Fuel in school-room in winter	1 00

The next session will commence on the 30th of January inst.

References:

Rev J D McFerrin, Nashville, Tenn.; W H Hickman, M D; Hon G W Hills, Bardstown, Ky; Rev O H Parsons, Rev E Stevenson, Rev E W Sehon, Rev A H Redford, Louisville, Ky; and the Ministers of the Louisville Conference generally.

Bardstown, Jan. 5, 1854.—6t

Teachers Wanted.

A Gentleman, his Wife, or a Brother and Sister, (provided the [illegible] house) thoroughly educated, are wanted to take charge of our Public School. Salary, $1000, certain, and whatever else can be realised from the music and other extra studies, and boarders from beyond the town and county. The last Teachers increased their salary several hundred dollars by these means.

Address, Rev. D. S. Goodloe, Livingston, Madison county, Miss. Postage paid. dec10

Wanted.

A lady who performs well on the Piano and sings well, and also a gentleman who performs well on the piano and violin. Satisfactory testimonials must be given of character and qualifications. They are desired as assistants in the Music Department of the Alabama Female College, at Gainesville, Ala. Address, stating terms,

W. R. POINDEXTER,
Gainesville, Ala.

dec4-4t

Emory and Henry College.

WASHINGTON COUNTY, VA.

THE SPRING SESSION of this Institution will commence on the 12th January, 1854. There is we believe no College in the South offering stronger inducements to young men desirous of a thorough course of collegiate instruction.

JNO. H. PRINCE, Chairman.
FRANK M. PRINCE, Secretary.
JABEZ YORK, Treasurer.

TERMS:

Tuition per session of 5 months		$16 00
Board	" "	31 50
Washing	" "	5 00
Fuel	" "	2 00
Contingent charge	" "	1 25
		$54 75

With a location famous for health, with ample Library and Apparatus, with a full and efficient Board of Instruction, and with a degree of cheapness unparalleled, any young man with limited means, fair abilities and proper energy can here acquire a superior, liberal or business education. For further information address

E. E. WILEY, President,
Emory Post-office, Va

jan5-6t

Greensboro' Female College,

GREENSBORO', N. C.

FACULTY:

CHARLES F. DEEMS, D. D., President and Professor of the Natural Sciences and Belles-Lettere.
REV. TURNER M. JONES, A.M., Professor of Mathematics and the Ancient Languages.
MONS. ERNEST JOUANNE, (of the College of Henri IV., Paris,) Professor of the French Language and Literature.
THEODORE WOLLE, Esq., Professor of Music.
MISS N. JANE SPEER, Miss NANNIE T. SPEED and Miss LUCY McGEE, Assistants in the Literary Departments.
MISS AUGUSTA M. HAGEN, Madame JOUANNE and Miss CAROLINE A. DLAKE Assistants in the Department of Music.
MISS R. L. SIMPSON, Drawing and Painting.
THOMAS C. BLAKE, Esq., Steward.
MRS. T. O. DLAKE, Governess.

This Institution is situated in a healthy part of Central North Carolina. It is under the charge of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In the selection of the Faculty the Trustees have had reference first of all to superior qualifications, and as far as practicable have obtained ladies and gentlemen of Southern birth and education.

The course of study is as full and as thorough as that in the best Female Seminaries. While particular attention is paid to the solid branches of education, sufficient regard is had for the ornamental: but above all the culture of the morals of their pupils is considered the great work of the teachers. Special lessons of economy are inculcated. The pupils are not allowed under any circumstances to contract debts. Parents deposit money in advance. All the expenditures of the scholars are under direct supervision of the President, and their purchases are made by their teachers. Perhaps in no similar Institution of its numbers have the bills of the pupils been so small in the aggregate as at this College during the past year.

The department of Natural Science is furnished with excellent apparatus, some of the instrumente being of the highest finish, with all modern improvements. Lectures are delivered on Chemistry by the President, and on Natural Philosophy by Prof. Jones, weekly, and are accompanied by experiments. In the selection of the Professor of French regard was had to purity and accuracy of pronunciation, and the present incumbent of that chair possesses more than ordinary qualifications for his office. The practical use of the language in conversation is the aim of daily lessons.

In the department of Oil Painting the teacher does not seek to give her pupils simply a "pretty picture" at the close of the session, but the principles of the art are assiduously taught in the expectation that those who have special talent for design may prosecute self-culture after leaving the school.

All the principal teachers have had much experience in the business of their profession, and "thoroughness" is the motto throughout the whole Institution. The Faculty are working under this formula: "We are striving to make not the largest but the best school in the land."

TERMS:

$70 a session (of 21 weeks) for Tuition and Board, including washing, fuel, lights, furnished rooms and attendance; $20 extra for music on the Piano or Guitar, or for Oil Painting; $5 for Drawing or French or Latin. The Trustees believe that no school of its grade at the South offers such advantages on such favorable terms.

For further particulars application may be made to the President of the College.

The next session will open December 23, 1853. ja5-6t

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy,

FOR YOUNG LADIES.

INSTRUCTORS.

REV. A. J. EDGERTON, A. M., Principal.
REV. W. F. CONRAD, A. B.
REV. W. D. DeCOENIEL, Professor of Piano, Harp and Guitar.
MRS. E. C. EDGERTON. MRS. H. CONRAD.
MISS ELLEN FOSTER, Teacher of Music.
MISS MARVIN. MISS HADNETT.
MRS. GILMAN, Matron.

The Next Session will commence on Monday, the 7th day of November.

TERMS—PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

For Boarding, per session of twenty weeks.....$50
For Fuel, Washing and Lights, do. 10
For Bed and Bedding, if not provided, do. 5

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

Tuition—Juvenile Class, per session twenty weeks...$15
" Second Division, do. do. ... 20

COLLEGIATE DEPARTMENT.

Tuition—English Studies, per session twenty weeks..$25
" Latin and Greek, or either, do. .. 15
" French, Italian or German, do. .. 15
Stationery, in either class, do. .. 1

MUSICAL DEPARTMENT.

Instruction Piano or Guitar, per session twenty weeks, $30
Use of Pianos, do. 5

ORNAMENTAL DEPARTMENT.

Drawing in Perspective and Painting } do. ...$10
in Water Colors }
Fancy Embroidery ..... do. 5

No deduction for absence, except in case of protracted sickness.

Boarders are expected to have their wearing apparel marked, and to come furnished with Towels, Hair and Tooth Brushes, and Silver Dessert Spoon and Fork.

The location of the Institution is regarded as one of the best in the State. The buildings were erected at a cost of near $30,000, affording capacious and airy rooms for the inmates, and all under the immediate eye of Mrs. E. and Female Assistents.

The course of Study will be as extensive and thorough in Natural Science, English Literature, Ancient and Modern Languages and Mathematics, as in the best Colleges of the kind.

Lectures will be delivered regularly before the Young Ladies, on Natural Science.

Prof. DeCOENIEL, who has the reputation for being one of the best musicians in America, will give lessons on the Harp to any young Ladies who desire it.

Vocal Music will be taught free of charge.

Port Gibson, Oct. 21, 1850. dec10-4

Female Masonic Institute,

Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama.

Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.

TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY, we would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the true interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence a liberal support.

The Principal has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his tutelage.

The services of Miss MARY W. HOWE, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and felicitous manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.

The Musical, French, and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competent and skilful Teachers, and all due attention given to the arts and accomplishments that so beautify and adorn the gentler sex.

The Primary Department will be confided alone to a choice and gifted Lady, for we designate attend carefully to that sadly and mischievously neglected class of Pupils.

The Scholastic year is divided into Two Sessions of nearly Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Examination Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils received at any time, and charged to the end of the Session. For fractions of Sessions each week is counted one twentieth.

The School is not Sectarian or denominational; and the only religious tuition embraces the principles of pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible.

The Principal and his wife bare charge of the Stewards Department, and will tenderly care for the health, manners and morals of those who Board in the Institute. Each boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved subject of parental solicitude: and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet, Discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful restraints of family government will be thrown around them.

CHARGES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Primary Class	$12 50
[illegible]	[illegible]
Junior and Senior Class	20 00
Music on Piano, Guitar and Harp, (each)	25 00
Drawing, Painting and Embroidery, (each)	10 00
French and German, (each)	15 00
Incidentals	1 00

LATIN included in the Regular Course.

BOARD (including Washing, Fuel and Lights) per month 10 00

Each Boarder must furnish her own Towels, Brushes and Combs, and have each article distinctly marked with her full name.

AN INVARIABLE RULE.—Board and Tuition one-half in advance, and the balance at the end of each Session; and every account must be closed at the end of each Session, by Cash, or by Note.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.

Each Lodge in Marengo County is entitled to select within its jurisdiction, a worthy object of benefaction, and have her taught in the Institution without charge, provided said Lodge secure the payment of her Board and supply her with Books and Stationery.

As the Principal is so extensively known, the Committee have forbore to speak of his character and qualifications, and refer Parents and Guardians to the persons named below.

FRANK M. PRINCE, Secretary.
JABEZ YORK, Treasurer.

REFERENCES.

Hon. J. F. H. Claiborne, New Orleans.
Rev. H. N. McTyeire, New Orleans.
Prof. A. B. Holcombe, Mobile.
Hon. R. A. Baker, Mobile.
Hon. J. C. Monette, Bay St. Louis.
Hon. S. B. Pierce, Bay St. Louis.
Dr. John B. Purnell, Selma.
Abner Jones, Selma.
Rev. A. E. Mitchell, Summerfield.
Rev. T. Y. Ramey, Summerfield.
Rev. J. A. Hard, Dayton.
Hon. J. N. McClenahan, Shelby County.
Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama, September 1, 1853. oct1

Marion Female Seminary.

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALABAMA.

FACULTY.

REV. JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, A. M., Principal and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Sciences.
H. M. DALY, A. M., Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
MISS E. L. HASKILL, English.
MISS M. J. BONDURANT, English.
MISS HERR FULLER, Drawing, Painting, French and Guitar.
MISS J. V. CLARK, Primary and Preparatory Department.
MRS. L. J. ARMSTRONG, Governess.
MRS. REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This Institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice, one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and for elegance, convenience of arrangement—for number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentleman and his lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of his position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great amiability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and untiring faithfulness, secures to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, chargeable from the beginning of the month in which they enter to the close of the session.

One hundred and forty-five dollars will pay the board and tuition of a young lady, for the entire session, in the collegiate department. One hundred and seventy-four dollars will embrace the languages; two hundred and thirty-five dollars will embrace board, tuition in the collegiate department, on the piano, and in the languages.

The above estimate does not include books, stationery, sheet music, ornamental materials and lights; all of which articles are furnished by the Principal on moderate terms.

The Institution is furnished with a new and complete Chemical, Philosophical and Astronomical apparatus. It also has a large collection of globes, terrestrial and celestial; and celestial maps, atlases, charts plates and diagrams, for simplifying the various branches of Natural Science.

The Library consists of more than one thousand volumes, embracing a choice collection in every department of Literature, Art, Science, History, &c., &c.

The Cabinet consists of several hundred specimens.

The Institution is furnished with a large and superior assortment of musical instruments.

The Church and Sabbath School facilities are unsurpassed by any school in the country. Of the number that have entered its walls during the past session, more than seventy were or have become professors of religion.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, &c.

Visitors are not received, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The usual regulations of the best boarding schools are enforced respecting visiting, correspondence, pamphlets, periodicals, novels, and dental operations.

They retire and rise at regular hours through the year.

Great attention is paid to exercise in the open air, when doors, when the weather is inclement.

Every Saturday morning is devoted to plain sewing and the repairing of clothing, under the direction of an officer.

No accounts will be opened in Marion, but with the expressed permission of patrons. When articles are to be purchased, it must be done with approbation and under the eye of the lady of the Principal.

The want of pupils should be supplied from home, as far as practicable. All jewelry is prohibited. All p

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, J. C. KEENER, L. WARREN, J. H. WORLEY

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

HAMILTON, N. D. FORDHAM, W. MURRAH, Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 1. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1854. WHOLE NO. 157.

For the C. C. Christian Advocate.

JEWISH FESTIVALS.

NEW YEAR.

The next festival presenting itself to our attention is Rosh Hashonah, or New Year which is celebrated on the first and second days of Tisri, (corresponding to the latter part of September and the beginning of October,) and is by Prideaux, Calmet, and other writers, called the feast of trumpets, and by Josephus, a popular writer, "is the first or beginning of the whole year." Scripture and traditions lay an importance upon it in the character of a sabbath, or penitential hymns) are performed before daybreak, and the sounding of the Shophar. This primitive musical instrument (which of late years has been banished, smoothed and made bright by the hand of modern refinement,) was a ram's horn, or rather a horn of the wild goat, (Capra Ibex,) which is found in the mountains of Arabia, Switzerland, and other countries. The horn is bent into a circular shape, (not like a hook in the lower part with narrow opening at the top, and a wide one at the bottom. The choral sounds to be produced by it have been arranged into various tones each of which is designated by a Hebrew word, and the person appointed to sound on the particular tone receives a name from it.

This is the origin of our word to sound, to resound—to all the sons of the people known in the world—to the Gentiles. "Thy Remembrance and Lord Hosts, "day of Judgment, and although the majority of the common characters but little about these matters during the rest of the year they are very fervent in their devotions during the present month, for it is said it has been said in Talmud Hamedrash, or "Hymn of Love" that the tombs of their parents and friends for several weeks previous, to visit them in person thoughts and contemplate the days of our solemnity or season. Here they repair to the tombs of their parents and relatives while going round the city. Mordecai's decision of 1 Ch. Then they repeat aloud the prayers on the tombs of their several relatives praying them to intercede for them in the eye of the heart all the religious ceremonies on the Friday, or day before the Feast of Tabernacles which undergo on the eve of any festival. Almost sooner they proceed to the synagogue when the services are started by a peculiar solemnity. Before supper or supper with new honey is always given to the family, to which a portion is added to the meal. On the next night some sweet fruit (raw almonds, nuts generally, in Germany) is partaken of, preceded by the benediction.

Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who has kept us alive and preserved us and allowed us to attain to this season.

The morning service begins at daybreak, the faithful hasten to the synagogue before lasting food. The devotion with which he performs these many fat forgiveness of his sins is most exemplary. With his ample prayer cloth he is to be turns his face to the east, and with many a bow himself up to reverence to his lord, or utters that morning hymn of the first of his new creatures uncovered his head traordinary mismanagement can the same difficulties be imported into the present question. The principle is perfectly clear, and there need be no infringement of private liberty or dictation to private conscience in its advocacy.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.—The statistics of the New Orleans Bible Society, given last week, were compiled by our neighbor of the Creole and should have been so credited then.

MAILS.—Never before have we seen in our exchanges such complaint of the mails. The press of all parties and no party is down upon the Post-office Department. If the subscribers of the Advocate have not suffered with others, they have a remarkable exemption, for which we are as thankful to look as they will be. But this would be supposing too much. Though they do not complain a great deal, we dare say they suffer in the general derangement. But they take it kindly. We hope for better mail times.

HARPER FOR JANUARY.—The noble Harpers are again out with their superior MONTHLY. The "cuts" being absent are the only sign of fire. We have it through McGinnis & Carver, 36 Camp street.

RELIEF.—We have been informed that $1281 have been collected for and distributed among those who are sufferers by the burning of the steamboat Georgia, at the Lake, on Saturday night.

WIDOWS' AND ORPHANS' PER CENT.—It was resolved by the Louisiana Conference that this should be FIVE PER CENT. for 1854.

The per cent. is to be estimated upon the gross salaries of the preacher: that is, if he is to receive $700, all told, to that sum the Stewards are requested by the Conference to add $35; which is to be paid by the preacher to the Conference in place of the usual Conference collection. And please remember that if the Stewards do not pay it to the preacher yet the preacher will pay it to the Conference; for our Widows and Orphans and Worn-out preachers MUST BE SUPPORTED.

NOT DEAD.—A Western exchange says:—The rumor in reference to the death of Dr. Peter Cartwright, Dec. 16th, is without any foundation in truth, so far as we can gather. The Central Christian Advocate, edited by the Doctor's son-in-law, makes no allusion to any such event.

PROHIBITORY LAW.—It has been said to their prejudice, that no movement for liquor prohibition, or total abstinence, could calculate upon the sympathy or aid of the English Wesleyans. The able article on the Maine Law, republished from the London Watchman, not only vindicates that large body of Christians, whose organ it is, but presents the argument with much force and clearness.

MULATTO.—A case of large damages is now pending in our city courts, wherein the question is raised as to the status of plaintiff. One of the able counsel gives this piece of curious knowledge:

"Judge Larue then recapitulated the facts of the case, as set forth in the petition, commenting on them as he proceeded. He stated that they could trace this family back to 1707; when there were no negro slaves in Louisiana; that negroes were only thus introduced in 1721; that, in 1712, throughout the vast extent of Louisiana, there were but twelve negroes. Judge Larue showed that the word 'mulatto,' or 'mestisoes,' meant a cross of races; that it originated in the intermarriage of Moors and Spaniards, and meant as well the offspring of Indians and whites as of negroes and whites. It was synonymous with mule."

INDIAN SPEECH.

Our friend Lewis fulfils his promise to give some sketches of the chief characters of the Council. Pounds and inches enter into this estimates of men—"out West." He is one of the Washington Commissioners. The Nation has not in it a more straightforward and trusty man: of capability too. He will do its cause credit—a full-blooded Choctaw and Methodist preacher.

We give in another column the speech delivered before the Choctaw Council, at its late session, by Thompson McKinney, a full-blood Choctaw, and an intelligent gentleman. The subject is upon the propriety of appointing a delegation to proceed to Washington to make a final settlement of all matters between the government and the Choctaws, growing out of their removal West. It is a strange thing to us that the United States have so long neglected these matters, and have suffered a generation to pass away, and not yet settled with them, after forcing—we cannot use a better word—the Indians to leave their ancient homes, under the most solemn promises of Gen. Jackson, then President, that they should be fully satisfied and paid for their lands. These lands lie in the States of Mississippi and Alabama, the richest and most productive lands in the Union, [illegible] been sold and the money in the [illegible] many years ago. Let the government [illegible] justice and [illegible] speedily.

"PROGRESS."

We beg pardon for mentioning the subject again to those readers who, during the course of the year have attended a college commencement or a political hustings; we have not escaped ourselves, but, with them, came off glad that the chloroform administered on the occasion was rather more than the sheet-lightning, and so only left us slightly quivering upon those "magic wires" of "this wonderful age in which we live." We are in the same category with the most of our "Young America" friends who have tried the word in every position, on every key, and with uncommon variations, and, overpowered with thought, have sunk down more than ever convinced that "there are cords in the human heart," and eagle flights of mind which language is not adequate to tell. It is because the undefined meaning of this word so greatly exceeds its defined that we have determined to pass it over to its friends forever. The thing which it represents we understand to be, a vague desire to be doing something—an earthquake of improvement-zeal which in its great throes has no expression, not even the "ridiculus mus." A writer in the Edinburgh Review of last April gives a paragraph which may at some day have an application to those who have adopted our heading as their cry:

"When the 'Young England' party were in the zenith of their short-lived celebrity, we endeavored to form an accurate estimate of their alledged vocation, their merits, and their pretensions. Declining to concede to them the full measure of intellectual pre-eminence which they arrogated, we gave them ample credit for generous aspirations, and for energy and capacity enough to develop and reduce into definite shape their somewhat dreamy schemes for the regeneration of society. We saw, or thought we saw, the germs of future excellence in the best of their juvenile productions; and we still think they exercised a wholesome influence on their immediate contemporaries, by freshening and elevating the tone of political discussion, as well as by suggesting some new and useful trains of sentiment and thought. 'It is not always necessary,' observes Goethe, 'for truth to embody itself: enough if it float spiritually about and induce agreement—if like the deep friendly sound of a bell it undulates through the air.' But, on the whole we must admit that experience has shown the vanity of our more flattering anticipations; for 'Young England' has literally left nothing by which its corporate or collective existence can be demonstrated to the satisfaction of an inquisitive posterity, except the recollection of its having been Mr. [John Smith's] first stepping-stone to fame."

It is said of Lord Bacon that he was a reformer not an innovator. That his desire was to proceed not "in aliud" but "in melius." He was a cautious reformer. "Use Argus's hundred eyes before you raise one of Briareus's hundred hands," was his maxim. He was a gradual reformer. He thought that reform ought to be like the advancee of nature, scarce discernible in its motion but only visible in its issue. He was a permanent reformer, saying, "Si quid moves a principio moveas." As a statesman his first wish was, in the true spirit of his philosophy, to preserve; the next, to improve the constitution in Church and State.

There can be little doubt that the wonderful discoveries of science within the last quarter of a century have suggested that there should be a corresponding improvement in religion, in morals and in government. With the last named we have at present nothing to do; but this fever of reform, which regards the Church of God and the Book of God as superannuated and "ready to vanish away," no doubt has its exciting cause in this suggestion. The fallacy which lies at the bottom of such views has been well set forth by the same great mind, and what he says must surely weight with all reformers; for, always excepting Jesus of Nazareth, what reformer can he mentioned with Francis Bacon; who, in the confidence of his reform, said: "I have held up a light in the obscurity of philosophy, which will be seen centuries after I am dead!" What he has here said of civil affairs may be yet more aptly said of church affairs:

"It is good not to try experiments in States except the necessity be urgent or the utility evident: and well to beware that it be the reformation that draweth on the change, and not desire of change that pretendeth the reformation; that novelty, though it be not rejected, yet be always suspected; and as the Scripture saith, 'that we make a stand upon the ancient way, and then look about us, and discover what is the straight and right way, and so walk in it; always remembering that there is a difference in innovation between art and civil affairs. In civil affairs a change, even for the better, is to be suspected, through fear of disturbance: because they depend upon authority, consent, reputation and opinion, and not upon demonstration; but arts and sciences should be like mines resounding on all sides, with new works and further progress."

DEFICIENT.—The present Theological Seminary system is evidently deficient in supplying the wants of the Church that waits on it. The Old School Presbyterian Church has six theological seminaries under its care, having 240 students in attendance. On the supposition that one-third of these go out annually, 80 young ministers will be supplied each year; to these add 20 who study privately, making the whole number 100, for the supply of Churches vacant by death, of those long destitute and feeble, and of those newly formed. One thousand instead of 100 would not more than meet the usual calls of Providence.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Treasurr, in account with the Missionary Society of Louisiana Conference:

NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT.

Feb. 1853.		Dr.
Felicity st., per L Parker	$ 360 50
" " Sabbath Sch. Miss Society.	73 00—433 50
Carondelet st. per J R Walker		246 26
Moreau st. per H N McTyeire	30 00
" " Sab Sch Miss	70 00—100 00
1st German Mission, per J Pauley	96 18
" " Sab Sch	10 00—106 18
2nd German mission, per J H Hofer		40 00
3rd " " per M Maas		40 25
4th " " per U Busman		21 50
New Orleans Circuit, per J C Keener, P E		10 00
Donaldsonville, " "		70 00
Thibodaux, per R J Harp		17 50
Napoleonville, per L Reed		19 55
Plaquemine and Orme Tois, per H A Morse		154 80
Baton Rouge, per A K Goodwyn	110 00
" " Sab Sch to Con. Rev A E Goodwyn, L M of Par Miss Soc.	20 00—130 00
Lafourche Co'd Miss., per L A Reed		466 00
		$1834 84

OPELOUSAS DISTRICT.

Franklin and Pattersonville, per R H Read	16 50
Alexandria and Cotile, per T J Lacy	38 00
New Iberia, per P M Goodwyn, P E	9 00
" Sab Sch. Miss. Soc.	10—11 10
Chicot, per P M Goodwyn, P E	2 80
Rapids colored mission, per D Kinnear	145 00
	$204 60

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT.

Caddo, per C J Hallberg	7 00
Mansfield, per J Pipes	104 35
Red River, per W A Smyth	100 00
(Contributed by Daniel Brown to constitute his daughters, Mary Ward, Margaret Elizabeth, Mary Amanda and Eliza Adeline Brown, and his youngest son, Jonathan Jefferson, L M's of Par. Soc.)
	$291 35

MONROE DISTRICT.

Bastrop, per R Trippett	356 00
" col'd miss.	36 00—392 00
Bœuf River, per E W Griswold	3 00
North Bossier, per S O Goodgion	13 95
Minden, per D S Watkins	48 15
Jackson, per R Randle	201 25
($50 of which, contributed at Sparta Quarterage, to constitute Rev R Randle, L M)
Castor, per S J Graves	6 00
Munroe col'd miss., per W H Rogers	160 00
Columbia per W H Turnley	103 50
($20 to constitute Mrs Emeline Mayo and Mrs Sarah V. Taw, L Ms of La. Conf. Miss. Soc.) $40, Mrs Rosina S. Miller and James M Stewart L M's of Par. Soc.)
Farmersville, per J Saunders, P E	6 00
Homer, " "	60 20
Trinity, " "	33 65
Bonpff Prairie, " "	9 80
	$1059 70

SPECIAL DONATIONS.

Anniversary at Mansfield	261 80
Annual Subscription of members	27 00
Gift of R Randle's children	5 00
" J M Mofett's "	1 50
" Mrs Hawes "	10 00
" Chas W Mills	25 00
	$329 50

Aggregate of Collections	3829 80
Feb. 1853, balance on hand at last report	1730 12—5559 81

1853. CR.

Paid drafts of Bishop Andrew in favor of T Thompson, P E, to support missions in his District	25 00
" " " " " "	25 00
" " " " " "	25 00
" " " " " "	25 00
Paid draft of Bishop Andrew in favor of W H Doty to support missions in his District	250 00
Paid drafts of Bishop Andrew in favor of P M Goodwyn, P E, to support missions in his District	50 00
" " " " " "	50 00
" " " " " "	50 00
" " " " " "	50 00
Paid draft of Bishop Andrew in favor H. Kinnear, missionary	125 00
Paid drafts of Bishop Andrew in favor of J C Keener, P E, to support col'd missions and German missions in his District	100 00
" " " " " "	825 00
Paid draft of Bishop Andrew in favor of O Fisher, P E	81 25
Paid draft of President of East Texas Conf. in favor of A M Ross	76 25
1854—Paid draft of President of La. Conf. in favor of P M Goodwyn, P E, for missions in his District	131 25
Paid draft of Presd. La. Conf. in favor of J Sanders, P E, for missions in his District	144 37
Paid draft of Presd. La. Conf. in favor of J Keener, P E, for missions in his District	696 00
	$2623 12

SPECIAL DISBURSEMENTS.

For Minutes of Conference	80 00
For packing and sending of	3 00
For Bank Book	1 00
Discount and loss on uncurrent money	24 10
	$86 10

Aggregate receipts	$2714 22
Feb. 1854, balance on hand	2845 59
	$5559 81

CITY CHARTER.

The City Council has approved the amendments recommended to be made in the City Charter, and they will now be laid before the Legislature. They are as follows

The reduction of the four Recorders to two.

The consolidation of the public schools.

The abolition of the Street Commissioner.

The investment of the Mayor with the powers of Chief Executive officer and Superintendent of the Police.

Some of these reforms we like. The division of the city into two Recorders' jurisdictions, making Canal street the dividing line, is one. The proposed investment of the Mayor will give efficiency to our police system. But the consolidation of the Public Schools is a measure fraught with so many and with such serious evils we hope our citizens will oppose it, before the Legislature, by memorial and otherwise in such style of unanimity and earnestness as to insure its defeat.

Tampering with the Public Schools at this time especially, ought to awake suspicions. There are those behind the scenes who would work to carry all those amendments for sake of this one. A certain tyrant, weary with individual strangling and decapitation, wished that all the heads had one neck, that he might do the work at a stroke.

The School Boards of each District can now manage their charges and superintendents visit them. There may be a generous rivalry. If one District lags behind, it is rebuked by the example of the others; and the people have a chance for education. The politicians and what is equally to be dreaded the priests, cannot corrupt or defeat Free School Education totally, as at present administered.

The saving proposed is very doubtful even in figures. Here is not the point for niggardly economy to begin.

Bring all the Schools under one Board—a Board made up from and representing various sections. Their opposition and checking and jealousy would soon work damage to this tender charge. The Council so constituted shews this. Measures of the most obvious utility are frequently delayed, crippled or defeated by this spirit. They can hardly open a street, lest one section should get the advantage of another. A street question may stand it, but the schools having subtle and bitter enemies, would languish and die under such administration

Again: we refer to him who would have all heads on one neck—for economy! That would have been an economy of flesh and blood and breathing. But was it his economy?

METHODIST PRESS.

HOW IT WORKS.—The California Christian Advocate tells us how the law is likely to work that the priests got out of the Legislature, by which the Public School Fund is to be drawn upon to support sectarian schools:

It works the money of American freemen into the support of Jesuit schools: and may yet turn all schools into Sectarian, Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist schools. It is an anti-American law, brought about by Jesuit intrigues, to destroy our free school system. We understand that the Fathers in this city and at the Mission Dolores, have got returns for their sectarian schools as common schools. It is presumed that it is so at San Jose.

The game was tried at Santa Clara, in a way to show their character. There is a Methodist, Baptist and Roman Catholic school in that favored place, and a common school properly organized. This common school is a free school and without sectarian control or usage of any kind. But the Catholics wish a Marshal appointed to number their scholars and a certificate as a common school that they might get the public money. It was refused. It was sought by art and stratagem. It was still refused. Mr. Bryan, a lawyer of this city, called on the commissioners and instructed them in their duty.

They replied, the teacher has never been examined. The school is sectarian. (The Romanists have no other.) They gave the proof. The lawyer came home. Considerable effort was made to bring the commissioners to terms but in vain.

The law takes effect the first of January, and on that very day should be repealed. Who wants to see our common school fund divided among different denominations? We hope the Legislature will repeal this law and arrest the sectarian appropriation of every dollar of school money.

THE LAYMEN.—The Missionery Anniversary held by the M. E. Church, North, at Cincinnati, in December, was a strong and well arranged demonstration. Our Northern friends do well in making these anniversaries itinerate. It helps the funds and diffuses at the several main points in the Church information and interest. The Western Advocate in noticing the Cincinnati meeting, alludes with regret that none of the speakers and counsellors furnished by the laity of Methodism were on the platform. This draws from the Secretary, Dr. Durbin, the following:

In this view you very warmly express your regret that no laymen took part in the platform exercises of the great missionary meeting. In this you have done well. But it is not clear whether you think the committee of arrangements to blame or not in this matter. I write this brief letter to say, to my certain knowledge, the committee made all reasonable efforts to obtain laymen to participate in the public exercises of the late anniversary; the Board at New York made efforts also. Yet no laymen consented. I regretted this at the time. I still regret it. I believe there is at present in the church a body of laymen of intelligence and piety, who ought to be brought more actively into the more responsible public service of the Church. The time has come for this; and the wants of the church will indicate in what relations and capacities they ought to act more prominently, and the wisdom and prudence of the church ought to acknowledge those indications, and accept the various and important services which the laity can and of right ought to render, as the church may require in the fulfilment of her great mission.

You express regret at the absence of lay speakers at our late great anniversary in Cincinnati, because, as you say, you wished them present, "in order to give a fair exhibit of the talents of our laymen, when the subject of lay delegation is now up before the annual and General Conferences." It would, indeed, have been a good occasion to have shown their ability to render larger and more important service than they now do; and this would have attracted attention to the question, How can they be brought into wider and more fruitful action in the Church? In searching for the proper answer to this weighty question, there ought not to be any hot controversy nor any personal criminations, but a calm inquiry, in the fear of the Lord, with a view to ascertain what further service the Church needs of the large body of intelligent and pious laymen now in her communion; and in what relations and in what manner can they best render this service! If this inquiry is prosecuted with moderation and wisdom it will not be long before the various parts of the sacramental hosts of God, under the present external and internal condition of the Church, will find their proper places and spheres of action in the general body, and all work together, keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace.

FRATERNIZATION.—Two Northern exchanges—those of Boston and Cincinnati—taking up a suggestion of one of our Southern contemporaries—a suggestion solitary, unofficial and upon individual responsibility only—are making themselves quite uneasy and ridiculous about fraternizing the Church, South. The Nashville Advocate thus alludes to their predicament:

"It is not our wish to enter into this controversy or to stir up the old strifes, that we would gladly see forever buried; but it is very remarkable to witness the course pursued by some of our brethren North. Non-fellowship with the South because of "its present position in regard to slavery," and at the same time as deeply involved in slavery as the Church South—and striving all the time to get more slaveholders into their Church. If Dr. Elliott will not fraternize with the Southern Church, because of its connection with slavery, how does he retain hundreds of large slaveholders in his own Church, communo with them as brethren beloved! Be it known to all the world that in the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, there are hundreds, yea, we doubt not, thousands of slaveholders in good standing—some of them preachers of the gospel, and yet Dr. Elliott refuses to fraternize with the South, because of her position in reference to slavery."

The Richmond Advocate thinks it time to go to publishing and that on a scale commensurate with the wants of the Church. The Agency is to be done away and a publishing house to be put up, with well supplied depositories. Dr. Lee's views of policy, in this, will meet with many and able opponents. But his views of location are so large-minded and liberal, they will materially decrease the points of opposition. We give them in part and are glad to find (what was to be expected here) such absorption of sectionalism in Connectionalism:

Assuming, as we think may be safely done, that there will be only one publishing establishment, the question as to its location becomes one of great interest to all concerned, in its settlement. If it be possible, mere personal and local considerations ought not to enter into the reasons for determining this question. It is not only to constitute it a self-supporting and profitable concern, but to affect the vital interests and energies of the Church for all time. Broad, enlightened and liberal views are only proper to the subject and the occasion: selfish, local and contracted opinions and feelings ought to find no place in the breast of those who are to settle it. The question of locating the Book Concern is to be considered in connexion with the questions of territory, population, facilities for procuring materials and converting them into books, readiness of transportation, especially to the more distant outposts of the Church, and nearness to the markets requiring the largest supplies and promising the largest sales. Wherever these are grouped together or there is a preponderance in favor of the greater number of these more important ones, there is, in our judgment, the place for locating the Book Concern.

What we suggest for the government of others, on this subject, we propose to adopt for ourself. We have endeavored to survey all its aspects, to weigh all its interests, to comprehend all its relations to the present of the Church and the future both of the Church and the country, and the result of long, patient and earnest reflection has produced the conviction that the valley of the Mississippi is the great field of our publishing operations, if we are true to the insistence of a sound policy, and the demands of the aggressive and undying spirit of Christianity. The West, with its magnificent rivers, growing cities, and endlessly multiplying rural population, with its railroads threading every vale like colored lines on a map, growing within it "people of every nation, kindred and tongue," embracing them in its broad arms, and feeding them from its maternal breasts, on whose fertile fields millions unnumbered are to live and learn, toil and rejoice, suffer and die, where the great battles of truth end error, religion and scepticism, Protestantism and Popery are to be fought, here, if Methodism is wise and farseeing, she will concentrate her greatest strength and build her strongest bulwarks.

Dr. Lee seeing the tide that steadily flows westward and southward, and having his farseeing eye on the Isthmus and all between, and shaking hands with old fogyism, is feeling after the real centre of Southern Methodism for the times present and coming

That centre is somewhere in the valley of the Mississippi. A city whose position is on, or within easy reach of the greater routes of trade and travel, whose permanency is settled, whose prosperity is in the rapidly ascending scale, whose population, constantly augmenting in number, increasing in all the elements of trade, growing in wealth, education and refinement, gives no promise of soon becoming fixed and fleshed—in such a place, whatever its name, or longitude, for we have more regard for the longitude than the latitude of this question, is the place for our Book Concern. In the view we are taking of this subject, and speaking for the whole Church and its whole future, so far as we can comprise them, in our conceptions, we do not think that city lies east of the Alleghanies. If selfish feelings or local considerations governed us, we should say Richmond is the place from which to supply the Church with her literature. But we have overcome these considerations, and are governed by better and larger views. The depositories now existing in this division of the Church are ample for all the demands of society on the subject. But they are too remote from the most populous and important portions of our ecclesiastical confederacy to be made the centre of our operations. We should desire, if we can approximate with any accuracy to the selection, to locate our principal publishing establishment, near what will be the centre of population in the valley of the Mississippi at the close of the century, if that centre is within our territorial limits.

The Northern Advocate cannot get over that "settlement." Our cotemporary is a fit leader among the Abolitionists. With them 'business is business and religion is religion' It is characteristic that this Abolitionist print, par excellence, shows itself the most oblivions of the rules of common honesty. Philanthropy is an abstraction—paying debts is not. Referring to the opening left for the commissioners of the Western Book Concern to become parties to the settlement, the Northern reminds one of extracting teeth with ent chloroform:

"If those book agents and commissioners under such circumstances, assume the responsibility of dividing the property with the South, they will deserve the severest censure that the Church has power to inflict upon them. It would be the betrayal of a sacred trust. They are the agents of the General Conference, and had that body been disposed to compromise with the South in such a manner, unequivocal directions for so doing would no doubt, have been given. We look to the West for an example of firmness in this hour of trial.

"The trustees of the Chartered Fund have surrendered at discretion. The division—if any must be made—is equitable enough; but we think it would have been better had the trustees of that fund waited till the suit against the property at New York was finally decided.

"As to the settlement proper—that is, the New York Book Concern settlement, we have not been able to see it in any favorable light. So far as we can now perceive, it must have a most unhappy effect upon that establishment, and upon the Church, at large. The fault lies not simply in the fact that the South gets a share of the property; for had it taken all and gone, or had a fire burned the whole, as in 1836, the damage would not have been irretrievable. But a steady dole for ten long years to pro-slaveryism, will produce a state of things not anticipated by those who adjusted the details of the settlement."

We are glad to sound another note on the "settlement." Dr. Bond has at length spoken out. There was some curiosity to know what he had to say, and also what wires he pulled while this settlement was on foot. His silence was considered ominous. How far his position, at length taken, and his speaking out, are due to the stand made by the Hosmerites, we pretend not to say. The following, from his last editorial will stagger some people's impressions:

"We congratulate the whole M. E. Church and the M. E. Church, South, on the amicable adjustment of this vexed question, which has been one of the many evils growing out of the causeless division of the Church.

"It was natural, pending the controversy on the subject of dividing the stock of the Book Concern, for those who were impatient to get possession of what they considered their rightful claims to say hard things of those who withheld them, and to endeavor to enlist public opinion and sentiment in their favor; and accordingly very hard things were said and published, and the reputation of the M. E. Church suffered greatly in the conflict, because the public, and even a large portion of the membership, could not be made to understand the real causes of delay, and attributed it to mercenary motives.

"Having from the first openly advocated an equitable division of this property between the two churches, both through the Christian Advocate and Journal, and in the General Conference of 1848, we cannot be thought to take too favorable a view of the delay on the part of the M. E. Church to make the division: but we confidently believe that there has been no time since the General Conference of 1844, when the contingent plan of seperation was passed, when there has existed an intention to finally withhold from the Southern Church the pro rata proportion of the property to which it was entitled under the plan of separation."

Dr. B. hopes the Western business will soon be settled, in like manner. He was on hand and tells how it was done at Mulberry street:

"A proposition was offered by one party, and accepted by the other, and was settled. With respect to the settlement of the claims of the South on the Charter Fund we know nothing; but we have had ample opportunity and have taken some pains to ascertain the whole affair of the New York Book Concern, and are happy to say all appears fair and equitable. The Church, South, have obtained their fair proportion of the property—nothing more and nothing less—and thus this reproach of the Churches is rolled away. The Churches will rejoice, and those 'without' will be compelled to acknowledge that Christian people are not like other people; they act on principles unknown to the world."

ANNUAL STATE REPORTS.

We are indebted to W. Deacon, Esq., for three State pamphlets—the reports of Engineer, Treasurer and Librarian.

The able report of Mr. Morse, State Engineer, shows that he has been busily engaged for 1853, improving the internal navigation and projecting improvements. He complains of the small force at his disposal and suggests increase:

"If the works of improvement are to be carried forward as contemplated, there is not the least doubt in my mind that the best mode of doing it, is by the labor of the blacks. Its cost is not more than about one half of that of white labor, as I am prepared from the records of this office to show. It is much more certain, and really much more effective with the forces equal, and as each and all of your honorable body know, less liable to the injurious effects of our climate."

EXPENSES.—The expenditures of this department from the 1st of January, 1853, to the 1st of January, 1854, are as follows:

Internal Improvement service,	$15,815 54
Salary of State Engineer and incidental expenses of his department	10,968 48
For construction of State boats,	4,828 29
Barrataria and Lafourche Canal	5,663 13
Contingent Fund	190 67
	$37,466 11

The State Librarian's Report shows an increase of that department of 760 volumes.

The Treasurer has some items we copy:

Purchase of books for State Library	$10.000 00
Support of free public schools,	282,406 65

It will be seen that the Romanists make a very considerable draw upon the State Treasury for the support of their institutions. They ought to be satisfied:

Appropriation to Female Orphan Asylum	$5,000
Appropriation to St. Mary's Boys' Asylum	4,000
Appropriation to St. Vincent's Hospital	1,000
Appropriation to Les Dames de la Providence	2,000
Appropriation to Indigent Paupers, Third District	2,000

LECTURES AND LECTURERS.—If the purpose of the popular lectures of these modern times be to disseminate information, increase knowledge, and improve the heart and the intellect, these lectures do not fulfill their destiny, and are consequently the veriest HUMBUGS. None but our philosophers, poets and literateurs of established reputation can make a lecture tour successful and profitable. The business, the trade, is therefore confined to this class alone. They usurp the field, and walk wherever they choose, trampling on all the pigmies that have no fame, no name on the earth, and are therefore unable to compete with the more highly favored few. How do the popular lecturers prepare their lectures? The winter season is their harvest—their honey time. In summer they hive and house themselves, and, being men of elegant leisure, lie dormant. They choose a subject, read extensively on it, and calmly, quietly, slowly as the coral-insect, they put together a production, which is, of course, magnificent. The lecture season arrives. Our literateur has opened correspondence with all the "cat's paws" (beg pardon, we should have said Library Societies,) in the large cities, and made his appointments. Forth he sallies, reading the same lecture in a dozen cities, pocketing in each $50 or $60, and finally going home with a clear profit of $600 to $800. This is humbug.

But this is not the worst humbug about the matter. It is supposed that when we attend a lecture that we shall be profited; for it is said the aim of the lecturer should always be the mental good of his hearers. We are told that the lecture is one of the great moral engines of the age by which to reach the minds of the people. What, now, are the facts of the matter? In nineteen cases out of twenty, go into the lecture room, and you will hear a mere literary performance; a cluster of diamonds, a string of pearls, a collection of brilliancies, that charm and please and fascinate for a moment, and then are lost forever from sight, like the corruscations of a burning watch spring. Is it not humbug to pay fifty cents for listening to a splendid piece of composition, when we can stay at home and find infinitely more profitable reading in our libraries? Occasionally our popular lecturer takes a practical turn, and here, too, humbug is apparent. Your scientific man (in nine cases out of ten) addresses an audience as if they were all savans like himself. He employs the most complicated technical phrases, and having concluded, his hearers are in a mist. An hour's perusal of an elementary philosophy or chemistry would have profited them, not befogged them.

One or two things can be said in favor of the lectures of the day. It gives the public some acquaintance with the personelle of our country's distinguished men, especially those distinguished in literature. But it must be remembered that our most noted men do not make "travelling shows" of themselves. The time will soon be at hand when lecturing will either be abolished or very essentially modified. Men will begin to discover that they have been hamboozled, and will cease to allow the wool to be pulled over their eyes any longer. The whole such humbug are numbered with the dead, better. [Cleveland Plain Dealer.

MEANING OF HOMERIC NAMES.—Homer's idea of what contributes to a woman's praise, is indicated in the names by which his heroines are designated. These names are no given to them alive a grandmother's memory; nor because they are musical or fashionable; nor because novelists have clothed them with a certain charm; but for the sake of their significance. Andromache, when interpreted, means "the hero's battle-prize;" Theano, "the, the high-minded;" Arete, "the sought for;" Callianeira, "ruling by beauty;" Hecamede, "the far-thoughted;" Eurycles, "the widely-renowned;" Iphimedea, "the strong-thinker;" Polydamna, "the very hospitable;" Nausicaa, "the ship-galted," (in allusion to her easy and graceful movements;) Penelope, "the web-unravelled," and thereby hangs a proverb. "The web of Penelope's web" is, at this day, a proverbial phrase for the doing of a deed that is never finished. Penelope was pressed to select a second husband from the many princely suitors for her hand. She promised to think of the matter, after she had woven a shroud for her aged hero, Laertes. Her trick to prolong the weaving of the shroud is thus described by herself: "During the day I wove the large web, but by night, when the torches were lit, I unravelled it. Thus, for three years, I kept off the importunity of the suitors; but when the fourth year came they found me out, through the connivance of my maid-servants—careless creatures! for they gave me a scolding. Then I finished the shroud, though against my will, and by compulsion."

THE WINTERS IN CALIFORNIA.—Winter in California resembles spring more than winter in the East. Strictly speaking, there are but two seasons on this coast—the wet and the dry. The first rains have fallen, and the green grass already begins to appear upon the hills around San Francisco. During the next four months vegetation of all kinds will receive its first impetus, and precisely at that period of the year when everything is buried in gloom and desolation on the Atlantic seaboard, and when the trees are free of every leaf, the fields of all verdure, and all the little streams choked by the fetters, in this favored clime the flowers begin to start from their "root-bed of fibrous feathers," the grains to swell and shoot forth, and the forest to don its deepest garment of green. January is the April of the West, and the hills look brightest, and the valleys look gayest, the gloomiest months on the east of the Rocky Mountains. Now we are enjoying the "season of singing rains of the young year," whilst the "zero leaf" and the snow-mantled landscape are preaching their sermons of death and desolation to our friends in our early home.

True, we miss the merry jingle of the sleigh bells, and the graceful gait of the accomplished skater. But we are, at the same time, free from frozen noses and frost-bitten toes; from shivering in the early morning, and trembling between the cold sheets at night; from coughs and catarrhs, pleurisies and consumption. We have, in exchange for these winter comforts, some rain—that we can't deny. But when we remember that the same puddle which swamps our boat [illegible] our mining friends to [illegible] half [illegible] of gold, and that the [illegible] shower [illegible] vertinal commerce [illegible] and south [illegible] streets, [illegible] El Dorado and [illegible] with ingots, we are [illegible] comfort from our [illegible] thanks to heaven [illegible] we are [illegible] Yankeedom New England [illegible] cousins, [illegible] noses blacken north winds and frosts [illegible] San Francisco Herald.

ANIMAL TENACITY OF LIFE.—Among the lower animals tenacity of life is the most remarkable in the polypi: they may be pounded in a mortar, split up, turned inside out like a glove, and divided into parts, without injury to life; fire alone is fatal to them. It is now about a hundred years since Trembly made us acquainted with these animals, and first discovered their indestructibility. It had subsequently been taken up by other natural historians, who had followed up these experiments, and have even gone so far as to produce monsters by grafting. If they be turned inside out, they attempt to replace themselves, and if unsuccessfully, the outer surface assumes the properties and powers of the inner, and the reverse. If the effort be partially successful only, the part turned back disappears in twenty-four hours, and that part of the body embraces it in such a manner that the arms which projected behind are now fixed in the centre of the body; the original opening disappears, and in the room of feelers a circular mouth is formed, to which now feelers attach themselves, and this new mouth feeds immediately. The healed extremity elongates itself into a tail, of which the animal has now two. If two polypi be passed into one another like tubes, and pierced through with a bristle, the inner one works its way through the other, and comes forth in a few days; in some instances, however, they grow together, and then a double row of feelers surround the mouth. If they be mutilated, the divided parts grow together again, and even pieces of two seperate individuals will unite into one.

An American Woman among the Savages of the Plains.

The San Antonia Western Texan of the 19th ult. gives the particulars of the captivity of Mrs. Jane Wilson, who was taken prisoner while on her way from Camanche, Texas about a year since by the Camanches, who at the same time murdered her husband and his father.

Mrs. Wilson says that she is the daughter of a Mr. Smith, formerly of Alton, Ill., where she was born. Her father removed from thence to Missouri, and several years since to Texas; that she is seventeen years of age, and in February last was married to a man named James Wilson, and resided near the town of Greenville, in Hunt county, Texas; that last summer her husband, accompanied by herself, his father and mother, and three little boys, the brothers of her husband, joined a train of emigrants destined for California, but when near El Paso this party, together with several others, determined to return to Texas; that within a few days after their leaving the main party, on their return, they were attacked by Indians, supposed to be Camanches, and her husband and his father were both killed.

The party still continued their journey, until within a very short distance of the settlements, where they supposed all danger was over. At a time when all the men except the driver of the wagon were absent, a small party of Camanche Indians charged upon them, killed the driver and made prisoners of herself and two of the boys, one aged twelve and the other seven years. They travelled with their prisoners a short distance to where a much larger number of Indians were encamped. She was stripped of her clothes and subjected to the most brutal and inhuman treatment which has ever fallen to the lot of poor defenceless woman to endure. She continued with these savages twenty-five days, during the whole of which time she was subjected to the same barbarous treatment. At the end of this time she fortunately made her escape. She wandered about without clothes or any other food except the wild fruit and berries which she could find, for twelve days, and when life was almost extinct, fortunately fell in with a small party of Mexicans from the territory of New Mexico, who were going to trade with the Camanches.

After having relieved her wants in every possible manner in which they could, and clothed her in man's apparel—for they had no other—and having remained with her until she had partially recovered from the effects of ill-treatment, starvation and fatigue, the traders determined to open a trade with this band of Indians, and, if possible, recover the two boys. Knowing, however, that to take this poor woman with them would be fatal to her as well as their object of recovering the boys, they found a hollow tree in which she could conceal herself. They supplied her with provisions, and left her alone to await their return. In this place of concealment Mrs. Wilson remained for eight days longer, not knowing at what hour she might be discovered by the savages or destroyed by the wolves. At the end of eight days, the traders returned. They supplied her with a horse to ride, treated her kindly, and finally brought her to the house of a man who could speak the English language, about twenty-five miles from Santa Fe, and there left her, because she could travel no further in her delicate situation.

She apprised the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of her condition, who dispatched his son to see that she was properly cared for, and after resting a few days he brought her to the commissioner, where she now remains under his care, and is fast recovering from the effects of her cruel ordeal. Mrs. Wilson appears to be a remarkably intelligent and modest lady, of fine personal appearance, and will become a mother in a few weeks. Her peculiar situation, her sufferings and lady-like deportment, have strongly excited the sympathies of all those who have seen her. When she was found by the traders, hunger, thirst and suffering had reduced her to a mere skeleton. And she could not have survived many days longer. Efforts are now making, which, it is hoped, will effect the release of the two boys, who are still with the Indians. The latter were, when last heard from, near a place called the South Hills.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.—Mr. Douglas, of the Senate Special Committee on the Pacific Railroad, has proposed the following plan for the adoption of the committee: That three routes be surveyed, one Northern, one Southern, and one located over the best route between the two. That the Government shall advance no money for either,

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

OBITUARY:

It i fallen to my lot to record the death of one of the most lavely and exemplary christians whom it has ever been my happiness meet.

Thubject of this notice, Sister JULIA Will wns bern in Union Dist, S. C. At the ey ige of 11, she professed religion, and ied the M. E. Church. She moved with parents to Noxubee Co., and from hento Leake, Miss., whore she expired at, he idence of her father, on the 3d day of Octe last, of congestive fever, after a short but iful illness of eight days, aged 24 year

Crity for the honored dead often mantles and emblazons virtues forth—here are onto shadow—surrounded by a large ir of devoted friends and relatives, she e beloved of all, confiding and self-arcing as a friend, meek, and of a lowly pir she followed as a Christian the foot-tepof her blessed Savior.

I have thought on hearing of her many exelbeies, she was the only one I have ever non at peace with God and all the world, and the world with her. Like a bright eor she has passed away from us and gone ir reward.

Ashort time previous to her death her oler expressed a wish to see her pious brotiowho had expired a few months before in egrill triumph of a glorious immortality, boldly replied, "I am determined by the ge of God to live in such a manner that hn I die I will see him."

On the day of her death, as weeping friends arelatives would crowd the room to listen r peaceful, and unearthly counsel, eyes e scarcely ever wept and hearts unknown no sweet consoling influences of religion, o completely melted—no one could pray ldd. At a camp-meeting a month previ- studoring a powerful display of the presnce of God, she remarked: "This is good, but, what is it in comparison to what we shall see if we can get to heaven?" She roided those around her of the time, saying hewas now going to try the realities of that lessed home in heaven; exhorted all present to double their diligonco and live the life of aChristian, and with astonishing strength efore she expired, threw her arms around r father's neck and obtained his promise to and meet her in heaven. May God help keep it.

In the language of our immortal Bascom, the vicissitudes of earthly trial are exchanged for heavenly recompense, and sublie in the rewards of eternal fruition; to her is known that the noblest lessons of Christan virtue are to be learned amid the clouds nd storms of life, and that the loveliest owers that bloom in the paradise of God re watered by tears upon earth." W

NOTICES.

NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT, QUARTERLY MEETING.

Felicity street; Sacrament Jan. 27, L. easst 30, Q. Conf. 31.

New Orleans Circuit: Feb. 5, at Algiers, L. F. 3 P.M., Q. C. 4th, 5 P. M.

McGehee: Feb. 12, L. F. 13th, Q. C. 7th.

German Missions, Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4: Feb. 19, at Piety street, L. F. 3 P.M., Q. C. 17th, at Bryades street.

Thibodeaux: Feh. 25th and 26th.

Welley, Soule and Winans Chapels: Q. C. Feb. 10, L. F. 12th, 3 P. M.

Lafourche and Bayou Black Circuit and Mission: March 4th and 5th, at Donaldsonville

Plaquemine and Pointe Coupee: March 11th and 12th, at Plaquomine, also Protracted Meeting at Pointe Coupee March 25th and 26th.

Baton Rouge: March 18th and 19th.

Moreau street: April 2, L. F. 3d, Q. C. March 30th. J. C. KEENER, P. E.

Notice to Teachers.

THE PLAQUEMINE FEMALE SEMINARY is now closed in consequence of the removal of the late Principal, and it is desired to procure a suitable person to open and conduct a Female School of a high order.

The buildings are large and commodious, capable of accommodating at least fifty boarding scholars.

The location is one of the best in the State and will command a good school if well managed.

Any gentleman wishing to embark in the business can get further information on the subject by addressing the undersigned, forwarding statement of qualifications and reference. EDWARD J. GAY.

Plaquemine, Iberville Parish, La., Jan. 2, 1853.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square first insertion	$1 00
Each subsequent insertion	50
One Square, one year	15 00
One Square, six months	10 00
Two Squares, one year	25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

General Intelligence.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—The reports from all the cemeteries of the city, except two, for the week ending Sunday morning, show that there have been buried in these cemeteries, during the week, one hundred and fifteen persons. We doubt if any city in the Union, with the population of New Orleans, can exhibit, in its report, a better state of health than this.

COLD WEATHER.—The weather was extremely cold at St. Louis on the 19th inst., and the river was frozen over so that teams crossed it safely. About 200 boats were waiting at Cairo for the river to open, and a large number of emigrants were there in a destitute condition.

ADVANCE IN THE PRICE OF GUANO.—The agents of the Peruvian Government at Baltimore have been instructed to advance the price of Peruvian guano consigned to them from the Chincha islands $4 per ton, and also to make hereafter no sales less than fifty tons, so that the general sale of the article will be by the commission merchants and regular dealers

WILD PIGEONS.—The innumerable quantities of these birds which have visited this section during the winter, says the Anderson (S. C.) Gazette, has afforded some rare sport to hunters. At a roost a short distance from Pendleton, about 900 were killed during the evening. At Centreville, 700 were killed in the same length of time, and in sundry other places we have heard of three and four hundred having been killed.

A CENTENARIAN.—Daniel Johnson, a revolutionary hero, aged 102 years, died in Copiah county, Miss., on the 16th ult. He was a native of South Carolina and served under Gen. Marion, and afterwards fought under Capt. Barber to Georgia. He was also engaged in the Creek war.

COAL ON ITS WAY TO NEW ORLEANS.—The Pittsburg Dispatch of the 21st says:

"On careful inquiry we are prepared to say that about one hundred and seventy-five (probably one hundred and eighty) pair of loaded coal boats have passed up to-day through the first lock on the Monongahela. Some twenty pair loaded below the locks may be added to this number. Besides, the tow-boats have taken down a number of barges not included in the estimate. Of this fleet the losses so far known, were thirteen pair, but very many more will no doubt go down before they reach their place of destination—which for a large portion, as we learn, is New Orleans—two thousand miles distant, with hidden dangers in every bend and reach of that long water journey—in addition to the ice-surroundings through much of the way, and the greater peril of high winds and waves. Only a few inches of pine plank above the surface of the water, and the same pine plank for sides and bottoms of barges, which are loaded to six feet, or about that average boats, which are loaded to six feet, or about that average boats, which are loaded to six feet, or about that average boats

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

THE THREE BELLS....A SHIP FOR CAPTAIN CREIGHTON....By William Ross Wallace.

Yes, a gallant ship for Caucasus! one whose keel should leave our strand,
With a Nation's benediction, from a Nation's mighty hands!
Would ye give a private guerdon unto him whose fearless form
Plucked for a Nation's treasure, with the Titans of the storm.

Bullet-hail, and windy, noisy—shouting from his reeling deck—
Rainbow words of Hope and Comfort o'er the doomed Franconia's wreck;
No!—a Nation is the debtor—let the Nation payment make,
'Mid the flash of stormy banners, for its own majestic sake!

Never shone a grander vision to the Bard's or Sisters Nine's eye,
Than a ship like this by Castle Isle, and Narrows sailing by;
Pleading o'er the smiling ocean, up the British Channel, where Memories of Great Blake and Nelson diadem the wondering air.

As if plays around a masthead where two banners are entwined,
Star and Red Cross twined prophetic of a Peace encircling world.
Where the best beloved of heroes shall be Him, who serves Him,
With a calm, unqualified fearlessness, and the elemental strife!
There a gallant ship for Caucasus!—one whose keel should leave our strand,
With a Nation's benediction from a Nation's mighty hands.

Interesting Reminiscences of Henry Clay.

Amongst the most agreeable reminiscences of this year are the visits of Henry Clay. We were fulfilling an engagement in New Orleans when he first called upon me. It chanced that my history was well known to him. He took a deep interest in my professional exertions, and his encouragement was not sparingly bestowed. One day he gave me a glowing description of Miss O'Neil Juliet, especially of the naiveté and fervor of her balcony scene. But when he attempted to quote the passages which had impressed him, I could not help laughing involuntarily at his odd deviations from the text.

"I dare say I am misquoting," he remarked, apologetically. "I never could remember a line of poetry."

I had to admit that his version of Juliet differed considerably from the one which popular prejudice had adopted—one could I flatter him by saying that he improved upon Shakspeare.

He then told me that it was a singular fact, and one which had been a subject of regret through his whole life, that he could not by any effort retain verse in his memory. Even if he studied a poem by rote, in a few days the lines would be wholly effaced from the mental tablet on which they had been laboriously written. He related to me an anecdote in painful illustration of this peculiarity. He was making some public address—I think it was a Fourth of July oration—during the course of which he purposed quoting the well-known lines,

"Lives there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land!"

Declaiming warmly, he gave enthusiastic utterance to the line—

"Lives there a man with soul so dead"—

but the poetic page suddenly became a blank—he could not remember another word. He paused—then repeated the line with more patriotic ardor than before. He thought the second line would "come to him" by means of the repetition—but it came not. He put his hand to his forehead, trying to think what the man did "whose soul was so dead"—but the evidence of that individual's torpid essence would not develop itself in metre. For the third time he asked the question emphatically, not to say despairingly.

"Lives there a man with soul so dead"— and must have buried misery in his query, had not a voice from the audience continued, in a stage whisper—

"Who never to himself hath said."

The oblivious statesman caught the words, and thankfully finished his quotation. He determined, in future, to ornament his orations with few of those slippery gems of the poet.

Our next engagement took us to Vicksburg, but at its close we rejoined Henry Clay on board of the Alexander Scott. We passed five days in this floating palace on our way to Louisville. Henry Clay was cheered wherever we stopped, and answering cheers were sent back from the boat. To these the ladies now and then joined.

I was standing beside him when we arrived at Memphis. He turned to me, and said, "Have you ever appeared here?"

I replied in the negative.

He remarked, "This western Memphis makes more gigantic progress than any town I know. She will be the queen city of the west by and by. Never pass here again without appearing."

I remembered that I would not. It was six years before I saw Memphis once more; but I kept my word. My appearance was rendered a brief one through sudden indisposition. I remember with regret the improbability that I shall ever stand before a genial Memphis audience again.

Henry Clay passed a large portion of his time in the ladies' saloon. The bearing of our lofty-minded statesman, though always dignified, was characterized by extreme courtesy—courtesy to the ladies at all as the highest. He conversed freely upon all subjects, and with the fluency for which he was distinguished.

"Aged ears played truant with his tales,
And younger hearings were quite ravished
With his discourse."

We were one day discussing Lafayette's visit to this country. Some jocular estimate was made of the number of ladies whom he had affectionately saluted. Clay remarked, that "kissing was like the Presidency; it was not to be sought, and not to be declined." The natural inference from this remark was, that he would not oppose the wishes of his party if they again offered his name as a presidential candidate. The conclusion did not prove erroneous.

He recounted to me a number of anecdotes illustrative of the manner in which his friends demonstrated their grief at the great whig defeat. Some of the most pathetic of these stories had still a touch of the ludicrous; but he seemed to feel most deeply the manifestations of attachment of which he was the object.

Many of the passengers exerted themselves to entertain a fellow-traveler whom every one seemed to treat as his own particular and honored guest; but none contributed so largely to his amusement as Mr. Davenport. He sang comic, patriotic, and sentimental songs, and recited humorous sketches, in which five or six different characters were personated. One evening he entered the saloon disguised as a "down-east" Yankee. I must say, by way of parenthesis, that his Yankee was a stage representation of Yankee land—a broad but telling caricature of the reality. He wore a red whig, striped pantaloons that maintained a respectable distance from his ancles, a short jacket, and a flame-colored cravat. He carried his hands deeply thrust in his pockets, as though they had an evident inclination to approach his knees. His "jog-along" gait could only have originated in New England.

He was not recognized when he entered the cabin. The passengers supposed him to be some person who had just come on board. He commenced talking, with a nasal intonation, in a loud and familiar manner, and asking "oceans of questions." He gave Mr. Mowatt (who was in the secret) a nudge, and accosted him with "Stranger, I hear that's Harry Clay: I guess I'll scrape acquaintance with him, if you'll do the polite thing."

Mr. Mowatt presented the Yankee gentleman to Mr. Clay. The impudent speeches of the "downeaster" to the "best representative of republican royalty," as the Yankee designated the statesman, convulsed the passengers with laughter. Mr. Clay joined in the contagious merriment. Dreading that these personalities might give offense, I took occasion to whisper to him the Yankee's history, and the name which he inherited from his father. Mr. Clay heartily lent himself to the joke.

On the day that we reached Louisville, the passengers requested me to present our eminent countryman with some poetical tribute in commemoration of our journey. I wrote an impromptu song, which was set to music by Mr. Davenport, and sung by him when the passengers assembled in the cabin to take farewell of the statesman.

Mr. Clay made a point of publicly and very graciously thanking Mr. Davenport for the genuine diversion his talents had afforded us all. He wrote in his pocket-book a few kind and complimentary lines, of which the grateful actor will be proud [illegible] and said, "These just lines [illegible] You know the owners and [illegible] for me or my [illegible] party. I don't know when a trifling circumstance has moved me so much." The tears were standing in his eyes as he spoke.

I received two visits from him during the day we were in Louisville. He then traveled to Lexington, and we took the steamboat to Cincinnati. We exchanged several letters after this, and I had many evidences that his interest remained unabated; but we never met again. The next time I visited Louisville, my drawing-room window in the hotel was decked in remembrance of Henry Clay; for his funeral procession was passing through the streets.—[Mrs. Mowatt's Autobiography.

Miss Mitford.

We left the rail, and took an open carriage at Reading, a quaint old place, containing some venerable abbey ruins. "Three Mile Cross," the immortal "Our Village" of the sketches, is some miles from this town, but the poetess does not reside there, having removed to a simple little cottage at Swallowfield, a mile or two away. We drove through "Our Village" however, and passed her old home; and every field, and lane, and house, and shop, was familiar to my eye. The birds in the trees seemed singing her name over and over, and the wild roses in the hedges were breathing of her. I gazed down her favorite walks, half cheating myself with the hope that I should see her strolling under the green shadows with her lovely little friend Lucy, and her beautiful grey hound Mayflower. I looked longingly over towards Aberleigh, and sighed, that she who had made those lovely rural scenes the haunts of charmed fancy, and places of quiet delight, and refreshment, for thousands, could herself roam over them and rejoice in them no more.

I knew when we were near Miss Mitford's home, by our encountering a group of her picturesque protégés, the gipsies, who were lounging on the turf at the entrance of a lane, spinning themselves—a carelessly, lazy-looking set of vagabonds, who scarcely deigned to turn their faces towards us as we passed; though one dusky damsel fired up at us with her gleaming eyes, from the ambush of her black, straggling locks.

We were pained to find Miss Mitford, who has been in a feeble state of health for some years past, suffering from an attack of Asthma more than usually severe. Yet she did not look ill; her fine expressive face was lit with pleasant smiles, and she retained her kind sympathetic manner, and cheerful, charming spirits to the full. Miss Mitford talks delightfully, with graphic description of places and persons, free dashes at character, and a rich, delicious humor, which you relish like a dainty flavor. She has the joyous, outgushing laugh of a child, and her kindly eyes flash from under her noble brow and snowy, soft hair, with all the vivacity of girlhood.

An complaining could have been half so touching as her cheerful resignation when she was told that she must not go with me to drive, a pleasure to which she had been looking forward. Feeling that she had ever exerted herself in conversation, we left her for an hour or two, while we visited Strathfield-Saye, the noble country seat of the Duke of Wellington, and drove through the extensive and beautiful grounds. The park is one of the finest in England, but the house is neither grand nor picturesque.

It was with real sorrow at my heart that I parted with Miss Mitford that evening. The excitement of the morning had worn off, and she looked pale and sad. I grieved to leave her with only her maid and man servant, devoted though they be—feeling that she, whose heart was so rich in tenderest affections, should have the near love and anxious care of at least a sister or brother ever about her steps. My lips quivered painfully under her parting kiss, though receiving it was the benediction of one of God's angels. I never shall forget the deep melodious flavor of her "God bless you!" bestowed on her well beloved friend Mr. F——; nor her last smile cast on me both, as she stood in her door, looking after me as we drove away. Yet I was much comforted in my sadness by the thought, that ever, while England boasts a pure literature, and a virtuous people, while her quiet country lanes stretch out their lovely vistas of greenery, while her hawthorn hedges blossom through the pleasant land, will the name of Mary Russell Mitford be cherished and revered.—[Grace Greenwood's "Hops and Mishaps."

MRS. MOWATT.—Mrs. Mowatt was born in Bordeaux, during a temporary residence of her parents in that city. Her earliest recollections date from a charming country residence in the vicinity of Bordeaux, where she remained for the greater part of the time until her seventh year. The family then embarked for New York, but the vessel was wrecked on the passage, and after enduring great perils they at length arrived in another ship. During her school days, the precocious child exhibited uncommon vivacity of intellect, with a decided turn for poetry. Her passion for reading led her to devour every book on which she could lay her hands. Before she was ten years old she had read the whole of Shakspeare's plays many times over, besides a very promiscuous course of general literature, both in French and English. She was not yet in her teens before she set up as a poetess, while her success in private theatricals won the applause of a large social circle.

In her thirteenth year she became acquainted with Mr. Mowatt, at that time "a young barrister of education and fortune," who had taken a fancy to one of her married sisters, whom he met at a watering place, supposing her to be a young widow. He did not discover his jealousy blunder until he began to express his admiration openly. When informed that he was addressing a married woman he took the disappointment so much to heart that she undertook to console his chagrin by inviting him to visit the family, promising to introduce him to plenty of young sisters, one of whom was much like herself. Mr. Mowatt lost no time in accepting the invitation. He fell in love with Anna at first sight. From that moment he determined to educate her according to his own ideas, and as soon as she had attained a marriageable age to make her his child-wife. He would follow on her way to Madame Chegary's school, of which she was a pupil, carrying her books and slate; he questioned her about her studies, directed her reading, kept her supplied with an endless profusion of flowers, while she, finding it grand to have such a devoted lover, played the juvenile tyranness to her heart's content. Before she was fifteen he made the offer of his heart and hand. The little damsel was frightened at the proposal, and in her distress made a confidant of her eldest sister. After coquetting for some time with her eccentric lover, and positively refusing his addresses, her reluctance was at length overcome, and she consented to a clandestine marriage. This was celebrated just after she was turned of fifteen, in the most melodramatic style. Soon after the honey-moon the enthusiastic couple retired to a delightful residence on Long Island, where they passed a strange, idyllic life, which is minutely described by her in her autobiography recently published.—[New York Tribune.

A DOLLAR.—If you want to know precisely how much a dollar is worth, just try to borrow that amount from your most intimate friends. Perhaps you will get it, and then again perhaps you won't. If you have no occasion to ask you can easily obtain it, but if the world honestly believes you need a dollar to save you from actual starvation, you will stand a remarkably good chance for Potter's Field before the dimes are forthcoming. Try the experiment.

"PLEASE ACCEPT THE INDIAN NOTE EDITORIAL HEAD."—A California editor recently received a number of documents from the Secretary of some corporation at Sacramento with a polite request that he would give the same a few insertions under his editorial head. He complied with the request literally by inserting the whole package for three weeks between the pillows under his head, when he went to bed and rose between the insertion will give satisfaction. He gives notice that others who wish their business advertised 'gratis' will be accommodated in the same way.

WHAT ARE "CONSOLS?"—They are a three per cent. English stock, which had its origin in an act of the British Parliament consolidating (hence the name) several separate Government stocks, called in the act "Consolidated Annuities," and commonly quoted for brevity, as "Consols." This stock, from its amount and the immense number of its holders, is more sensitive to financial influence than any other, and is therefore the favorite stock for the operation of speculators and jobbers. Its dividends are payable semi-annually.

THE CUMBERLAND.—The Nashville Whig of the 23d says, "The Cumberland was still rising on Saturday at the rate of two inches an hour. The weather was progressively cold freezing in the shade during the entire day, with a strong and biting north wind. The business at the wharf was quite active, there being several large boats receiving freight."

SOLDIERS OF THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR.—The number of soldiers furnished to the Continental army during the revolutionary war, by each of the thirteen States, were as follows:

New Hampshire	12,497	Delaware	2,386
Massachusetts	67,907	Maryland	13,912
Rhode Island	5,908	Virginia	26,678
Connecticut	31,939	North Carolina	7,263
New York	17,781	South Carolina	6,417
New Jersey	10,726	Georgia	2,679
Pennsylvania	25,678
Total			231,791

Of these it has been ascertained that there are less than fourteen hundred now remaining. It is computed that in eighteen years they will all have been swept off, or, if any remain at that time, they will have attained the age of at least 107 to 110 years.

MISS LUCY STONE.—Miss Lucy Stone was recently at Alton on her way to Chicago. The Alton Telegraph, in speaking of her transit through that town, is responsible for the following:

"The gentlemanly clerk of the Brunette politely assisted her to the depot, carrying her carpet-sack, satchel, etc., and with no little pains selected for her the most comfortable seat in the cars. When duly announced, however, instead of thanking him for his attentions, she very coolly opened her purse and offered him a dollar! We don't know what his "feelings" were, but it is said he very quietly bowed himself out. Miss Lucy certainly has not yet learned that in the West, at least, politeness is a bountiful gift, offered without price, and is return for which gentlemen ask only the merest acknowledgments.

THE EAST INDIA AND PACIFIC TRADE.—During 1853, there arrived at ports in the United States from the East Indies 193 vessels, and there cleared for the East Indies 83 vessels. The year previous the arrivals were 151, and the clearances 100. There also arrived from the Pacific, including California, 136 vessels, and cleared 47.—The year previous there were 181 arrivals and 137 clearances.

BURNED AT ST. LOUIS.—The Intelligencer of the 11th inst. says: "One solitary steamer is now carrying on all the transportation for this great and growing city. That craft is the Brunette, plying as a regular packet between this city and Alton. From this some idea may be formed of the extent of receipts and shipments, as well as the general appearance of the business thoroughfares of a city dependant for trade altogether upon her river navigation. The St. Louis Levee never presented a more desolate and forlorn appearance than it does at the present time."

THE END OF KOSSTA.—We understand that the far-famed Martin Kossta, is now in this city in a state of utter destitution. An application has been made to us on the behalf by a friend of his for a yearly pension in one establishment, worth five dollars a week. We are sorry to say that we have no vacancies; but surely the great Commodore Ingraham, who obtained a medal and over so much glory, and Sir Morey, who procured a ready-made reputation as a statesman, solely and entirely out of Kossta, something might be done for the poor fellow. He has raised two men to a pinnacle of fame—they by her could have traveled without him. Let us be left to starve himself? Who wouldn't be a patriot.—[N. Y. Herald.

OUTRAGE.—We learn that the steamer Hunterville put a man off at Yucatan wood-yard, about six miles above Grand Gulf, and after he was landed the mate and some of the deck hands fell upon him, and beat him in such a manner that he died in a few hours after. The officers and passengers of the Huntsville were witnesses to this brutality. An inquest was held over the body on Friday last, and the jury rendered a verdict of "Died by violence on part of the officers of the steamer Huntsville." This poor man had no doubt, by some petty offence, incurred the wrath of the mate, and was hurried into eternity as a penalty. Brutality may be a virtue on the Western waters, but the strong arm of the law should interfere, and draw the perpetrators of the outrage we record to the bar of justice.—[Port Gibson (Miss.) Ravelle, Jan 25.

DIPLOMATIC INTELLIGENCE OF FEVER.—A New York correspondent of the Louisville Journal, alluding to the enfilade in store for the poor working-women of that city, during the winter we have now entered upon, states this pitiable fact: The owners of one of the newly invented sewing machines, lately advertised for two girls to work on one of them, only for two weeks. The advertisement was out in one morning paper, the Tribune, and before 1 o'clock in the day, he received more than four hundred applications. He was obliged to close his office in a sort of horror at the suffering thus presented to his observation.

EMIGRATION TO TEXAS.—The steamer Alabama passed down yesterday morning with an immense load of passengers emigrating to Louisiana and Texas. The tide of emigration seems unabated; indeed, we think it is increasing, and if Texas don't become a great country it will not be for the want of intelligent, genteel emigrants crowding thither from our own and sister States.—[Selma (Ala.) Sentinel.

Montesquieu says, "I never listen to calumnies, because if they are untrue, I run the risk of being deceived, and if they be true, of hating persons not worth thinking about."

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE, FOR JANUARY.

The Publishers of HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE are compelled to solicit public indulgence for the entire absence of Pictorial Illustrations, and for other defects in the typographical appearance of the present number. The entire destruction of their printing-presses and types on the 10th of December, and the impossibility of replacing them immediately, deprived them the facilities which have usually contributed, in no slight degree, to the excellence of its mechanical execution, and compelled them to resort to other establishments less completely furnished. The very large edition, moreover, required of their Magazine, and the comparatively small number of presses which they have been able to procure for working it, have caused the delay of a few days in its delivery.

CONTENTS.

A WORD OF APOLOGY.
THE ITALIAN SISTES. By G. P. R. James, Esq.
NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. By John S. C. Abbott.
TWO COUSINS.
FLOWER BELLS.
THE SPIRIT VISION. By Maunsell B. Field.
THE NEWCOMES. MEMOIRS OF A MOST RESPECTABLE FAMILY. By W. M. Thackeray.
CHAPTER VII. In which Mr. Clives School-days are over.
CHAPTER VIII. Mrs. Newcome at Home (A small early Party.)
CHAPTER IX. Miss Honeyman's
DUTCH AND ENGLISH INTERCOURSE WITH JAPAN.
THE LIFE ESTATE.
RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERIDAN. By Oliver Gifillan.
FORGIVENESS.—THE RETURN.
FIVE TEMPTRESS.
THE PORTRAIT.
SOCIAL CUSTOMS OF BRITANNY. COURTSHIP AND MARRIAGE—RACING AND WRESTLING.
THE SWORD OF MAULEY.
THE PUBLIC CAREER OF TALLEYRAND.
STORIES OF THE HUGUENOTS.
MY LIFE MAURICE.
MONTHLY RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS:
United States: Meeting of Congress; Abstract of the President's Message; Abstract of the Reports of the Secretary of the Treasury, Postmaster-General, Secretary of War, Secretary of the Navy, and Secretary of the Interior; Proceedings to Congress; Escape and Speeches of John Mitchel, California, and Washington Territory; Arrival of the new Captain-General; Precautions against Insurrection; Return of Consul Clayton. Mexico: Preparations for proclaiming Santa Anna Emperor; Financial Condition; Mesilla Valley and Garay Grant; Perry upon Lower California. Great Britain: Reported Convention respecting the Eastern Question; Public Feeling in favor of Turkey; Letter from Kossuth and Mazzini; Address of Prince Czartoryski to those of the Dublin Exhibition; Public Meetings; Geographical Society and Sir John Franklin; Lord Palmerston on East-Days. The Continent: Trial of French Conspirators; Canonization at Rome; Death of the Queen of Portugal; Sweden; Prussia. Russia and Turkey: Turkish and Russian Proclamations; Circular of Count Nesselrode; Hostilities on the Danube; Destruction of Turkish Vessels in the Black Sea; Hostilities in Asia; French and English Fleets; New French Minister at Constantinople.
EDITOR'S TABLE.
CONDITION OF THE CENSUS, with Diagram showing the Comparative Progress of the several States and Territories.
EDITOR'S EASY CHAIR.
The Old Chair Burnt: New Year's Calls; American compared with French Chivalry; Here we a National Dish among us! The Moral of surrendering Seats to Women; Russia and Turkey; Women as Writers, and Women's Rights; French Ideas of English Eccentricity, with a Story, not warranted true; What People say of the French Emperor; Turks at a Premium; Mesmeric Match-making; French Marriage of Convenience, and how it resulted; Another Story of a French Marriage; Turkish Influence upon French Fashions; Special Correspondence of the Press, with a Specimen of Foreign Letters written at Home; Traveling in Italy with a genuine Letter therefrom.
EDITOR'S DRAWER.
Wester Scene; A Couple of Cockneys sold; Retreat from an Indian Romance; Little Children; A Duel. Trick; Delicate Circumlocution; The Descent of the Greenhorns; Hint for the Honeymoon; A Bustling Snake; Epitaph; A Prayer with a Codicil; A Poser; Impertinent Lawyer done far; Eagle Song; Exercise on Memory; Supporting a Husband; Locotic Invasiveness, Proposal; Sober Fact, Retrieved Crusoe's Island Inhabited—and why; Terrific Combat; Responsible for the Sales; A Dollar or Two; Loss of a Cow; Saving an Egg; Lesson for bad Penmen. Little Things; Paying Debts; A Couple of Dialogues.
LITERARY NOTICES.
Books of the Month: New Collection of the British Poets; The Bloodstone; Hot Corn; Index to Periodical Literature; Shelton's Up the River; Liberty; or, Mr. Peyton's Experiments; Little Fires for Fanney's Little Friends; Tuckerman's Month in England; Harry's Ladder to Learning; Poetical Works of George P. Morris; Clovernook. Golden Lisk; Grimm's Popular Stories; McKellar's Poems for the Gentle and Loving; The Hundred Boston Orators.—Turnbull's Christ in History; January and June; Flush Times of Alabama and Mississippi; Willis's Health Trip to the Tropics; Blackwater Chronicle; McConnel's Western Characters. Foreign Literary Intelligence: Mrs. Eastman's Abridged Portfolio; Flagg's Venice; American Authors and Government Appointments; Poems by Frederick Tennyson, Tennyson.—The Magazine may be obtained of Booksellers, Periodical Agents, or from the Publishers at HARPER'S PUBLISHING HOUSE, Cliff-street, New York.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE, now in the Twenty-first Volume, is published on the first day of each month. Each number contains one hundred and forty-four pages of reading, and numerous Illustrations, forming two volumes annually of nearly one thousand pages.

TERMS.—The Magazine may be obtained of Booksellers, Periodical Agents, or from the Publishers at HARPER'S PUBLISHING HOUSE, Cliff-street, New York.

The Terms of Subscription are Three Dollars a year, or One Dollar and Fifty Cents for six months. Subscriptions may commence with any number. Single numbers, Twenty-five Cents each. Bound Volumes are now ready, bound in Cloth, and sold at Two Dollars each. Muslin Covers are furnished to those who wish to have their back Numbers uniformly bound, at Twenty-five Cents each. Seven Volumes are now ready, bound.

The Publishers will supply Specimen Numbers gratuitously to Agents and Postmasters, and will make liberal arrangements with them for circulating the Magazine. They will also supply Clubs of two persons at Five Dollars a year, or five persons at Ten Dollars. Clergymen supplied at Two Dollars a year. Numbers from the commencement can still be supplied.

The Magazine weighs over seven and not over eight ounces. The Postage upon each number, which must be paid quarterly in advance, is Three Cents.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

Fire! Fire!!

It is night, and yet the heavens are lurid with long lines of reflected light shooting upward like the streamers of the Aurora Borealis, spreading, widening, deepening and growing more and yet more strikingly visible. In a few moments the fact and the occasion are heralded through the streets of the city by a hundred noisy voices and as many deep-toned bells. The watchmen wake from drowsiness and wind their rattles, shouting "Fire—Fire!" Somewhere in the bounds of the city property is being destroyed and perhaps life endangered. Some men feels and sees slipping, irrelievably, through his fingers the earnings of long years, and looks forward to trouble, perhaps to suffering, perhaps to want. One family is growing poorer, and yet nobody is benefited. Incredibly soon the deserted streets begin to be crowded—the quiet night becomes noisy. Engines come thundering over the pavement, drawn by great horses, whose severe labor shows itself in every sinewy step they take. Hose carriages whirl by, with bells ringing a still wilder alarum, followed by other carriages weighed down with ladders, hooks, ropes and poles. Young America, too, has taken the field, half dressed, but laboring under the greatest excitement, and rushes bare-headed towards the scene, as though life depended upon speed. Firemen called out by duty, and citizens attracted by curiosity, add to the procession, rushing towards the fire, and make a panorama which can neither be painted or described. The bells continue to ring, the dogs to bark, the crowd to run up one street and down another, until the fire is finally reached.

But the scenery of a great fire is a thing separate and by itself—not to be thoughtlessly touched or lightly attempted. It is for the time being more attractive and engrossing than anything else, and is almost invariably set off by some incidents which are more or less notable.

The fire over, the excitement ends. A curtain of smoke has enveloped the heavens, and obliterated all trace of the towering pinnacles of light which writhed and struggled together an hour ago. A few curious vagabonds continue to poke among the ashes and charred remnants, but the engines can be heard lumbering over the pavements full two squares away, and the crowd has dispersed, either for rest or fresh excitement. Young America has disappeared as mysteriously as he rose, and no trace can be found of him until the morning papers summon him again into existence. The repose of some quiet streets is disturbed by the waves of returning excitement, which roll through them. A few nervous gentlemen are astonished at the crowds they meet. The coffee-houses prolong a profitable existence of a few hours, and close—and the grants of the fire are ended.

No—not yet. Long after the last spectator had gone to sleep, forgetful of the fire and its incidents, a man sits sleepless, counting up the amount of his loss. It may be that his regrets are chiefly for his wife and children—still happily ignorant of what has occurred. It may be the loss is lightened by such consolations as a wife only can give. It may be it is heightened by seeing horse, into a still greater distance, the recollection of near and dear hopes. It may be a fortune is unlocked and destroyed. Who can tell what it may be, or how serious shall be the results circling out from any cry that may be heard of "Fire!"

PRICE OF GAS.—The following are the prices of gas, per cubic foot, when sold to private individuals in the following cities:

New Orleans	$4 50	Louisville	$3 00
Baltimore	4 00	Pittsburgh	1 90
New York	3 60	Philadelphia	2 00
Boston	2 50	Columbus	3 00
Augusta, Ge	7 00	Washington, D. C	4 00
Evansville, Ind	3 00

EDUCATION.

Teachers Wanted.

A Gentleman and his Wife, or a Brother and Sister, (provided they will keep house,) thoroughly educated, are wanted to take charge of our Public School. Salary, $1000, certain, and whatever else can be realized from Music and other extra studies, and boarders from beyond the township. The last Teachers increased their salary several hundred dollars by these means.

Address, Rev. D. S. Goodloe, Livingston, Madison county, Miss. Postage paid. dep10

PORT GIBSON COLLEGIATE ACADEMY, FOR YOUNG LADIES.

INSTRUCTORS.

REV. A. J. EDGERTON, A. M., Principal.
REV. W. F. CONRAD, A. B.
REV. C. D. DE COENIEL, Professor of Piano, Harp and Guitar.
MRS. S. C. EDGERTON. MRS. H. CONRAD.
MISS ELLEN FOSTER, Teacher of Music.
MISS MARVIN. MISS HADNETT.
MRS. GILMAN, Matron.

The Next Session will commence on Monday, the 7th day of November.

TERMS—PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

For Boarding, per session of twenty weeks.....$60
For Fuel, Washing and Lights, do. 10
For Bed and Bedding, if not provided, do. 5

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

Tuition—Juvenile Class, per session twenty weeks..$15
" Second Division, do. do. ..20

COLLEGIATE DEPARTMENT.

Tuition—English Studies, per session twenty weeks..$25
" Latin and Greek, or either, do. ..15
" French, Italian or German, do. ..15
Stationery, in either class, do. ..1

MUSICAL DEPARTMENT.

Instruction Piano or Guitar, per session twenty weeks, $30
Use of Pianos, do. 5,

ORNAMENTAL DEPARTMENT.

Drawing in Perspective and Painting } do. ..$10
" in Water Colors. }
Fancy Embroidery, do. ..5
No deduction for absence, except in case of protracted sickness.

Boarders are expected to have their wearing apparel marked, and to come furnished with Towels, Hair and Tooth Brushes, and Silver Dessert Spoon and Fork.

The location of the Institution is regarded as one of the best in the State. The buildings were erected at a cost of near $30,000, affording capacious and airy rooms for the inmates, and all under the immediate eye of Mrs. E. and Female Assistants.

The scenery of Sindy will be as extensive and thorough in Natural Science, English Literature, Ancient and Modern Languages and Mathematics, as in the best Colleges of the kind.

Lectures will be delivered regularly before the Young Ladies, on Natural Science.

Prof. DeCOENIEL, who has the reputation for being one of the best musicians in America, will give lessons on the Harp to any young Ladies who desire it.

Vocal Music will be taught free of charge.

Port Gibson, Oct. 21, 1850. dec10-4t

GREENSBORO' FEMALE COLLEGE,
GREENSBORO', N. C.

FACULTY:

CHARLES F. DEEMS, D. D., President and Professor of the Natural Sciences and Belles-Letters.
REV. TURNER M. JONES, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and the Ancient Languages.
MONS. ERNEST JOUANNE, (of the College of Henri IV., Paris,) Professor of the French Language and Literature.
THEODORE WOLLE, Esq., Professor of Music.
MISS N. JANE SPEER, Miss NANNIE T. SPEED and Miss LUCY McGEE, Assistants in the Literary Departments.
MISS AUGUSTA M. HAGEN, Madame JOUANNE and Miss CAROLINE A. BLAKE Assistants in the Department of Music.
MISS R. L. SIMPSON, Drawing and Painting.
THOMAS C. BLAKE, Esq., Steward.
MRS. T. C. BLAKE, Governess.

This Institution is situated in a healthy part of Central North Carolina. It is under the charge of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In the selection of the Faculty the Trustees have had reference first of all to superior qualifications, and as far as practicable have obtained ladies and gentlemen of Southern birth and education.

The course of study is as full and as thorough as that in the best Female Seminaries. While particular attention is paid to the solid branches of education, sufficient regard is had for the ornamental; but above all the culture of the morals of their pupils is considered the great work of the teachers. Special lessons of economy are inculcated. The pupils are not allowed under any circumstances to contract debts. Parents deposit money in advance. All the expenditures of the scholars are under direct supervision of the President, and their purchases are made by their teachers. Perhaps in no similar institution of its numbers has the bills of the pupils been so small in the aggregate as at this College during the past year.

The department of Natural Science is furnished with excellent apparatus, some of the instruments being of the highest finish, with all modern improvements. Lectures are delivered on Chemistry by the President, and on Natural Philosophy by Prof. Jouve, weekly, and are accompanied by experiments. In the selection of the Professor of French regard was had in purity and accuracy of pronunciation, and the present incumbent of that chair possesses more than ordinary qualifications for his office. The practical use of the language in conversation is the aim of daily lessons.

In the department of Oil Painting the teacher does not seek to give but pupils simply a "pretty picture" at the close of the session, but the principles of the art are assiduously taught in the expectation that those who have special talent for design may prosecute self-culture after leaving the school.

All the principal teachers have had much experience in the business of their profession, and "thoroughness" is the motto throughout the whole Institution. The Faculty are working under this formula; We are striving to make not the largest but the best school in the land.

TERMS:

$70 a session (of 21 weeks) for Tuition and Board, including washing, fuel, lights, furnished rooms and attendance; $20 extra for music on the Piano or Guitar or for Oil Painting; $5 for Drawing or French or Latin. The Trustees believe that no school of its grade at the South offers such advantages on such favorable terms.

For further particulars application may be made to the President of the College.

The next session will open December 28, 1853. jan8-6t

BARDSTOWN FEMALE INSTITUTE.
REV. A. A. MORRISON, A. M., Principal.

This Institution is under the patronage of the Louisville Annual Conference, and is located in Bardstown, Ky. Bardstown is located on the turnpike from Nashville to Louisville, with a line of daily stages passing through, and is 30 miles south of the latter city. Bardstown is pleasantly located, and is proverbial for health. The Institute buildings are large and commodious, and the pleasure grounds attached pleasant and spacious.

The Institution is furnished with a full Board of experienced and accomplished Teachers, and the course of study as select and thorough as can be found in any similar Institution in the land. The school is permanently established, and in point of healthiness of locality and facilities for a thorough Female Education, on reasonable terms—this Institution offers peculiar inducements to Southern Methodists and to the Southern community generally.

TERMS PER SESSION OF TWENTY WEEKS.
(Board payable in advance: Tuition at the close of the Session.)

Primary Department	$ 8 00
Junior Class	12 00
Middle Class	15 00
Senior Class	18 00
Music on Piano or Guitar	20 00
Vocal Music	10 00
Drawing and Painting	6 00
Greek, Latin, French or German	8 00
Boarding, including Washing, Lights and Fuel	40 00
For Board in School-room in winter	1 00

The next session will commence on the 30th of January inst.

REFERENCES:

Rev. J. B. McFerrin, Nashville, Tenn; W. H. Hickman, M. D., Hon. G. W. Hite, Bardstown, Ky; Rev. C. R. Parsons, Rev. E. Stevenson, Rev. E. W. Sehon, Rev. A. H. Redford, Louisville, Ky, and the Ministers of the Louisville Conference generally.

Bardstown, Jan. 5, 1854.—6t

EMORY and HENRY COLLEGE.
WASHINGTON COUNTY, VA.

THE SPRING SESSION of this Institution will commence on the 12th January, 1854. There is, we believe, no College in the South offering stronger inducements to young men desirous of a thorough course of collegiate instruction.

TERMS:

Tuition per session of 5 months	$15 00
Board " " "	11 50
Washing " " "	5 00
Fuel " " "	3 00
Contingent charge " " "	1 25
	$34 75

With a location famous for health, with ample Libraries and Apparatus, with a full and efficient Board of Instruction, and with a degree of cheapness unparalleled, any young man with limited means, fair abilities and proper energy can here acquire a superior, liberal and business education. For further information address

E. E. WILEY, President.
Emory Post-Office, Va.

jan6-6t

FEMALE MASONIC INSTITUTE,
Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama.
Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.

TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY, we would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the true interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence a liberal support.

The Principal has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his tutelage.

The services of Miss MARY W. HOWE, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and felicitous manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.

The Musical, French, and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competent and skillful Teachers, and all due attention given to the ornamental accomplishments that so beautify and adorn the greater sex.

The Primary Department will be confided alone to a chaste and gifted lady, for we design to attend carefully to that sadly and mischievously neglected class of Pupils.

The Scholastic year is divided into Two Sessions of nearly Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Examinations Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils received at any time, and charged to the end of the Session. For fractions of Sessions each week is counted one twentieth.

The School is not Sectarian or denominational; and the only religious tuition embraces the principles of a pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible. The Principal and his lady have charge of the Stewards Department, and will tenderly care for the health, manners and morals of those who Board in the Institute. Each boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved subject of parental solicitude, and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet, Discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful restraints of family government will be thrown around them.

CHARGES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Primary Class	$12 50
Preparatory Class

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 2. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1854. WHOLE NO. 158.

CLEVER AND DULL BOYS.

From our English Correspondent.]

There is a rage for cleverness in these days. Clever people are admired. They "get on" in life, and make people talk about them, both of which are pleasant things. Clever children are petted and admired, and sometimes they are made prodigies and show-things of, at which foolish parents are delighted. The clever boy's clever sayings are cited for admiring visitors, and the clever girl is perched on a music-stool to play a sonnet of Beethoven. It is doubtless very wonderful, but sometimes it is also very lamentable.

Cleverness may be dear-bought—in the young especially so. The pearl is a serious matter for the oyster, its production being the result of disease. And so cleverness in the young is very often achieved at the cost of their physical and even their mental health.

It is well that this should be known at a time when books are written about the boyhood of great men, with the object of furnishing illustrious examples for the imitation of children, and of exalting them to greater ardor in the cultivation of their tender little intellects. Cleverness is unnatural in a child, and is achieved at the expense of nature. The proper food of the child is not to be found on book-sellers' shelves as many people now seem to suppose. The milk-woman and the baker are more to be depended on.

Boswell once asked of Johnson the curious question. "What would you do with a child if shut up in a castle with him alone?" Fancy the gruff but honest and outspoken old ogre with a child for company! Johnson's first impulse was to answer, "Sir, I should not mush like my company." But this did not satisfy Boswell; the pertinacious fellow must still press his question. "Would you take the trouble of rearing it?" "Why, yes, sir," said Johnson, "I would, but I must have all conveniences. If I had no garden I would make a shed on the roof, and take it there for fresh air. I should feed it, and wash it much, and with warm water to please it, not with cold water to give it pain. But I would not nobble the child." Boswell at him again —"Would you teach the child, that I have furnished you with, anything?" Johnson—"No, I should not be apt to teach it." Boswell—"Would not you have a pleasure in teaching it?" Johnson—"No, sir, I should not have a pleasure in teaching it." Right, worthy old Samuel Johnson!

For the child are needed, first, fresh air, cleanliness and wholesome food: then, in addition to these, play, romps and physical exercise, by which its bodily powers may be strengthened; then, moral discipline and good example, for training its habits, temper and disposition; and last of all, literary culture and scholastic exercises. But to begin with teaching or to set a child to tasks at an early age, is to interfere with the order of nature, and to risk the production of deformity and disease, instead of the "sound mind in the sound body."

In early years the human being merely requires abundant opportunities to grow. It does not thrive with "coddling," either bodily or mental. The brain, which is, in some mysterious way or other that cannot be explained, connected with the production of thought, is, of all other organs, the most delicate in childhood. The nervous system, which is the source of all vital energy, predominates over the other systems of youth, and if it be over-exercised, then it is certain to be at the expense of the other parts of the body, at the time when the highest vital powers are required, and when nature is endeavoring to perfect the physical system.

By early mental culture it is quite possible to make any child "clever," as it is called, and to cram its little head with knowledge, which is in the child quite out of place. But your precocious children—your prodigies of infantile wisdom—are rarely long-lived; and if the strength of their constitution should bear them through, very often it is with a shattered frame and an enfeebled intellect.

It is true, many poets have been precocious, though possibly most of the wonderful things recorded of such have been discovered or greatly embellished by biographers, after their fame has been established. Tasso's childhood was distinguished by signs and wonders. The peasants pointed out to strangers "the marvellous boy whom the wood pigeons covered with leaves, and the black viper and prowling bear had left unharmed." Ere six months had passed over the infant Tasso, he began, says Manso, "not merely to move his tongue, but to speak clearly and fluently." When put to school at an early age his progress in learning was extraordinary, his ardor and diligence being almost incredible. He would rise and study in the night, and the day never surprised him in bed. At eighteen he produced his first epic poem; and he went on writing until he became mad and died in that state at the age of 32, after a long and lamentable confinement in a dungeon.

Keats was a clever boy at school; he was so devoted a student there, that his master had frequently to force him into the open air for his health, and then he would walk out with a book in his hand. Having precociously "beat his music out," he died at the early age of 25. Kirk White's was a similar melancholy case. Southey and Moore were also clever and sensitive children, born as they were with the true temperament of poets. And, perhaps, poets generally attain these peculiar powers, contingent, as they mainly are, upon an exceeding sensitiveness, almost amounting to a disease, before they are distinguished in other departments of literature, art or science. Yet many of our greatest poets have displayed no precocity in youth; happily for them, they have in nothing differed from the run of ordinary boys. Others have been kept away from school on account of ill health, and only acquired learning after their physical system had become mature and strengthened. This was the case with Sir Walter Scott. He was not, however, an actual "dunce," as some of his biographers have stated. In childhood he was attacked by a disease in his right leg, which rendered it necessary for him to be removed into the country, where he remained for several years at Sandy Hook, merely vegetating. The limb affected became shrunk and contracted, and remained so all his life; but his general health was greatly strengthened by free exposure to the air and by his boyish sports there, so that, speaking of it himself in his autobiography, he says, "I, who, in a city, had probably been condemned to hopeless and helpless decrepitude, was now (in the sixth year) a healthy high spirited, and, my lameness apart, a sturdy lad." He was not taught to read until he had reached his seventh year, and then it was at a dame-school at Bath. Afterwards he went to the high school at Edinburgh, but there, he says, "I did not make any great figure." He was careless about his tasks, and often disgusted his kind master by his negligence and frivolity. If there was any "bicker," however, or fight with the boys of other schools, be sure that Watty Scott was in the midst of the fray, and generally the ring-leader there. He confesses himself, while at school, to have been "an incorrigible idle imp," and even at Edinburg University, where his father afterwards entered him, he succeeded no better. There he went by the nick name of "the great blockhead," and Professor Dalzell, he says, "pronounced upon me the severe sentence, that dunce I was and dunce was to remain." He had, nevertheless, been reading very extensively, though in a desultory manner; and he had strengthened his frame by roaming about the hills, until he acquired the physique of a ploughman: he could spear a salmon with the best fisher on the Tweed; and he could ride a wild horse with any hunter of Yarrow. Such was the rough discipline through which this distinguished man passed, and by which he, nevertheless, acquired the rare combination of qualifications for enjoying existence and achieving the highest fame. He who at school had been nick-named "the great blockhead," and during the chief part of his life was "The Great Unknown," died full of honors and glory, "the great Sir Walter Scott."

Take Chatterton next, the so-called "boy of genius." Yet so far from being a boy of genius, when sent to school he either could not or would not learn, and he was returned on his mother's hands as "a fool of whom nothing could be made." His mother then tried to teach him, but she also failed. Yet the boy afterwards learned fast enough when he began to educate himself, and obtained a stimulus to the acquisition of learning.

Burns also, perhaps a greater genius than either of the two last named poets, was by no means a precocious youth. Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd, speaking of him, and his brother Gilbert, says: "Burns was put to school in his seventh year along with his brother Gilbert, who must then have only been in his fifth. The two boys were both apt learners, Gilbert rather the better, as well as the better tempered and more cheerful of the two. Robert appears to have been a sour, sulky creature, his intense jealousy of all superiority probably even then keeping him unhappy and melancholy. Mr. Murdock, their master, says he tried to teach them a little sacred music, but found this impracticable, they being no music in either of their souls. As for Robert, his ear was so completely dull that he could not distinguish one tune from another, and his voice was so untunable that he could not frame a note, and was left behind by all the boys and girls in the school."

Up to the years of his manhood Burns spent his vacant hours chiefly in leaping, dancing, wrestling, putting (or throwing the stone) and in feats of physical prowess, by which his bodily powers were thoroughly matured and developed; and it was not till after he had fallen many times head over ears in love that he began to write verses.

Dryden displayed no evidences of more than ordinary intelligence until he reached mature manhood, and Johnson says of Goldsmith that he was "a plant that flowered late." Schiller was a very idle scholar, and much fonder of ball and leap-frog than of books. The most interesting thing told of him as a child by his biographers is, that once, in the midst of a storm of thunder and lightning, he climbed a tree, and when asked by his parents why he did so, replied, whispering, "that the lightning was very beautiful and he wished to see where it was coming from." This story, if correct, furnishes an illustration of the manner in which the young mind delights to seek information for itself in its own way.

Perhaps a still more characteristic anecdote is that told of Sheuston, the architect of the Eddystone Lighthouse, who, when a boy in petticoats, was one day discovered on the top of his father's house in the act of fixing the model of a windmill which he had constructed.

But the great majority of the most distinguished men—especially of those distinguished for their power—have been altogether undistinguished in their boyhood. Sir Isaac Newton, perhaps the greatest man, stood very low in his class at school, and was a very inattentive scholar, though he was fond of mechanical pursuits and of drawing various natural objects. Sir David Brewster says of him that, when he arrived at Trinity College he brought with him a more slender portion of science than falls to the lot of ordinary scholars; but this state of his acquirements (continues his biographers) was perhaps not unfavorable to the development of his mental powers. Unexhausted by premature youth, and invigorated by healthful repose, his mind was the better fitted to make those vigorous and rapid shoots which soon covered with foliage and with fruit the genial soil to which it had been transferred.

The distinguished Sir Humphrey Davy said of himself "I consider it fortunate that I was left so much to myself when a child, and put on no particular plan of study, and that I enjoyed so much idleness at Mr Dougion's school. I perhaps owe to these circumstances the little talents that I have, and their peculiar application. What I am I have made myself. I say this without vanity and in pure simplicity of heart." And it is so in fact. Every man who achieves greatness does so not through his acquirements under teachers when a boy, but through his self-education after he has become a man.

We might adduce an immense number of instances of positively stupid boys who have become distinguished and highly useful men. For instance, Isaac Barrow, the great divine, was in his boyhood chiefly distinguished by his propensity for fighting, in which he got many a bloody nose; and his father used to say that if it pleased God to take from him any of his children, he hoped it might be Isaac, who was the least promising of them all. And that prodigy of learning, Dr. Adam Clarke, when a boy, was never happier than when "rolling large stones about," caring nothing for learning or reading of any sort. But at this kind of work he became uncommonly hardy, though his father proclaimed him to be a most "grievous dunce." Thanks to Adam Clarke's power of rolling about the large stones in his boyhood, he was afterwards able to roll about large thoughts in his manhood.

Napoleon and Wellington were both dull boys. The former is described by the Duchess of Abrantes, who knew him intimately when a child, as "having good health, and in other respects he was like other boys:" and she adds: "My uncles have a thousand times assured me that Napoleon, in his boyhood, had none of that singularity of character attributed to him.

We have, indeed, an aversion to infantile prodigies of any sort. They are things out of keeping with nature—lusus naturæ. Very often your prodigy is but a disease and ought no more to be admired than a wen or a crooked back. And what is the end of your young Rosenises? Utter feebleness, if not cut short by death—the frequent penalty of premature excitement of the brain.

Parents need not be in any hurry to see their children's talents developed. Their best policy is to watch and wait; wait, and let good example and quiet training do their work. Give the child a stock of physical health: set the boy fairly on the road of self-culture, and as he grows older, if there be the right stuff in him the man will cultivate himself.

THE JEWS IN FRANCE.

A correspondent of the London Youth's Magazine, who appears to be employed as a missionary among the Jewish population in France, gives, in the October number of that periodical, a brief sketch of their history and present state:

"History begins to notice the Jews in France in the sixth century. In 540 they established themselves at Paris and the neighboring towns. Childebert issued a decree that no Jew was to appear in the streets of Paris from the Holy Thursday till after Easter, fearing that the extra devotion of the people during that period might lead them to avenge the death of the Saviour on the descendants of his crucifiers; or that while the streets were deserted, the people being in church, the Jews might form a conspiracy. In 540, the same decree was proclaimed in the Council of Orleans. A great number of Jews were found in the diocese of Bishop Yzes, who greatly encouraged them, and sought their conversion. He was called to Paris, to justify himself before the king for his kind dealing toward the Jews. For fear of losing his bishopric, on his return he banished all that community from his diocese. Avitus, bishop of Clermont, also sought to convert the Jews, but by violence and persecution. The Jews became so irritated that on Ascension Day, when a new convert was led through the streets dressed in white, a Jew poured boiling oil on his head. The Christians in their turn fell on the Jews, massacred a great number and burned their synagogues. The bishop wrote to the Jews that he was opposed to violence, but, like a good shepherd, he cared for the sheep, and wished to seek out the strayed ones. He, therefore, exhorted them to believe as he did or else to quit the town. Some, tired of fleeing from city to city, embraced Christianity; others did not send in their confession of faith till they were threatened to be put to death; while others fled to Marseilles. King Chilperic also forced the Jews to be baptised, but privately they strictly adhered to Judaism.

"In 675, Wamb, king of the Goths, wished to banish the Jews, but the bishop of Magnimlone and the Count of Toulouse took them under their protection, put them under arms, and pillaged the country as far as Nismes. Count Paul was sent by the king to put down the rebels, but instead of fighting against them, he joined them, took Narbonne, and was crowned king. Paul was at last captured, and the Jews expelled from Narbonne.

St. Louis, very zealous for the Catholic religion, instituted the institution against the Jews: and on good Friday, at Paris and other towns, nearly 3,000 were put to death, under pretence that they used Christian blood on the feast of the Passover. The persecution rose to such a pitch, that the Pope at last interfered in their favor.

"In the twelfth century, the famous Jewish academies were established at Lunel, noted not only for learning, but also for their charity, for they fed and clothed their scholars, as well as instructed them. Under the reign of Dagobert, a decree was issued that they should all be banished, unless they embraced Christianity. Some who had just fled from Spain with the hope of finding refuge in France, preferred dissimulation to exile, while the greater number, refusing to be baptised, were banished. In 1272 they were recalled by Philip le Hardi.

"The last persecution took place in 1327. During the reign of Charles VI. they were accused at Paris of having killed a Jew that had embraced Christianity; many were hanged, and two years after, all the rest were banished.

"In 1670 they were finally recalled by an order issued at the Council of St. Germain. Besides these frequent persecutions under the cloak of Christianity, a great many were put to death for the crime of usury, which they practiced to an awful extent. The Council of Lyons was the first that instituted capital punishment against usurers, and the other towns soon adopted the decree. In 1807, usury was finally suppressed by the decree of Napoleon, and they began to cultivate the arts and sciences. Since that period they have become the first statesmen and excelled in science and literature. They have also become famous for commerce. In Lyons, as throughout the whole of France, the largest shops are kept by Jews. At Bayonne the principal bankers are Jews. They enjoy now all the privileges of their Gentile countrymen: their rabbis and schoolmasters are paid by government. The French Jew does not feel that he is 'a curse and a by-word among the nations:' and to avoid even being called a Jew, they conform to all the outward rites of their Catholic neighbors. Their spiritual condition is indeed deplorable. They have shaken off Rabbinical Judaism, and with it the belief in Moses and the Prophets. The rabbi of Lyons lately complained to a Christian friend of the narrow-mindedness of Christians, that they are tied down to certain dogmas from which they dare not swerve: while he, as a rational being, reads the Bible rationally, and accounts for those astounding facts, which people call miracles, in a reasonable way; and declared that neither Moses nor any of the prophets ever performed a real miracle. A few days ago I met at Mr. C.'s the newly appointed rabbi of Toulon. As Mr. C. was anxious to introduce the subject of Christianity, he asked the rabbi's opinion of Genesis xlix, 10 which even according to Jarchi, refers to the Messiah. 'Who cares what Jarchi says?' was his reply; 'and as for the verse itself, no one would be so simple as to lay any stress on the fantastical expressions of poetry.' If this is the belief, or rather the unbelief, of the teachers of the people, you can easily perceive what must be the condition of those that are taught.

"The true statistics of the Jews in France it is almost impossible to ascertain; as there are a great many who never give themselves out as Jews, but live, as is usually termed, 'a Christian life.' By this is meant that they eat the meat killed by a Gentile butcher, and the animals forbidden in the law of Moses.

To visit the synagogues on a Saturday, one would be apt to suppose that there were a mere handful of Jews in France. In Lyons, for instance, where there are between two and three thousand, no more than about sixty are found in the synagogue. Besides Lyons and Paris, there are other towns where the Jewish population is considerable; such as Marseilles, Toulouse, Bayonne, (about 2,000 expelled from Spain) Bordeaux, Metz, Colmar, Strasbourg, Besancon, etc. The general estimate of the Jews in France is 100,000.

"On my journey to the South I visited the schools of every town through which I passed. They are generally well conducted, and their masters well-educated men. The boys are publicly examined once a year, together with all other government schools; when the mayor or other authorities distribute prizes for the different branches of study, very few Jewish children go home without one. I have examined some of the boys, and was very much surprised to find them not only versed in Old Testament history, but many, also, well acquainted with the history of Christ. This, at first, puzzled me; but I found that many families buy for their children, as a text book for Bible history, a book called 'The Bible,' which contains all the historical parts of the New as well as of the Old Testament. These schools are only attended by the children of the poor and middle classes, while those of the rich are generally educated in Roman Catholic establishments. The synagogues are clean and nicely decorated, the copies of the law richly ornamented, and now there is an organ in almost every synagogue, played by a Gentile. The office of the rabbi is an easy one. He reads every Saturday the prayer for the emperor, and preaches about four times a year. Once a year the boys and girls, reaching the age of thirteen, have to repeat to the rabbi, after the afternoon service, the thirteen articles of faith, and give an account of all the Jewish festivals; after which the rabbi addresses both parents and children. This is called "the first communion." I asked several Jews the meaning of that term—to what communion they were admitted? The only explanation they could give me was, that it is the same as among the Christians; evidently a ceremony copied from the Roman Catholics.

"The great difficulty with the French Jews is, not opposition to Christianity, but indifference to religion of any kind. He does not dispute what the missionary says: he listens with politeness but without feeling any interest in what is said. At St. Etienne I visited a rich Jewish merchant, and was received with every mark of respect. He and his brother listened for above two hours while I expounded to them the scheme of redemption as wrought out by Jesus Christ. When I had finished, they thanked me for the information I had imparted to them. I asked them what they thought on this subject. "As for thinking," they replied, "that is quite out of the question: we never think about it all. It is very nice for those who have a taste for such matters, but we have too much to think about already." I often meet on Saturday from ten to fifteen Jews, and if there is one that raises any objection, it is always a foreign Jew. This is their general character, while there are some who are seriously inquiring their way to Zion others who have testified that they have found the gospel to be the power of God unto salvation and some who have not as yet publicly confessed the Savior, but who, I believe, will be found in the kingdom of heaven with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob." E. B. F.

HYGIENICS OF TEMPERANCE.

BY S. A. CARTWRIGHT, M. D.

Whether water or alcohol be the better health-preserving agent is a question to be determined by observation. Some accounts of the effects of each on a member of the Æsculapic themselves is herewith respectfully presented to that profession whose office is to keep in tune the curious harp of man's body, and to take cognizance of everything which preserves or disturbs its harmony. Nothing tends more to preserve or disturb its harmony than water or alcohol. Thence the members of the medical profession, who may take side in the temperance controversy now agitating the people of every State in the Union, are not to be regarded as out of their province, but in the field properly belonging to them; where, instead of being viewed as intruders or intermeddlers, they are, by virtue of their calling, entitled to rank as chiefs.

The writer is one of three physicians who located in Natchez thirty years ago; the new comers found only one practitioner in the city belonging to the same temperance school with themselves. The country and villages within fifteen miles around afforded only three more. All the rest believed in the hygienic virtues of alcoholic drinks, and taught the doctrine by precept and example.

Besides the practising physicians, there were ten others in the city and adjacent country who had retired from the profession. They were all temperate. Thus, including the new comers, the total number of temperate physician, in and near Natchez 30 years ago, consisted of 17. Of these five have died; Dr. Henry Tuoley, aged about 75 years; Dr. Andrew McCreary, aged 70; Dr. J. Kerr, 60; Dr. James A. McPheeters, 46—in 1822; the average ages of the 17 was about 34 years. According to the Carlisle tables of mortality, and those of the Equitable Insurance Company of London, 7 instead of 5 would have been the ratio of mortality in England.

Those at present living are Drs. D. Lattimore, W. Wren, Stephen Duncan, F Young, F. G. Elliot, Prof. A. P. Merrill and the writer. On the other hand, every physician of Natchez and its vicinity, 30 years ago, whether practicing or retired, who was in the habit of 'tippling,' as the practice of drinking alcoholic beverage is called, has long been numbered with the dead. Only two of them who were comparatively temperate lived to be gray. Their average term of life did not exceed 35 years. In less than ten years after they commenced practice, the most of them died, and the whole of them have subsequently fallen, leaving not one behind in the city, country village, within twenty miles around.

To fill the places of those who died or retired from the profession, sixty-two medical men settled in Natchez and its vicinity between the years 1824 and 1835, embracing a period of ten years: not counting those of 1823 already mentioned. Of the sixty-two new comers, thirty-seven were temperate, and twenty-five used alcoholic beverages between meals, though not often to the extent of producing intoxication. Of the thirty-seven who trusted to the hygienic virtues of nature's beverage—plain uneducated water—nine have died, and twenty-eight are living. Of the twenty-five who trusted to the supposed hygienic virtues of ardent spirits, all are dead except three, and they have removed to distant parts of the country. Peace be to their ashes! Though mostly noble fellows, misled by the deceitful syren, singing the praises of alcoholic drinks, to live too fast, and to be cut off in the midst of useful manhood, it is to be hoped they have not lived in vain; as by their sacrifice, science has gained additional proof of the fallacy of the theory which attributes health-preserving properties in a southern clime to alcoholic beverages in any shape or form.

While referred to in the mass, to corrupt a popular delusion, it would be unnecessary and improper to drag their names before the public. Not so, however, with those who owe life, fortune and reputation to advoiding the shoals upon which their brethren were wrecked. The public have a right to know who they are, and the cause of temperance is justly entitled to all the influence attached to their names.

According to Carlisle table, and those of the Equitable Insurance Company of London, thirty-seven individuals at the average age of twenty-five years (which was about the average age of the new comers who settled in Natchez) would, in a quarter of a century, lose nine of their number, whereas of the thirty-seven temperance doctors, nine only have died in twenty-eight years! Of these, Drs. W. P. Foster, Cornell and Furguson fell by the yellow fever in 1828; Dr. John Bell came to the South with Phthisis Pulmonalis, from New Hampshire, and was the son of the governor; Dr. H. Farrine, of quinine notoriety, was killed by the Indians in the Florida war; Dr. E. Johnson returned to Kentucky and died; Dr. Ogden fell a victim to some chronic ailment; Dr. J. W. Monette, always a dyspeptic, died after he finished his history of the Valley of the Mississippi, and had made a handsome fortune by his practice; and Dr. Thomas Davis was cut off by the yellow fever in 1839; making nine in all. The remaining twenty-eight are still living, or were when last heard from.

Dr. Campbell removed to London, where he was preaching at last advices: Dr. J. Thistle, a year ago, removed to Davenport, Iowa; Dr. W. M. Gwin is at present a U. S. Senator from California: Drs. Stewart, Walker, Pollard, French, Hubbard, Page, Sidney Smith and E. C. Hyde, removed to Louisiana, and are all engaged in the planting business except the last three: Drs. Freiott and Weston returned to New York, Dr. Holt to Kentucky, Dr. J. Young removed to Memphis, and Dr. Woodworth to Illinois, the remainder are still in Natchez or its neighborhood. They are Drs. F. A. W. Davis, Harpour, the two Leggets, Asa Metcalf, J. Foster, Atchison, Wood, Chamberlain, Ward, Calhoun and Absercrombie.

If the property of all the temperance doctors of Natchez and its vicinity, dead and living, including those who have moved away and those who have retired from the profession, embracing those of 1823 and all who came up to 1835—fifty-four in number—were equally divided, each would have upwards of a hundred thousand dollars for his share.

Temperance, in that portion of the South, at least, is not only hygienic but auriferous. They all began life poor, with nothing but their profession for a livelihood. Some of them are in the possession of millions, and have long since retired from the duties of their profession. They nevertheless belong to the medical public, and have no right to object to their names going before that public for the scientific purpose of proving to the physicians at the North the hygienic virtues of temperance in the South. Many northern temperance men are so weak in the faith as to be led to believe, on their coming South, that rain and river water (the only kind to be had in Natchez, New Orleans and some other parts of the South) actually requires the addition of some stimulating drink to make it healthful. The weakness or distrust of temperance principles is owing to the want of well authenticated facts from the South bearing on the question.

Facts are better than theory to enable not only physicians but the people generally, to form rules of conduct on a subject of such importance; to have their proper weight, they should be well authenticated, and the important truth made known, that of the whole number of temperance doctors of 1823 (30 years ago) in Natchez and its vicinity, more than two-thirds are still living in 1853, at ages varying from 55 to 85 years; that of the whole number of the intemperate of the same period, not one remains in town or country; that of 37 temperate and 25 intemperate physicians who came in afterwards, between the years 1824 and 1835, all of the former are living except nine, all of the latter are dead except three. Hence it was necessary to mention the names of the temperance physicians, many of whom are known abroad as well as at home, as living proofs of the important truth that a temperate, upright life is the surest, safest and best road to health, wealth, longevity and respectability.

Many young medical men, as well as others, coming South, mistake the noise of barrooms and grog-shops for the public sentiment of the country; hence they are too apt to plunge into dissipation, under the delusion that water is unwholesome mixed with stimulants, and that it is moreover, essential to popularity and a good introduction to business: "When in Rome to do as Rome does." The error lies in mistaking the purlieus for the true Rome of the South, and in the erroneous theory which attributes to alcoholic beverages the hygienic properties that pure, unadulterated water alone possesses. It was not by dram-drinking that the above-named medical men preserved their health. It was not by grog-shops or the influence or agency of the inmates of such places that they succeed in business, and come into the inheritance of the fat of the land.

[From the Friend of India.

INFANTICIDE IN THE PUNJAB.

Another chapter in the black history of Indian crime. It is not the least among the many obstacles in the path of the Indian government that it is called upon to contend with crimes which have become almost national customs. Founded, like Suttee, upon superstition, like infanticide, upon a social prejudice, or like Thuggee, upon the mere love of plunder, they have spread in the course of years over whole races, and have become part of the daily life of organized communities. It is not that the strength of the government is unable to cope with them on account of their magnitude, for government could have exterminated the Thugs in a twelvemonth. The difficulty is the utter impotence of the ordinary aids to authority. It receives no information, for the entire people is guilty. It can gain nothing by treachery among the criminals, for, in the people's idea there is nothing to betray. Its European experience is of no value, for the European theory supposes that natural affections are stronger than social prejudices. Its European agents are at fault, for the proofs of good character and of heinous crime are often united in the same person. The respectable, well born, intelligent Rajpoot who governs his own estates with an ability which extorts the admiration of the collector has murdered his female children, and would have assisted to burn his mother alive but for the law. The wife who would kill herself rather than allow a European to see her face, and towards whom her sons express the deepest respect and affection, has consented to the slaughter of her own children. The manner in which a native retains occasionally, amid great virtues, a criminal side to his character might form one of the most curious chapters in psychology.

We make these observations, which many of our Indian readers will consider somewhat trite, because it is the dogged adherence to English ideas which renders our system so unintelligible in England. To proceed to facts: Late in the year of 1851, Major Lake, Commissioner of Goordaspore, in the Punjab, became aware of the existence of infanticide among a class in his own district. He reported the facts to the Board of Administration, and inquiries were immediately commenced. All the commissioners received orders to report upon the prevalence of the crime within their respective jurisdictions, and to suggest, measures for its removal. Considerable delay appears to have occurred in collecting the information required, but at last it was obtained in a form which enabled the Judicial Commissioner to report upon it. It was found to prevail more or less in the Umballa, Ferozepore, Jullundur, Hooshearpore, Lahore, Mooltan, Jhelum and Leia districts—in fact, over a tract of country as large as an Enropean kingdom. It was not, however practiced by all the inhabitants. It is confined chiefly to the Ledees or descendants of Nanuk Gooroo, men generally of great wealth and influence, and to the Rajpoots, generally poor, but among whom the custom is one of immemorial antiquity. The Kheotrees, however, some Brahmins, and even several of the Musulman tribes, maintain the practice, and the higher the rank the more certain are the female branches of destruction. It is believed, also, by the most experienced officers, to have infected all classes in a greater or less degree, and we may readily imagine that even where the motives which influence the highest class were absent, the lower orders would acquire from their example a degree of carelessness for their children's lives.

The motive for the crime differs among the different classes. With the Rajpoots of the Punjab, as among the Rajpoots everywhere else, it is simply pride. They must marry them to their equals. This is occasionally difficult, and they slay them to avoid the inconvenience. Then, even if they find bridegrooms, they must give a dower more than proportioned to their means. Their extravagance sometimes reaches a point which is almost incredible among a parsimonious people. One chief gave his daughter seventeen lacs of rupees, another expended ten lacs, and a third gave a lac to his niece married to a poor Brahmin of the plains. Their insane pride, to which that of the Highland chief is almost humility, forbids them to diminish its amount. It is a question, as Major Edwardes has observed, between the father's wealth and the daughter's life, that the life is taken and the wealth retained. Then, again, in some instances, it is regarded simply as a means of proving the purity of their race, a mere habit of imitating the upper classes. The Munha Rajpoots, for instance, when in the hills, are the lowest of their tribe, and their children are consequently safe. But in the plains they become the highest, and, in order to prove that they are such, they slay their children. Yet the Rajpoots are the noblest of the Indian races.

The same causes are in operation among the Musselmans. The highest tribes, jealous of the purity of their lineage, are jealous also of their wealth, and the female children are sacrificed to save them from an unequal marriage and their fathers from too liberal donations. Added to all this, the principle of consanguinity is pushed to the wildest extreme. Almost every Rajpoot is the relative of every other; all who are descended from one common ancestor consider themselves blood relations after the lapse of centuries, and, down to the last degree, marriage is forbidden. Every Rajpoot Campbell considers himself not only the kinsman of the Duke of Argyll, but within the forbidden degrees. It is among the Bedees only that a different set of motives appears to come into operation. They are the descendants of Dhurn Chund, the grandson of the great Nanuk Gooroo, and considered themselves of the priestly caste—the Levites of the Punjab. They murder on the strength of tradition, and add occasionally a mocking ceremony to the crime. The child is buried; a piece of coarse sugar is put between its lips, and a hank of cotton in its hand, and the father cries—

"Eat your goor and spin you thread,
But go and send a boy instead."

Be the motives what they may, it is certain that in hundreds of families in the Punjab there has been no daughter born for generations. It is certain that in thousands infanticide is a custom, to which no member of them probably would hesitate to allude; that all over the Punjab there is a disproportion in the number of female births not to be accounted for by ordinary causes, and that in certain districts this disproportion rises to a height which implies the extinction of the female sex. They are utterly opposed to English ideas. A London magistrate would redouble the vigilance of the police, and, if possible, increase the certainty of punishment. Such measures by themselves would be useless in India. It is the social police in England prevents crime, and we have no social police.

The authorities, guided, we imagine, by Mr. Raikes, whose success at Mynpoorie has given him an European reputation, have attempted to strike the evil at its root. They have taken advantage of the dawning abhorrence of the crime among the people themselves, and have endeavored to induce them to remove the temptations to it. The people are to be distinctly informed that the practice is regarded by their new rulers as a crime; a census is to be drawn up, distinguishing the male and female children; and lastly, a great meeting has been called of the chiefs of districts, aided by the Commissioners of the Jullander, Lahore and Cis-Sublej divisions, and presided over by the Chief Commissioner. The meeting is to take place on the 29th and 31st of October, in the holy city of the Sikhs, and can scarcely fail to produce the result intended—viz: an unanimous declaration of opinion against the practice. That every effort has been made to secure a favorable result we need scarcely affirm, and the interest taken in the matter by the Governor General is sufficiently manifested by the following sentences from a minute dated the 7th September.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11.

Resignation.—Rev. H. C. Thweatt has declined accepting the Presidency of Centenary College, to which he was recently elected. The state of his health precluding sedentary life. The Trustees have called meeting on the 9th inst., for the purpose of filling the vacancy.

The Southern School Journal.—This is the organ of the "Georgia State Teachers' Association," whose object is to ascertain the educational wants of the State and as far as may be supply them. The Rev. E. H. Myers has been recently elected its editor. It is published monthly at Macon; price, one dollar. The second volume commences with this month. We commend it to teachers throughout the South as a valuable aid to the cause of Education.

New Englanders.—Among the curiosities of the last Census is, that while Americans are very intermigratory, the natives of New England do not much affect the Southern States. In thirteen of these States only 16,000 are found, and of that number one-fourth (4000) are in the city of New Orleans. Until we fell upon this statement a short time since, we were unable to account for certain social phenomena observable in our population.

DER DEUTSCHE REFORMATOR.

At the recent session of the Texas Conference, measures were adopted to secure, if possible, the publication of a religious paper in the German language. Rev. Peter Moelling was appointed to bring out a specimen number. Sure enough, here it is, in clean type, folio form, and all in Dutch. Brother Moelling calls it, in his "leader," a cherub: "und Bruder Cravens nannte seinen namen." We have no doubt that the youngster will be received with open arms by all the friends of the German cause in the Church South. Such a paper is needed, for we hear from good authority that the Cincinnati German paper takes occasion frequently to distil abolition sentiments. The subscription price is $1 50 per annum. Persons wishing it please address Rev. P. Moelling, Galveston, Texas. Should a list of subscribers sufficiently large be obtained between this and the General Conference, and that body approve, it will forthwith be published.

Class-Meetings.—The Christian Advocate and Journal has an excellent article on this all important part of Methodist economy. The editor argues—

First. Is our itinerant mode of ministration sanctioned by the Scriptures? and, if so,

Secondly. Is it specially our calling, as a Church or religious community? and,

Thirdly. Is class-meeting essential to the perpetuation and success of an itinerant ministry?

In regard to the first question, we allege that, although our Lord and his apostles do not lay down any particular plan of Church government, or mode of ministration, as of perpetual obligation in the Church, and, therefore, we cannot plead Scriptural authority exclusively for itinerancy; neither can such authority be alleged in favor of a settled ministry exclusively. The Scriptures have left this an open subject, to be determined upon principles of expediency, according to the various circumstances in which believers may find themselves providentially placed. The only indispensable requirement is conscientiously to 'do all to the glory of God.'"

He connects and maintains his firstly and thirdly as follows:

"We have seen that the oversight of the Church is not a matter of choice or discretion on the part of the ministry, but a duty enjoined by Him who hath called them to preach the gospel, and 'to edify,' that is to build up 'the body of Christ,' 'the church of the living God.' And it must be admitted that an itinerant ministry cannot, adequately, fulfil this requirement themselves. They must, therefore, do it in part by sub-pastors, and such are our class-leaders. On the part of the laity it is clearly inferable, from the command to the ministry to take the oversight of the church, as those who are to give an account to God, that those over whom the ministry are to take this oversight, are bound to place themselves in such a relation to their pastors as to enable them to discharge their duty, and consequently, if under the economy of the church they require the aid of sub-pastors, to comply with the arrangement as a duty to God and to their own souls. They have voluntarily chosen to belong to a church which operates by an itinerant ministry, and while they still prefer it, believing it most conducive to their own spiritual interests, and to 'the spread of Scriptural holiness,' they are bound by their duty to God to meet in class as an arrangement essentially necessary to a due exercise of pastoral oversight, by the ministry they have chosen. To make class-meeting a condition of membership in the M. E. Church is, therefore, only to require our members to submit to pastoral oversight—a requirement which is surely as Scriptural as ministerial oversight itself. Brethren, 'let us walk by the same rule, and mind the same thing,' which has been our peculiar blessing from the beginning—only let us do it more faithfully and look for still greater blessings."

German correspondent of the New Daughter reports that the new post- [illegible] improves a postage of 12½ cents per

GREEK A LIVING LANGUAGE.

The November number of the North British Review treats the language and literature of Modern Greece in an interesting and practical article. The head of the wool-gathering student, as he thumbs the Exercise book, must be lightened on learning that there is "a short and easy method:" that the Greeks are living and if not at the door, yet accessible; and they are speaking and writing too, the language of Homer! Urchins today are taking it in the natural way: and while playing at ball and cricket they use that "deep tongue" more fluently than the graduates of any of the colleges may hope to attain to. So it is. The opinion that the language now in use at Athens is a vulgar patois, a degraded and hardly recognizable dialect of the divine Greek language, about as much like the speech of Socrates as that of Italy is like the speech of Virgil, is disappearing before—facts.

The death of Henry Clay, whose voice was raised in behalf of the Greek Revolution in 1821, produced demonstrations of grief in Athens, and a newspaper published there contained a column or more of eulogium, in a style of pure classicality. The easy and unstudied newspaper effusion couched in Greek—good Greek! That is tantalizing to some who shall read this, toiling over lexicon and text and notes, at snail's pace.

The Review presents a passage of a speech made by a member of the parliament of the Ionian Islands, 4th September, 1852. It is in favor of the liberty of the press. The length of the extract would make one fair lesson for a Sophomore, and in it "not a single word occurs that is not pure classic Greek, or formed, according to the known analogy of the language, out of pure classical elements." In the run of the speech and contemporaneous literature among the same educated classes, the only modern peculiarities discoverable are a few turns of syntax, some new particles, the general disuse of the optative mood of verbs and substitution of the accusative with the preposition, for the dative case of nouns.

That this language which is allowed to possess such value in literary and religious culture—a language of high organic structure, should have been preserved for 2000 years is remarkable. While the Latin has literally gone to pieces, and with various importations, admixtures and corruptions, formed several Western languages, the language of St. Paul and the New Testament keeps its integrity. Under all revolutions—the Byzantine empire—the Turkish despotism, it is not dead but liveth: is not another but itself; a pure formation and not a conglomerate. "There is as much difference," says the best authority on this subject, "between the language of Homer and the New Testament, as between that of the New Testament and a modern Greek Review." King Otho of to-day and King Alexander that was, might talk together as familliarly as one of our "down Easters" with a Southerner: that is, if the pronunciation has not been too much changed, and then they would have to pass notes.

The strong nationality of the Greeks, their intellectual superiority over brutal conquerors, and a lack of social and religious sympathy—these combined—with the high linguistic genius of the people, are given as the means of this preservation. There have been tendencies in the uneducated classes and in the masses under mediæval oppression and neglect, to corruption: but soon as an impulse to education was given, it was first in the direction of grammatical accuracy. The standards were in view and veneration. The bow of steel though bent, sprung back under the slightest release from barbaric intrusion. There was a powerful instinct of self-preservation in the language, throwing off foreign elements and recovering from temporary declension. 'A history and characteristics of language, apart from its literature, that entitle it to the eminent place it holds in the narrowest curriculum of education.

The bearing of these facts on "a short and easy method" is evident and will be appreciated in these labor-saving times.

"So long," says the Review, "as Greek is the language of the New Testament and of Homer, and the armory also from which we draw the formidable array of the nomenclature of modern science, it will always form an important element in the education of a Christian and conservative nation. If so, 'twere well those who learn it should do so in the most expeditious way; and an expeditious way it certainly is not to learn as a dead language, by a system of mere rules and abstractions, what, in fact, is as much a living form of speech as the English language itself, propagated from the days of Chaucer until now. All who have made the experiment know that a living language, even the most difficult, such as German, can be learned in the country where it is spoken, fluently and thoroughly, in a tenth part of the time necessary to master the same tongue by the common appliances of grammar, dictionary and exercise books, used as our classical teachers of the dead languages, are in the habit of using them."

Then it is cheaper. The University of Athens—which had last year 39 professors and 590 students—is open for eight months in the year and lectures free. A four years' course at Yale or Centenary would cost a thousand or two: to say nothing of long and wearisome preparatory studies under this and that schoolmaster. And then, as one has well said, the Bachelor of Arts would starve to death before he could ask for a peice of bread and butter in passable Greek. Whereas the poor and ambitious student may take a Mediterranean bound ship, see the world on the way, transport himself to the city of Pericles, and there "with the glorious pillared ranges of the Parthenon before him submit his ears to a regular training in the living speech of Greece, from the voice of living Greeks." A few hundred dollars will do the whole business.

METHODIST PRESS.

General Conference Work.—The Nashville side of the N. and L. Advocate gives a running summary of the work of the approaching General Conference:

"The approaching General Conference will be one of interest and vast importance to Southern Methodism. As is usual at these great quadrennial meetings of the Methodists, the character, work and administration of our Bishops will undergo a critical examination, and the future work of the general superintendents will be surveyed and provided for, and, if need be, the 'episcopacy will be strengthened,' by adding to their number.

"The great field occupied by the itinerant and local ministry, will be carefully surveyed, and measures will be taken to supply, if possible, every portion of the work with efficient laborers, so that not only the regular charges shall be fully supplied with the institutions of the gospel and the sacraments of the church; but that the missionary ground may be more thoroughly cultivated and new and uncultivated fields added to this interesting portion of the work of the church.

"The proceedings of each Annual Conference will be carefully examined, and it will be determined whether or not a strict adherence to the constitution and laws of the church have been duly observed everywhere. The great itinerant plan will be scrutinized and strict inquiry will be made into its operations, and whether innovations have been made upon its time-honored and efficient provisions.

"The moral and intellectual education of the youth of the church, and of the country, will receive special attention; hence Sabbath Schools and the literary institutions under the patronage of the church will be carefully looked to, and such plans will be devised and recommended as shall enlarge the sphere of their usefulness.

"The literature of the church, including her periodical publications, and the publication and distribution of tracts and religious books, will be one of the most important subjects that will demand the attention of the General Conference.

"In addition to these, the financial interests of the church may be mentioned. The ways and means of supporting the gospel and sustaining the varied departments of our common Zion, will all require careful revision and perhaps some modifications and improvements.

"These embrace the most important topics that will be discussed and acted upon by the body.

A Resident Episcopacy.—A correspondent of the same paper answers that part of Dr. Lee's article on Episcopacy, which proposes a certain distribution of our Bishops:

"If three Bishops should be wanting at the next General Conference, and the three most eligible men for the place are all residents of Virginia, I would, were I a member of that body, give them my suffrages freely, expecting them to be sent wherever the interests of the work might require their labors.

"The idea of deriving large benefits from the 'local presence' of a Bishop within an area of say 400, or 500, or 600 miles square, appear to me highly illusory and unreal.

"Take an example: for eight or nine years past the venerable Bishop Soule has resided in Tennessee, and his presence and society are highly prized. But how much of his society and labors has Tennessee at large enjoyed? Probably not one in every fifty of the membership has even so much as seen him during his residence in the State. Within the last year I think he has not spent more than three or four weeks in Tennessee; and within that period I suppose the people on the Pacific coast have enjoyed more of his services than the people of Tennessee have in eight years past."

An "Hour of Trial."—The Zion's Herald agrees with the Northern Christian Advocate in his view of the recent settlement of the Church suit. The Northern had said, "We look to the West for an example of firmness in this "hour of trial." The Herald adds:

"We unite with the Northern in the hope that the Western agents and commissioners will not submit to any compromises; but that they will carry the question vigorously thro' the Supreme Court, to which the Southern commissioners have appealed. We hope they will do this for two reasons. First, we do not believe they have any disciplinary right to settle by compromise. Until a legal decision severs the chain, they are as much bound by the restrictive rule as was the General Conference which appointed them. For the legal issue at New York does not, so far as we can see, affect them in the least. Secondly, we are strongly inclined to believe that the Supreme Court will decide against the South; or, if not, it would reach a conclusion unfavorable to the M. E. Church by some clearer process of reasoning than that of Judge Nelson's. That gentleman did not untie the knot. He only cut it. And if his premises and arguments are sound, whatever funds the M. E. Church may hereafter accumulate will be at the mercy of any important body of malcontents which may spring up within her pale, secede and go to law. We should, therefore, like to see how the Supreme Court will treat the question, even, if after all, the South has to be fastened upon the Western Book Concern, as a huge leech to drain away its strength for years; as is the case with the New York Concern, which is crippled by the late decision, for 25 years at least. We say then to the West—be firm."

We have rarely seen a more striking contrast between loving everybody in general and paying debts in particular, than this writer affords in an article just going before; headed "What the law of love forbids a Christian man to do."!—

"We think further, that the law of love forbids speculations in the staple articles of human subsistence and comfort, such as coal, flour, meat, fish, etc. Such speculations enrich the individual at the expense of a multitude of poor. How it can comport with the law of love, for a man of large resources to calculate that the relations of supply and demand are such, that by concentrating his capital in the purchase of a staple article, and by withholding that article from the market for a time, he can sell it at almost his own prices, we cannot see."

Now, here's theory for you and there's practice: here's the gnat, and there's the camel. A man that is too tender-hearted to speculate in coal or bacon; yet, ready to break a solemn contract with his brethren; to keep back from the widows and orphans of ministers and worn-out preachers of the South, funds, that were collected for their benefit!

Our Publishing Interests.—The Richmond Advocate continues to remark upon this subject and is in favor of a "Book Concern." The article is a long one; we give the two main features:

"A comparison between our present plan of a Book Agency, and the proposed one of a Book Concern must be instituted, and is deserving of consideration. At present our books are printed by contract; and in paying for the work done we have to pay the contractor a profit on the stock he supplies, and the printing he does. The same is also true of the binder. Out of these profits he pays for his real estate, and the implements of his trade, and grows rich. All this profit is lost to us, or if made, it is at the expense of those who purchase our books. Besides this, the books thus contracted for have to bear all the charges of transportation from the place of printing to the place of sale; and this, too, is to be added on to the price of the book before it reaches the purchaser."

The two plans are compared in detail; also, the advantages of the monopoly such an establishment would enjoy; and adds:

"But there is a point beyond this not to be overlooked, and of great importance to its settlement. It is the ease, certainty and promptness with which we could meet all the demands of trade by our own means of publishing. Ownership of the implements of trade would give us advantages in these respects which we could command, or rely on more implicitly than under a system of contracts. We might not under the pressure of exigencies that sometimes occur be able to make a satisfactory contract; or one that, as to time, could meet the instant demand for a work. But at our own establishment everything might be pressed into service to meet an emergency. With our own stereotype plates, too, we could easily and always regulate our issues by the laws of trade so as not to increase our sheet or bound stock beyond the legitimate demands of business; and the ability to do this would also lessen the necessity of enlarging or multiplying buildings for storing such stock, an evil we could not avoid under a system of contracts. And to this we must add the great risk, from loss or damage by fire, as we multiply buildings and increase our stock."

Mistake.—"At the late session of the Louisiana Conference four of the most talented and efficient members of the conference located, and it is hinted at that the cause was on account of starving salaries." [Western C. Advocate.

Not a bit of it! Three out of four are well to do in the world; and the fourth received not less than a thousand dollars allowance. The question of money had, we suppose, very little if anything to do in determining these brethren to ask for a location. It was but a temporary arrangement and we expect and hope to see them all back in the work before the close of the Russian war.

ITEMS FOR THE TIMES.

Gone at Last.—The telegraph gives the news of a welcome riddance: "Bodini positively sailed from this port (New York) on Saturday, Feb. 6, in the steamship Atlantic, for Liverpool."

We should say that the Cardinal went away with a "flea in his ear."

Ask no Questions.—Orestes A. Brownson refuses to accept a Protestant challenge in St. Louis, to a discussion of creed, on the ground that by so doing he would concede that the question between Catholicity and Protestantism was debatable, which would be compromising the rights of his religion. Like a doctor's prescription (says the New York Journal of Commerce) his religion must be taken with the eyes shut, and no questions asked.

Rumored Change in the Pontifical Administration.—A letter to the New York Commercial Advertiser, dated Rome, Dec. 16, says:

"Rumors are afloat of a change in the Pontifical Administration. Cardinal Antonelli, it is said, will shortly be displaced. You are doubtless aware that the two brothers of this personage are like himself, objects of great odium to the Roman people. Every act of oppression is ascribed in the popular mind to one or the other of this illustrious triumvirate. One of the brothers has control of the Roman Bank; and to him we owe it that, in order to gain by the exchange, all the bills of a denomination less than five scudi (five dollars) have been recalled. The effect of this and the great scarcity of silver, is that nine-tenths of the retail business of the city it carried on by the use of copper; and that to pay a bill of four dollars you must carry a weight of four hundred cents in your pockets; to obtain which, meanwhile, you have had to pay five per cent. for exchange. The same gentleman to whom we owe this convenience, by which he is making a vast fortune, is now endeavoring to get possession of the tobacco monopoly, hitherto in the hands of the banker Torlonia. It has become necessary, however, to satisfy the popular detestation, that these brothers be removed; not improbably their dismissal will be followed by the more important change above referred to."

Chili.—By the arrival of the British steamship Santiago, the Panama papers have advices from Valparaiso to Jan. 1, and Lima to Jan. 12. The Star furnishes a full summary of the news from which we gather the following:

"A case of rare munificence is chronicled. Senora Antonia Arevado de Navarro, as executrix and trustee of her late husband, Senor Navarro, has made over in favor of the hospital of Valparaiso, the very considerable sum of $25,778, which amount had been devised in Senor Navarro's will to the Church, in favor of his soul, but which, his widow, endowed with true philanthropical sentiments, has given another and more laudable destination, wisely considering that alleviating the distresses of poor suffering humanity is an act more praiseworthy in the eyes of the Almighty than thousands upon thousands of masses, however well sung or said.

A considerable excitement had been got up at Copiapo, on account of an order received there from the Archbishop, directing the faithful of the Catholic Church to keep their eyes on dissenters and be at all times prepared to denounce them to his reverence. On receipt of the edict, an indignation meeting was called, with the avowed purpose of publicly burning the Archepiscopal edict. At the time the steamer left Copiapo the police had been doubled.

It is strongly recommended that a Foundling Asylum be established in Valparaiso, as it is said that the want of it causes a large amount of infanticide."

Part of the Solemnities.—The late news from Mexico contains a characteristic item. Religion, with its gawdy parade, is on the bill. It is one of the diversions. The priestly managers cater well. The cathedral is a baptized theatre:

"The official journal of New Leon gives notice of the annual fair at Linares, extending from the 12th of February to the 1st of March. During all that time there will be daily 'bull fights of the best cattle, fireworks, solemn worship in the church of our lady of Guadaloupe and other diversions."

Jesuits Suppressed in France.—The N. York Journal of Commerce has the following:

"A private letter from St. Etienne, France, states that the Emperor has suppressed the establishment of the Jesuits in the Commune of Montaud, in the suburbs of that city; that the proceeding had produced great commotion, and that the popular feeling was favorable to the Emperor. St. Etienne is, like Lyons, an important manufacturing place, the principal articles of production being ribbons and fire-arms; and the government has there one of its most important armories. The population is largely composed of working people, who, though Catholic, are opposed to the Jesuits, on account of the extensive influence of that Order with all the departments of business. A desire to conciliate these people is the motive imputed to the Emperor. The Jesuit institution suppressed was extensive and flourishing, and held a high rank among the educational establishments of France."

ACTION, REACTION AND OVERACTION.

The auspicious action in New Grenada for religious freedom is threatened with a disastrous reaction, in turn to be overacted; and so the right side will finally be up. Papal supremacy dies hard. A correspondent of the Independent, writing from Panama, the 27th December, ult., gives the following account of things:

"Although by the present laws all connection between Church and State is sundered: leaving the ecclesiastical powers to manage their own business in their own way, and freeing the State from all responsibility for their support—yet the consequences of former arrangements are by no means so easily got rid of, and it will not be strange if they yet lead to a revolution in both Church and State. Your readers will recollect that, for some years past, the Church was made by law completely dependent on the State; and that, because the bishops would not submit to this law, they were banished from the State. Of course, as they had numerous personal friends—and Spaniards are not remarkable for preferring public interests to private—a good many sore hearts were the fruits of this movement, and a good deal of revenge was stored up, to be kept with Spanish persistency, till a favorable opportunity. That opportunity begins to show itself.

"When the bishops were banished, new ones had to be provided, and such as would obey the laws of their country. These were generally chosen from the chief families that favored the new regime, and they submitted to the laws of the State. But, in doing so, they cast an implied reproach on those who had been banished for refusing to do the same, and in their estimation inflicted a grievous wound on the dignity of "Holy Catholic Church," and it seems to have been the resolution of these malcontents to make these submitting ones pay dearly for their fault, whenever it shall be in their power to inflict punishment. And now that the bishops are invited to return at their pleasure, and the State does not pretend to defend those who in obedience to it, dishonored their proud spiritual mother, they stand a very poor chance indeed, unless their party in the church is strong enough to defend them against the church itself—which remains to be proved. The bishops have not yet returned from their rustication in the outside world; but the ultramontane party in the church have assumed the reins, and are driving with a strong hand. Their avowed object is to undo all that has been done—to punish those whom they consider traitors, and to abrogate the laws of religious emancipation. It is very possible they may succeed in all their designs, and that sooner than most imagine; but if they do it will surely lead to another political revolution, in which the power of the papacy here will be crushed forever. It is impossible ever to bring this people again into such a bondage to Rome as they have once borne; and if the attempt is made to compress them into that slavery again, the reaction will be terrible to those that undertake such subjection.

"At present, this party are confident that, in the recent elections, they have returned a majority of their partisans to Congress, and if they calculate rightly, there will be serious trouble in the session just commencing; and perhaps this new constitution, which is really far in advance of the mass of mind in the State, will be abrogated. The opposite party charge the priests with having brought about this result, by working on the superstitious fears of the more ignorant of the people at the confessional, and by preaching in the churches; and from what we know of the interference of 'Holy Church,' in our own elections in the United States, the charge does not seem likely to prove a slander."

THE OPIUM-EATER.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Daily Register, recently, in an article to that journal on opium and the opium-trade, drew this picture of the eater of opium:

Nothing under heaven can equal the apparent enjoyment of the opium-smoker. Look at that miserable, emaciated wretch, staggering from debility, his eyes nearly closed, while, trickling down his face, you perceive a watery discharge from the eyes and nose. He is about entering a hovel, having a mat suspended over the door. He who walks may read that he is an opiumist. With what anxiety do you see him collect the few cents—fruits of some robbery or murder—and receive from the proprietor of the shop, or den, a pipe and the allowance of opium. Follow him and you will soon see him reclining on a bench, his head on a bamboo pillow, a small lamp by his side, while his eyes begin to glisten as they watch each successive step and preparation, that is soon to waft his mind into oblivion. The pipe is filled and applied to the lamp; there is heard a slight noise, as with a full hearty pull he draws in all that opium and air can give; slowly is the inspiration relaxed, but not till all the opium in the pipe is consumed; then allowing the vapor impregnated with the narcotic influence to remain in his chest till nature compels him to expire, he gently allows it to escape, seeming to grudge the loss of each successive exit, till all is gone. Soothed by its effects he withdraws the pipe, and gives himself up to the first calming effects of the drug.

His next attempt confirms the comfort, and now no longer does he complain of racking limbs or aching bones. His second pipe being finished, he can now look round and gaze on what is going on; but his soul is still wrapped up in the bliss that is anticipated from what remains of his allowance; for not till the third or fourth whiff do the feelings of positive pleasure arise. Then is felt a lightness of head, a tingling in every limb, the eyes seem to be enlarged, and the ears sharpened to hearing, and elasticity, an inclination to mount on high is experienced, all pains are now gone, and pleasure reigns paramount, all weariness has left, and freshness takes its place. The loathing for food is changed for that which is piquant, and a great desire is felt for some particular dish. Whatever was secret is now opened; for the tongue is loosened and tells its tale of crimes committed. Still there is no excitement; but a calmness, soft, soothing and seductive. He dreams no dreams, nor thinks of the morrow; but, with a smile in his eye, he fills his last pipe. Slowly inhaling it he seems to brighten up; the smile that was sparkling in his eye extends to the other feature; his appearance is one of complete, yet placid enjoyment. Presently the pipe is slowly displaced or drops by his side; his head, if raised, now laid on the pillow; feature after feature gives up its smile; the eye becomes glazed. Now drops the upper eyelid and falls the chin with the lower lip; deeper and deeper inspiration follow; all perceptions gone. Objects may strike the eye, but no sights are seen; sounds may fall upon the ear, but no sensations are excited; and so he passes into sleep disturbed and broken, and from which he wakes to feel the full knowledge of the abject state of misery he is reduced to.

Woman's Perverted Influence.

A young man, of no ordinary promise, unhappily contracted habits of intemperance. His excesses spread anguish and shame thro' a large and most respectable circle. The earnest and kind remonstrance of friends, however, at length led him to desist; and feeling that for him to drink was to die, he came to a solemn resolution that he would abstain entirely for the rest of his days. Not long after he was invited to dine, with other young persons, at the house of a friend. Friend! did I say? Pardon me: he could hardly be a friend who would deliberately place on the table before one so lately lost, now so marvelously redeemed, the treacherous instrument of his downfall. But so it was. The wine was in their feasts. He withstood the fascination, however, until a young lady, whom he desired to please, challenged him to drink. He refused. With banter and ridicule she soon cheated him out of all his noble purposes, and her challenge was accepted. He no sooner drank than he felt the demon was still alive, and that from temporary sleep he was now awakening with tenfold strength. "Now," said he to a friend who sat next to him, "now I have tasted again, and I drink till I die."

The awful pledge was kept. Not ten days had passed before that ill-fated youth fell under the horrors of delirium tremens, and was borne to a grave of shame and dark despair. Who would envy the emotions with which that young lady, if not wholly dead to duty and to pity, retraced her part in a scene of gaiety, which smiled only to betray? [Dr. Potter.

Temperance.—There is no better or more forcible description of intemperance, than that given by St. Augustine, who calls it "A distemper of the head; a subversion of the senses; a tempest of the tongue; a storm in the body; a shipwreck of virtue; a loss of time; a wilful madness; a pleasant devil; a sugared poison; a sweet sin; which he that has it, has not himself; and he that commits it doth not only commit sin, but he himself is altogether sin."

"Intemperance has been aptly called," saith Flavel, "the devil's bridle, by which he turneth sinners which way he pleases; he that is overcome by it can overcome no other sin."

Among the heathen he was counted the best man who spent more oil in the lamp than wine in the bottle.

Tertullian says of the Primitive Christians: "They eat not down before they prayed; they eat no more than might suffice their hunger; they drank no more than was sufficient for temperate men; they did so eat and drink, as those that remembered that they must pray afterwards."

Papier Mache.—Two modes are adopted in the manufacture of papier mache. First, by gluing or pasting different thicknesses of paper together; and, second, by mixing the substance of the paper into a pulp, and pressing it into moulds. The first mode is adopted principally for those articles—such as trays, etc., in which a tolerably plain and flat surface is to be produced. Common mill board, such as forms the covers of books, may give some idea of this sort of manufacture. Sheets of strong paper are glued together, and then so powerfully pressed that the different strata become as one. Slight curvatures may be given to such pasteboard, when damp, by the use of presses and moulds. Papier mache, properly so called, however, is that which is pressed into moulds in the state of a pulp. This is either paper makers' pulp or is made of coarse paper cuttings, boiled in water and beaten in a mortar until they assume the consistency of a paste, which is boiled in a solution of gum arabic or glue to give it tenacity. The moulds are carved in the usual way, and the pulp pressed into them, a counter mould being employed to make the cast nothing more than a crust or shell, as in plaster cast.

The Nebraska Bill.

The following is the Nebraska Bill of Stephen A. Douglas, of Illinois, as modified by himself:

All that part of the territory of the United States included within the following limits, except such portions thereof as are hereafter expressly exempted from the operations of this act, to wit: beginning at a point in the Missouri river where the fortieth parallel of north latitude crosses the same; thence west on said parallel to the summit of the highlands—the waters flowing into the Green river or Colorado of the West, from the Waters flowing into the Great Basin; thence northward on the said highlands to the summit of the Rocky Mountains; thence on said summit northward to forty-ninth parallel of north latitude; thence west on said parallel to the western boundary of the territory of Minnesota, thence southward on said boundary to the Missouri river; thence down the main channel of said river to the place of beginning, be, and the same is hereby, created into a temporary government, by the name of the territory of Nebraska.

All that part of the territory of the United States included within the following, except such portions thereof as are hereafter expressly exempted from the operations of this act, to wit: Beginning at a point on the Western boundary of the State of Missouri, where the thirty-seventh parallel of north latitude crosses the same; thence west on said parallel to the eastern boundary of New Mexico; thence north on said boundary to latitude thirty-eight; thence following said boundary westward to the summit of the highlands, dividing the waters flowing into the Colorado of the West or Green river from the waters flowing into the Great Basin; thence northward on said summit to the fortieth parallel of north latitude; thence east on said parallel to the western boundary of the State of Missouri; thence south with the western boundary of said State to the place of beginning, be, and the same is hereby, created into a temporary government, by the name of the Territory of Kansas.

The section providing for the election of delegate is amended by adding to the words constitution and all the laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable, shall have the same force and effect within the said territory as elsewhere in the United States, the following: "Except the eighth section of the act preparatory to the admission of Missouri into the Union, approved March 6, 1820, which was superseded by the principles of the legislation of 1850, commonly called the compromise measures, and is declared inoperative."

Section 21. And be it further enacted, That in order to avoid all misconstruction, it is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of this act, so far as the question of slavery is concerned, to carry into practical operation the following proposition and principles established by the compromise measures of 1850, to-wit: First, That all questions pertaining to slavery in the territories, and in the new States to be formed, are to be left to the decision of the people residing therein, through their appropriate representatives. Second, That all cases involving title to slaves, and questions of personal freedom, are referred to the adjudication of the local tribunals, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Third, That the provisions of the constitution and laws of the United States in respect to fugitives from justice, are to be carried into faithful execution in all the organized territories the same as in the States.

The Nebraska Territory.

The immense territory of Nebraska—the Indian name for the great river running through it under the French name of La Platte—has the States of Iowa and Missouri on its Eastern line, and on its Western the Rocky Mountain Ridge, which separates it from Utah. On its Northern limit is what is known as the Northwestern territory and a portion of Minnesota, and its Southern boundary is the same parallel of latitude as that of Missouri, 30 degrees, 30 minutes North. The territory is at its Eastern extremity about 350 miles from North to South—at the Western end, about 200 miles, and having an average width of about 240 miles.

It is estimated that there are about 12,000 Indians in the country. They are the Cherokees, (in part) the Osages, Cherokee Reserration, Wyandottes, Pattowatomies, Ottawas and Chippewas, Peorias and Keskaskine, Weers and Pinkashaws, Shawnees, Kenans, Delawares, Kickapoos, Iowas, Sacks and Foxes, Half Breeds Otoes and Missourias.

At Fort Leavensworth, on the Western side of the Missouri river, there is a reservation of nine square miles, belonging to the United States Government. Here is centred the entire white population of the territory, which varies according to the season of the year and the demands of the army. It comprises officers, soldiers, civilians in the service of the government, mechanics, farmers, teamsters, etc. The white population varies from four to twelve hundred persons, and ordinarily the number does not exceed six hundred. About seventy votes were polled last year for a delegate to Congress. None of these votes came from Fort Leavenworth, and most of the white residents did not vote at all

In regard to the physical character of the country, a recent writer, who speaks, we infer, from passages in his work, from personal observation, says the valley of the territory westward from the Missouri is a rich loam. The valley of the Platte, near the Northern boundary, is low, but for some two hundred and fifty miles is very fertile, when it changes into a deep sand. The two great ridges, between the Arkansas and Kansas, and the Kansas and the Platte, are a mixed loam and sand or gravel, which makes a delightful soil to till and returns heavy crops. The ridge, between the Kansas and Platte, is more beautiful and fertile than the other. The valleys are tolerably supplied with timber. There is also some timber along the Missouri river, and a slight growth is found along the small streams. Coal has been found of a superior quality at several locations, and they are indications that an abundant supply will be found for the whole territory.

The Osage orange is indigenous to the southern part of the country, and can be cultivated with the greatest ease in all the territory; so much so that, with tolerable attention, three years will produce hedges sufficient to turn any stock. The want of timber for fencing is thus readily supplied to the prairie land, and the expense of clearing timbered land, fencing and bringing it into cultivation, far exceed the trouble, time and labor of producing the finest hedged farms in the prairie districts.

The want of materials for buildings will be supplied by the pine brought across by the Hannibal and St. Joseph railroad, which can be sold by that route lower than that which is now used in Western Missouri, and brought up the river.

The want of lumber will also lead to the

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

of brick, stone, and even beautiful free
e houses, as these materials can be abuntly obtained in various localities. Such is nature of the country for some three hund miles west; then there are fertile ridges, ties rich prairies scattered over a country some places almost barren.
It is also thought that, ere long, the cutting sawing pine will become a heavy business the James and Sioux rivers, which would ce this country on an equality of prices, for ber and shingles, with the States on the ississippi.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—On the 5th of Feb., 1854, by
Rev. J. A. Ivy, Mr. HENRY ELWELL, Jr., Mrs. ELIZABETH YOUNG, both of New Or-ns.

MARRIED—On the 10th January, by the
v. J. M. Wells, Mr. ROBERT LEWIS, of en, Ala., to Miss E. V. A. ROSSER, of Tus-loosa, Ala.

OBITUARY:

DIED—In Donaldsonville, on the 6th Dec.,
53, after a protracted illness, Mrs. NANCY
LEN HANDWICH, aged 76 years.
The deceased was a native of Virginia; at early period removed to South Carolina, the age of 12 years united with the Methst Episcopal Church, and at fifteen was rried. Thence to Georgia, Kentucky, Tenssee, Alabama, Mississippi and finally to isiana, where her days were ended with ope in her death."
Mother H. had been a member of the M.
Church 64 years, and was a thorough ethodist—loved her own church and its inisters—had discovered nothing that led r to desire a change. Not one of the nurous and kind friends of different persua-ns who frequented her sick room and will-ly waited around her bed-side doubted her ly or unexpected her prospects.
There is, therefore, now no condemnation them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk t after the flesh but after the Spirit; with ny such passages and evidences was her n testimony. Generally quiet and compos-
, but occasionally a glow of heavenly rap-re would swell her soul to ecstasy and extation at the thought of departing and be-with Christ.
At length the messenger came. Leaving lying request to her children and friends meet her in heaven: propped up in an arm air, calmly closed her eyes and the spirit ok its flight.

"And now for joy she folds her wings,
And loud her lovely sonnet sings,
I'm safe at home."

ther youngest daughter and son-in-law,
m. H. Faquier, with whom she lived, have cently united with the M. E. Church and ofessed religion; since which time her lan-age had been, "Now, Lord, lettoet thou y servant depart in peace for mine eyes ve seen thy salvation."
Jan. 18, 1854. SAMUEL HAWES.

DIED—On the 22d of Jan., 1854, WILLIAM
DREY, of Sumpter co., Ala., aged about
He was one of the pillars of the church.

NOTICES.

QUARTERLY MEETINGS.

First round of Quarterly Meetings, ufaula District, Alabama Conference, 1854:
non and Chunnuggee, January, 7th and 8th.
ufaula Station, " 15 and 16th.
ariana, " 21 and 22.
ppalachicola, " 28 and 29.
eenwood cir., at Union Academy, Feb. 1
and 2.
ckson cir., at Andrew Chapel, February 4
and 5.
oodville, at Wadford's camp-ground, Feb.
7 and 8.
neva, at Claybank, Feb. 11 and 12.
enville, at Midway, " 18 and 19.
rbour, at Zion Chapel, Feb. 25 and 26.
yton, at Upworth, March 4 and 5.
bbeville, at Ebenoczer, " 7 and 8.
District Stewards' meeting at Eufaula, arch 11 and 12.
Punctual attendance is earnestly solicited.
S. F. PILLEY, P. E.

Notice to Teachers.

THE PLAQUEMINE FEMALE SEMINARY is now
ed in consequence of the removal of the late Presi-
, and it is desired to procure a suitable person to open d conduct a Female School of a high order.
The buildings are large and commodious, capable of acmmodating at least fifty boarding scholars.
The location is one of the best in the State and will mmend a good school if well managed.
Any gentleman wishing to embark in the business can ply for further information on the subject by addressing the dersigned, forwarding statement of qualifications and ference. EDWARD J. GAY.
Plaquemine, Iberville Parish, La., Jan. 2, 1853.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited tent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square, first insertion $1 00
Each subsequent insertion 50
One Square, one year 15 00
Two Squares, six months 10 00
Two Squares, one year 25 00

A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line.
No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

General Intelligence,

Particulars of the Great Steamboat Conflagration.

TWO SUBSEQUENT FIRES!

Our city appears at present to be suffering under the st strokes of a new epidemic—a fire epidemic. The ter-ble disaster to the Georgia, involving the loss of human e, was yet fresh in our minds and almost before our eyes, hen the painfully vivid impressions it produced were most entirely swept away by another and similar ca-lity, on a more extensive scale, so far as the destruction properly is concerned.
The steamboat Charles Belcher, Capt. Carlysle, a large nd magnificent boat, arrived at our wharf at 6 o'clock Friday evening from Nashville, with a large cargo of cotton, tobacco, and other produce, and about fifty ssengers, most of whom chose to remain on board until morning. Between the hours of 3 and 4 o'clock fire broke out in the stern of the vessel, from some unxplained cause, and it progressed with such rapidity hat by the time the crew and passengers were aroused all hance of saving the boat were gone. Thick masses of moke enveloped everything, and long wreaths of flame, ke thing like serpents about the woodwork of the vessel, ured into the cabin and out of the berth doors and indows in cataracts, and the steamer Mohican, lying longside, was soon in the same condition. The new atchez, Lish Tuna, Crescent, and Saxon, and a large aded with produce, were all in a short time blazing rcely, the smoke and intense heat rendering fruitless all forts to stop the progress of the fire. The Grand Turk d Sultana both took fire, but managed to back out into e river and extinguish it before much damage was done, d this left a gap to the array of boats which stayed the rther progress of the conflagration. The Grand Turk as burned considerably about the stern, and the Sultana ad her forward stairways charred and blackened. It as a magnificent spectacle. The skies were illumined y the broad wheels of flame, and their crimson and shift-g light included in its immense circle the lines of shiping extending up and down the river, and the opposite hore, upon which minute objects could be seen with an almost magical distinctness. The Cro communicated to he freight piled upon the levee in rows and tiers of boxes, ales, barrels and bags, and although the fire department ad turned out in great force they had their hands full.
It is thought this disaster has been attended with considerable loss of life, although many of those supposed at the time to have been lost, have since been accounted for, among others the brother of Captain Leathers, of the Belcher, reported among the missing by the daily papers.
Several negroes and a few white persons are known to have lost their lives, but as few of the boats saved even their books and papers, who they were, or how many, it is impossible to ascertain. A passenger or employee of the Chas. Belcher, named Chas. R. Gibson, made frantic attempts to plunge into the flames of the burning boat, exclaiming that his mother and sister were perishing in the fire, but being withheld by several persons, he suddenly stabbed himself in the breast in two places, being apparently wrought up to a pitch of excitement bordering upon insanity; he was conveyed to the Charity Hospital, and although severely wounded, it was thought he would recover; we are happy to learn that his fears for the safety of his relatives were not realized. The wife of Captain Carlysle was sick in her state-room; her husband took their little child in his arms and the pilot attempted to carry away the lady; by some means he slipped and fell—they were separated, and in attempting to rise he fell over the railing to the lower deck. Mr. Packard, the engineer, afterwards rescued Mrs. Carlysle, bearing her in his arms from the burning boat while surrounded by the most imminent dangers.
We take from the True Delta, of Saturday evening, an estimate of the value of the boats and their cargoes, and the amounts of insurance. It is not far from being correct:

The Saxon, Capt. Kercheval, was to have left for St.
Louis this evening. She was valued at $28,000; owned by Frank Johnson and J. C. Shannon, of this city; insured in Louisville for $14,500. Her cargo, principally dry goods, was valued at $50,000.
The Charles Belcher cost $93,000; insured in St. Louis for $60,000; owned by Cutter & Valentine, of St. Louis; cargo valued at $200,000.
The Crescent, Captain Young, was to leave this afternoon, for St. Louis; value $22,000; insured, in Cincinnati for $10,000; owned by the Captain. Her cargo was valued at $35,000.
The new Natchez, (packet) Captain Leathers, valued at $85,000; insured in Louisville and Cincinnati for $30,000; owned by Captain Leathers and T. C. Holmes, of this city. Four negroes, belonging to the captain, were lost, together with the mate. Cargo worth $100,000.
The Lish Tuna, Captain Haygood, owned by Hewlit,
Rowe & Co., of St. Louis, and the Captain. Worth $30,000. Insured in St. Louis for $20,000. Hooks and papers saved. No cargo on board.
The Mohican, Captain Irwin, owned on Tennessee river, valued at $20,000. No insurance. Cargo, pork and groceries, valued at $40,000.
The barge Ivanhoe, owned by Smith & Shotwell, of Louisville—cargo consisting of country produce, was insured in Louisville for $20,000.
The entire loss by this calamity will probably nearly or quite reach the high figure of $500,000.
A little previous to 12 o'clock on Saturday night a fire was discovered in an upper room of a three-story brick house, used as a restaurant, on Main street, near the Meat Market. The two upper stories were completely burned out and nothing but the walls left standing; the furniture below was pitched out into the street, and was probably as effectually ruined as it could have been by fire.
A few minutes after this the alarm was again given, and the hat store of Albert & Tricon, on Chartres street, near Customhouse, was found to be on fire. Engines were soon upon the spot, but the flames, inclosed within brick walls, were not easily reached, and soon burst through the upper stories and through the roof, streaming out with the fury and heat of a furnace, scattering showers of sparks and cinders upon adjoining roofs, two of which, one on either side, were soon in flames. The drug store of F. P. Ducongé, next to the last store, took fire below and was entirely consumed; the dry goods store of Wm. Aldige & Co., importers of French goods, was consumed, together with most of the stock, as was also the clothing store beneath it of Gueringer & Co. The jewelry store of W. W.
Rees & Co. was also consumed, but the stock was probably saved.
The activity and efficiency of the firemen prevented the conflagration from extending farther.
The loss is probably in the neighborhood of $150,000, mostly covered by insurance.

LOUISIANA LEGISLATURE.

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 6.—Senate.—Mr. McMurdo introduced a bill to provide for the payment of the coupons of interest attached to bonds issued by the State, which was passed.
Mr. Clifton, from the Committee on the Banks, reported on act to amend the charter of the Citizens' Bank, so as to allow discounts, as other banks, which was made the special order for Wednesday next. The several bills for a Registry law in New Orleans were made the special order for Thursday, the 16th instant. The time of the House was consumed in discussing the bill to allow the City Council to issue bonds, instead of the present tax, for subscription to the Jackson and Northern and Opelousas Railroads; the bill had been adopted to the fourth section when the House adjourned.
The pending amendment is to allow only tax-payers to vote in the action of the Council.
BATON ROUGE, Feb. 7.—Senate.—Resolutions were adopted asking for a daily mail between New Orleans and Bayou
Sara and intermediate points.
Mr. King introduced a bill in reference to reclaiming the Swamp Lands, which was referred.
Mr. Trudeau introduced a bill, which was referred, giving to front proprietors the privilege to purchase public lands in the rear of their estates.
Mr. Wickliffe presented the memorial of citizens of New Orleans against Mr. McKay's bill in regard to Sheriffs' sales.
House.—The House voted to abolish the Board of Public Works, provided for in articles 130, 132, 133, and 134 of the Constitution.
The act allowing another Justice of the Peace for New Orleans, was laid on the table indefinitely.
Mr. Roberts's amendment to Mr. Campbell's bill for selling City Bonds, to be invested in Railroad stock, allowing only property holders to vote on it, was voted down, and the bill laid over, subject to call.
An act providing for a Revision of the Statutes of the State was passed.

THE LATE S. S. PRENTISS.—In the House of Representatives, on the 23d ult., Mr. Hunt, of Louisiana, offered a resolution that the balance of seven hundred and thirty-six dollars, due to Sergeant S. Prentiss, late of Mississippi, under a resolution of the House, passed February 8, 1838, providing for pay and mileage while contesting a seat in the House, be paid to his wife. In the course of his remarks in support of the resolution, Mr. Hunt made the following eloquent allusion to the character of the deceased:
Mr. Speaker, Mr. Prentiss was well known to many of the members of this House. He was a man of extraordinary abilities, of extensive and varied attainments, and of many amiable and noble qualities. He was a scholar, a poet, a wit, a lawyer, an orator, and a statesman of respectable standing.
While a member of the House, he was one of its chief ornaments—an attractive and fascinating public speaker—sensible, full of knowledge, and with an imagination ever teeming with bright images and apt illustrations. Indeed sir, what Dr. Johnson happily said of Goldsmith may well be applied to Mr. Prentiss: Nihil non tetigit quod non ornavit. As a gentleman, he was the soul of honor, brave, generous, kind-hearted, truthful, chivalric, affectionate, true to his friends, and faithful to his country.
Like most of the sons of genius, he was careless about money; and he died, as I am informed by the gentleman who requested me to take charge of this matter, in straitened circumstances. His wife and little children reside in the district which I now have the honor to represent.
With these remarks I submit the resolution. Its adoption will be an act of justice, and, I am sorry to believe, a measure of needed relief.
The resolution was adopted.

OPPOSITION TO THE NEBRASKA BILL.—Large meetings have been held at Cleveland and at Pittsburgh to protest against the project now pending in the Senate of the United States for the repeal of that section of the Missouri Act which forever prohibits slavery in the territories lying north of 36 degrees and 30 minutes.
A large meeting was also held at the Tabernacle, New York, on the evening of the 30th, to oppose the violation of the Missouri Compromise. At all of the above gatherings resolutions were passed and remonstrances prepared to be sent to Washington. A manifesto has appeared at Washington signed by Giddings, Hale, Sumpter and others of the Freesoil party, expressing their determination to oppose the proposed bill to the last. It seems the torch of sectional strife which every good citizen hoped was extinguished, is again about to be lighted. Already the Northwest is in a blaze. The papers from Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit and Pittsburgh come to us filled with accounts of the sectional conflagration. Who will allay it?

THE EXPLOSION AT LOWER RAVENSWOOD, L. I.—By the explosion at the cartridge factory at Ravenswood, L. I., thirteen persons were killed instantly and a large number severely injured, four of which at last dates it was thought could not recover.
The precise cause of the explosion no one remains to explain. It is known, however, that the stove used for warming the building was red hot, the day being very cold; and from the highly combustible materials which were used in close proximity to it, it may readily be accounted for by supposing some particle ignited on the floor, and communicating with the articles in various stages of preparation, caused the explosion. The building was a one-story wood building, twenty by twenty-five feet square, which was blown into fragments, and not a single stick could be found that a child could not lift.

THE RIVER.—The Little Rock Whig of the 26th say:
"The last week has been extremely cold. The river has been frozen over at the Upper end of the city for several days. Not sufficiently strong, however, for skating. Of course the river has not risen, nor can it be expected, as long as the weather continues cold and dry."
The river at Baton Rouge, says the Comet of Saturday, is rising very rapidly.

Eight thousand copies of Alexander Smith's poems have been sold in the United States.

Thomas Francis Meagher arrived at San Francisco in the steamship Cortes, on the 18th ult.

Mr. Gordon, ex-Consul of the United States at Pernambuco, died in that city on the 23d December.

Arrival of the Crescent City.

THE CUBA NEWS.

The steamship Crescent City, Capt. Baxter, from New York January 27th and Havana the 3d inst., arrived last Monday.
The Diario de la Marina says: "According to reliable statistics which are in our possession, the growth of Tobacco has, during the last eight years, increased enormously in the Vuelta de Abajo. Compared with each other the four years from 1850 to 1854 give an annual increase of full 7½ per cent. upon those from 1846 to 1850. And this, too, in spite of the fact that the crop of 1846 was remarkable—we might say prodigious. We do not give the exact figures:
but the results which we state are unquestionable."
Among the passengers by the steamer Ferdinand the Catholic, just arrived at Havana, had come Senor Don José y Sierra, a Topographical Engineer from the school, Villavicio-sa, and one of its most distinguished pupils.
He has been appointed by Her Majesty's Government, in order to draw up, along with Don Santiago Garoy, surveyor and a descriptive memoir of the mountains and forests of the island.
The Hoja of Sagua la Grande says: "We hear that since his arrival at this port Senor Cuevas, the Engineer of our Railway, has been occupying himself in surveying, inspecting and sounding, with the permission of the Captain of of the Port, the bottom of our bay. Besides this he does not loose a single moment in pushing forward the reconnoisance of the two banks of the river; from which operations will result the choice of the track fittest for the railroad line about to be finished."
The town of Remedios is reported to be transforming itself by rapid improvements; its clay built and thatched houses giving place to handsome and solid structures. At the same time cultivated fields are stretching out around it, industrial establishments are springing up and an active trade promises to render the place one of some importance on the general map of the island.
It seems that it is proposed to continue from Cardenas to Guachinango the railway already existing, in order that from that point it may be taken to Crocos, parallel with that of Cienfuegos, forming another along that of Labanillo from Isabel to Macagua. The works for the continuation of that of Jacnro to Cardenas are already near completion, and those are continued with activity, which are to take it forward in a short time from Bonaguises to Cifuentes, parallel with the railroad from Sagua to Villa
Clara, passing through San José de los Ramos, Labana Grande and the colony of Santa Dolunigo.
In an article on the trade between Cuba and the United States the Diario de la Marina as-sers, on the authority of the Balanza, that the imports into the island from this country, in 1852, amounted to $6,552,585, and the exports from the former to the United States to $12,- 076,408.
The Diario describes Havana as now exhibiting, on all sides, the most active progress of improvement and prosperity. It enumerates the various new arts and trades lately introduced there—among which are four or five large steam saw-mills.
We observe, at various points through the island, the celebration of the arrival of military commandents, newly appointed to the command of the troops stationed at such places.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival of the steamer Perseverance last evening we have received Galveston papers of the 3d. The Galveston Journal says:
CHOLERA IN HOUSTON.—We learn by a gentleman from Houston that several cases of cholera had occurred in that city. The state of the weather, for some days, has been of that damp, foggy and disagreeable character that is likely to superinduce diseases of the cholera type; but we trust the norther which swept the fog before it, on Friday morning, and purified the air, has had the effect of stopping the malady that has visited Houston.
Dawson's Land bill was laid on the table in the House, on the 26th ult., by a vote of 43 to 32.
The Loan bill was lost in the Senate by a vote of 14 to 16.
The School bill has passed and become a law.
Sixteen sections of land have been appropriatted to all railroads.
A bill supplementary to an act to encourage the construction of railroads in Texas, by donations of land, has passed both Houses.
And also a bill to grant 64 sections of land, of 640 acres each, to the Galveston and Brazos Navigation Company.
We learn by the Houston Spirit of the Age that on the 27th a man by the name of Justin Dunn drowned himself in the bayou at that place. The deceased was about fifty-six years of age, and was a sober and industrious men, and had worked at cabinet-making in Houston for some five or six months previous. He has friends residing at Madison, Indiana.
The Galveston News of the 2d says:
Capt. Jno. Delesdernier died this morning after a sickness of about one week. We believe his complaint was pneumonia. Capt. Delesder-nier is one of our oldest citizens and his death will be much regretted by all his numerous acquaintances.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

Arrival of the Steamship Daniel Webster.

PROCLAMATION OF PRESIDENT WALKER.

Six Weeks Later from Sandwich Islands.

The steamship Daniel Webster, Captain
Womack, from San Juan the 31st ult., arrived at this port Monday afternoon, bringing one hundred and twenty-four passengers, and $13,- 000 in specie.
The Star of the West sailed from San Juan for New York on the 31st ult., with three hundred and fifty passengers and $1,000,000 in treasure.
The Sierra Nevada sailed from San Francisco for San Juan, and the John L. Stephens for Panama, on the noon of the 16th. They took but a moderate number of passengers, and the specie shipments were likewise below the usual semi-monthly average.
The health of the Isthmus continues good.
The Chontales mines still continue to attract great attention throughout the country. The report on specimens sent to England for assaying has been very favorable—the ore yielding, in some cases, as high as one hundred and fifty dollars to the pound. Mr. Borland, United States Minister, is now on a tour of inspection in this district, and his reports upon the subject will be looked forward to with interest.
Col. G. W. White, contractor for carrying passengers across the twelve miles land route, has arrived with sixty wagons, which will be in readiness next trip to carry passengers and baggage to San Juan del Sud from Virgin Bay.
Another iron steamer has been launched at Vanderbilt Point, of light draft, to run to Castillo Rapids.
Further news had been received from Ensenada, Walker's head quarters. On the 18th of December Walker's party was augmented to two hundred and seventy men, by the arrival of the re-inforcements under command of Col.
Watkins, on board the bark Anita, Lieut. Mc-Kibben had been killed by the military, and Capt. C. H. Gilman, Privates Hamilton, Matthews, Braypole, Wells, and one other, wounded.
In the different engagements the loss of the Lower Californians was estimated at eighteen or twenty killed, and as many wounded. The fortified post has been named Fort McKibben.
Private Hernandez McCormack was also killed when alone in the open country. After the arrival of re-inforcements, Capt. Geo. R. Davidson, aided by Crocker and Douglass, was, on the 19th December, dispatched in command of an expedition against San Tomas. Without firing a gun, Capt. Davidson dispersed the hostile Californians, and immediately returned to a place near Ensenada, called La Grulla, where his company was stationed at the latest advices.
This is about the substance of the hostile operations, brought to San Francisco from San Diego by the steamer Southerner. The same accounts represent the country as quiet, Melendrez and Negrete, the Chiefs of the Lower Californians, both having fled—the former to the lower part of the country, and the latter to San Diego, where he has taken up his abode. The reports of outrages having been committed by the Expeditionists are contradicted, and the peaceable inhabitants of the country are represented as being entirely satisfied with the new order of things, and as having solicited the friendship and protection of President Walker. It is also stated that some of the wealthiest and most influential rancheros had come forward and offered to furnish the Expeditionists with horses, supplies and other aid, provided a sufficient force could be placed in the country to protect the inhabitants from any future emergencies arising from such a course. President Walker had declined receiving such assistance, unless a remuneration was given. On Friday, the 11th of January, the bark Anita returned to San Francisco, bringing back Col.
Watkins, who had been appointed Vice President of the new Republic, under the new organization of the Government, which was made after the arrival of the re-inforcements. The object of Col. Watkin's visit was understood to be to obtain additional re-inforcements, munitions, etc. The news brought by this arrival is a few days later than that of the Southerner, and is confirmatory of it. Every thing remained quiet, and the forces were in the same position. Memorials from various residents of Lower California, asking the protection of Capt.
Walker, are published, with the signatures an-nexed, as well as another proclamation from the new President, and a decree establishing the pay of officers and soldiers. The residents propose to remain neutral.

PROCLAMATION TO THE PEOPLE OF LOWER CAL-IFORNIA.—In entering this Territory of Lower California, the force under my command had for its object the amelioration of your social and political condition, and the improvement of the country by all the arts which conduce to the civilization of a people. We have witnessed the drawbacks and disabilities under which you labored while constituting a portion of the Mexican Republic. We have seen you cursed with a Government too weak to protect you in your property, and yet strong enough to eat up a very large proportion of the products of your industry. It was to remedy these evils and relieve you from the ills incident to your political organization, that we came to your territory and have established the existing Government of the Republic. This is why we have declared the State independent of Mexico, and have issued decrees changing the entire policy of the country; and we are confident that with the means at our disposal, we shall be able to attain the ends at which we aim.
Above everything else we desire to establish order and quiet where before all was anarchy and confusion. We seek to render property secure and to guarantee every man the possession of what he earns by the sweat of his brow, and therefore we shall endeavor to protect you from the wandering robbers whom the Mexican Government has not only failed to punish, but has actually recognized as its agents and accomplices. Under the new Republic, no bandit will be permitted to disgrace our flag by placing it at the head of his plundering band; and the severest punishment will be reserved for those who seek impunity for rapine and crime under the pretences of royalty and patriotism.
Although war has been waged against us without many of the restrictions imposed by civilized nations, we shall not permit ourselves to forget what we owe to the cause for which we contend. Our enemies have attempted to poison wells, have violated flags of truce and endeavored by falsehood to arouse against us the religious feelings of the people. We shall use against them only the means which honor warrants and truth dictates. Nor do we doubt that with such means we shall be able to conquer all the opposition that may be raised against us. We confide in the justice of our conduct and rely on time and experience to remove the prejudices which evil-intentioned persons may excite against us.
Under the new Government all well-disposed persons will be protected in liberty of person and enjoyment of property. Religion will be respected and all will be encouraged in their reverence for and worship of the Great Being, without whose aid all earthly purposes fail, and under whose protection all national improvements are accomplished. And we call upon you as good citizens to assist us in carrying out the principles we recognize as the foundation of all our rights and all our means.

WILLIAM WALKER, Colonel,
President of Lower California.

REPUBLIC OF LOWER CALIFORNIA,
Department of War.

It is hereby decreed: That the pay of the officers and soldiers of the Republic aforesaid, shall be as follows, to wit: 1. Colonels $10 per diem;
2. Lieut. Colonels, $10; 3. Majors, $9; 4. Captains of Companies, $8; 5. First Lieuts. of Companies, $7; 6. Adjutants, $7; 7. Quartermaster, $7; 8. Commissary, $7; 9. Paymaster, $7; 10. Surgeon of Regiment, $7; 11. Surgeon's Assistant, $6; 12. Commissary's Assistant, $6;
13. Quartermaster's Sergeant, $6; 14. Second
Lieuts. of Companies, $6; 15. First Sergeants, $5; 16. Sergeants and Corporals, $4; 17. Privates, $4. By the President, WM. WALKER.
JOAN M. JARNAGIN, Secretary of War.
Seat of Government, Republic of Lower California, December 24, A. D. 1853.

MEMORIAL FROM RESIDENTS.—At a meeting held at the ex-Mission of San Vincent of the frontier of Lower California, on the 23d of December, of the year 1853, called by Messrs.
Santiago Arco, Miguel Osio, Guadalupe Merron, Jose Maria Bermudes, Manuel Valencia, Francisco Diaz, Francisco Zazurta and Francisco
Zapata, the following resolutions were adopted:
That the parties assembled at this meeting considering their persons, their families and their interests endangered by the political state in which this frontier is now placed, and wishing to pursue the most prudent course in order to protect their interests, have resolved to address a representation to the Commander of the forces now occupying the capital of said frontier, soliciting from him full protection and guaranty for our persons and properties; we, the memorialists, binding ourselves in return, not to take part in the present political affairs of the said frontier.
It was likewise resolved that a person be named to present the said representation to the commander of the said forces, and to receive his reply, with the conditions which may be stipulated.
In virtue whereof we sign the present as a resolution adopted by us in the ex-Mission of San Vincent, the 23d day of December, 1853.
Santiago Domingo Arce; Francisco Zapata; for Francisco Zuzuora, A. Horn; for Manuel Valencia, A. Horn; Miguel Osio; Jose Maria
B. Lugo; Manuel Diaz; for Dona Marina Vidal, Manuel Diez.

To Col. Don Wm. Walker, Santa Tomas:
SIR:—The undersigned, Mexican citizens, settled on this frontier of Lower California, most respectfully address themselves to you saying:
That considering our lives, our families and our interests endangered by the present critical state of this frontier, we solicit you as the commander of the forces which have taken possession of this frontier, to grant us full protection and guarantee for our persons and properties, binding ourselves to you in return not to take any part in the present political affairs of this Territory.
The bearer of this memorial, Don Augustin
Horn, is empowered by us.
Santiago Domingo Arce; at the request of Francisco Zazueta, A. Horn; Francisco Zapata; at the request of Manuel Valenola, A. Horn;
Manuel Diaz; for Dona Marina Vidal, Manuel
Diaz; Jose Maria B. Lugo; Miguel Osio.
The San Francisco Picayune says: The Filibusters will doubtless hold on to their present acquisitions until by reinforcements they feel themselves competent to essay the consummation of their ulterior objects when they will enter upon the real theatre of war and danger, by making a descent on Senora. Meantime squads of adventurers are constantly leaving this port for the new Republic, and we hear rumors of the intended embarkation of large reinforcements within a few days. The presence of Col.
Watkins in this city, and other officers of the little army, indicates that efforts are being made to facilitate the designs of the invading forces.
What may be the ultimate result of the adventurers, of course, purely a matter of speculation.
The Legislature of California assembled at Benecia on Monday, Jan. 2. The annual message of Governor Bigler was delivered on the 7th. The actual amount of State indebtedness
Jan. 1st, 1854, is $3,001,455 70. The amount of gold dust shipped from California in 1853, is $82,300,399 42, more than half the total amount of exports of all the other States of the Union, the estimated amount from the other States being, in 1852, $154,931,147. The Governor recommends an amendment of the Constitution and biennial sessions of the Legislature, and estimates the total saving to the State of such a course, with the reduction of the salaries, which he also recommends, at $371,700 annually.

[From the San Francisco Herald, 18th ult.

BUSINESS AND MINING PROSPECTS.—All kinds of business and mining operations are extremely dull at this time. The want of rain was never more sensibly felt in the interior. The dry weather has not only retarded agricultural operations, but has absolutely put a stop to mining in many localities in which large expectations were formed and extensive preparations made with a view to the falling of the winter rains. The result is a stagnation in business.
Rain has been falling for several hours with considerable profusion, and should it continue for several days activity and cheerfulness will be diffused everywhere throughout the mining region. The dullness throughout the interior has been reflected upon the city, and in connection with the immense surplus of merchandise which has been so inconsiderately poured in on us from abroad, has produced a depression in trade seldom before equaled. When the rains fall and the shippers of goods on the Atlantic open their eyes—not exactly to what is wanted—but rather to what is not wanted in California, we may expect an improvement in business, but not until then.
LEGISLATIVE AND POLITICAL.—The State Legislature is now in session and business has fairly commenced. The body is regarded as one of the most respectable ever assembled in the State, and the accomplishment of much good is expected at its hands. At present the question of another removal to Sacramento is agitated.
The probability is, it will fail. The election for a United States Senator this winter, one year in advance of the regular time, is the engrossing theme, and has been productive of an intense excitement in political circles. One of the advocates of the measure, an influential banker of this city, has been charged with having offered a bribe to a member of the Senate in order to secure his vote. The matter will probably be investigated at the Capitol, to-day.
LAW INTELLIGENCE.—The great case of Col.
Fremont, in which the vast tract of land known as "Los Mariposas," was confirmed to him by the Board of U. S. Land Commissioners, has been decided by the U. S. District Court. The decision of the Commissioners is reversed. An appeal has been taken to the Supreme Court of the United States.
The Board of U. S. Land Commissioners, on the Tuesday of each week, continue to render decisions in cases which have been submitted to them.
In the Supreme Court a number of decisions of an important commercial character have been rendered, among them one affirming the validity of the tax imposed by the last Legislature upon consigned goods, and the license upon Bankers and Auctioneers. These impositions are regarded as not only onerous, but destructive of the commercial prosperity of the city.
A public meeting has been held in regard to the means of avoiding them, and it has been resolved to apply to the Legislature for a repeal of these features of the law, and in case this fails, to carry up the case to the Supreme Court of the United States.
GENERAL ITEMS.—The mail steamer Ranger, which runs across the Bay, was blown up a few days since, scattering the fragments in different directions. One person, a gentleman of our city, was killed, and several injured.
Our harbor was visited by a "norther" on the night of the 5th inst., which did some damage to the shipping, but inflicted no serious injury other than the sinking of one or two small vessels.
Returns from exploring parties are still coming in. Dr. Wozencraft, who has just come back from Noble's Pass, in the North, reports but little snow as far as he penetrated, and the Pass highly favorable for the construction of a railroad.
A slight shock of an earthquake was felt in our city on Monday morning last, at about three o'clock.
Crime in the city and throughout the State is rather on the decline.
No important facts in relation to the movements of the Indians have reached us.
Several more clippers have arrived, making passages averaging about one hundred and twenty-two days. This is the general average of the season.
A great deal of real estate, in small lots, has been recently sold at auction, in the city, realizing handsome rates.
THREE MEN KILLED.—The Auburn Herald learns that a land slide occurred in El Dorado Canon, near the flats, on Thursday night last, which covered a cabin, in which four miners were sleeping at the time, to the depth of six feet. Three of the men were instantly killed; the fourth escaped. Two of the deceased were named Smith; the third Mitchell. The uninjured man is named Jenkins.
DEPARTURE OF FILIBUSTERS.—We learn that a company of filibusters from Stockton and vicinity, left here last evening in the Goliah, en route for Lower California.
The markeman who shot Captain Gilman and McKibben, of Walker's command, is said to have been an Indian. So at least say those who have a right to know.

SAN FRANCISCO MARKET.

The San Francisco Chronicle of the 16th ult., in its semi-monthly review of the market, says:
Since the departure of the last mail, 31st ult., our market has been in a most depressed and unsettled condition. Prices for nearly every description of goods have greatly receded, with a tendency still further to decline. The demand for the interior having nearly ceased, transactions for the past fortnight have been confined to a local trade of little interest. The greater portion of sales made were by auction.
The receipts of gold dust from the interior have come in sparingly, and accounts from the mining districts and country towns are of the most unfavorable character. The continued dry weather has put a stop to nearly all operations in the dry diggings, and the rise in the rivers has produced a similar result with those engaged in their beds. The heavy receipts of almost every description of merchandise, and the remarkable dullness of the season, together with a scarcity of money seldom known in our community, have had a tendency to destroy the confidence that existed some time since in an improvement in trade.
If consignors abroad will conform themselves to the orders of our merchants, and not, as they usually do, duplicate them for their own account, we may have some hope of extricating our market from its present sluggish state. If to the contrary, and our advices go unheeded, the time will come, and perhaps it is not far distant, when they may expect to see re-shipments of entire cargoes of merchandise to the ports whence they came.
Many of our merchants and capitalists who were formerly very large operators in our markets, have now lost all confidence in such operations, and they are turning their attention and interests to real estate, there being more surety of compensation in this branch of business than in the former.

FROM THE SOUTH PACIFIC.—The San Francisco Herald learns by an arrival at that port, that the French Government have taken possession of the New Hebrides, in the South Pacific. Some resistance was made by the natives to the French force, but without success.

[From the San Francisco Picayune.

Sandwich Islands.

Our news from the Sandwich Islands reaches to the 20th December. The annexation question is boldly discussed there, and there is, beyond question, a clear majority in favor of the measure. That it will be adopted by the Hawaiian Government before another year, is almost certain. Mr. Gregg, U. S. Commissioner, had arrived and had entered upon the discharge of his duties. The Government has granted to the Hawaiian Steam Navigation Company, composed mostly of citizens of San Francisco, the exclusive privilege of inter-island steam navigation; also of tugging in and out of the harbor of Honolulu, for ten years, with many other privileges and exemptions. The company's steamer Akami, is now daily plying among the islands; she leaves the wharves crowded with passengers and loaded down with freight. There is business enough now for at least two additional steamers of a larger class and greater capacity. The whaling fleet is all in. The average "catchings" have not been equal to last year. The quantity of oil shipped to the United States this fall from this place is 31,000 gallons sperm, 1,060,423 gallons whale, and 1,451,282 lbs. of bone. Freights are six 45 seven cents a gallon for oil and one cent a pound for bone. Besides the above from this port, the clipper ship Contest, Brewster, sailed for Tahiti, having engaged some 200,000 gallons whale oil, to be shipped at that port. The average catchings of 130 ships, which have cruised in the Arctic Ocean this season, is about 580 barrels. While the Ochotsk fleet give an average of about 1550 barrels this season, which is a better average than was anticipated earlier in the season. The average for the whole fleet of right whalers this season is (estimating four-fifths of the oil and five-sixths of the bone as taken during the season) 1190 barrels whale oil and 11,728

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

From the New York Herald, February 1.

Later from Europe.

The Cunard mail steamer Asia, Capt. Lott, has arrived from Liverpool. She sailed at 9 o'clock on Saturday morning, the 14th ult., and arrived at her wharf at 11 o'clock yesterday morning.

The news is full of interest.

The Liverpool cotton market was steady; breadstuffs had declined.

A Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign Office, London, on the evening of the 10th ult. All the Ministry were present, and the Council remained in session four hours.

A second council was held on the 12th. The public are never enlightened as to the subject of these conferences.

The new-born Princess of Spain died at Madrid 9th inst., after a day's illness. The circumstances, taken in connection with antecedent scandals, excites comment, as the child was spoken of as being of a particularly healthy constitution.

M. Armand Bertin, chief editor of the Journal des Debats, died on the morning of the 12th of January.

There was some little inquiry during the week for preferable United States securities held in the London market, but not much business was concluded. Prices, however, were steadily supported. D. Bell, Son & Co., report the following quotations for such stocks as business may be said to be really going on in, namely:

United States 6 per cent bonds, 1868	107½ to 108½
United States 6 per cent stock, 1867, 68	107½ to 108½
Pennsylvania 5 per cent bonds	65 to 67
Maryland 6 per cent bonds	93 to 95
Virginia 6 per cent bonds	93 to —
Montreal City 6 per cents	89 to 90
New Orleans City 6 per cent bonds	82 to 85
Penn. Central R.R. 6 per cent bonds	91¼ to 92½
N. Y. & Erie R.R. 7 per cent 1st mtg	104½ to 104½
N. Y. & Erie R.R. 7 per cent mortgage bds	81 to 86

THE TURKISH WAR.

It is difficult to arrive at anything like the truth, from the contradictory statements that follow each other from the East. Disregarding the positive announcement that, on the morning of the 29th December orders reached the fleet to weigh anchor instantly for the Black Sea, and that ere sunset only one vessel of each fleet was left in the Bosphorous, we turn to other accounts which appear more reliable. On December 29 or 30 the fleet did receive orders to enter the Euxine; but up to the 1st inst., (the date of the last direct letters,) they were still at anchor in Beicos Bay, owing to contrary winds and stress of weather. The telegraph further informs us, from Constantinople 3d ult., that the combined squadron entered the Black Sea on that day, together with the first division of the Turco-Egyptian fleet, leaving six vessels at Beicos to guard the entrance of the Bosphorus. The second division of the Ottoman fleet is anchored at Therapia. It was known at Constantinople on the 26th December that a Russian squadron of three sail of the line and several frigates had been cruising for several days near the entrance of the Black Sea. On the 24th they were seen at a distance of three or four miles from the entrance to the Bosphorus. The Russian commander-in-chief has already recalled all Russian ships of war in the Black Sea to rendezvous at Sebastopol. It was considered probable that Baltschik, north of Varna, is the first place at which the allied fleet will touch.

We have once more to report brilliant successes achieved by Omer Pacha on the Danube. For some days there had been flying rumors that the Turks had stormed and captured Kakrakel, and had put to flight, with great loss, the Russian division sent to its relief. As the communication from the seat of war to the commencement of the line of telegraph to Vienna is in the hands of the Russians, it was, of course, unlikely that any confirmation of the intelligence would reach us by that route. Direct advices have since come to hand giving details of another victory as brilliant as that of Oltenitza. The news had again elated the spirits of the Turks, and the disaster of Sinope is forgotten.

Full information is yet wanting, but, sifting as carefully as we can the accounts that are published, it would appear that on January 6 a Turkish division of 15,000 strong, with fifteen pieces of artillery, attacked the entrenched position of Citale, not far from Kalefat, and took it by storm. The Russians lost 2500 men. The Turks learning that a reinforcement of 18,000 Russians were on the march from Karaul, threw themselves in their way, and after a brief but sharp attack forced them to retrace their steps, leaving 250 dead on the field.

The above affairs took place on the 6th of January; but other and previous successes had been gained by the Turks under command of Omer. On January 1 the Minister of War officially intimated to the different embassadors at Constantinople that important advantages had been gained by the Ottoman troops at Kalefat. For several days previous Omer had attacked in succession the different Russian corps, with varying success. At length the Turks intentionally fell back on their centre, and thus lured on the Russians as far as Kalefat, a position now formidably entrenched, but which at a distance seemed to be abandoned. The Turkish batteries suddenly unmasked, causing great carnage among the Russians, while at the same time the Ottoman reserve, which had crossed the Danube by night and were masked behind a wood, took them in flank and compelled them to retreat with great loss. The inhabitants of Little Wallachia, who are day by day manifesting themselves more openly in favor of the Turks, contributed not a little to the success of these manœuvres.

The Russian version of the state of affairs gives a later date than the above, and says, via Vienna: "On the 7th or 8th ult., a battle was fought near Letati, when the Turks fell back upon Kalefat, with loss of six guns." It is suspicious that the date of a battle in which the enemy lost six guns should not be known to the victors more definitely than the 7th or 8th ultimo.

In view of the recent victories, it is rather inappropriate to speculate what the Turks would do in case of defeat. The Russian organ, however, assert that if Gen. Luders forces the passage of the Danube at Matschin, the Turks will fall back on Trajan's Wall, extending from Czernavoda to Kustendji, that line being very strongly fortified. They admit that in the meantime the Turkish commanders in Europe and Asia are ordered to prosecute the war with vigor.

Prince Menschikoff is making preparations at Odessa for the reception of the Emperor's son, the Archduke Constantine.

Lord Dudley Stuart was to leave Constantinople on the 15th ult., so as to be in England for the meeting of Parliament, when he will undoubtedly bring the whole Eastern question before the British people.

The latest accounts confirm the report of an insurrection among the peasants of Lesser Wallachia. The insurrection was extending and may cause the Russians serious trouble.

A report of the death of Prince Woronzoff was current at Jassy, but did not obtain much credit. Official accounts have been received there of the death of Admiral Osman Pacha, from his wounds at Sinope.

Mustapha Pacha, commanding the Sultan's imperial guard, had resigned.

THE WAR IN ASIA.

Direct accounts from Constantinople mention that the steamer from Trebisonde brought intelligence on the 25th of December, confirming the statement that the Turks had been driven back from the Russian territory upon Kars with much loss. The Russians did not, however, venture to pursue them within Turkish territory.

These reverses are relieved by some gleams of success. The inhabitants of the Sandjak, of Pashkoff, Tchai, and those of Tchaldiji, on whom the Russians thought they could depend, have declared in favor of the Turks.

A convoy, carrying three thousand men to reinforce the army of Asia, was to set out for Batoum on the 3d inst. As the allied fleet is now supposed to hold the Black Sea, it ought to reach its destination in safety.

A letter from Trebisonde of the 20th of December, announces that three Turkish steam-frigates, despatched from Constantinople, with arms and ammunition for the Circassians, had completely succeeded in their object. The frigates had returned in safety to Constantinople. Schamyl had obtained the most brilliant success. He had reached Nukhiby, called likewise Nouka. He had destroyed the bazaar of the town, and dispersed the Russians who endeavored to defend it. Having arrived there, Schamyl was apprised of the advance of the Turks to Gumri; but the indolence and inexpacity of Abdi Pasha prevented their junction, and the Russians saw Schamyl return to his mountains. Selim Pasha, [illegible] of the armies of Batoum and [illegible] had received a dispatch from [illegible]'s lieutenants in Abasia, [illegible] he had taken possession of the arms and ammunition brought by the Turkish frigates, and that he was about to march to Soukoum Kale, where he should certainly meet a Russian division. News was impatiently expected at Trebisonde from that quarter. The Turkish defeats at Akhska and Alexandropol are confirmed. Abdi Pasha lost twenty-five pieces of artillery, 5,000 killed and 4,000 wounded. The courier who arrived on the 15th of December at Erzroum from Kars brought news to Trebisonde that the Russians were within six hours march of Kars. The Russian agents expected that they would march against that fortress; but it appears that the Russians did not enter the Turkish territory, either because they were not supplied with the means of conveying the artillery, or on account of the excessive cold and the heavy fall of snow. General Guyen, (Kerschid Pasha,) who distinguished himself in the Hungarian insurrection, had arrived at Kars, furnished with full authority, and he had immediately adopted measures to improve the organization of the army. The troops appeared to have full confidence in this General.

Another letter gives particulars respecting the situation of affairs in Asia, of which the Patrie guarantees the correctness. The reverses sustained at Akhska and Alexandropol are far from being of that importance that persons seem to attach to them. Since the appointment of a new commander-in-chief, and the adoption by the Divan of another plan for the campaign, every thing has changed. A few successes have already crowned the efforts of the Turks, and others are being prepared. Two other very important occurrences had taken place. A reinforcement of 15,000 men for the army in Asia was to be sent by transports to Batoum, if wind and weather permitted. This convoy, escorted by numerous forces, had nothing to fear from the Russian ships, no longer able to quit Sebastopol, either to attack the Turks or re-provision their army of Asia, that will soon find itself in a most unpleasant dilemma.

The second fact was the arrival at Constantinople of one Merid, sent by Schamyl, and who was the bearer of the most positive assurances of devotion to the Sultan and his rule, with sympathy for his cause. This great warrior, who, with resources very limited, has kept Russia so long a time in check, had lately been so badly off for powder and ball that he was obliged to be very sparing of it. Thus he had ordered his men not to fire at the common men, but to pick off the officers. He has now fortunately received, in spite of numerous difficulties, the ordnance and stores sent him by the Porte. He now thanks the Sultan, and assures his Highness that he may depend upon him and on his most strenuous efforts. The assistance of Schamyl and his gallant band is equivalent to an army.

Two Polish officers, (names not stated,) have been appointed Generals of brigade in Asia.

The London News complains that the English engineers who were on board the Turkish steamers, although they wore the uniform of officers, are treated by the Russians as common sailors, and are confined in prison on an allowance of six cents per day. Mr. Bell, the engineer of the Parvas Bahari, an Egyptian steamer that was taken by the Russians, was promised his liberty if he would take her to Sebastopol. He did so; but the steamer being badly damaged, sunk in the harbor, on which he was thrown into prison, where he still remains.

A violent storm had done much damage along the coast, near Smyrna. The custom-house at Smyrna was nearly destroyed.

The Independence Belge publishes a dispatch from Constantinople, January 2, which probably expresses the matter more correctly. It says: "The Irade of the Sultan has been published, approving the decision of the Grand Council, which has authorized the ministry to open negotiations on the basis proposed by the four Powers." While negotiations are progressing military operations will be carried on with vigor, neither party being at all desirous of an armistice.

ENGLAND.

From Rotterdam, Jan. 7, comes information that the American ship Edward Fletcher was fallen in with Dec 20, in lat. 48, lon. 11, in a sinking state, with loss of second mate and two seamen, and with main and mizzenmasts overboard. All the survivors were taken off by the Schoonerdoo, arrived at Rotterdam from Tjitajap. The same vessel, Oct. 24, in lat. 47, lon. 11, fell in with the American ship Condor, dismasted, from which she took off the crew and passengers, twenty-eight in number, and landed them at Helvoet.

A crowded public meeting was held at Sheffield on the 8th inst. to memorialise Government to act with vigor against Russia.

A similar meeting was held at Chester.

The Preston strikes continue as far as ever from being settled.

A meeting of the holders of Peruvian bonds was held at London on the 12th ult, and a committee appointed to watch their interests, the holders being suspicious of the conduct of the Peruvian Government toward them.

The bread riots at Exeter, (already reported) were of no magnitude, the rioters being mostly women and children, who demanded that the bakers should give them bread. The Mayor called out 100 dragoons, at eight of whom the crowd dispersed.

FRANCE.

From France we have but a few scraps of news.

Armaments by land and sea are going on more actively than ever throughout France.

It was reported that the Bank had agreed to loan fifty millions of francs to the Government.

An ill effect was produced in Paris by the information that Austria had been supplying Russia with arms and stores. The Austrian Minister, on being applied to, stated that it was a mere commercial transaction—an explanation not deemed satisfactory.

On Sunday, 8th ult., the Emperor gave a reception to M. Lucio Pulido, Minister of Venezuela.

Count Peyronnet was buried with due honors at Montferrand, in the Gironde.

The persons already tried for an attempt to assassinate the Emperor at the Hippodrome were again placed on trial at Paris, 11th ult., on a charge of having been members of a secret society. These men are known as the conspirators in the so-called "Opera Comique" plot. Twenty-one of those originally accused, were condemned to different periods of imprisonment or exile, and the others were acquitted. But the Government, determined to get rid of them by some means or other, brought the whole twenty-seven again to trial, along with sixteen others, on various charges of concealing arms, circulating clandestine documents, etc., etc. The trial is not yet concluded.

A letter from Havre, of 11th ult., mentions that the Minister of Marine had ordered into active service all seamen who have not served four years, and who have been on leave more than a year.

It excited considerable small talk in Paris, that M. de Kisseloff, the Russian Minister, was omitted from the invitations to a select ball at the Tuileries, all the other diplomatists having been invited.

BELGIUM.

King Leopold is endeavoring to negotiate a marriage between his daughter and the young King of Portugal. Another Cohnrg match.

SWEDEN AND DENMARK.

THE NORTHERN LEAGUE.—It is proposed to invite Holland to join the league with Sweden and Denmark, Holland having already experienced in the American war how difficult it was to preserve an isolated neutrality.

SPAIN.

THE DUELS AT MADRID.—The fame of the Soulé duels has not yet died away.

The following letter from Lord Howden, the British Minister, is the latest official emanation on the subject:

BRITISH LEGATION, Madrid, Jan. 6, 1854.

I have been extremely pained, both for myself and others, in reading in several newspapers that a duel was about to take place between Count Esterhazy, Austrian Minister at this court, and myself.

I was perfectly at a loss to imagine the motive until I saw by chance in a German newspaper some assertions at which I am as surprised as indignant. There is a perfect plague in Madrid at this moment, eve ncoming all that is said, and investing all that is not said. I am reported to have refused Count Esterhazy a meeting in the unfortunate duel between M Turgot and M. Soulé in which I was a second, for reasons assigned in the grossest terms and in the most offensive manner. The reason for my declining Count Esterhazy applied equally to other members of the diplomatic body; as for personal reasons, which it is unnecessary to state. I made it a condition, without which I should have retired, that I should act with a Frenchman; and I certainly could have found more worthy or more agreeable than General Calliet. I feel happy to state that the best relations have always existed between Count Esterhazy and myself.

I never have had the remotest intention to say anything offensive to him, and I am happy to have an opportunity of showing my friendly feelings by requesting you to have the kindness to publish this letter in your estimable journal.

I remain, your obedient servant,

HOWDEN.

ITALY.

On the afternoon of 1st Jan., the principal streets of Rome were, for the first time, lighted with gas.

PRUSSIA.

The Second Prussian Chamber met in secret session on the 9th inst., to deliberate on a communication from Government relative to the acquisition by Prussia of a military port on the North Sea. The proposed site is near Jahde, not far from the mouth of the Weser, and upon ground at present belonging to the Grand Duchy of Oldenberg.

The entrance of the allied fleet into the Black Sea is understood not to make any change in the attitude of Prussia with respect to the Eastern question.

AUSTRIA.

Austrian officials have been committing another outrage on a subject of the United States—the Rev. James Cook Richmond, "presbyter of the Anglo-Catholic Church," and one of the correspondents of the Daily News. After setting the police to watch him, causing anonymous letters to be written to him, and, he believes, opening his correspondence, he was, on the 25th of December, waited on by the commander of the gendarmes at Recskemet, in Hungery, who intimated that he had orders from the highest authorities in Hungary to subject the whole of Mr. Richmond's personal effects to examination.

Mr. Richmond protested against this invasion of "the sacred private rights of an American citizen," and was then told that he must remain in custody until the official had telegraphed to Pesth for further orders. The result of these orders was, that between four and five o'clock on the morning of the 28th he was roused from his bed by a gendarme, who compelled him to leave Kecskemet in a jolty wagon, and, amidst a violent snow-storm, and over frozen roads, conveyed him to Felegheza. There he arrived two hours before the midday train, by which he had voluntarily promised to leave, but so exhausted that he could not continue his journey.

At night he hoped to rest; but three gendarmes burst into his room, and threatened to shoot him if he did not rise. He remonstrated, showed his passports, covered with signatures of Austrian Embassadors, and, pointing to the word "American," told them that the President of the United States had declared that the rights of an American citizen should not be violated with impunity; but, with brutal, coarse and disgusting minuteness, they searched him, took from him his papers and money, and told him he was under arrest. He was then taken to the guard-room, subjected to another search, and then left to sleep, if he could, amidst drinking, quarreling, and gambling gendarmes.

In the morning he asked permission to write the American Embassador in Vienna, but this was refused. At ten o'clock he was taken to the Rittmeister, who, having become alarmed at the possible consequence of these proceedings, offered to restore his passports and set him at liberty, if he would immediately depart. This offer was refused.

A detailed account of these proceedings has been forwarded to the United States; and Mr. Richmond donhts not that the President will "take immediate and decided steps" in this important matter.

EGYPT.

At Jeddeh, and along the coasts of the Red Sea, the Arabs are in arms against the authority of the Turks, and there is a mutinous feeling among the Sultan's troops, owing to their being in arrears of pay for a long period. The Sultan's treasury at Jeddah is quite exhausted, and the merchants there are creditors of the Government to the extent of £25,000.

A Turkish and an Egyptian steamer left for Constantinople last week, with about 800 artillerymen and 20,000 stand of arms, for the use of the Sultan's army.

On New Year's day, the weather being foggy, the French post-office steamer Emotas, on her way from Syria to the port, got on the rocks about a couple of miles to the eastward of the new harbor, and yesterday she went to pieces. No lives were lost, but the mails were saved only with difficulty, and most of her cargo, consisting of silks and tobacco, has been much damaged.

The stock of Mocha coffee is small, and prices are going up.

MARKETS—JAMES M'HENRY'S CIRCULAR.

Liverpool, Jan. 13, 1854.—Provisions.—New bacon meets a ready market at full prices; old is more sought after. There le more doing in beef and pork. Cheese keeps scarce.

Lard is 2s to 3s dearer and much wanted; none here.

Tallow has been excited, and reached 63s, but is now easier.

Cloverseed has been in better demand during the week, but no transactions have been reported.

Linseed Cake has advanced 10s per ton.

Breadstuffs.—The activity has moderated, and there are now pressing sellers at a decline, from the extreme rates of 1s to 1s 6d per barrel on flour; 3d to 4d per 70 lbs on wheat, and 1s on Indian corn.

Cotton.—Since the sailing of the Atlantic there is no particular change to notice in the market; the cottons direct from New Orleans, leaving a fair profit, are freely offered for sale; and the same course being very generally pursued with late seaports, some little irregularity occasionally exists in prices, but scarcely amounting to a quotation. There has been some increase of business in Manchester since Tuesday, and the market is very steady. Stock this day, 597,555 bags, of which 278,783 are American; do last year, 601,434, of which 362,288 are American. Sales this week, 39,040 bags, including 27,990 American; 3,820 bags being on speculation and 1,790 for export.

Havre Market, Jan. 11.—Cotton.—Sales of the week, 4,869 bales in port, and 2,000 afloat, at the rate of 89f for middling Orleans, and 92f to 93f for good middling. Stock, 31,000 bales.

Accounts from manufacturing districts unchanged, although severe weather has forced some demand for winter goods.

Ashes unchanged, 49f 50c for pots. Coffee in small supply, prices unchanged. Rice rather more active, but prices unchanged. Sugar—Not much business doing, but holders firm. Tallow and lard dull. Whale oil firm.

The Very Latest.

Paris, Friday evening, Jan. 13.—We have received a telegraphic dispatch from Vienna, confirming the accounts current yesterday respecting the defeat of the Russians by the Turks before Kalefat, and adding that the contest was renewed on the 7th, neither side claiming the victory. On the morning of the 8th a fresh struggle was about to begin.

Bourse firm, with tendency to rise. Three per cents closing at 70f 70; and four and a half per cents at 99f.

Vienna, Thursday morning, Jan. 12, 1854.—Rumors of fresh successes by the Turkish army in Wallachia have alarmed Vienna to-day.

It is commonly believed that the Government is in possession of intelligence most unfavorable to Russia.

A note of the Porte, drawn up in conformity to the proposals of the Four Powers, received the sanction of the Sultan on the 31st December, and must have arrived at Vienna to-day.

The Afghan Envoy had left Teheran before the arrival of the new Russian Plenipotentiary, with a threat that if Persia formed an alliance with Russia the Afghans would invade Persia.

The rumors of the Russian defeat are fully confirmed.

It is also generally stated, though this seems unlikely, that the Emperor of Austria will leave Vienna for Warsaw this evening, in order to have a conference with the Emperor of Russia on the Eastern question.

Constantinople, January 2, 1854.—The news that an important advantage had been won by the Ottomen army at Kalefat was officially announced to the representatives of the Powers. A convoy carrying 15,000 men to reinforce the army of Asia, will set ont for Batoum on the 3d inst. The weather is not so had now, and the wind is veering to the south.

Five Turkish ships accompany the combined fleets in the Black Sea.

Bucharest, January 4, 1854.—Since the 20th of December there have been 40,000 men of the corps under Osten-Sacken in Wallachia. In Bessarabia a new concentration of troops is going on. Near Kremanzoff and Charcow preparations are made for the establishment of two camps of cavalry. Each will be composed of 10,000 men. The park of artillery near Giurgevo is composed of 100 guns of large calibre; that of Galats consists of 120 guns. The construction of the intrenchments near Bucharest continues north and south. Two companies of engineers have arrived for that purpose from Guirgeve at Bucharest. The offensive movements of the Russians have commenced on a grand scale. The corps of Osten-Sacken advances in the midst of ice. The Russian forces in Lesser Wallachia advance in three columns. The corps which will operate against Kalefat is estimated at 22,000 men. The second marches through Karakal, and the third along the Aluta. The insurrection of the peasants in Lesser Wallachia may be considered as quelled.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 4, 1854.—An extreme irritation against England and France prevails. The Czar has conferred the insignia of St. George, of the 12th Class, upon Gen. Bebontoff.

Belgrade, Jan. 10, 1854.—On the 6th of this month a division, 15,000 strong, with fifteen pieces of artillery, attacked the entrenched position of Citale, not far from Kalefat, and took it by storm. The Russians lost 2500 men. A reinforcement of 18,000 Russians, marching from Karaul, was forced to retire with a loss of 250 men.

Genoa, Jan. 9, 1854.—Numerous refugees have embarked for Constantinople.

THOMAS CARLYLE'S MOTHER.—It is our painful duty to record the demise of Mrs. Carlyle, the mother of the distinguished author, which took place at Scotshrig, on Christmas day. Her two sons, one of whom is a doctor, residing in London, and the author of various translations from the German, were present at the death bed of their venerable and beloved parent. The doctor had waited upon his mother for a month with the most exemplary and patient love. Thomas Carlyle arrived from his residence at Chelsea a few days before the last scene, and on the spot whom he was born witnessed the departure of a mother who had the satisfaction, many years before her death, of seeing her family rise to a proud and well merited distinction. [Glasgow Commonwealth.

A JACK OF ALL TRADES.—The editor of the Council Bluffs City (Iowa) Bugle says he has, at various times and under various circumstances, followed and carried on many and various kinds of business, enumerated below, viz: House building and painting, cabinet and chair making and turning, brick making and school teaching, saloon keeping, drug business, and an inventor of patent nostrums, farming, a public showman, merchandising, baking and manufacturing confectionaries, have twice been postmaster, notary public, trustee of an incorporated town, niderman, etc.; have carried on coopering, wagon making, clocksmithing, shoemaking, saddle and harness business, have had three stores in operation at once, carried on the degurrean business, been a sub-editor, and, to wind up, am now the unfortunate but not discouraged editor of the Council Bluffs Bugle, and expect in a few years to be as rich as we may wish; am thirty-five years old, have a better half and supposed to be the father of six children, three of whom are living; am six foot in high-heeled boots, and weigh one hundred and forty pounds.

FLORIDA SUGAR.—The Jacksonville News has seen samples of sugar made on Guit land in Florida: Forty-five acres of Rattoon cane, much of it of the third year's rattoon, made eighty-three tull hogsheads of one thousand pounds each, and twenty acres of plant cane made thirty-seven full hogsheads, besides seed for thirty acres reserved. This crop was cultivated by sixteen hands, who were tasked in taking it off for six weeks by twenty others. The planter claims that this crop was only one-half of what the same hands could have cultivated, with more seed and more open land. From the same cane seven thousand gallons of molasses were made. The sugar is of a quality equal to the St. Croix. Of the molasses we have seen no sample, but it is claimed to be very superior.

EDUCATION.

Teachers Wanted.

A Gentleman and his Wife, or a Brother and Sister, (provided they will keep house,) thoroughly educated, are wanted to take charge of our Public School. Salary, $1000, certain, and whatever else can be realised from Music and other extra studies, and boarders from beyond the township. The last Teachers increased their salary several hundred dollars by these means.

Address, Rev. D. S. Ossedoe, Livingston, Madison county, Miss. Postage paid. dec10

PORT GIBSON COLLEGIATE ACADEMY, FOR YOUNG LADIES.

INSTRUCTORS.

REV. A. J. EDGERTON, A. M., Principal.
REV. W. F. CONRAD, A. B.
REV. O. D. DeCOENIEL, Professor of Piano, Harp and Guitar.
MRS. S. O. EDGERTON. MRS. H. CONRAD.
MISS ELLEN FOSTER, Teacher of Music.
MISS MARVIN. MISS HADNETT.
MRS. GILMAN, Matron.

The Next Session will commence on Monday, the 7th day of November.

TERMS—PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

For Boarding, per session of twenty weeks.....$60
For Fuel, Washing and Lights, do. 10
For Bed and Bedding, if not provided, do. 5

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

Tuition—Juvenile Class, per session twenty weeks..$15
" Second Division, do. do. ..20

COLLEGIATE DEPARTMENT.

Tuition—English Studies, per session twenty weeks..$25
" Latin and Greek, or either, do. ..15
" French, Italian or German, do. ..15
Stationery, in either class, do. ..1

MUSICAL DEPARTMENT.

Instruction Piano or Guitar, per session twenty weeks, $30
Use of Pianos, do. 5

ORNAMENTAL DEPARTMENT.

Drawing in Perspective and Painting in Water Colors, } do. $10
Fancy Embroidery.....do. 5

No deduction for absence, except in case of protracted sickness.

Boarders are expected to have their wearing apparel marked, and to come furnished with Towels, Hair and Tooth Brushes, and Silver Dessert Spoon and Fork.

The location of the Institution is regarded as one of the best in the State. The buildings were erected at a cost of near $30,000, affording capacious and airy rooms for the inmates, and all under the immediate eye of Mrs. E. and Female Assistants.

The course of Study will be as extensive and thorough in Natural Science, English Literature, Ancient and Modern Languages and Mathematics, as in the best Colleges of the kind.

Lectures will be delivered regularly before the Young Ladies, on Natural Science.

Prof. DeCOENIEL, who has the reputation for being one of the best musicians in America, will give lessons on the Harp to any young Ladies who desire it.

☞ Vocal Music will be taught free of charge.

PORT GIBSON, Oct. 21, 1850. dec16-4t

GREENSBORO' FEMALE COLLEGE,
GREENSBORO', N. C.

FACULTY:

CHARLES F. DEEMS, D. D., President and Professor of the Natural Sciences and Belles-Letters.
REV. TURNER M. JONES, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and the Ancient Languages.
MONS. ERNEST JOUANNE, (of the College of Henri IV., Paris,) Professor of the French Language and Literature.
THEODORE WOLLE, Esq., Professor of Music.
MISS N. JANE SPEER, Miss NANNIE T. SPEED and Miss LUCY McGEE, Assistants in the Literary Departments.
MISS AUGUSTA M. HAGEN, Madame JOUANNE and Miss CAROLINE A. BLAKE Assistants in the Department of Music.
MISS R. L. SIMPSON, Drawing and Painting.
THOMAS C. BLAKE, Esq., Steward.
MRS T. C. BLAKE, Governess.

This Institution is situated in a healthy part of Central North Carolina. It is under the charge of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In the selection of the Faculty the Trustees have had reference first of all to superior qualifications, and as far as practicable have obtained ladies and gentlemen of Southern birth and education.

The course of study is as full and as thorough as that in the best Female Seminaries. While particular attention is paid to the solid branches of education, sufficient regard is had for the ornamental: but above all the culture of the morals of their pupils is considered the great work of the teachers. Special lessons of economy are inculcated. The pupils are not allowed under any circumstances to contract debts. Parents deposit money in advance. All the expenditures of the scholars are under the direct supervision of the President, and their purchases are made by their teachers. Perhaps in no similar institution of its numbers have the bills of the pupils been so small in the aggregate as at this College during the past year.

The department of Natural Science is furnished with excellent apparatus, some of the instruments being of the highest finish, with all modern improvements. Lectures are delivered on Chemistry by the President, and on Natural Philosophy by Prof. Jones, weekly, and are accompanied by experiments. In the selection of the Professor of French regard was had to purity and accuracy of pronunciation, and the present incumbent of that chair possesses more than ordinary qualifications for his office. The practical use of the language in conversation is the aim of daily lessons.

In the department of Oil Painting the teacher does not seek to give her pupils simply a "pretty picture" at the close of the session, but the principles of the art are assiduously taught in the expectation that those who have special talent for design may prosecute self-culture after leaving the school.

All the principal teachers have had much experience in the business of their profession, and "thoroughness" is the motto throughout the whole Institution. The Faculty are working under this formula: "We are striving to make not the largest but the best school in the land."

TERMS:

$70 a session (of 21 weeks) for Tuition and Board, including washing, fuel, lights, furnished rooms and attendance; $20 extra for music on the Piano or Guitar, or for Oil Painting; $5 for Drawing or French or Latin. The Trustees believe that no school of its grade at the South offers such advantages on such favorable terms.

For further particulars application may be made to the President of the College.

The next session will open December 28, 1853. jn6-6t

BARDSTOWN FEMALE INSTITUTE.

REV. A. A. MORRISON, A. M., Principal.

This Institution is under the patronage of the Louisville Annual Conference, and is located in Bardstown, Ky. Bardstown is located on the turnpike from Nashville to Louisville, with a line of daily stages passing through, and is 30 miles south of the latter city. Bardstown is pleasantly located, and is proverbial for health. The Institute buildings are large and commodious, and the pleasure grounds attached pleasant and spacious.

The Institution is furnished with a full Board of experienced and accomplished Teachers, and the course of study ar select and thorough as can be found in any similar Institution to the land. The school is permanently established, and in point of healthiness of locality and facilities for a thorough Female Education, on reasonable terms—this Institution offers peculiar inducements to Southern Methodists and to the Southern community generally.

TERMS PER SESSION OF TWENTY WEEKS.

(Board payable in advance: Tuition at the close of the Session.)

Primary Department	$ 8 00
Junior Class	12 00
Middle Class	15 00
Senior Class	18 00
Music on Piano or Guitar	20 00
Vocal Music	4 00
Drawing and Painting	10 00
Greek, Latin, French or German	8 00
Boarding, including Washing, Lights and Fuel	40 00
For Fuel in school-room in winter	1 00

The next session will commence on the 30th of January inst.

REFERENCES:

Rev J B McFerrin, Nashville, Tenn.; W H Hickman, M D; Hon G W Hite, Bardstown, Ky; Rev O B Parsons, Rev E Stevenson, Rev E W Seben, Rev A tt Redford, Louisville, Ky; and the Ministers of the Louisville Conference generally.

Bardstown, Jan. 5, 1854.—6t

EMORY and HENRY COLLEGE.

WASHINGTON COUNTY, VA.

THE SPRING SESSION of this Institution will commence on the 12th January, 1854. There is, we believe no College in the South offering stronger inducements to young men desirous of a thorough course of collegiate instruction.

TERMS:

Tuition per session of 5 months	$15 00
Board " " "	31 50
Washing " " "	5 00
Fuel " " "	2 00
Contingent charge " "	1 25
	$54 75

With a location famous for health, with ample Libraries and Apparatus, with a full and efficient Board of Instruction, and with a degree of cheapness unparalleled any young man with limited means, fair abilities and proper energy can here acquire a superior, liberal or business education. For further information address

E. E. WILEY, President,
Emory Post-office, Va.

jan5-6t

FEMALE MASONIC INSTITUTE,
Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama.
Rev. E. D. Pitts, Principal.

TO PARENTS, GUARDIANS, AND THE FRIENDS OF EDUCATION GENERALLY, we would announce the opening of the TENTH Annual Session of the Institute. The healthful locality—the spacious and beautiful grounds—the commodious and convenient buildings—the full supply of Musical Instruments—the fixed purpose of the Trustees to spare no expense or efforts to promote the true interests of FEMALE EDUCATION—and the assiduous devotion of an efficient Faculty to promote the comfort and improvement of Pupils, lead us to expect with confidence a liberal support.

The Principal has taught with marked success in Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, and will consecrate all his energies—physical, intellectual, and moral—to the proper training of the head and heart of those committed to his charge.

The services of Miss MARY W. HOWZE, who has been for two years past connected with the Central Masonic University, have been secured. Her intelligence, energy, piety, and felicitous manner of communicating, have justly placed her in the first rank of educators.

The Musical, French, and Ornamental Department will be conducted by competent and skillful Teachers, and all due attention given to the arts and accomplishments that so beautify and adorn the gentler sex.

The Library Department will be confided alone to a choice and gifted Lady, for we design to attend carefully to that godly and mischievously neglected class of Pupils.

The Scholastic year is divided into Two Sessions of nearly Five Months each—with no intervening recess. The School opens on the first day of October, and closes with Examination Exercises in the latter part of July. Pupils received at any time, and charged to the end of the Session. For fractions of Sessions each week is counted one twentieth.

The School is not Sectarian or denominational; and the only religious tuition embraces the principles of a pure morality based upon the cardinal doctrines of the Bible.

The Principal and his wife have charge of the Stewards Department, and will tenderly care for the health, manners and morals of those who Board in the Institute. Each boarder will be made to feel as far as possible that she is the loved subject of parental solicitude, and every reasonable wish will be promptly and cheerfully gratified. Yet, Discipline will not be forgotten, and the needful restraints of family government will be thrown around them.

CHARGES PER SESSION OF FIVE MONTHS.

Primary Class	$12 50
Preparatory Class	15 00
Junior and Senior Class	20 00
Music on Piano, Guitar and Harp, (each)	25 00
Drawing, Painting and Embroidery, (each)	10 00
French and German, (each)	15 00
Incidentals	1 00

LATIN included in the Regular Course.

BOARD (including Washing, Fuel and Lights) per month..... 10 00

Each Boarder must furnish her own Towels, Brushes and Combs, and have each article distinctly marked with her full name.

AN INVARIABLE RULE.—Board and Tuition one-half in advance, and the balance at the end of each Session; and every account must be closed at the end of each Session, by Cash, or by Note.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.

Each Lodge in Marengo County is entitled to select within its jurisdiction, a worthy object of beneficence, and have her taught in the Institution without charge, provided said Lodge secure the payment of her Board and supply her with Books and Stationery.

As the Principal is so extensively known, the Committee have forborne to speak of his character and qualifications, and refer Parents and Guardians to the persons named below.

JNO. H. PRINCE, Chairman.
FRANK M. PRINCE, Secretary.
JADEZ YORK, Treasurer.

REFERENCES.

Hon. J. F. H. Claiborne, New Orleans.
Rev. M. N. McTyeire, New Orleans.
Prof. A. R. Holcombe, Mobile.
Hon. R. A. Baker, Mobile.
Hon. J. G. Monette, May St. Louis.
Hon. S. D. Pierce, Bay St. Louis.
Dr. John R. Purnell, Selma.
Abner Jones, Selma.
Rev. A. H. Mitchell, Summerfield.
Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, Summerfield.
Rev. J. A. Heard, Boyton.
Hon. J. M. McClanahan, Shelby County.

Dayton, Marengo County, Alabama, September 1, 1853. oct1

MARION FEMALE SEMINARY.

MARION, PERRY COUNTY, ALABAMA.

FACULTY.

REV. JAMES K. ARMSTRONG, A. M., Principal, and Professor of Mental, Moral and Natural Science.
H. M. DALY, A. M., Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
MISS E. L. HASKILL, English.
MISS M. J. BONDURANT, English.
MISS PHŒNE FULLER, Drawing, Painting, French and Guitar.
MISS J. V. CLARK, Primary and Preparatory Department.
MRS. L. J. ARMSTRONG, Governess.
MRS. REBECCA CLARK, Matron and Nurse.

This Institution has just closed a prosperous year, with one hundred and twenty-six pupils.

The ensuing session will commence on THURSDAY, the 29th day of SEPTEMBER.

It is very desirable that pupils enter at the beginning of the session.

The main building is a new and superior brick edifice, one hundred by fifty feet, three stories, and for elegance, convenience of arrangement—for number, size and comfort of school and private rooms—is not surpassed by any similar one in the country.

The Principal resides in the building, and superintends the Boarding Department. He has in his employ a gentleman and his lady, who discharge with faithfulness and satisfaction the duties of this position. Pupils boarding in the Seminary are under the immediate control of the Principal at all times—are members of his family.

The Matron and Nurse, a lady of great amiability and kindness of heart, united with long experience and untiring faithfulness, secure to pupils, at all times, the kindness and attentions of home.

The Principal and his lady, with the aid of the Female Teachers, all of whom reside in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the morals, manners and habits of the young ladies.

There is but one session, of nine and a half months. Pupils can enter at any time during the session, charges date from the beginning of the month in which they enter to

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

{ J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 3. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1854. WHOLE NO. 159.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate,

"BACK DIVIDENDS."

MR. EDITOR: I find in your paper of Jan. 21, an extract from the S. C. Advocate under the above caption. It is stated that "the question is frequently asked, What disposal shall be made of the back dividends and the proportion of the chartered fund coming to the Southern Methodist Church," etc. The question might be asked, What are those "back dividends and the proportion of the chartered fund"? Are they "the produce of the Book Concern and charter fund" specified in those constitutional articles styled "limitations and restrictions"? If so, the "question frequently asked," may be solved by adverting to the sixth article in that well advised instrument, limiting and restricting the powers of the General Conference. The language of this article is plain and special: "6. They shall not appropriate the produce of the Book Concern, nor of the Charter Fund to any purpose other than for the benefit of the traveling, supernumerary, superannuated and worn-out preachers, their wives widows and children." "Plans" may be "suggested," but "to the law and to the testimony"—a strict construction of constitutional [illegible] more safe than latitudinarian plans or suggestions. If those "back dividends" are the "produce of the Book Concern," etc, have their suspension for a few years changed their character, or annulled their purpose? I witnessed more than half a century ago, the anxious and untiring efforts of the justly venerated Asbury, to create funds for the relief of "worn-out" traveling preachers, etc.; he saw and knew in a smaller sphere of action the embarrassment and sufferings of eminently useful men, who were worn down by the onerous duties, incessant labors and hardships incident to an itinerant life in those days. He laid the foundation of the Book Fund, the Charter Fund, and what was then denominated the preachers' fund—which latter, I believe, was merged into the Book Concern. The prudent men who composed the General Conference of 1808, at the head of which was Jesse Lee, Wm. McKendrie, Phillip Bruce and others, understood well the purposes to, or for which the "produce" of those funds were to be appropriated; and in limiting and restricting the powers of the General Conference, they threw guards around this sacred deposit.

We are informed, in the article above alluded to, that "three plans have been suggested." The writer "inclines to the third course," because it "embraces substantially the second." Candor compels me to say frankly that both those plans contravene the sixth restrictive article, and the adoption of either, by the General Conference, would be a flagrant violation of constitutional law, and would divert those streams of charity from their originally intended course.

We have heard much about worn-out preachers, widows and orphans being robbed of their just rights, by withholding from the Church, South, those "back dividends," or "the produce of the Book Concern," etc. But what would be the degree of robbery or injustice "to invest the whole as a fund for the support of the Bishops," or to invest it "with the principal in the Book Concern," "paying out no dividends except for the support of the Bishops"? Who that has read the book of Discipline or has any knowledge of the history and charitable design of those funds, does not see the unconstitutionality, impolicy and injustice of such plans?

The patriotic men who achieved our liberties and established a free civil government, evinced wisdom, sound policy and forecast in limiting and restricting legislative and executive powers by a sound constitution—upon a strict construction and uniform adherence to which depends the perpetuity of our Union and free institutions. In like manner the fathers of itinerant Methodism in these United States, evinced wisdom, prudence and forecast in framing an instrument limiting and restricting the powers of the General Conference. Upon a strict construction of and cautious adherence to these prudent articles of association much depends; cast them in the shade or overleap their bounds, and where are we? "Out at sea without rudder or compass."

It it is true, that by a proviso, a mode is prescribed by which all those restrictive articles, except the first, may undergo alteration—but the prudent men of 1808 evinced their sense of the importance of those restrictions by making it difficult to make alterations: to obtain a two-third vote in the General Conference, and three-fourths of all the Annual Conferences is not so easy.

L. GARRETT.

Mississippi, February, 1854.

P. S. It is well known that the "produce" or profits of the Book Concern have been represented as a charity, affording relief to the deserving needy, and was offered as an inducement to the membership to patronize said Concern, but the second and third plan "suggested" and favored by Dr. Summers, would stop those streams of charity and put an end to this inducement. L. G.

HOW DOES HE CUT UP?—I shall never forget how this struck me, when, some years ago, I heard it applied to the settlement of a rich man's estate. It was not how much he was worth, how many thousand dollars has he left to his heirs, but, How does he cut up? As if he had been no more than a stalled fat ox, about whose weight there had been different estimates before he was slaughtered and brought to the block, and quartered and his tallow taken out. And what comparison would be more appropriate where men have devoted all their lives and powers to making money, from a supreme love of it, to the neglect of every higher object?

It is said that a pendulum, to vibrate once an hour, must be 85 miles longer than the diameter of the earth.

THE BISHOP OF VICTORIA'S OPINION OF THE CHINESE INSURRECTION.

The following account of the character of the religious movement in China is contained in the recent charge of the Bishop of Victoria, at Shanghae, Oct. 20, 1853:

With the religious aspect of this native movement we are more intimately concerned. And here it is needful to exercise a prudential caution, neither expecting too much of untured Christianity on the one hand, nor identifying Protestant missions with it too undiscriminatingly on the other. The rebel leaders are evidently men in earnest. Their unsparing destruction of idols—shocking the minds of the common people generally, and of the female population universally—would be impolitic in men with less lofty aims than those of a reformation of the national religion; and strikingly exhibits their own belief in their divine mission to extirpate image-worship and to propagate the knowledge of the one true God. Their compulsory prohibition of opium smoking and their threatened exclusion of this contraband article from the country—preclude the supposition of their being actuated by a selfish and calculating policy—bringing them into danger of eventual collision with foreigners, as well as pledging them to an onslaught on the most cherished casual habits of their countrymen. They appear to be animated with all the religious fervor which inspired Mahomet in his course of victory; and to be tinctured with the austere morality which soured and incensed the Puritans against their dissolute adversaries. To expect from men of whom we have as yet no certain knowledge that any of them have been baptized—who have no spiritual teachers—whose knowledge of Christianity is derived more from the Old Testament than the New—whose views of religious zeal and political propagandism appear to be drawn rather from the warlike example of Joshua at the head of the armies of Israel, than from the writings and sufferings of Paul the apostle of Jesus Christ—to expect from such a body of men a perfect exhibition of the gentle, forgiving spirit of the gospel, and a full harvest of the fruits of the Spirit of holiness, is to measure them prematurely by the standard of well instructed Christians, and to apply to them the rule of long-established Christian communities.

Amid all the error, the enthusiasm, the fanaticism, and the intolerance, which are perceptible among them—they have given forth in their public manifestoes to the reading population of China, sentiments and views of moral and religious truth such as have never before sounded in the ears of this people.

It is a mark of no inconsiderable progress in this people to find the former half of the book of Genesis, as translated by the late Dr. Gutzlaff, republished in the Insurgent host and bearing the imprimatur of Thae-ping-wang as Emperor: the words "Volume the First," lending to the supposition that other portions of the Sacred Record have been published or are in the course of publication. It is no slight event in the history of the world to find a Chinese claimant of imperial dignity taking up the work of the British and Foreign Bible Society and publishing the Holy Scriptures for his followers.

The "New Calendar of the Thae-ping dynasty" proclaims to the people of China—hitherto the dupes of necromancers or the slaves of good and evil omens and of lucky and unlucky days—that prayer for the divine blessing sanctifies every day as alike fortunate:

"Whoever truly venerates our heavenly father, the supreme Lord and great God, is under the protection of heaven and can engage in his duties whenever he thinks proper. Every season, therefore, may be considered as prosperous and favorable."

During the season of drought, we have of late witnessed around the city propitiatory offerings to the "Dragon-Prince of the Eastern Sea," sanctioned and commanded by the rulers as a means of obtaining rain. But the "Imperial declaration of Thae-ping-wang," a document said to be written by the leader of the rebellion himself, thus assails the prevalent superstition:

"In later ages we have had unprincipled men falsely declaring that the Dragon of the Eastern Sea can produce rain; whereas this Dragon of the Eastern Sea is nothing more than a transformation of the King of Hades. This king of Hades is no other than the old serpent, the devil, who transforms himself in a variety of ways to deceive and entrap the souls of men."

In their published comment on the Ten Commandments, the thoughts and intents of the heart are recognized as among the spiritual requirements of God's law. "Lustful imaginations"—"amorous glances"—"libidinous songs"—and their common incentive the "smoking of foreign tobacco" (opium)—are among the enumerated ways of transgressing the Seventh Commandment.

An acknowledgement of the universal prevalence of sin seems to be shadowed forth in "the book of religious precepts of the Thae-ping dynasty."

Then, again, obscurely and inadequately as the Divinity and Atonement of Christ are sometimes alluded to throughout their writings, we may recognize a ground-work of essential truth, on which the glorious superstructure of that doctrine in its full proportions and completeness may be built by the foreign missionary instructor.

In "the book of religious precepts of the Thae-ping-wang dynasty" we have a clear recognition of the guilt of sin, the duty of repentance, the atonement of Jesus Christ, the need of a new heart, and the work of the Holy Spirit in renewing and purifying the soul for heaven.

The emperors of China have been remarkable for their absurd claim of extravagant titles and relationships to heaven. The rival Emperor declares that Wang (king) and not Shing (holy) nor Te (emperor or potentate) belongs to him; for the latter term belongs only to the great Supreme Being (Shangte):

"The great God, He is God (Te.) The monarchs of this world may be called kings, and that is all." "The great God (Shang-Ta) or heavenly Father and Supreme Lord, is omniscient, omnipotent and omnipresent, the Supreme over all. There is not an individual who is not produced and cherished by him. He is Shang (Supreme). He is Te (Potentate). Besides the great God (Shang-te) our heavenly Father and Supreme Lord, there is no one who can be called Shang and no one who can be called Te. Therefore from henceforth all you soldiers and officers may designate us your Lord, and that is all; you must not call me Supreme, lest you should encroach upon the designation of our heavenly Father. Our heavenly Father is our holy Father, and our celestial elder Brother is our holy Lord the Savior of the world. Hence our heavenly Father and our celestial elder Brother alone are holy, and from henceforth all you soldiers and officers may designate us your Lord, and that is all; but you must not call me holy, lest you encroach upon the designation of our heavenly Father and celestial elder Brother."

In the plenitude of imperial pride the 'Son of Heaven' has from ancient times claimed alone as the high-priest of the nation the honor of making special offerings to the one Supreme Being and sacrificing at the winter solstice at the round hillock. The chief of the rival dynasty restores to the sons of Han their just right, and gives to all the children of men equality in the sight of God:

"Those whose minds have been deluded by the devil object and say, that the great God is only to be worshipped by sovereign princes. But we wish you to know that the great God (Shang-te) is the universal father of all men throughout the world. Sovereigns are those of his children who most resemble Him."

The national exclusiveness and pride of China has hitherto debarred her from intercommunication with foreign countries. On this point, again, we may perceive the inculcation of sentiments which, if prevailing generally among this people, would speedily throw down the barriers which have so long isolated them from Christendom, and bring them into the great brotherhood of Christian nations. Instead of terming foreigners 'barbarians,' the pretender to the imperial throne enjoins his followers to recognize them as "brethren" under the protection of the same true God:

"The great God is the universal Father of all men throughout the world. China, which is near to us, is governed and regulated by the same God; foreign nations, which are far away, are under the same rule."

Again—

"Foreign nations, though far removed, are protected and cared for by the One great God, and China, which is so near, is under the same gracious care. There are many men in the world, but they are all our brothren; there are many women in the world, but they are all our sisters."

The next objection of the Chinese against Christianity has been that it is the religion of foreigners. The insurgent edicts reply to this taunt by declaring that China once acknowledged the God of patriarchal tradition, and that when the Chinese "knew God, they glorified him not as God," nor "retained God in their knowledge." [Romans i. 21-28.

"Some also say erroneously that to worship the great God (Shang-te) is to imitate foreigners; not remembering that China has her histories, which are open to investigation. From the time of Pwan-koo (the first man of whom the Chinese speak) down to the period of the three dynasties, both princes and people honored and worshipped the great God (Shang-te.)"

"The fact is, that according to the histories of both the Chinese and foreign nations, the important duty of worshipping the great God, in the early ages of the world, several thousand years ago, was alike practiced by Chinese and foreigners. But the various foreign nations in the West have practiced this duty up to the present time, while the Chinese practiced it up to the Tsin and Han dynasties; since which time they have erroneously followed the Devil's ways and allowed themselves to be deceived by the King of Hades. Now, however, the great God, out of compassion to the children of men, has displayed his great power and delivered men from the machinations of the evil one, causing them to retrace their steps, and again to practice the great duty which was performed of old."

But strange customs and superstitious rites have been reported as observed by these imperfectly enlighted men. Apparently borrowing the institution of Showbread from the Jewish tabernacle, or transferring to the service of the true God their former pagan modes of honoring their false gods, they place tripple offerings of food before each of the Three Persons of the Trinity. There occur in their published books statements of a personal communication with the Almighty and claims of a new and special revelation; which may render the future course of their foreign missionary instructors one of difficulty and danger. With all due abatement on account of the suspicious channel of hostile authorities through which many of their excesses have been reported; they nevertheless appear to pursue their Tartar oppressors with all the sanguinary destruction which was wreaked by the Israelites under Joshua of old, as the appointed executioners of God's judicial wrath, upon the nations of Canaan. The waters of the Yang-tse-kiang have floated upon their bosom the scattered and drifted wreck of thousands of broken idols. The temples have been demolished, the emblems of superstition have been expelled, and in case of resistance the priests have been put to the sword. The first principles of civil and religious freedom and of constitutional government have yet to be imbibed from the same fountain-source whence they gained their knowledge of the more prominent truths of the Bible. The national polygamy of China seems as yet to have received no check; and like the Israelitish monarchs of old, the insurgent chiefs appear to have a plurality of wives. They make an external submission to Christianity a condition of adherence to their cause; and all the evil consequences of such a compulsory profession may be expected to prevail in the hypocrisy or fanaticism of many among their multitude. The various styles of writing observable in their books and the extravagant pretensions proclaimed in some of their edicts, lead to the conclusion that probably two classes of Christian professors are to be found in the movement; sincere enthusiasts, on the one hand, impelled by a conviction of their divine mission to extirpate false religion from the empire; and political adventurers, on the other hand, less palpably under the influence of religious motives and willing to employ the arts of king-craft or the pious frauds of a middle-age Christianity for overawing the multitude and punishing treachery from the host. Many facts, however, which have been ascertained respecting them, exclude the supposition that such adherents as this class form a general specimen of the religious character of the insurgents. The lawless rabble of the members of the Triad Society, who have recently risen against the local authorities and captured the cities of Shanghae and Amoy, and whom we have seen to be addicted to the practices of idol-worship and opium smoking, are in no way to be confounded or identified with the character and cause of Thae-ping-wang. They have endeavored to conciliate foreigners in this city by hoisting the flag of Thae-ping-wang, and by issuing a copy of one of his religious proclamations. But it is a mere device intended to excite foreign sympathy.

A recent visitor, an American medical missionary, relates of the insurgent forces within the city of Chin-kean that among them the Sabbath was kept holy (although by an astronomical error in their calendar they kept as such the seventh instead of the first day of the week), public religious services were regularly held, appointed officers, like Cromwell's generals of old, preached to the troops, and the general signs of order, morality and decorum prevailed. At each dawn of day, the rebel garrison assembled for prayer in the various military guard-houses: and there to the sound of native music they sang hymns, chants and doxologies to the Trinity, all kneeling devoutly in prayer to the Almighty. Could we hope that even a small proportion of this vast multitude operates as a leaven of religious sincerity to give a Christian character to the general mass, it would be a spectacle partaking of the sublime, to witness tens of thousands of native patriots banded together for a great political and religious end; and, where a little while ago idolatry reigned uncontrolled, to hear doxologies of praise and hymns of prayer ascending to the one true God through the one Savior of mankind.

Ere long the true character of this movement will be open to a closer view. In the meantime we judge only from published documents and authenticated facts; and such a mingled aspect leaves opposite impressions on the mind—much that is hopeful combined with not a little that is dubious and unsound. While there is much that should render us indisposed to raise unduly the hopes of the Christian Church at home—to sound the notes of premature triumph, or to identify the continued stability of Protestant missions with the fortunes of Thae-ping dynasty; we may leave both sides of the picture, its lights and shadows, its bright colors and its sombre hues, its hopeful features and its dangerous aspects, to the careful observing mind; promising only, that it requires the powers of a more than human foresight—it belongs only to the secret counsels of Him whose overruling Providence will assuredly direct the result—to know and predict in which direction the religious bearings of this question may terminate. The mere political problem seems likely soon to be solved; and the dynasty of the Manchow Tartars is apparently falling or fallen to rise no more.

FREEDOM OF WORSHIP.

A large meeting was held a fortnight ago in the Tabernacle in New York, to consider the means of securing freedom of worship for Americans from home, called by some of the most respectable and well known gentlemen in the city. Letters favorable to the object of the meeting were read from Messrs. Everett, Abbot Lawrance, Henry A. Wise, Robert C. Winthrop, Dr. Durbin, and addresses were made by Messrs. Field and Katchum, Rev. Stewart Robinson and E. N. Kirk, and the Rev. Dr. Baird. The meeting was an enthusiastic one and great unanimity of sentiment provailed. Resolutions were adopted requesting Congress to take up and pass the resolutions offered in the Senate last year by the Hon. Mr. Underwood, and asking that memorials be prepared and sent to both Houses of Congress, from all parts of the country. Mr. Underwood's resolutions are as follows:

Resolved, That it would be just and wise on the part of the government of the United States, in future treaties with foreign nations to secure, if practicable, to our citizens residing abroad the right of worshipping God freely and openly, according to the dictates of their own consciences, by providing that "they shall not be disturbed, molested or annoyed in any manner on account of their religious belief, nor in the proper exercise of their peculiar religion, either in their own private houses or in churches, chapels or other places appointed for public worship; and that they shall be at liberty to build and maintain places of worship in convenient situations, interfering in no way with, but respecting the religion and customs of the country in which they reside."

Resolved further, That it would be just and wise in our future treaties with foreign nations to secure our citizens residing abroad the right to purchase and own burial places, and to bury any of our citizens dying abroad in such places, with those religious ceremonies and observances deemed appropriate by surviving friends of the deceased."

Upon the above the Presbyterian thus soundly discourses:

"The propriety of securing such privileges as are here specified, is too apparent to require argument. In no other part of the world have Romanists as much liberty as they enjoy under our government. They may build as many churches, schools or convents as they please, and bury their dead without let or hindrance, according to the customs of their religion. In return for these privileges, it is asking but little that our citizens who may happen to be in the countries where Romanism prevails, should enjoy, undisturbed, the rights of worship and of sepulture. The reverse of this is now true in Romish countries. American Protestants are exposed to insult and serious maltreatment in Mexico, Central America, all South America, Cuba, Porto Rico, Spain, Portugal and nearly all of Austria and Italy. In scarcely any of these countries are they allowed, under any circumstances, to have a place of worship, and in the isolated instances where it is permitted, it is only in the precincts of a diplomatic or consular agency, and under the American flag, as it were upon American ground. Our citizens who die in these countries must either be buried with Romish ceremonies, or be interred, as has been the case, stealthily by night, under penalty of punishment in case of discovery. These are the returns which, in this enlightend age, citizens of the United States receive for the unrestricted privileges the spiritual subjects of the Pope enjoy here.

"There may be difficulties attending securing the stipulations proposed, in our treaties with Romish powers. However willing they may be to receive favors from Protestants, and to advocate tolerance here, they are as bigoted and intolerant on their own soil as Rome has always been. The United States, however, has become a power amongst the nations which now cannot be despised; she is respected and feared, and has the opportunity of availing herself of this fact for the practical advantage of her citizens. Politicians have been wont to court and dally with Romanists; let them now know that Protestants also have a word to say, and that as they constitute six-sevenths of the population of this country, they are authorized to claim that something shall be done to secure their rights. We hope the subject may be discussed throughout the country, and that memorials of such a character may be sent to both Houses of Congress as shall lead to the adoption of such measures as the importance of the subject demands."

DELEGATES TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The following is a complete list of Delegates elect to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to convene at the city of Columbus, Ga., on the 1st of May next: the Pacific Conference excepted, from which returns may not be expected much in advance of May.

KENTUCKY.—H H Kavanaugh, T N Raleton, J C Harrison, L D Huston, W M Grubbs, B T Crouch. Reserves: J G Bruce, C Babbett.

WESTERN VIRGINIA.—E C Thornton, S Kelley. Reserve: S K Vaught.

MISSOURI.—W Patton, W G Caples, E M Marvin, B S Ashby. Reserves: A Monro, H Brown.

ST. LOUIS.—T Johnson, D R McAnally, D A Leeper, J Boyle, J K Lacey. Reserves: J F Truslow, W Browning.

LOUISVILLE.—E Stevenson, N H Lee, A H Redford, Z M Tayler, C B Parsons. Reserves: Reserves: E W Schon, J D Barnet.

HOLSTON.—S Pattoa. E E Wiley, W Hicks, T Sullins, D B Carter, J Atkins. Reserves: T K Catlett, D Flemming.

VIRGINIA.—J Early, D S Doggett, A Dibrall, H B Cowles, W A Smith, W B Rowzie, G W Langhorne, L Rosser, L M Lee. Reserves: G W Carter, J E Edwards.

TENNESSEE.—J B McFerrin, J W Hanner, A L P Green, M M Henkle, J H Hughes, F Scruggs, F E Pitts, T W Randle, A R Erwin, G W Taylor, E Wadeworth. Reserves: E T Slater, A S Riggs, T Maddin.

INDIAN MISSION.—D B Cumming, W L McAlister. Reserve: T B Ruble.

ARKANSAS.—J Stanford, J E Cobb, J M Steele, J Cowle, S Carlisle. Reserve: L P Lively.

NORTH CAROLINA.—C F deems, W Closs, R J Careon, R O Burton, D B Nicholson, W Carter, W Barringer. Reserves: R W Wilson, J Jamieson.

MEMPHIS.—G W D Harris, M Brock, M J Blackwell, T L Boswell, F A Owen, J W McFarland, W McMahon, D J Allen. Reserves: J H Brooks, J Randle.

SOUTH CAROLINA.—W M Wightman, A M Shipp, W A Gamewell, Whitefoord Smith, H A C Walker, W A McSwain, R J Boyd, J Stacey. Reserves: T R Walsh, H H Durant.

GEORGIA.—G F Pierce, S Anthony, L Pierce, W J Parks, J W Glenn, J E Evans, G J Pearce, J Lewis, J B Payne, A T Mann, J C Simmons. Reserves: W R Branham, W G Parks, J P Turner.

MISSISSIPPI.—B M Drake, L Campbell, L Pearce, J G Jones, W Winans, A T M Fly. Reseves: H J Harris, D M Wiggins.

ALABAMA.—J. Hamilton, T O Summers, A H Mitchell, T W Dorman, J T Heard, W H McDaniel, O R Blue, F G Ferguson, G Garret. Reserves: P P Neely, G Shaeffer.

LOUISIANA.—J C Keener, H N McTyeire, T Samford. Reserves: W E Doty, J Sanders.

FLORIDA.—P P Smith, R H Howren, F Stewart. Reserve: J Peany.

EAST TEXAS.—S A Williams, O Fisher, J Shook. Reserve: N W Burks.

TEXAS.—R Alexander, H S Thrall, J M Wesson, J N Whipple. Reserve: W A Smith, W C Lewis. [S. C. Adv.

[From the Methodist Protestant.

THE HOLY BIBLE.

BY T. A. S. DONIPHAN.

It is almost needless to say that by the Holy Bible we mean that collection of books which were written by inspired men, and which constitute what we call the Old and New Testament Scriptures. The word Bible means the book, by way of excellence, but our English ancestors seem to have taken a broader view of the meaning of the word, and accordingly, in 1653, passed an act of Parliament in which it was styled not Biblium the book, but Bibliotheca, the library. In that early age of English literature and scarcity of books this name might have had a greater appropriateness than now; but with all our advances in education, and advantages in the multiplication of books, what book or number of books will make such a library as the Bible?

The loftiest and most gifted intellects have considered it an honor to devote years of studious labor in analyzing the contents, learning the doctrines and treasuring the principles of this guide to a better world, and have then devoted their lives to the promulgation of its saving truths to their fellow-men: we therefore offer no apology for devoting a small portion of the fleeting time of our existence to contemplating the history of the most wonderful book in the world. Byron, the greatest of modern poets, was at times a skeptic. In his Childe Harold, Don Juan and some of his fugitive pieces, he spoke sneeringly of the Bible and religion; but when the open volume of inspiration lay before him, with his hand upon its sacred pages, to use his own beautiful language, "a change came o'er the spirit of his dream," and he wrote upon the fly-leaf of a Bible presented to him by his mother, the exalted sentiments embodied in the following lines:

"Within this awful volume lies
The mystery of mysteries!
Oh, happiest they of human race,
To whom our God has given grace
To hear, to read, to fear, to pray,
To lift the latch and force the way;
But better had they ne'er been born,
Who read to doubt or read to scorn."

Christians of all denominations, as well as Jews, admit the inspiration of the Old Testament; and even the Sadducees who questioned the divinity of the rest of the books, admitted those of Moses to have been written under the immediate inspiration of Jehovah himself. The books of the Old Testament have been by some commentators divided into four classes. The first comprising the legal books, or the pentateuch; the second the historical books; the third, the moral books, and the fourth the prophetical books. Notwithstanding this nominal division, the greater portion of the whole work is historical; even the prophecies themselves, having by the lapse of time and the literal and perfect fulfilment of the most important predictions contained in them, become a part of the history of the times and events to which they relate. Besides, they contain the earliest, most authentic and precise history of the times through which they were written, and of which they profess to give an account of the political, physical and religious systems in vogue among the Jews and their neighboring nations, of any other work extant. Indeed, it may be seriously questioned whether, without them, we should have any clear conception of the origin of the human race, the state of the ante-deluvian world or the final destiny of man. Josephus, a Jewish historian who flourished a little less than a century after the commencement of the Christian era, confirms the account of Moses in every particular, although he says it was only after the seventh day that Moses began to talk philosophically. Yet he gives but a recapitulation of Moses' account of the creation, the fall of man from his first and happy estate, the deluge, the patriarchal ages, the destruction of the cities of the plain, and all the other events in the catalogue of the books of Moses. Similar ideas of the history of the world existed very generally among most of the nations of the earth, and at the earliest periods of which we have any account. All the early cosmogonies resemble that of Moses so nearly as to prove their derivation from him, or from a similar prevailing tradition respecting the history of the creation. The most ancient author, next to Moses, of whose writings we have any fragments, is Sanchuniathon, the Phœnician. He flourished and wrote a little more than twelve hundred years before our Savior, or about three hundred and fifty years after Moses. His writings were translated by Philo, of Byblus, in the reign of Adrian, and many portions of his version are preserved by Eusebius. The notions entertained by Sanchuniathon correspond precisely with those of the world's first and greatest historian, Moses, and are almost translated by Hessiod, who wrote about three hundred years later, or nine hundred years before Christ. These sentiments and views of the world's history gradually spread among the Greeks; from whom they passed to the Romans and became generally adopted, notwithstanding the efforts which were made to establish the doctrines of Epicurius by the nervous poetry of Lucretius. Ovid has collected the orthodox doctrines which prevailed among both Greeks and Romans, and has expressed them with uncommon sweetness and perspicuity in the first chapter of his metamorphoses. There is so striking a coincidence between his account and that of Moses, that the scholar is almost induced to believe that he is translating literally from the first chapter of Genesis. And there can be no doubt that the Mosaic writings were well known at that time both among the Greeks and Romans. Megasthenes, who was the ambassador of Seleucus Nicator, the founder of the Syrian monarchy, to the court of the king of the Prasii, 320 years before Christ, affirms that all the doctrines of the Greeks respecting the creation were current among the Brahmins in India and the Jews in Syria. His residence in India at the court of one of the most powerful and flourishing monarchs enabled him to become acquainted with the manners and customs and religious opinions of the subjects, and these he gave in his work called "Indica," from which the Greeks first derived their knowledge of the country.

Juvenal, the Satirist, mentions "whatever Moses has transmitted in his mystic volume." Under all these circumstances, we think there is scarcely a doubt that Ovid actually copied from the Bible, for he adopts the very order detailed by Moses, as the following translation by Dryden, from the metamorphoses, will show:

"Before the seas, and this terrestial ball,
And heaven's high canopy, that covers all,
One was the face of nature, if a face;
Rather a rude and indigested mass:
A lifeless lump, unfashioned and unframed,
Of jarring seeds and justly chaos named.
But God, or nature, while they thus contend,
To these intestine discords put an end;
Then earth from air, and seas from earth were driven,
And grosser air sunk from etherial heaven.
Thus when the God, whatever god was he,
Had formed the whole and made the parts agree,
That no unequal portions might be found,
He moulded earth into a spacious round.
Then every void of nature to supply,
With forms of gods he fills the vacant sky;
New herds of beasts he sends the plains to share,
New colonies of birds to people air;
And to their ooze beds the finny fish repair.
A creature of a more exalted kind
Was wanting yet, and then was man designed,
Conscious of thought, of more capacious breast,
For empire formed, and fit to rule the rest:
And then with particles of heavenly fire
The God of nature did his soul inspire."

In this extract we see all the principal objects of creation mentioned exactly in the order which Moses has assigned them in his writings; and when we consider what follows—the war of the giants, the general corruption of the world, the universal deluge, the preservation of Deucalion and Pyrrha, their sacrifices to the gods on leaving the vessel in which they had been preserved, there can hardly be a doubt that Ovid borrowed either directly or at second hand from Moses. We believe it is generally admitted that not only Sanchuniathon and Ovid, but the whole heathen world derived their notions of the creation and early history of mankind from the sacred Scriptures. Skeptics and infidels who would overthrow the Bible and the beautiful and sublime system of morals, virtue and religion built upon it, always level at the writings of Moses their heaviest anathemas and keenest satire. One of the chief objections is as to the manner in which Moses could have come into possession of the facts and circumstances which he relates with so much minuteness, when he did not write until two thousand five hundred years after the creation. There were at least three modes in which these important events could have been brought down to the time of Moses, to wit: by tradition, by writing, and by direct revelation. Even supposing that Moses enjoyed none of the advantages of modern historians, that of consulting the most reliable records of his country's history and the dealings of Jehovah with his chosen people, and that no revelation was made on this subject, it was easy enough for him to be satisfied of the truth of what he wrote in the book of Genesis, by tradition alone, as the accounts came to him through the medium of from five to seven persons at most. The extraordinary longevity of man at this early age of the world, and the vigor of his intellect remaining unimpaired to the last hours of his earthly pilgrimage, and the constant necessity of the exercise of his memory in relating to his posterity the traditions detailed to him by his fathers, together with the accumulated knowledge and experience of his own times, rendered it an easy matter for the history of the world to have been perpetuated in this manner, and for Moses to have received a perfect account of the creation, the deluge, the re-peopling of the earth, the patriarchal ages, and all the various circumstances that fill up that long period. Thus, from Adam to Noah but one man was necessary to connect the history of that first 1656 years of the world. This history was without doubt known to Methuselah, who lived to see and know both Adam and Noah. In like manner Shem connected Noah and Abraham, having lived to see and converse with the patriarch, as Isaac did with Joseph, from whom these things might easily have been conveyed to Moses by Amran, his father, who was cotemporary with Joseph. The general reception among the Jews of this account, together with the universal credence it obtained, not only among them, but throughout the whole heathen world, from Sanchuniathon to Ovid, are strong proof of its authenticity. When Christ and his disciples came they bore testimony to the truth of Moses and the prophets. The care with which the Jews preserved the books of the law in all their wars, conflicts, captivities and disasters, together with the authority it had among them, are sure and unerring signs that it was regarded by those who lived nearest the times to which it referred, or were cotemporary with many of the events recorded, as a valuable historical account, as well as legal work. Credulity will

---

He looks quite foolish, but pre[illegible] ally, can ride several miles on horseback, and [illegible] throughout the building.

sympathy with Almightiness; we may well [illegible] 12th, against the Nebraska Bill.

visual free from this unfortunate disease.

the boundary line thereon described, is no [illegible] prospect which [illegible]

Scriptures has never been a sin of the Jewish or heathen world, any more than it is of the modern.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18.

WHAT CAN BE DONE.

Ten thousand subscribers for the New Orleans Advocate this year. It can be done. The list can be run up to that point. We are ready to say it must be. If our agents could talk together they would see the matter in a new light. We never hear of one trying but he succeeds. Let us bring them face to face.

A local preacher near Bastrop, Louisiana, (Rev. E. R.) sends a letter, 30th Jan., covering ten new subscribers and $15. He says: "Last Saturday I left home for an appointment, 16 miles distant. I thought I would for the first time in my life try my hand at getting subscribers for the N. O. C. Advocate, and send you the result. P. S.—This is the labor of but a few hours. I think I can get as many more with little effort." That was a good appointment. Our brother, who is a very sensible man and preacher, doubtless made an impression: but he secured more by that sixteen mile trip. The Advocate will visit those ten families weekly with its various preaching. He has procured a helper in his good work. By a "few hour's" labor he procures this.

A traveling preacher, Rev. L. P., of Miss., writing Feb. 4, sends also ten new subscribers and $15—"money current with the merchant." Our friends often say, the sum is so small, it is inconvenient to send by mail. But that sum came very snugly, and there was no discount on it. He adds after giving names and offices in a plain hand—"I obtained these by a little attention to the matter on my first round of visits on this station."

A local preacher, (who, by the way, are first rate agents when they put their hand to it, and they have our thanks)—writes from East Alabama and offers to act as agent, in these singular words: "We have never seen a copy up here, and therefore you'll have to send me one as specimen. It was'nt known here there was such a paper as the New Orleans Christian Advocate, till last week I saw a notice and something printed from it in a Georgia paper."

Verily, we should like an exchange with that Georgia paper! Every paper has to be published twice—first at the printing office, then abroad. For three years the publication has been going on here: but it failed there.

We jot down these things to stir up the pure minds of our brethren.

☞ The friend from Bayside who writes requesting us to forward him half a dozen copies of "Abbey's Letters to Bishop Green," is informed that that pungent circulating medium is not to be had in the city. It would be well to keep a supply with McGinnis & Carver, 36 Camp street, as this is not the only inquiry that has been made for the book.

Summers on Baptism.—Those wishing this standard work can have their orders filled by applying to Rev. J. Hamilton, D. D., Selma, Ala., or J. K. Randall & Co., Mobile, Ala.

Rev. D. W. Lewis.—Our Choctaw brother called on us Monday, fresh from the Indian Territory. The Conference left him without appointment this year to publish in the Choctaw tongue the Discipline, Hymns and Tracts. He has in manuscript the translation of the Discipline, waiting for funds to publish. The Church in the Nation already has thirty-five of our hymns in their own language, translated by Rev. John Page in 1848. To these will be added till the number reaches about one hundred. Brother Lewis purposes also a translation of some of Wesley's sermons. He is now on the way to Washington City, for treaty business, where may he have good speed. The Presiding Elder, Rev. W. L. McAlister, stands us by him a letter, 28th Dec., with an item of news:

"Fine health in the Choctaw Church and State. Our schools never more flourishing—thirty added to Church communion the last round on the District; business and eating men mourn over the dry state of the meanest of all rivers; to its length (the Arkansas) we ford it on horse or pony-back at option."

ORDINATION OF A MISSIONARY.

Rev. G. Shaeffer writes us, 8th Feb., from Columbus, Miss.: "Bishop Paine ordained Brother Belton Deacon and Elder, on Sabbath last, in this place, for the China Mission. He and his lady will leave here next Tuesday for New York, where they will embark for China. There were several others ordained at the same time. Dr. Jenkins was with us and gave a lecture at night on China to a crowded congregation. He had his Chinaman with him, together with a number of their idols, with charts and drawings illustrative of their idolatries, &c. He was listened to with great interest, and received $150 for the Mission at the close of his lecture. Columbus had given $1000 a few [illegible] before to the cause of Missions. Some of the people are beginning to believe that it is more blessed to give than to receive."

LIFE OF BISHOP BASCOM.

A good work has been done by Dr. Henkle in writing the life of Henry Biddleman Bascom. It had nothing of self-denial we judge: how could it, when the materials were so abundant and rich! The events of Bascom's life connect themselves in later times with the leading chapters of American Methodism, and in earlier with its planting in the West. He was brought in in the regular fashion—young, uneducated, zealous. The wants of the times called him out, as others had been called, under the Holy Ghost. He graduated in the itinerancy, and no mean scholar was he—Learned as he preached, and preached as he learned, and few equals had he in the pulpit. His development was an illustration of Methodist economy.

The biographer had before him a genealogical table of the Bascom family running back to 1650. It appears that Henry B. was a cross of the French Huguenot and German—his mother being a German of the Biddleman family. Born May 27, 1796: born again August 18, 1810: an exhorter at 16: licensed to preach at a Quarterly-meeting of Brush Creek Circuit, February, 1813, and traveling under the Presiding Elder: in the autumn of same year received as a probationer in the Conference, and appointed to Deer Creek Circuit, which, as the "plan" preserved among his papers shows, "had 27 regular appointments for preaching, besides numerous extra night-meetings," &c.—these are the main dates of his beginning.

One cannot read this book, especially the first part, without three convictions: That where there is any "come out" in a young preacher, nothing is like the itinerancy, as primitively worked, to bring him out: That the spiritual demands of this country could only have been met by the men and the measures Methodism adopted: And that the early history of the Great West cannot be written without drawing largely upon the life, labors and adventures of Methodist itinerants.

At two or three brief periods Bascom kept a diary: fortunately one of these falls in his first year as a preacher. Such entries as these will alter the opinions of some who knew him only as the man of fame. Indeed they gave us sensible relief and heightened our appreciation, for we had heard, with others, a report that Bascom should have said, "He never knew any to be convicted or converted under his preaching."

"Oct. 9. Tried to preach to about sixty people and had a precious time. Some praised God, but others remained without strength. I meet with some powerful temptations, but grace is my strong fortress."

"In the evening preached again, on the general resurrection—an awful time—took two into society."

"Oct. 11. Tried to preach on the necessity of regeneration; had an uncommon time; the power of the Lord was present and many trembled before him. Met the class and had a profitable waiting on the Lord. After dinner rode to my next appointment."

"Oct. 13. Rose early—fled to the woods and prayed; fed my horse; prayed with the family; ate my breakfast and started for my next appointment," &a.

On the 7th Feb., 1814, we find him, after long rides and preaching twice a day, come to a place: "Rode five miles and preached to half a dozen souls—one sinner was deeply convicted and cried aloud for mercy." On 27th, "We had an awful time; three were struck down by the power of God."

Indeed we regret the course the biographer intimates he has taken, in not giving us more of this diary. That was a time when the young preacher had but six hearers, and yet one convert.

Dr. Henkle has executed the narrative portion of this work with life and interest. The preacher's bear, the turkey story, and the coat, the panther escape, passing a night on the mountains in a hollow log—these we wish we had room to give—but the reader must go to the book. It is a biography that could not have been written east of the mountains. We sat down to its reading soon after dinner and did not finish and could not quit till twelve that night.

There are exceptions it needs no hypercriticism to take. The dedication, to say the best of it, is in bad taste: and this, not for what is in it, but what is not. A glance will convince the reader of this. Again, the author prejudices his impartiality and sober statement by coming forward rather soon and often with such words as "giant in intellect," "object of admiration and astonishment," &c. He insists Bascom was great, in the preface: towards the end speaks of the "great departed:" and brings forward Henry Clay oftener than necessary, in the course of the book, to prove he was great. When a biographer has access to facts and room to spread them out, if he fails to make out a case, panegerics and affidavits will not do it.

This biography vindicates and sets upon ground of consistency and constitutionality Bascom's views and course on Slavery. As early as 1812, he hears Bishop Asbury and learns the principles that enter into the Protest of the minority in 1844. In 1819 he draws up and signs, with a minority of the Tennessee Conference, a similar conservative document.

The work so well done in other respects, is open to serious exception in the stand-point the biographer assumes for observing Bascom in the maturity of his pulpit powers. We except to it not more for its unworthiness of a Christian minister, than its ill influence. Reputation usurps too much place. He preaches somewhere, and the verdict of the biographer is—"Maintained his reputation fully"! Another time, "preached to an admiring multitude"! Another, "equalled the expectations of the public"! From certain magnates before whom he preached what the biographer would style "one of his best sermons," he received "high commendation"! The "most brilliant of his pulpit efforts" was made somewhere else. And we actually have the "performence"!! Shades of McKendree and Asbury—are these the standards of pulpit excellence—are these the ends of preaching? Can dead Bascom—our honored Bascom, be put to no better use than ministering to itching ears?

His culminating point is placed about 1846. To us it seems that as a preacher it was earlier. When he passed the mountains from the West to his Washington Chaplaincy he passed his culmination. Never afterwards on the circuit, in the mountain paths, fleeing to the woods, having 'awful times' at least, not of the good old sort. Henceforth—if the biographer lets us into his subject rightly—he has a reputation to maintain and becomes morbidly sensitive about it.—Adds few new subjects to the roll of texts and polishes and repeats the old ones.—Stands before cold critics and not the heaving, generous Western audiences, swayed to and fro by his mighty eloquence. He gets into the Colonization Agency, into Madison College, into Augusta College, and worse than all, hopelessly into debt.—Lectures for money to get out of debt. The Transylvania University comes on with its increasing embarrassments. We remember seeing a letter, about this time, of President Bascom to an intimate friend, in which was an anguishing allusion to these pecuniary embarrassments: "I am killed all this day long." The words were underlined. The soul that held communion with nature and was open, in its fine and noble faculties, to the grandest impressions, was ground down into the dust, among those who praised him, flattered him and heard him: who were ambitious of his fame, who were served by his embarrassment, who did everything, but help him: and he would not stoop to ask help. His mortal sicknesses were aggravated if not brought on by this mental anxiety. To all this was added the powerless Quarterly Review and the Commissionership. Thus embarrassed, distracted, overtasked, secularized, what could he do, to whom a dispensation of the gospel had been committed? The preacher was crushed out.

We are saddened by reading those pages that disclose these truths. They will teach our Church a lesson and our preachers a lesson. Even within so-called ecclesiastical limits, there may be secularization. And yet, while in fact he was thus victimized and confessed in 1850, he had from these causes "lost in a measure his high tone of religious feeling," he held sentiments on the subject of devotion to the ministry worthy of one called of God to it and qualified by the Spirit for it. Though opposed on his entrance into the Conference, and held back a year on probation after being justly entitled to full admission: though assigned to the hardest work and variously worried through the influence of a few weak and envious minds for no other offence than the freak of munificence nature had indulged in his putting up: though he traveled his third year more than 3000 miles, preached 400 sermons and received only $12 10 salary: though he had tempting offers to leave the church: none of these things moved him. He was and wished to be nothing else than a Methodist preacher. A brother minister had left preaching to practice another profession, for a better living. To him Bascom wrote, "I might perhaps with equal reason and equal prospects pursue a like course; but, poor and embarrassed as I am, I am resolved to have no client, but Him who at the first employed me to plead the great cause of human salvation: and I know my fee will be certain and large."

Sentiments worthy of him and spoken like him. And as in the pulpit lay his calling, in it lay his forte also. His biographer makes no question, but had he chosen another profession, as law or politics, he would have equalled Calhoun, Webster and those who stood foremost. If we discriminate his talents rightly, it is no disparagement of them to dissent from this opinion. He had not the requisite readiness and compactness: and his sensitiveness unsuited him for the contact of forensic life. The narrative of this biography has been rendered with vividness and power: only as an able writer could do it, and one acquainted with the scenes and habits involved. Only begin and you must go to the end. We cannot speak as highly of its philosophy. We hoped to find what we do not—a critical estimate of the man and the preacher—a satisfactory analysis. What was he and what was he not? Whence that extraordinary power hundreds of thousands felt but could tell no more?

The latter pages, furnishing a fit occasion for solving this problem, and even necessitating some solution, in order to grouping of events and an appreciation of their relations to the subject, seem to have been written in the absence of a guiding philosophy. Often in their interesting details we had to pause a moment and call up former impressions, in order to preserve, tall and unshrunken, the majestic character we delight to contemplate.

THE PRIZE ESSAY.

Having been requested by correspondents and others to give particular information about the Prize Essay, we do so, requesting our exchanges to copy.

At the session of the Louisiana Annual Conference, held in Mansfield, La., Dec. 14, 1853, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Resolved, That a prize of $200 be and is hereby offered for the best essay, not to exceed one hundred pages 12mo, in print, which shall be presented to the award of a committee, consisting of ———, before the first day of Nov., 1854, and covering the following ground:

1st. The claims of a Gospel Ministry to a support—general and special—and defining what is properly meant by Ministerial Support.

2d. The duty of contributing to the support of the gospel and prescribing the measure of that duty.

3d. A rule of conduct by which this duty may be best observed, money collected and the Church supported; which shall be most practical, certain and regular in its operations; and the whole subject adapted to the wants of the M. E. Church, South, and the habits, business and condition of the people residing in the section of country over which she has chiefly extended.

Resolved, That the object in offering this premium is to disseminate correct and useful information upon what is designed to be the subject-matter of the Essay, among, especially, the membership of our Church, and to excite them to a proper appreciation of duty, therefore it shall be for gratuitous distribution after defraying the expenses of publication, and if any profit shall arise therefrom it shall go into the Conference Treasury for the support of widows and orphans."

The Committee of Award was filled by the chairman: Dr. C. G. Young, Rev. H. C. Thweatt, and Rev. W. E. Doty.

Communications (post-paid) should be addressed to the Chairman of the Committee, Dr. C. G. Young, Greenwood Post-office, Caddo Parish, La. Accompanying the MS. should be a sealed note, containing the name and address of the author, and marked outside with the fictitious name which is signed to the MS. This will not be opened till the award is made.

FOREIGN PATRIOTS.

American sympathies are strong towards Republicans of whatever land and however unfortunate. And this, too, upon principle. But have not our popular demonstrations overdone the thing? The party press has indulged in extravagant patronage by way of bidding for the foreign vote; and, like excited contestants, they have bid more than its worth. From this we have much to fear. Already it has led to an extension of suffrage too free and out of time. The smell of the ship's hold has hardly been blown off hundreds and thousands of these new-comers before they are at the polls, elbowing aside those "to the manor born." The potent ballot is in their hands; and, as if the danger were not imminent enough, we are hurrying on to make everything elective from the Judgeship down. As though the home stock was too tame and ill-bred, an active importation of foreign patriots is going on. Every fresh arrival meets an ovation. Neophyte Republicans are at a premium. We distrust—nay, more, we abominate this tendency. Let them be proved first, by long probation.

In the following article from the Cresent of 13th inst., we find this subject treated with more independence than is common, and not more caustically than it deserves. As for Mr. Mitchell—"the last man"—we are not prepared to endorse the imputation that his severe strictures, in his paper, the Citizen, upon the Abolitionists of the North have been dictated by selfishness: but let that go for what it is worth:

JOHN MITCHEL.

We seem to have come to such a pass, in this country, that no man can make himself acceptable at one end of it, unless at the cost of becoming detestable at the other end. To-day, all is an uproar of praise; to-morrow, with no better reason, a howl of universal obloquy. But a fortnight since, Mr. John Mitchel—of whom we ourselves confess to having very much the same idea that we have of Kossuth—was the first of patriots, of orators, of statesmen, of geniuses, and of heroes; now, he is become a slave, a blackguard, and a blockhead, for simply venturing to utter an opinion as to Negro Slavery, which the North did not expect of him! Of course, by this discreet judgment of contraries, Mr. Mitchel becomes in the South, on the instant, everything that he has ceased to be in the North; and that, for a reason just about as good taken one way as the other.

How much does all this illiberal liberty, that will tolerate no manly dissent, this grovelling bigotry, that spits upon its own idols if they displease it, remind one of what the best of poets and of patriots says of this renown that can be conferred by such people:

> A herd confused,
> A miscellaneous rabble, who extol
> Things vulgar, and, well weighed, scarce worth the praise!
> They praise and they admire, they know not what
> And know not whom, but as one leads the other!
> And what delight to be by such extolled,
> To live upon their tongues and be their talk,
> Of whom to be dispraised were no small praise!

Now, let any man consider these strong words of Milton, and say if they do not exactly describe the sort of public judgment which reigns in this land of ours, and as despotically as foolishly decides every thing by its clamor? Is there no sense, no sober public opinion among us? Must not the nation be mad, North, or mad South, or insane everywhere? What is the matter with people? what do they mean? what would they have?

Mr. John Mitchel cannot be both a hero and a low fellow, a genius and a blockhead, a patriot and a slave: which shall he be, then? Is it true that he is of either extreme? Possibly not. How are we to tell what he is? Not by bellowing; but by ceasing to do so. Bellowing may be very good in its place: but we never heard of its assisting to enlighten any body. Don't be in such a hurry to hollow. Begin by holding sober counsel with yourself and those who will help you to judge well. When you are sure that you know which way to bellow, bellow, by all means, if there's any occasion for it, or if you can't express yourself in any better way.

'Tis agreed, then, is it, that, in order to settle what Mr. John Mitchel is, we must reason? There is no other way. Come, then! let us go about it.

But hold! Let us first see how we are to reason. Shall we reason so as to oblige his friends? or shall we reason with a view to please his enemies? We can't humor both. Then, please God! we'll try and reason with no regard to anything but the truth.

First, then, is Mr. Mitchel a hero?

A hero is a man who has, by his remarkable bravery and prowess, shone in battle for a worthy cause. Was Mr. Mitchell ever engaged in such a cause? He was. Did he ever risk his person in battle for it? Never.

Much talk, much patriotism, much printing; but no fighting; except in the action of Slievegammon, where just three men, we believe, were hurt. If Mr. John Mitchel was there (and we think he was not) all the laurels of that conflict would not, had they been won by him alone, have made him a hero. Then he is no hero; and the first question is answered. A brave man he may be; for the Irish are usually brave. But not even Irishmen are heroes without fighting.

Is he, then, on the contrary, a low fellow, because he justifies Negro slavery?

If merely believing Negro slavery not a crime be his whole offense, the most glorious man that ever lived—George Washington—was as criminal as he. So we need say no more of that. Should the fact be, however, that Mr. Mitchel has suddenly changed his opinion of slavery—as he probably has—that change stamps him as unworthy of anybody's confidence, and as equally capable of shifting, for personal advantage, his ideas of liberty for the Irish or anybody else. The case really looks ill for Mr. Mitchel. Born where there is—especially among the party to which he belonged—but one opinion, he was the fervid follower of Daniel O'Connel, whose opinions were the law for all "Young Ireland." Then O'Connel, slave-holders had no fiercer reviler. If Mr. Mitchel can show that, as editor of the "Irish Nation," he ever dissented from O'Connel's denunciations, he must stand absolved. If his newspaper will prove that he assented to those denunciations, judgment must go against him. It is plain that, if innocent, he can prove it, by appealing to his own editorial files. If he does not produce them and show what he said there, he must stand convicted, on that failure. Meantime, that single point in the indictment must rest undecided.

Is John Mitchel a patriot? Ah! that is a thorny question! For there's hardly a word in the English language more unsettled. Some apply it only in a very lofty sense; others, in a very low one: some mean only to tickle with it the ears of the crowd—for which purpose, indeed, 'tis one of the longest of straws: some use it without any real notion of what they or any one else means by it. Nor are the written definitions in any better consent with each other: the historians make only him a patriot who sought his country's good, not his own: our party writers style all their nominees for high office, patriots. Dr. Johnson, in his great dictionary, tells us that patriots were, in his day, generally rogues; and he was a man of great sense, as well as truth. In fact, he who makes an ado about his patriotism is usually a cheat. Dryden looks on it as a popular cloak for public crimes: he makes Shaftesbury put it on, when disgraced at court:

> Then, wild for place, but still affecting fame,
> Usurp'd a patriot's all-atoning name:
> So easy still it proves, in factious times,
> With public zeal to cancel private crimes!

And there is yet another poetic description of these worthies, in the well known inscription over the stage in an Australian theatre:

> True patriots we: for, be it understood,
> We left our country for our country's good.

Perhaps, however, the truest idea of a patriot is that now prevailing far and wide, namely: that he is a man who has kicked up a rebelion somewhere, no matter what was to come of it, and got a plenty of people's throats cut, while taking excellent care of his own. The great model of this modern patriotism is Kossuth. What, then, is patriotism? Tell us; or how shall we ever be able to say whether John Mitchel is a patriot or not? You answer: "A patriot is one who loves his country." Thank you! but that's not enough; he must love her better than himself, and more than he loves any other country. Does Mitchel do this? You say "he does;" be it so. Then he loves Ireland supremely? "Yes." Then he loves her vastly more than any other country? "Of course." Then he would prefer her interest to that of any other land? "Surely he would." Well, we judged as much; he is evidently ready to sacrifice this country to Ireland. So would Kossuth, Kinkel, and all these other foreign patriots do; they all want this country to take their quarrels on its back and fight every body, for every body that has been whipped. Are they patriots? Possibly: Irish, Hungarian, German, Turkish; but not American patriots. That's all we can tell you about Mr. Mitchel's patriotism. Can you genius it? No.

Well: the rest is of no consequence. Let Mr. Mitchel be the first of geniuses, orators, statesmen, and even editors: what does it signify? Isn't every body that's any thing at all, all that? Who, in this country of universal greatness and equality, is ever less than the most extraordinary of men? Mr. Mitchel was quite a star down in Europe; but now that he has got up into the sky with us, it will take Lord Rosse's telescope to find him. Nay, he may get eclipsed as other new-risen stars often are in our American heavens; or he may go out forever, like the lost Pleiad. We have three hundred and sixty-five as great men as he, for every new year; so we can bestow only a day's renown on any one of our Immortalities. But at least we do our best for them; and if we can't give them a very long reputation, we give them a prodigiously loud one.

MISTAKE CORRECTED.

Below is a correction that may be important in the future. Bro. Sanders, having represented the Arkansas side of the question with much ability and earnestness, of course took a close view of the result. Our impression that a considerable majority of the Conference were opposed to the measure was shared in by others. We cheerfully give the correction.

Mr. Editor: In your notice of the proceedings of the Louisiana Conference, you are likely to make a false impression upon the minds of of your readers relative to the vote of the Conference on the subject of the formation of a new Conference out of South Arkansas and a portion of North Louisiana. You say the Conference refused to recommend it by a considerable majority. The Conference were so equally divided that the resolution recommending the formation of said new Confsrence was lost by only one majority. And one brother, to-wit, Rev. R. Randall, happened to be absent when the vote was taken, who afterwards requested some of the brethren who voted in the minority, to move a reconsidsration in order that he might have the opportunity of voting for the resolution. I wish this published that the subject may be fairly before your readers. Yours, truly,

Joel Sanders.

Sparta, La., Jan. 31, 1854.

The Typographical Association of this city, at a recent meeting, held on the 5th inst., resolved to increase the price of type-setting from forty cents per thousand ems to fifty cents, from the 12th inst.

The printing offices, therefore, are now paying twenty-five per cent. more for type-setting than they were previously paying.

New Books.—Rev. Mr. Young, of Louisville, Ky., has laid on our table two very readable and cut and cut Methodist volumes: "Bishop Andrew's Miscellanies, a 12mo., of 394 pages—made up of those from time-to-time communications—traveling letters, &c., that have instructed and delighted the readers of Church periodicals for years and won for the Bishop no high a place among writers as he holds among preachers. The pen of the ready writer—the currente calamo style—so much coveted, is here. Bishop A. has in this set not the least of his high examples, for > "Pens of prophets survive their breath,

> And save their living words from death."

The other is the Life of the late Bishop Bascom, by Dr. Henkle—12mo. pp. 408. As this book is now for the first time before the public we shall give a more extended notice of it.

Both volumes may be had at the Depository in Louisville, Ky., and at 36 Camp st. Merton & Griswold have done a neat and substantial job.

Putnam for February.—We have through McGinnis & Carver, 36 Camp st.

METHODIST PRESS.

Class Leaders.—The Christian Advocate and Journal thinks it noteworthy that while class-leaders bear so vital a relation to the spiritual economy of the Church, no plan has yet been devised for their preparation:

We have no doubt that our General Conference will ultimately act on this important subject, and devise an efficient plan for securing the greater usefulness of our class-leaders by recommending a course of study and training for those who are appointed to this most responsible charge in the Church. But all the peculiar institutions of Methodism have been suggested and framed from experience, and hence it is they have worked so well. And may not the preachers, having charge of circuits, institute an experiment in this matter in anticipation of the action of the General Conference, and preparatory to it? Suppose the stationed and circuit preachers were to recommend all the class-leaders of the circuit or station, to procure the books and tracts we have mentioned above, together with "Carvoso" and "Father Reeves;" and if there be any of the leaders who can not conveniently afford to purchase them, levy contributions on the richer members of the societies, by personal and private solicitation, to enable them to supply them with at least this amount of reading matter.

Secondly. Suppose the preachers, having charge of circuits, were to make it a part of the proceedings of the leaders' meeting, assembling monthly, to examine his leaders as to the attention they have given to these excellent books, and what they have learned from them. We are aware that leaders' meetings have not been established on all the circuits and stations, but it would be easy and very profitable to institute them under the Discipline, and for the purposes therein indicated. Let these associations assemble consecutively at different places of worship on the circuit, or at private houses, monthly, as may be found most convenient, and when the disciplinary business of the meeting shall have been attended to, let the preacher examine the leaders severally, giving such advice and exhortation as he may deem requisite. We think that even such a course of study and training would go far toward improving the gifts and qualifications of the leaders.

Thirdly. More still might be done by urging the membership in every circuit and station to establish, by contribution, a library to be composed of our Book-room publications, to which every member of the Church could have access under suitable regulations.

The True Basis.—Dr. Lee is still on the Book Concern and discussing it thoroughly. We are not clear in our own mind between the Agency and the Concern. Dr. Dixon on visiting the Methodists of this country, is said to have remarked on seeing the pile of brick and mortar, at 200 Mulberry street, N. Y.,—the presses, material and workmen—"This is what keeps down your Methodist literature by keeping your prices up. It has all this investment to pay for." An agent could drive a good business on the capital invested in buildings alone. Then the agency requires fewer agents, who are to be employed from the ministry. And where is the publishing town in our limits? It might do to trade North, but not to build there. However, on this matter, we are open to conviction, being in a state of unsettlement.

One point in the last article of the Richmond Advocate, as to the proceeds of the Book Concern, (it would apply equally to the Agency) we cannot pass without our usual subscription: Cheapening the publications and not supporting the ministry—either superannuates, widows or bishops. The Church has as much scriptural right going to steamboating as book-selling for supporting the ministry. By what seemed a misfortune, we have for nine years been cut off from dividends and the ministry fell back on apostolical ground, and have fared better than before. Having learned this lesson and got in the way of it, let us take no step backward:

This plan of raising money for the support of the ministry is opposed to the spirit and teachings of the New Testament. We file our gravest objection to it on this ground. The doctrine of the Scriptures on the subject may be briefly stated. It affirms that "the laborer is worthy of his hire," and that "his hire" is to be paid by "the free-will offerings" of those for whom he labors. It is then by a system of voluntary contributions on the part of the Church that the ministry is to be supported. Beyond this the Church has no power to operate: to no other source has the ministry a right to look for support. Now, a moneyed institution, besides deranging this scriptural plan, transfers the responsibility of the Church to a corporation, and authorizes the ministry to repose their expectations for "the things needful for the body," not upon those to whom they "minister in spiritual things," but upon a Concern distinct from and independent of their spiritual labors. If a Book-Concern could meet all the demands of the ministry, and thus relieve the people of their support, it would make the one independent of the other, destroy all sympathy between them, and ultimately, by separating their relations, alienating their interests, and destroying their mutual dependence and unity of objects, prove one of the sorest curses with which a christian people could be visited. But to the extent that the Book Concern aids in this support, it interferes with the sacred duties and intransferrible responsibilities of the people, and separates, to the great damage of both, two things which God has joined together for the glory of his name and the good of the church. It is dangerous, even in the smallest matters, to depart from the authorized standard of religious duty.

State of the Church.—The St. Louis Advocate says:

So far as our information extends, the year has rarely if ever been a period in all the past history of the Methodist Church in the Southern and Western States when there was more general peace or greater prosperity than at present. There have been times when there were greater annual ingatherings of persons into the pales of the Church than now, but at no former period has every interest of the Church been so uniformly and successfully carried forward. In each Annual Conference from which we have heard, there has been during the past year an handsome increase in the membership, and an increase in all the various departments of the Church interest. The preachers have been better supported—the superannuates have been better cared for—contributions for missionary and educational purposes have been greater—the number of Sunday Schools has greatly enlarged and their character improved—while in most places there is a rigid adherence on the part of both preachers and people, to the doctrines, discipline and usages of the Church, as they have been held from the first.

Political Servility.—Zion's Herald gives this item:

We are credibly informed, that, at a convention of a certain political party held in this city last fall, for the nomination of candidates for representatives to the General Conv'n., the name of a Roman Catholic gentleman was brought forward. Some one inquired if he would be acceptable to Bishop Fitzpatrick? No one being able to say, the name was laid over till an adjourned meeting for the purpose of finding out the Bishop's opinion. When that meeting was held, it was reported that the gentleman in question was not agreeable to the Bishop. One or two other Catholics were brought forward, but the Bishop was hard to please; and finally having made some member of the convention understand that a particular personage named would be agreeable, that man of the Bishop's selection was nominated and published on the party ticket.

We purposely omit naming the political party which did this, because it is out of our province to meddle with party politics. But the facts ought to be known.

Firmness.—The West promises to be tried in this hour of trial—if the Cincinnati Advocate reports correctly. We are sorry, for their sakes. This opportunity neglected will show the world that Christians settle their difficulties not as others, and an hour of trial will come, when firmness will be in request:

It is stated in the newspapers that the Trustees of the Chartered Fund have agreed to divide that fund with the South. We know the General Conference of 1844 and all its members, both North and South, never thought that this fund was divisible in this way; and all that was then recommended, in case a Southern Church should be formed, was an equivalent; but the fund itself was believed on all hands to be indivisible. It may lead to more trouble than the entire fund is worth, to break in on the charitered principles on which the fund is based in common with all charitable trusts; for principle does not govern here it governs none other; and, therefore, all titles to Church property may be worthless, and the property divided to any claimant. Nor have we much faith in even the decision of a judge, when he decides contrary to the Bible, the principles of the civil law on religious trusts, the common law of England and America, and the dictates of common sense and commun equity. All such decisions are only temporary and limited in constitutional governments, such as England and America, as can be shown by many examples. We make these remarks, in passing, without any purpose to argue the point just now, or, perhaps, ever, in the columns of a newspaper. We leave it for the present, after uttering the foregoing sentiment.

We see, in several quarters, the wish expressed that the western Commissioners would, and it is frequently believed that they will proceed at once to make the distribution and thus place their case under the decision of Judge Nelson. We speak advisedly when we say this is not the case. They are with conscientious men, who have studied well the grounds of this case. Their judgment and conscience will not allow them to do some would wish them to do.

Tract Society.—The Nashville Advocate well proposes:

It has for years been a cherished wish with us, to see organized in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a Tract Society, but we have been let hitherto, owing to the embarrassed state of our finances. We hope the approaching General Conference will take measures for the organization of a Society and the publication and distribution of charitracts, to be sent abroad as so many preachers, dispensing the doctrines and precepts of Christ. We verily believe that a well organized Tract Society, efficiently managed, would do more good than the same amount of money expended by the church in any other class of publications.

We are pleased to learn the success of the Tract Society of the Northern Methodist Church. At the first anniversary, which was held in Washington City, the following abstract of a report was submitted:

"In Mr. Stevens, the agent of this society, the Society has a most efficient officer. I know no man in the church who can do more work with pen and voice in this cause than he can—both are eloquent and powerful. He read an abstract from the annual report, and here are some of the thankful results—36 conference auxiliaries—100 colporteurs—554 tracts published—60 volumes—seven million pages sold, one million and a quarter of which were in German. Over 100,000 tract volumes sold, with more than $12,000 worth of books from the Book Concern publications. Receipts of the year $16,400, with pledges, which amount to $18,000 more. Surely this is a noble, encouraging beginning, and one year's work! Thousands on thousands will read the truth from their printed ministry, who will never listen to its sounds from the preacher's lips."

A Noble-Hearted Wife.—A romantic story of female devotedness has just been circulated at Valence. It is stated that a Prussian woman named Ilipson, has been working in a manufactory as a navic, on the railways for more than five years. She had an infirm husband and four children; this family were starving; she disguised herself, worked hard, and had her wages advanced for her assiduity; with her earnings she supported her pretended "father" and "brothers and sisters," her husband and her children. When her secret was discovered, gifts poured in upon her from the neighborhood, and work more suited to her sex has been provided.

One of the most important female qualities is sweetness of temper. Heaven did not give woman insinuation and persuasion, in order that she surly; it did not make them weak in order to be imperious; it did not give them a sweet voice to be employed in scolding.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—On the 8th inst., in the Parish of Terrsbonne, by the Rev. L. A. Rood, nt the residence of J. B. Carothers, Esq., Mr. DAVID ROBERICK to Miss—MARY HELENA L'HOMMODIEU.

OBITUARY:

DIED—In Demopolis, Jan. 28, 1854, Mrs. ELIZABETH BONNIOTT, in the 80th year of her ago. Sistor Bouniott was born in Georgetown, S. C. The writor knowe but little of her early history, only, that she embraced religion when young and joined the M. E. Church. She had been for many years a resident of Alabama. About six years ago I made her acquaintance; since then I was much in her company. Being very infirm, she was almost constantly confined to the house, frequently to her bed. I have never been more edified and strengthened than when visiting her in her affliction.

The preciousness of Christ, the goodness of God, were almost her only themes. Frequently in giving expression to her gratitude, such was the ardor of her feelings, her earthly tabernacle seemed just ready to fall. The old and very infirm, she died suddenly—unexpectedly. Truly a mother in Israel has fallen. JOHN D. FISHER.

The Charleston Advocate will please copy.

DIED—On the 19th Jan., 1854, at his residence in Black Hawk Mission, Dr. WM. B. BALL, a native of Baldwin co., Ga., in the 49th year of his age. He professed religion when about 21 or 22 years of age, and soon after joined the M. E. Church, of which he continued a consistent member uptil his death For a number of years he served the Church as steward and class-leader. He was an ardent advocate for the great temperance reformation.

The writer interrogated him the day before he died in reference to his spiritual state, when he said in a feeble voice, "I have the sustaining grace of God in my sufferings; my way is clear: I have lived to serve God that I might be happy in life, happy in death and happy with God in eternity." We prayed with him, and when I visited him again, which was only a few hours after, he was dying. He has left a wife and five children to mourn their loss. In Dr. Ball the Church has lost a zealous member, the temperance cause a strong lecturer, education a firm supporter, the poor a kind benefactor, mankind generally, a warm friend; but our loss is his eternal gain. Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his.

J. NICHOLSON.

☞ List of LETTERS AND FUNDS received at the office of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, for JANUARY, 1854:

A—M L Andrews, $3.

B—J Berry, $1 50; Mrs M Ballou, $1 50; G S Bailey, $1 50.

C—F M Crain, $1 50; J Craft, $1 50; J Collier, $1 50; R Carraway, $1 50.

D—W C Dowdell, $3; R R Dickinson, $3; L Davis $1 50; J P Douglas $1 50; D Duncan $1 50; Mrs N Y Dodd $1 50.

E—J J Early $1 50.

F—W H Fauquier $1 50; T J Freeman $1 50; J Fonnimore $1 50.

G—L B Galloway $3; J W Gordon $1 50; J Green $1 50.

H—S Hawes $5; W B Hines $3; D C Hurdeo $1 50; W Hutchinson $1 50; C C Holt $2; J W. Hinton $2; W Hightower $ 1 50; W P Higginbotham $1 50.

I—Wm Isler $1 50.

J—Mrs E H Jackson $1 50; Dr Jones $1 50. W F Johnson $1 50.

K—H C King $2.

L—W M Lovelady, chairman Por. Com. $595 90; W M Loveladv $60; H S Lee $1 50; W T Lewis $1 50; L Lewis $1 50; J H Laney $1 50; J Lancashire $1 50; C Logan $1 50.

M—J L Murphy $3; Dr McDowell $1 50; E Mortimore $5; D Metcalf $1 50; C W Mills $1 50; D Masters $1 50; D McCook $1 50; A McGhee $1 50.

N—Mrs O L Nash $1 50.

O—N G Oliver $1 50.

P—J Pipse $5; J Poobles $3; T B Poitevent $3; P S Petty $1 50; Mrs J A Perkius $1 50.

R—J G Rush $6; R Y Rew $5; N B Raiford $12; J Roy $2 50; S C Ragun $1 50; W P Richardson $1 50; T A Roes $3.

S—R Spence $1 50; D Stovall $1 50; J B Smew $1 50; H Smaw $1 50; W Smrtain $1 50; J D Shyrah $1 50; G D Smith $1 50; W H Smith $5; J H Stone $9.

T—J B Taylor $3; Joshua Taylor $1 50; Mrs M O B Thomas $1 50.

W—R F Withers $1 50; G Wilson $5; W Williams $2; Mrs E H White $1 50; W H Watson $1 50.

NOTE.—Letters received since will be published in the Febrdary list.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square first insertion $1 00
Each subsequent insertion 50
One Square, one year 15 00
One Square, six months 10 00
Two Squares, one year 25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT.—Custom House Officers.—Collector—John T. Hudson, Buffalo, N. Y.; Surveyors—Daniel L. Willcomb, Ipswich, Mass.; Sidney H. Smith, Pawtuxet, R. I.; John Gladding, Jr., Bristol, R. I.; William E. Cozzeas, North Kingston, R. I.; Augustus G. Millard, East Greenwich, R. I.; Wm. Hayden, Hartford, Ct.; Andrew Agnew, New Brunswick, N. J.; Canby Pennington, Havre-de-Grace, Md.; Wm. Shands, City Point, Va.; Charles Fagot, Pontchartrain, La.; A. Benton Moses, Nesqually, W. T.; Wm. Martin, Alton, Ill.; Appraisers—Daniel D. Briggs, New York, N. Y.; Isaac Phillips, New York, N. Y.; Samuel Willis, New York, N. Y.; Wm. J. McIntosh, New York, N. Y.; Assistant Appraisers—Peter Hermau, New Orleans, La.; Francis Leech, New Orleans, La.; Naval Officers—Nicholas Brown, Newburyport, Mass.; Charles Millet, Salem and Boverly, Mass.; Silas A. Comstock, Providence, R. I.; Milton Hall, Newport, R. I.; John Romeyn Brodhead, New York, N. Y.; Christopher C. Robinson, Norfolk and Portsmouth, Va.; Thomas Lynch Hamilton, Savannah, Ga.; Surveying Inspectors of Steamboats—Augustus Walker, of Buffalo, N. Y., uinth district; Isaac Lewis, of Monroe, Mich., eighth district; John A. Brown, of Baltimore, Md., third district; William Burnett, of Boston, Mass., first district; W. E. Muir, of New Orleans, La., fourth district.

A French wife wrote this affectionate and laconic letter to her husbnud: "Je vous écris parce que je n'ai rien à faire: Je finis, parce que je n'ai rien à dire." "I write to you, because I have nothing to do: I end my letter, because I have nothing to say."

General Intelligence.

FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6, 1854.

The debate upon the Nebraska bill was continued to-day by Mr. Wade, of Ohio, in the Senate, and the prospect of any early decision of the question, as I have before remarked, will become less probable as the discussion advances; other special orders will intervene to keep this subject in abeyance. To-morrow was assigned for the consideration of the French spoliation bill; and Mr. Hamlin gave notice that he should call it up, but it may not give rise to debate. How long will it be before those interested in this just claim will find that their efforts before Congress are fruitless—that they are chasing a phantom? To be sure it is a $5,000,000 phantom, and several times has been within the grasp of its pursuers; but to expect a Congress now-a-days to do abstract justice at the cost of such an amount abstracted from the Treasury, is to betray little acquaintance with the characters of those who compose the majority of our national legislators.

Mr. Phelps, of Vermont, will probably be ousted from his seat, as I understand there is a small majority opposed to the right of the claimant—the question will be decided when next brought up.

The Gadsden Treaty, so called, continues to worry the President and his counsellors, and may he entirely withheld from the Senate.

The city is not so crowded as it has been, and the lovers of parties and festivities complain that Washington is dull. Among those who do not come here to save their per diem and mileage, is Senator Gwin, of California. His lady intends shortly to give a ball at Jackson Hall, her own residence, where she entertains with much liberality, being too small for the number of invited dancers.

George Watts[illegible]ston, Esq., one of the oldest and most esteemed citizens here, was buried yesterday. He has, if I am not mistaken, a son in Louisiana who has proved worthy of his parentage. CHRONICLER.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7, 1854

After some unimportant morning business in the Senate, Mr. Douglas again called up his Nebraska bill and proposed an amendment (which had previously been agreed upon in caucus) which, instead of declaring that the compromise of 1820 had been "superseded" by that of 1850, alters this phraseology so as to make it run thet the compromise of 1820 was "inconsistent" with that of 1850, and therefore the former is declared null and inoperative. This verbal amendment is said to have been made to satisfy Mr. Cass, among others, and that it will insure a larger number of votes. Mr. Everett, of Mass., expressed a desire to speak upon the amendment, but was not ready to-day—would be to-morrow, and moved a postponement.

Mr. Douglas resisted the move for postponement and again alluded to the newspaper account of the modus operandi of the opponents of the measures, which was to gain time to get up a feralent among the people.

It begins to be plain, however, that the alarm of the Senator from Ill. on this point is needless; the politicians cannot stir up the people; they have too recently heard the cry of "wolf" to be excited now. Besides, another Presidential election is three years off.

The next subject discussed was the grant of lands in aid of railroads.

Mr. Johnson, of Arkansas, called up a bill giving lands in aid of a railroad in Minnesota, and Mr. Dawson, of Georgia, objected to the passage of any more of these bills unless the whole subject of the disposal of the public lands was presented in some systematized shape. However, considering that this bill was for a Territory which had no representative in the Senate, as matter of grace it was allowed to pass.

Mr. Gwin, of California, inquired what was the number of the next bill of this description, with a view, as he said, of calling it up and making it, with all the rest of the same character, the special order for some fixed day. The next bill was No. 87, for a grant of land to Michigan, but, after considerable discussion again, it was found that 87 had already been passed! This announcement furnished Mr. Dawson, and Judge Butler of South Carolina, with additional argument against thus blindly giving away the public lands, and the latter expressed great doubts if the States themselves would make such a disposition of them as Congress was called upon to do. He believed that instead of giving them to monied monopolies the States themselves would be more likely, if they had possession, to give them to individuals.

Mr. Gwin persisting in his motion, it was found that the next bill was No. 88, for a grant of land in aid of a railroad from Algiers to the Sabine, and this he moved, with all kindred bills, should be postponed for two weeks.

After this motion had been discussed some time, Mr. Slidell inquired what bill was before the Senate—the Chair replied No. 88. Mr. Slidell moved that it be put upon its passage. Now this was injudicious in Mr. Slidell, and although the bill will probably pass the Senate, it will not be hastened in its passage by any such leger demain. I could not help contrasting this covert mode of reaching an object in the Senate, where there is no sort of necessity for it, with the open and manly appeal to the House made by Mr. Hunt in behalf of the widow of the talented S. S. Prentiss, for whom he succeeded in securing the pay due to her husband while contesting his right to a seat. The objection of any one member would have been fatal to the application, but Mr. Hunt has so won upon the regards of all in his brief intercourse with the body that no one interposed.

The House has been occupied by the Deficiency bill, and there is nothing in its detail which would interest your readers.

The war of the Hards and Softs troubles the administration amazingly. The determination is to throw away New York in the future political game, but the Hards will gradually draw the South to their side. In making an estimate of New York politics, it is not generally known or remembered that the spoils of State are as potent there as the National spoils. It is this wheel within a wheel that makes New Yorkers particularly sensitive to any interferences in their State affairs.

The President is very much occupied with the dispensation of patronage. In this respect, he has to take care that the Republic receives no harm, and that his prospects for a re-election are not damaged by personal neglect.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8, 1854.

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, the Senate was crowded at an early hour in anticipation of a speech from the Massachusetts Senator who now fills the seat of Mr. Webster.

Among the business of the morning hour was the passage of two bills granting lands in aid of railroads; the first, in aid of a railroad in Michigan, was passed by a vote of yeas 32, to nays 11; the second, in aid of the railroad opposite your city to the Sabine, was passed without a count.

Mr. Hamlin, of Maine, called up the French Spoliation bill, and had the same read and assigned for to-morrow.

At this point an amusing episode occurred which could only be appreciated by those present. The Senator from Texas, Mr. Houston, (who has recently cultivated his whiskers with much care and presents a juvenilo appearance) rose to a motion, which he submitted with much gravity and pressed with extreme earnestness upon the gallantry of his confreres, for the admission of ladies upon the floor of the Senate, a large number of whom, he said, were now anxiously waiting at the door.

Now it must be understood that as this motion involved a change of the rule, of which no previous notice had been given, it required unanimous consent to be entertained—a single objection was fatal.

Mr. Dodge, the elder, hoped that the consent would be given.

Mr. Weller, of Cal., rose, not to oppose the motion, but to express a hope that if the ladies were admitted they would endeavor to keep quiet. [Laughter.]

The Chair was about to put the question, and the attendant ladies were breathless with anxiety, when

Mr. Pettit, of Ia., summoning all his courage, yet with a trembling voice, "solemnly protested against the motion."

The ladies gave vent to their pent-up sighs, and a general movement of Senators and auditors testified to the disappointment that followed. Sam Houston, especially, looked disconsolate, and no doubt felt as wrathful towards Pettit as he ever did towards Santa Anna.

But my readers will no doubt ask how it was [illegible] candles shed a [illegible] throughout the building. He looks quite feeble, but [illegible] sympathy with Almightiness; we may well to brave a whole host of dames and damsels duly arrayed with fans and feathers, while all sorts of fires were darting from their piercing eyes.

The truth must be told—even if your correspondent should withhold it, the ladies will blazon it forth. If Vulcan had at all resembled Mr. Pettit, Venus never would have fancied him. Mr. Pettit is old, round shouldered, squint-eyed and bald-headed, and he know well, that if an hundred ladies should be admitted to the floor, it would be hopeless for him to think of winning a smile from a single one of them—hence his malice towards his better looking brother Senators, and especially to the hero of San Jacinto.

Mr. Everett then took the floor and spoke for about an hour and a half. His exordium and peroration were truly beautiful, and the whole tenor of his speech, which was kind and conciliatory, was rendered extremely effective by the mild and persuasive tones of his voice. His style of oratory struck me, however, as being better adapted to the pulpit than the Senate. He began by doubting the propriety of any bill at this time, for making Territorial governments in Kansas and Nebraska; but this, he admitted, was only a question of time. He next dwelt with much force upon the magnitude of the work in which they were engaged—in the language of Lord Bacon, they were the conditores imperiorum, and to be the founders of States was the greatest of man's labors. These territories would be in the future, to this country, what Media and Persia formerly were in Asia, the centre of a vast empire.

He alluded to the Indians in Nebraska, most of whom had already been removed once and some of them twice, and he hoped if their solemnly promised permanent home was to be again invaded under the tyrant plea of necessity, the Government would strive to deal liberally with these children of sorrow and oppression.

He criticised with great force and discrimination the last amendment of Mr. Douglas, which declares the "compromise of 1820 inconsistent with that of 1850 and therefore inoperative and void."

He quoted from Mr. Webster's speech of 1850 and read a letter written from here in 1820 by Mr. Chas. Pinkney of S. C., in which the writer spoke of the passage of the Missouri compromise as a great triumph for the South. In concluding, he expressed his conviction that although what he regarded as an evil, which was the growth of centuries, might not be cured in a few or many years, yet that Providence would in the end vindicate its highest prerogative, "out of seeming evil still educing good."

Mr. Everett was listened to with much attention; several of the foreign ministers were present, Mr. Crampton occupying a seat on the floor.

The House is still on the Deficiency Bill.

CHRONICLER.

Congressional.

Washington, Feb. 4, 1851.—SENATE.—Mr. Fish presented the proceedings and resolutions of a meeting of the citizens of New York, held in the Broadway Tabernacle, against the adoption of any measure to repeal the Missouri Compromise.

Mr. Sumner presented the remonstrance of 800 tax payers of Claremont, N. H., against the repeal of the Missouri Compromise.

Mr. Brodhead presented five remonstrances from different parts of Pennsylvania, against the repeal of the Missouri Compromise; all of which were laid on the table.

The Nebraska bill was then taken up, and Mr. Dixon spoke at length thereon. When he had concluded, Mr. Wade moved that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Monday next, which was carried—yeas 23, nays 17.

Washington, Feb. 6, 1854.—SENATE.—Mr. Shields, from the select committee on the subject of the wreck of the San Francisco, reported resolutions providing for medals and pecuniary rewards to those engaged in the rescue.

The bill to incorporate the Georgetown Gas Light Company was taken up and passed.

The Nebraska bill was then considered.

Mr. Wade addressed the Senate in opposition to the bill, and Mr. Jones, of Tenaessee, replied.

Mr. Chase's amendment to strike out the words declaring that the Missouri Compromise was superseded by the acts of 1850, was rejected—yeas 13, nays 31.

After some further discussion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—Mr. Stephens, of Ga., offered a resolution, which was adopted, calling upon the President of the United States, if he shall not deem incompatible with the public interests, to communicate to the House copies of all official correspondence of the Hon. Humphrey Marshall, late Commissioner to China, with the State Department.

Mr. Olds, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a bill abolishing the present mail steamer service and authorizing the Postmaster General to re-let the same in accordance with the regulations prescribed for the inland mail service. Referred to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.

Mr. Bissell, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported several bills, one of them to increase the present military establishment of the United States.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7, 1854—Senate.—The bill granting land to the territory of Minnesota, to aid in the construction of a railroad in that State was taken up, and, after debate, passed.

A like bill for Louisiana was debated till one o'clock and then postponed.

The Nebraska bill was then taken up.

Mr. Everett desired time until to-morrow to prepare his remarks explanatory of the reasons why he could not vote for the bill.

Mr. Houston expressed a similar desire.

Mr. Sebastian offered several amendments relating to Indian affairs in the territories, which were read and adopted. The bill was then postponed.

A bill granting land to Michigan for railroad purposes was taken up and debated at length, and then passed.

House of Representatives.—The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and resumed the consideration of the Deficiency Appropriation bill.

Mr. Clarke offered an amendment, appropriating $10,000 for the purchase of seeds and the collection of agricultural statistics, to be paid out of the Patent Office fund. He explained that foreign governments had sent to the bureau various kinds of seeds and bulbs, and the amount now asked was to enable the Patent Office to reciprocate the exchanges.

Mr. Jones, of Tennessee, thought that this manner of distributing seeds was a perfect humbug, as not one package of seeds in ten would sprout.

Various gentlemen took part in the debate, showing the importance of distributing wheat and other grains among the agriculturists of this country. The discussion continued for more than an hour; when

Mr. Pratt said this seemed to be a fruitful theme of debate, and afforded capital for those who talk for buncombe. While gentlemen professed to be friends of the agriculturists, they at the same time declare themselves to be economists. It is said that time is money. Now, would it not be well to give at once five or ten thousand dollars, and save that amount in time, by taking the question?

The amendment was agreed to.

Various others were acted upon; but, without concluding action upon the bill, the Committee rose.

And the House adjourned.

Louisiana Legislature

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 10, 1854.

In the House, Mr. Cronant introduced a bill authorizing the city of New Orleans to issue its bonds to pay the expense of drainage and underground sewerage, etc.; which was referred to a select committee of five. Also, an act to amend an act for the consolidation of the city of New Orleans.

Mr. Roberts, of New Orleans, introduced a resolution to-day instructing our delegation in Congress to use their efforts to procure the Naval Depot, which is contemplated in this State, at Baton Rouge. As the Secretary of the Navy has decided against the location at Algiers, I don't know of any spot more appropriate than Baton Rouge. It is the first highland that meets the eye after leaving New Orleans, and possesses all the embellishments which nature could give to it, and it only requires the aid of art to complete the picture which nature has commenced.

Many local bills were disposed of. There was nothing of a general nature except a resolution to change the time of [illegible] 12th, against the Nebraska Bill;

Mr. Lanes moved an amendment fixing the time for the third Monday in April. Both the amendment and the original bill were laid on the table.

The following preamble and resolutions were introduced by Mr. Lawrence, of Plaquemines, which lay over one day under the rules.

Whereas by the death of the late lamented Judah Toure, of New Orleans, a large residuary interest of his immense estate has fallen to Rezin Davis Shephard, who has, in the noble and disinterested benevolence of his nature, signified a desire to devote a large portion of that sum to the erection of a monument, commemorative of his benefactor, and to the improvement of Canal street in said city.

And whereas the erection of a State House in the centre of Canal street, at the intersection of Rampart street, fronting the Mississippi river on the east, and the New Canal on the west, built of proper proportions and of suitable materials, would not only commemorate, in an appropriate manner, the almost unequaled philanthropy of one who, while living, gave profusely and bountifully to the poor, yet suffered not his right hand to know what his left done; but at the same time ever stood out, in bold relief, as the most conspicuous ornament of the city, and at all time to come will fix, irrevocably, the seat of Government at the great emporium of the south-west.

And whereas another grander object might in connection with the same subject, be accomplished, by couvertieg the capitol, and other public buildings at Baton Rouge, into an institution of learning to be called the Touro University—Therefore,

Be it Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, that a joint committee of ——— members of the Senate, and seven members of the House be appointed, with instructions to take these subjects into consideration, and with leave to sit during the recess of the Legislature, and report within the first week of the next session, the probable expense of such an undertaking, and what amount the Legatees of said estate will donate, and what amount the city of New Orleans will subscribe towards the erection of said capitol.

2 Be it further Resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives requested to obtain from the United States an appropriation of the two millions of public lands in this State, for the purposes above mentioned. And be it further Resolved, etc., That the Governor of this State be requested to forward a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Letters from Florence.

FLORENCE, Jan. 7, 1854.

The aspect of Genoa, with its fine harbor, its palaces, its terraces, its balconies of white marble planted with orange trees and the ramparts that crown its vast amphitheatre is truly superb, and well merits the name of the "reale nobil vitta," so poetically sung by Tasso, and said, by Madame de Stael, to have been built for a Congress of Kings. Genoa is most impressive in its general exterior, and is best seen from the sea. The figure which it forms approaches nearly to that of a crescent. It is backed by a mountain which is fringed here and there with low oak woods and olives, the whole looking down upon the loveliest bay of the Mediterranean. Imagine to yourself a city with something of a theatrical form, at the base of a mountain, the sloping sides of which are gay with suburban palaces and gardens full of colonades of trellis work, covered with the red oleander. Add an atmosphere and a sun such as you see represented in the vivid paintings of the Venetian school, and you have Genoa such as I saw it in the month of October last. The city is very up and down, and many of the streets rise at an angle of at least thirty degrees; add to this their extreme narrowness, and you may easily imagine that they are not very accessible to carriages. Indeed, I have often caught myself wondering whether a portly gentleman, say of the size of the late Dixon H. Lewis, could make his way through them at all. But trains of mules, with now and then a great lazy rascal mounted on them, (the rider oftentimes larger than the ridden, and possessing par fois, not half the intellect and common sense) pass through these little vicola easily enough, and with their jingling bells and gay trappings add beauty and liveliness to the scene. In the older parts of the town the houses have nearly all an appearance of antique solidity, while in the newer streets they are distinguished for their magnitude, and especially in the Strada Nueva (new street,) for their unparalleled splendor. Indeed, Genoa may justly be proud of her palaces; and if you walk along the three continuous streets of Balbi Nuovissima and Nueva, looking into the courts and stair-cases on either hand as you proceed, you might, in fact, readily imagine yourself in a city of kings. The usual disposition of these palaces exhibits, in the first place, a large hall supported partly on columns, leading to a court surrounded by arcades, the arches of which likewise rest upon columns; sometimes on one side of the street, these courts are on a level with the external pavement; while on the other the rapid rise of the ground is compensated by a flight of marble steps. Beyond this court is the great staircase rising on each hand, that is, there are two flights of staire, one to the right, the other to the left, which, without meeting each other, pursue their winding way to the top of the structure. As you are about to ascend either of them, you frequently see immediately in front of you a small garden shaded with orange trees and parterres of gaily variagated flowers. The palaces are invariably open to the public, any ennant of course, a gratuity to the showman, who takes you through them and does the description. Let me here say a few words upon this subject of gratuities. It is, without any sort of cavil, one of the most abominable bores of traveling. The system prevails all over the continent of Europe (and even in England, where they ought to know better,) with more or less of vexatiousness about it, according to the diversities of national character. It is worse in Italy than anywhere else, but the traveler gets a foretaste of what is coming, in Paris. Waiters in cuffes, waiters in hotels, even cab drivers must receive something by way of pour boire. With regard to these latter functionaries, after you have paid your cabman his legal tariff and he politely requests you for something to drink your health in, you must not imagine that the few extra sous you give him, have any such philanthropic destination. Nor are the cabmen worse in this respect than the other patent evils of society whom I have just mentioned. No, if all the pour boire given in Paris were converted to its avowed object, one-half of the whole population would be drunk at least four times a day, and the other half would run great risk of getting their necks broken. This pour boire should properly by called the pour manger, for it is about all that the recipients of it, poor devils, have to depend upon for their own support and that of their families. But the great nuisance of the whole thing is that there is so much uncertainty about it. You are always fearing that you have given too little or worrying yourself with the idea that you have given too much. In Paris you generally give two sous to the waiter who brings you a cup of coffee for which you pay six. This is rather a heavy per centage on the prime cost of the article, but it is still a mere bagatelle to what awaits you in the hotels. The London Times has lately been engaged in a most righteous crusade (I think the only one it ever undertook) against the extortions of the English and continental Bonifaces, and the consequence is that there has been a great hue and cry in the camp of the said Boniface, and a Hotel Guide is about being published (monthly) in London, which will contain not only the names of all the hotels in the United Kingdom, but also the names of their proprietors, and what is more, a tariff of their charges. Would that the continental press would engage in the same holy warfare, and by so doing merit the eternal gratitude of all those whom fate condemns to taste the amenities of life in "furrin parts." The pay of the Italian waiters is generally about four or five dollars per month. I speak now of the caffés, but then every one who enters these establishments is expected, in addition to the amount of his bill, to contribute a sou or two "for service," and this money, which is called technically murno or marble, is dropped into an earthen vessel and distributed when the safe is full among the garcons. But I am wandering from my subject.

I believe that in no country in the world is female beauty so general as in the United States, and I will venture to affirm that more pretty faces may be seen of an afternoon on Broadway or St. Charles street, than in twenty-four consecutive hours on the boulevards of Paris or on the strada of any of the Italian towns which I [illegible] and the nobility unites in itself [illegible] individual free from this objectionable [illegible] all the highest types of physical beauty; in Italy, on the contrary, and indeed on the continent generally, it is the peasantry who bear off the palm of manly vigor and womanly grace from the degenerate scions of the aristocracy. With regard to the women this is very naturally accounted for, for much of the labor performed in America by men is accomplished in Europe by females hands, and the consequence is that among the lower orders the female form is universally fine. The tiptoe women are in general elegant in their figure and walk with the most coquettish grace, to which the odd beauty of their dress contributes not a little. This consists of a long robe of calico or muslin, generally the latter, which goes over their heads like a veil and falls over their shoulders and arms something like that of a capuchin monk. They suffer it to descend over the forehead as low as the eye brow and twist it under the chin; they generally have one hand almost up to the chin holding the veil, with their fingers beautifully disposed amongst the folds, while the other arm is passed across the breast. Their long trains produce the most beautiful flowing lines imaginable, so that with the elegant folds of the veil or cloak they are, when they move, the finest figure that can be conceived. When the veil is off no horrid bonnet shades their lovely tresses, and the fittest emblem of Cupid's arrow is the long silver pin that confines the glittering braids at the back of the head. As for the men they are laborious, and on the whole as dirty a looking set of vagabonds as the earth ever produced. I have seen very many without a hat to their head, a shoe to their foot, or a shirt to their back. They are more ill-looking by far than the convicts of the Bayne, who are still called galley-slaves, although galleys no longer exist. These latter are employed in gangs on the public works in different quarters of the city, and are dressed in red clothes and caps. The caps of those who have committed murders having a mixture of black, while those whose caps have a sprinkling of yellow were thieves.

If two or three public promenades of Genoa are not very good, the circuit of the great fortification is one of the finest in this world. This superb coast of Liguria has not indeed the poetical and literary associations which cluster around the Gulf of Naples, but this loss is amply compensated by the historic interest of which it is the centre. It was true that Raffaelle and Richelieu and Massina appeared as the representatives of the old and of the new military glory of France, and it was here, in 1800, that the latter, after a blockade of sixty days, during which the garrison, and still more the inhabitants, suffered the utmost horrors of famine, it was here after the city had lost 15,000 of its inhabitants and hunger gnawed so fiercely that as if in mockery the dealers exposed for sale their whole stock of confectionery and preserves that Massina, by his capitulation, more glorious, if possible, than a victory, laid the basis of his great military renown. The old fortifications are built of brick, and the sea dashes up against them with such violence that you can only wonder they have not long ago crumbled to a level with the shore. The promenade on their summit is a perfect sink of all imaginable species of filth, not the least item of which, it must be said, is human ordure, and it is consequently deserted for the magnificent white marble structure which overlooks all the shipping in the harbor, and behind which rises in the pride of their wonderful beauty the spires, the domes and the palaces of the fallen Queen of the Mediterranean, who seems eagerly to stretch forward to catch a glimpse of her fair face in the blue and mirroring waters of the inland sea. B

FLORENCE, Jan. 14, 1854.

The Ducal Palace, the most considerable in Genoa, and once the residence of the Doges, is now occupied by the town senate and government offices. It is on a grand plan, and its clever reconstruction in 1778 shows the talent of the Genoese architect, who had received orders, through excessive fear of a conflagration, to employ no timber in the construction of his work. It is now being repaired, or rather reconstructed—for two sides of the court have been entirely demolished to give place to structures more in harmony with the beautiful marble facade of the Palace proper. The statues of the luminous hall—the audience-chamber of the Doges—which were consecrated to the men who had deserved well of the Republic, and the last of which was the one erected by the Senate to the Duke of Richelieu were shivered to atoms by the demagogues of 1797. They were replaced, however, by provisional statues representing the Sciences and Virtues—statues made of straw, covered with calico and got up for the ball offered by the city to Napoleon during the pompous rejoicings that attended the downfall of Genoese liberty. It was a pity that, on this occasion, the Italians did not revive the custom of making living persons supply the place of statues, as was the case during the festivities that attended the coronation of Leo X, when a nymph delivered an oration in his honor from her niche in the wall. The magnificent Marcel Durazzo Palace which is one of the richest of Genoa in work of art, was bought by the king (Carlo Felice, I believe,) a few years ago with all its paintings, for the sum of six millions of francs. Its original cost was about three times that sum. It has two grand white marble stair cases to the right and left of the vestibule, and is the only one in the city in which carriages can enter and turn with facility, for sedan-chairs only were used in this capital in former times. I walked out on the broad marble terrace which commands an enchanting prospect in the vast blue sweep of the Mediterranean, and of the long line of purple hills which gird to the horizon. There is a private passage from the palace to the gulf-shore, in which the royal family can reach the sea in case of any emergency, or should they wish to do so without descending into the streets. There is also a sliding car, capable of holding only two persons, by which the king and queen were let down from the top of the palace to the level of the street, when they wished to save their royal limbs the fatigue of descending the stairs. The car is lowered by means of machinery of elegant construction, placed overhead and worked by three or four pairs of stout arms. I thought to myself that I should by far prefer the use of my own proper aids to locomotion to the risk of breaking said aids, or perhaps even my neck, owing to the treachery or carelessness of the men stationed at the windlass. Cogoleto will not give up the honor of being the birth-place of Columbus. But, notwithstanding the multitude of researches and dissertations, it is now pretty evident that he was a native of Genoa—an honor which the city seems but little anxious of claiming. But the following passage from the will of this great man, "for that I am a native of Genoa, since of her, and in her I was born," is a declaration that ought to be conclusive. The pretensions of Cogoleto appeared for a time well founded, from the fact that two Admirals, named Colombo, and natives of that place, sailed with Columbus in one of his voyages. They even pretend to know his house, a kind of hut on the sea-shore, which I found very fitly occupied by a coast-guard; on it may be read, after a number of miserable inscriptions, this fine verse in Latin—an improvement, I believe, by an Italian: "There was one world; let there be two, said he; and there were two:" it puts one in mind of "Fiat lux." Speaking of Columbus, I have in my possession a valuable relic of antiquity, in the shape of a large quarto of eight hundred pages, printed at Venice in 1594. It is written in old Italian, and is called "A Universal Historical Compendium of all the Notable Things yet Transpired in the World, from the Creation thereof, down to the year of our Lord and Saviour, MDxciiii." The history, after a long dedication, a long preface, an ode to the author, from a gentleman of great worth living at Paris, and a most copious index of all the notable things which are treated of in the present volume, the history proper, I say, after this long preamble, starts in thus wise: I give you the exact translation: "The highest and great God, having in the beginning created, out of naught, the heavens and the earth that is spiritual, nature and corporeal nature, and seeing that the earth, by the density of the darkness, was shrouded, divided on the first day the darkness from the light, giving to the former the name of night, and to the latter the name of day." After telling the world in general, and the Venetian public in particular, all about the creation of the sun, moon, etc., he, the historian, proceeds to inform us that the first man was called Adam, and that he was fabricated in the plain of Damascus; out of a species of red clay very abundant in those parts. Worthy Doglioni, after enlightening us on the mooted question of the creation of the world, and its first successor could you not give us one word of information as to the birth-place of a man, who, though he flourished some time after former Adam, and though he did not exactly invent a world, yet discovered one which amounted after all, to about the same thing!—you, who lived not a hundred years after Columbus, who were perhaps a boy when he was a man, could you not even mention the name of a greater man than your pipe-clay soft baked Adam—for after all, Adam's being the first man and the father of a numerous family was nothing but a pure accident—you might have been good Father Doglioni, or even I myself for that matter—whereas, I believe it is now generally conceded that Columbus possessed no ordinary share of intelligence. The dogs take you, Father Doglioni, (I come near beginning your name with a small d,) the dogs take you, I say, your dog's-eared old book with a picture of a man on the frontispiece, ought to contain something more and something less than it does; but after all, I should be sorry to part with you for your weight in copper. The Salazzi Palace, called "Paradiso," was inhabited by Lord Byron. He departed thence for Greece, but returned a moment when becalmed, a whole day within sight of Genoa, and he there had a presentiment of his approaching glorious end. Having expressed a wish to see his palace once more, he went thither accompanied by Count Gamba alone. "His conversation," says the latter, "took a melancholy turn; he spoke much of his past life, and the uncertainty of the future. Where shall we be, said he, a year hence? It was like a gloomy prophecy," adds his friend, "for one year after, on the same day of the same month, he was laid in the tomb of his ancestors." He also spoke to Lady Blessington in much the same terms: "Here we are in each other's company," said he, "but to-morrow we shall be separated, and who knows for how long? As for myself, I have something here,"—and he laid his hand on his heart—"which tells me that we are ogeing each other for the last time. I go to Greece, and I shall not return." Every place in Italy which Byron made for any time his residence, loves and respects his memory. At Venice, his sojourn in the place has passed into a tradition. Here is what Dunns in his memoirs, now being published in Paris, says of Byron's stay in the city of the Doge: "Venice had never possessed any horses except the four bronze ones which figured for twelve years over the triumphal arch of the Carrousel." Byron, who never went out a foot, was the first to drive a four-in-hand on the square of St. Mark and on the banks of the Brenta. It was at Venice that his life took its deepest tinge of romance. Here he lived, divided by his three passions for as many women, representing the three different grades of Venetian society: Margarita, Mariana and —— Alas! she whom I name not, she, the most faithless of the three, was the great lady. It was she, whom he loved more, perhaps, than any one else; more than Miss Chaworth, more than Lady Caroline Lamb. The woman of whom I speak, strange as it may appear, is at the present day, thirty-three years after the epoch of which we speak, a charming woman. I knew her at Rome in all the splendor of her beauty, and then she was almost as wonderful to listen to as to look at. She lived in reality only upon the remembrance of the great poet whom she had loved. One would have said that the time during which this love had lasted was the only luminous portion of her existence, and that she disdained to look into the obscurity which shadowed the rest of her existence. Then had I spoken of her I would have named her; then I would have related our walks by moonlight to the Forum and the Coliseum; I would have repeated what she told me under the shadow of those immense ruins where she could only speak of the illustrious dead who had walked with her over the same stones we were treading, who had sat with her on the same seat where we were resting. Oh, madam, madam! why have you been faithless to the memory of the great poet? It is true that Byron, with all his caprices and all his eccentricities, might not have been a very agreeable lover, but then you should have been unfaithful to Byron living and not to Byron dead! In 1821, Byron left Venice—Venice, in the streets of which no one had ever seen him walk; the Brenta, on the banks of which no one had ever seen him strolling—that square of St. Mark's, whose wonders he had never contemplated, it is said, except from a carriage or from the balconies of his windows, so fearful was he of revealing to the Venetian beauties the slight deformity of his foot which the width of his pantaloons could not conceal. From Venice Byron went to Pisa. There two new sorrows awaited him; the death of his natural daughter and that of his friend Shelley, who was drowned in crossing from Leghorn to Lerici. To spare a long discussion with the Italian priests it was resolved that the body should be burned Trelawny, the bold pirate, was there; he relates this strange funeral scene as he relates his lion hunt or his fight with the Malay Prince. "We were on the shore," says Trelawny, "before us was the sea with its islands, back of us were the Appenines, and by one side an immense funereal pile whose flames lashed by the sea-wind assumed a thousand fantastic forms. The weather was beautiful; the lazy waves of the Mediterranean languidly kissed the shore whose golden sands contrasted with the deep bl

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Fall of the Alamo.

A NOBLE TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF ITS DEFENDERS.

On the 23d day of February, 1836, General Santa Anna entered San Antonio de Bexar, and took possession of the town without firing a gun. The small garrison of one hundred and thirty men, under the command of William Berret Travis, retired as he advanced to the Alamo, on the opposite side of the river, determined there to offer such resistance to the progress of the tyrant, as their energies and resources should permit by a direct appeal to the God of battles. Flushed with the conquest, so easily effected, of the town, the Mexican Commander prepared for an immediate attack upon the Alamo. He ordered breastworks to be thrown up on every commanding point, and artillery to be planted wherever it could be made most effective. One battery was completed on the right bank of the river, by the 25th, and without waiting for others, the siege was at once commenced.

It is a dark and gloomy morning, devoted to a dark and unholy purpose. Exulting in the work of death upon which he is entering, Santa Anna crosses the river in person, and establishes his head-quarters in a small stone building—yet standing—from which he may the more accurately perceive the progress of his designs, without exposing himself to his enemies. The signal is given, and ere the sun has risen upon those hostile hosts, the roar of the Mexican battery awakens the echoes far and wide, and rouses from their slumbers the yet unconscious inhabitants. But the defenders of the Alamo have not, for a single moment, lost sight of the movements of their wily and implacable foes—they watch the studied direction of every gun; they see the match lighted, they listen breathless, as if even at that distance, they could hear the command to fire; and when the walls of the citadel tremble under the shock of the iron ball, and the fragments of the parapet are whirled aloft by the sudden impulse; they send back a shout of defiance, mingled with a discharge from their own guns, as distinctive, if not as deafening, as the thunder of their assailants.

Before the smoke rolls away, and the reverberations are lost in the distance; while the shouts of the besieged still linger in the ears of the besiegers, the cannonade is resumed, and for seven hours, without pause or relaxation, fiercely continued upon the walls of the Alamo But these walls yield no more than the spirits of their defenders. The fire is steadily returned; and though stones are shivered around them, there are stout hearts and willing hands ready to repair every breach, and to restore from the interior whatever may have been destroyed from without. Earth is thrown up; every crack or fissure is closed as fast as created, by the eager efforts of those who will permit no evidence of success to cheer the hopes of their enemies. The sun has almost sunk behind the western plains, when there is a pause in the work of demolition. The firing of the besiegers ceases for the day, with the Mexican thirst for blood unsatiated; not a single drop has been shed within the Alamo. Many of Santa Anna's own men have bit the dust, before the artillerists and riflemen of the fort; but thus far they are unavenged. Darkness falls upon the besiegers and besieged. The former raise new intrenchments to prosecute the assault; the latter establish a close watch for the night, and endeavor to seek that repose which shall renew their vigor for the contest which they know will come to-morrow.

The morning of the 25th dawns, and reveals to the occupants of the fort, the effect of the midnight labors of their enemies, in the establishment of two additional batteries within the Alamedo of the Alamo. The bayonets of the infantry which have crossed the river during the night, glitter in the morning beams, and the plumes of the cavalry are been waving of the eastern hills, to intercept the expected aid from that quarter. The contest is renewed by a slight skirmish between a small party on Texans, sent in quest of wood and water, and a Mexican detachment under General Sesma: but this is a mere overture to the grand performance of the day. The thunders of the heavy ordnance, under the direction of Colonel Ampudia, are soon roused into action; volley after volley is poured into the fort, and answered only, except at rare intervals, by the shouts of those within. There is no pause—no cessation. Still the cannonade goes on; shells fly hissing through the air, and balls bury themselves within the ramparts; but night again comes on, and the Mexican General in vain looks for evidence of success. Baffled, but not discouraged, he advances his line of entrenchments, and prepares, with the morning light, to resume his bloody task. The north wind sweeps over the prairies, as it only sweeps in Texas, a stormy lullaby to the stormy passions of those contending hosts. The darkness is broken only by the feeble blaze of a few huts,—fired by the Texans,—which had furnished a cover to the enemy. The flames curl upwards with a sickly glare, and their fitful flashes throw a lurid light for a moment upon the slumbering army, and expire. The reign of darkness and of silence is restored

The next day the Mexicans appear inactive, though engaged in the construction of additional batteries. There is but little firing on either side. Travis and his men, with spirits unbroken, and with energies weakened, but not exhausted, are applying their contracted resources to the purposes of defence. No heart falters; no pulse throbs with diminished power; no hand shrinks from the labor that necessity imposes. All is confidence and determination; and in every breast there is firm reliance springing from the holiness of the cause and the certainty of its final triumph.

Sunday follows: but brings no rest to those whom God has created in His own image, and who in violation of His commands, are thus yielding to their erring and unhallowed passions. Perhaps within the chapel of the Alamo, consecrated to the worship of the Almighty, and distinguished by the emblem of suffering and of salvation, which surmounts the dome, heads may be bowed in prayer to the God of battles for deliverance from their sanguinary foe; but that foe takes no heed of Sabbaths. Exclusive followers, as they proclaim themselves, of the true church, they doom to destruction the very temple they have erected for its worship; and kissing the cross suspended from their necks, and planted before every camp, they point their guns upon the very symbol for which they profess such unbounded reverence. The fire of the Mexican artillery keeps company with the minutes as they roll on. Morning, mid-day and evening are passed, yet there is no faltering among those who are defending the Thermopylæ of Texas liberty. Another sun rises and sets, and yet another; still the indomitable hearts of Travis and his companions quail not before the untiring efforts of their enemy. In spite of that enemy's vindictive vigilance, the little garrison receives from Gonzales a reinforcement of thirty-three men; additional victims for the funeral pyre, soon to be kindled by Santa Anna, on the surrounding hills, as a human hecatomb to Mexican vengeance.

New batteries are erected by the besiegers; from every point around, the missiles of destruction concentrate upon the Alamo. The final hour must soon come. Provisions are not yet exhausted, but the ammunition cannot last many days longer. Water has long been supplied solely by the daring efforts of a Mexican woman, who, through showers of grape and musketry, has threaded the way to and fro between the river and the citadel, while her own blood has marked the path. She bears within her the stern and lofty spirit of her illustrious ancestor, stretched upon the racks of Cortez, and it is not the fear of torture or of death, that can swerve her from her purpose.

The siege has continued for ten days. The Mexican General has received large reinforcements, and his army now numbers thousands. He has been unceasing in his efforts to batter down the walls, but has thus far failed. The triumph is with Travis; but it is written in the heart of his ruthless foe that he must die, and when the cannonade is suspended on the 6th of March, a small breach has been effected, and Santa Anna has determined without a summons to surrender, that the hour for the assault has arrived. During ten days a blood-red flag has been streaming from the spire of the church in San Antonio, proclaiming that no quarter is to be given to the champions of the Alamo—that blood alone will appease the fury of Mexican malice When the sun again goes down, the flag is no longer seen, for the dead of which it was the sign has been accomplished.

It is midnight. Stars are smiling in the firmament, and the repose of paradise seems hovering [illegible] the armed hosts, and hills, and plains [illegible] encircle the Alamo. The calm is so deep [illegible] that the angel of death seems to pause before the strife and carnage which are to follow. A low murmur rises upon the air, which gradually becomes more and more distinct. Lights are gleaming mysteriously in the distance, and indicate some unusual movement. The besieging army is in motion. There is no advance by columns: the force of the Mexicans is so great that the fort may be completely surrounded, leaving intervals only for the fire of artillery. The place is girdled by a deep line of infantry, and these are hemmed in and encompassed by another of cavalry. If the first falter or shrink, they must be thrust forward to the assault by the sabres and lances of their comrades. Suddenly the batteries are in a blaze, and from their concentric positions, pour forth a hail of fire from the circle of Santa Anna's vengeance, verging to a single centre. Amid the thunders thus created, their own shouts hardly less terrible, and the martial blasts of a hundred bugles, the Mexicans advance to the Alamo. A sheet of flame, from rifles that never failed, is the answer to the charge. The infantry recoil and fall back upon the cavalry; their ranks broken and disordered by the deadly fire of the besieged. The shouts from the fort are mingled with the groans of the wounded and dying on the plain, while the officers are endeavoring to reform their scattered masses. They return to the attack, but the leaden shower which they again encounter, fells them to the earth by platoons. Travis shows himself on the walls, cheering his undaunted followers. Around him are Crockett, Evans and Bonham, roused to a last struggle, for they know their doom is sealed. In quick succession rifle after rifle is discharged, sending hundreds to their long account. The Mexicans are again repulsed; they fall back, dismayed and disheartened by the dead and dying around them. The battalion of Tolsca—the flower of Santa Anna's army—is reduced from four hundred to twenty-three Men have become for a moment regardless of their officers, and are almost delirious from the cries of anguish of their fallen and expiring comrades, yielding to infirmness which no discipline can restrain, and no efforts repress. But the breach now appears practicable; the dejected forces, by the aid of threats and entreaties, are rallied, and once more return to the assault. The fire from the Alamo has for some time been growing slower and slower: Rifles have dropped from many a vigorous hand, now cold in death, while others cling to their weapons even in the agonies of dissolution. Ammunition, too, has been failing: one by one the muzzles drop; and ere the last rifle is loaded and discharged, the Mexicans have gained the wall. Fearfully conspicuous in that awful moment, Travis receives a shot, staggers and falls. He dies not unavenged. A Mexican officer rushes upon him, and is about to plunge his sabre into the bosom of the fallen man; when, gathering his remaining energies for a desperate effort, he bathes the sword to which he still clings, in the blood of his enemy, and they die together.

In the meantime, the conflict has become hand to hand, and has been raging hot and thick. The Mexicans have poured into the citadel like famished wolves furious for their prey. Each man struggles with his adversary with the energy of despair, dealing the death stroke with rifles, sabres, or whatever missiles may be within reach. The Texans are almost buried beneath the numbers of their opponents. The carnage has been so terrible that the slain are piled up in heaps. Death stares each survivor in the face, yet still he struggles on. Crockett has been conspicuous in the melée, wherever the blows fell hottest and fastest. He has forced his way over piles of the dead bodies of his enemies, and has reached the door of the chapel. Here he determines to make his last stand. At one glance of his eye he sees that the fate of the Alamo rests upon himself alone, and that that fate nothing can avert. Travis has fallen; Evans is no more; Bowie expires upon a bed of sickness, pierced to the heart by a Mexican bayonet: Botham falls directly before him, and he finds himself the only living warrior of the one hundred and sixty-three who had been his companions. Perhaps at that moment the life-blood creeps to his heart by a natural impulse; but it is only for a moment. The desperation of his position sends it back with the force of an avalanche. His foes glare on him with the ferocesss of demons, and assault him with blows from muskets, lances and sabres. The strength of a hundred men seems concentrated in his single arm, as he deals out death to his pitiless and unsparing assailants Their bodies have grown into a rampart before him. Blackened with fire and smoke, besmeared with blood, and roused into frenzy, he stands like some fabled god of antiquity laughing to scorn the melée, and the power, and the fury of his enemies. New fire flashes from his eye, and new vigor nerves his arm. On his assailants rush, but it is upon death, certain and immediate. They fall, but their places are still supplied; and so quickly, the dead seem to rise up before him, like armed men from the teeth of Cadmus. At length a ball from an unseen rifle pierces him in the forehead; he falls backward to the earth, in the streams of gore which curdle around him. No groan escapes his lips; no cry of agony gratifies the implacable rancor of his enemies: he dies—and the Alamo has fallen. [Putnam's Magazine.

Biographies of Sorrow.

One is astonished as he calls to mind the published biographies of recent years, to note the number of mournful works among them. Hayden's Autobiography is the last publication of the class, and as it is now being generally read, it gives us a text for some remarks.

The biographical sketches of Keats, Sterling, Poe, Letitia E. Landon, and Margaret Fuller Ossoli, are fair representatives of this sorrowful literature. Not, indeed, that they all strike as deep a note of sadness in our hearts, or illustrate the same aspects of human grief. One sighs amid the pomps of summer noon: another beneath the silent stars. The tone of this stricken spirit is low and subdued: of that, loud and blasphemous. Here, are plaintive utterances: there, terrible outbursts. But this only deepens the painful emotion. The thought forces itself upon us, that human life has a nervous network, delicate and tender, spread over the world, without as well as within, and that a thousand forces are playing on it with ceaseless freedom.

But these books are reducible to a single class. Their subjects are members of the same household, and their mourning robes, if not fashionable alike, are of the same hue. All of them walk beside the "Mothers of Sorrow." When they speak it is in the same strain, and if silent, their hearts throb the same pulse upon the yielding air.

It is easy to trace out the main causes of their sufferings. Man of Genius usually begin the world by a quarrel with Providence. So far from mending the matter in this way, they rarely fail to sharpen the daggers that pierce them. Such a warfare is the most unprofitable of all strife If these laws were unjust and cruel, it would be folly to contend against their omnipotence. But wise as they are; full of infinite moral tenderness even amid their physical severity, and ever seeking to discipline us in the patient pursuit of immortal aims; it is little short of madness to indulge a hostile temper towards them. The fact is, that genius is too much engrossed with its own ideal contemplations to care for its personal adaptations to the external world. It forgets that thought is not the chief purpose of life. Its dreams are not the Universe; its splendid creations are not exempt from the condition of earthly objects. Genius is a favorite with its possessor. But it is no pet with the seasons or with storekeepers It is down on the level of common humanity wherever meat and bread are concerned; and in matters of elevated happiness, it is subject to more stringent laws than apply to the rest of mankind. But Genius persists in claiming exceptional privileges, and because stern Nature turns a deaf ear and shows an indignant face, it surrenders itself to pettish tempers and bitter revilings.

Nor are gifted men less frequently unreasonable in their social claims. They expect too much from society. They expect it too, in the wrong way. The organization of the world is on principles of personal industry and earnest solicitude for one's individual interests. Whether this is right or wrong is no practical question it is so; and candidates in the race of life, eager for its honors or emoluments, are bound to take it for granted and act accordingly. But these men are dead against all such miserable conventionalisms. They have no sympathy with the greed of the struggle. The philosophy of work-shops and busy marts is their abhorrence. Of course, they have a right to their opinions. But if they take a rebellious attitude or even practice indifference to the rules of sober, every-day affairs, they must bear the responsibilities. They cannot have the rainbow without the storm.

In our day, society is the "chief of sinners," according to the prevailing fashion of opinion on this subject. It is the veriest Saturn, devouring its own children; the giant Moloch with its hot, brazen arms around the horizon. Personal guilt, in its myriad shapes, from careless-ness up to deliberate crime, is altogether an excusable weakness, a small misfortune. And thus, responsibility, is gracefully shifted off, and every man of neglected worth is busy is a trial of society for a ruinous libel on his fortunes. With what eloquence he pleads his injured innocence! Alas! for the cause and the client! A little common sense would soon secure a true verdict And if the grumbler would fall into the ranks of human service, and do duty in the open field of hard endeavor, he would soon get his share of the world, as well as acquire a capacity to enjoy its blessings. [N. Y. Times.

THE LOSS OF A WIFE.—In comparison with the loss of a wife, all other bereavements are trifling. The wife! she who fills so large a space in the domestic heaven; she who busied herself so unweariedly for the precious ones around her; bitter, bitter is the tear that falls upon her cold clay! You stand beside her coffin and think of the past. It seems an amber colored pathway, where the sun shone upon beautiful flowers, or the stars hung glittering overhead Fain would the soul linger there. No thorns are remembered save those your hands may unwillingly have planted. Her noble, tender heart lies open to your inmost sight. You think of her now as all gentleness, all beauty, all purity. But she is dead! The dear head that laid upon your bosom, rests in the still darkness, upon a pillow of clay. The hands that have ministered so untiringly, are folded, white and cold, beneath the gloomy portals. The heart whose every beat measured an eternity of love lies under your feet. The flowers she bent over with smiles, bend now above her in tears, shaking the dew from their portals, that the verdure around her may be kept green and beautiful.

There is no white arm over your shoulder; no speaking face to look up into the eye of Love; no trembling lips to murmur, "O, it is so sad."

There is no strange hush in every room, no light footstep passing around. No smile to greet you at the nightfall. And the old clock ticks and strikes, and tick—it was such music when she could hear it! Now it seems a knell on the hours through which you watched the shadows of death gathering upon her sweet face.

And every day the clock repeats that old story. Many another tale it telleth too—of beautiful words and deeds that are registered above. You feel—O, how often—that the grave cannot keep her.

OLD GRAVE YARDS.—Philadelphia abounds in aged grave yards, to which the dead have been consigned during the past hundred years, and one—that of the old Swedes' Church—where tombs of a much older date may be found. In the vicinity of Fifth and Arch streets there are three of these ancient grave yards. The one at the southeast corner of the above named streets contains the grave of Benjamin Franklin, as object of interest to the civilized world. A simple slab covers that spot of earth; but the memories of millions of minds and the affections of millions of hearts, grateful for his services to the human race, centre in that piece of marble. In the same yard are the tombs of many persons well known to the history of Philadelphia. In the old grave yard, on the north side of Arch street, above Fifth, are visible the tombs of Knox, Shipper, and other eminent citizens of past generations. Another old grave yard is situated at the corner of Fifth and Cherry streets, around the ancient Dutch Church, which is one hundred and nine years old. It is hoped that in the event of the sale of these old grave yards at any time, for the purpose of being built upon, that the hallowed remains of their quiescient tenants with be gathered carefully and re-interred in one of the numerous beautiful rural cemeteries, in the vicinity of the city.

DRYDEN'S POVERTY.—It was after prepsaring a second edition of Virgil, that the great Dryden, who had lived, and was to die, in heroess, found himself still obliged to seek for daily bread. Scarcely relieved from one heavy task, he was compelled to hasten to another; and his efforts were now stimulated by a domestic feeling—the expected return of his son in ill health from Rome. In a letter to his bookseller he pathetically writes, "If it please God that I must die of over-study, I cannot spend my life better than in preserving his." It was on this occasion, on the verge of his seventieth year, as he describes himself in the dedication of his Virgil, that, "worn out with study, and oppressed with fortune," he contracted to supply the bookseller with ten thousand verses at sixpence a line.

NIAGARA FALLS.—The Rochester American, describing the ice bridge which now exists across Niagara river just below the American Fall, at the foot of the ferry staircase, says:

It is formed of cakes of ice heaped up together in every possible shape, and rises some twenty feet above the water. It is already used as a highway for foot passengers between the States and Canada. In front of the American Fall the ice is piled up in huge masses, and covers the rocks and banks in every fantastic form, presenting in the sunlight the most magnificent appearance. Luna Island is one vast palace of ice, and all the banks of Goat Island are sheeted with the frozen spray. The Canada side and Table Rock are loaded with ice, and it is from this point that the splendid Crystal Panorama of the American side offers its glaring and sparkling front.

As one of our fashionably dressed females was passing up Court street the other day, (we quote the Boston Mail,) her feet suddenly slipped from under her and down she fell. A man passing at the moment, sprang and caught her just in season to secure her from striking the trencherous side walk with tremendous force. Upon rising her up she could only stand upon one foot, and evidently appeared in much pain. "I have broken it? You must have sprained your ankle," said he. But to all his anxious inquiries as to how she was injured, she gently replied she was not hurt. Still she hung on to the foot supported by the gentleman. He was about to speak for a hack, when all his fears were quieted by her hurriedly whispering, "I have torn my—my—skirt and got my foot into it." In a moment the pretty foot was inside the traces, and tripping off in a manner which plainly showed her opinion of icy side walks.

HOW TO ENJOY A KISS.—The editor of the Wilmington (Del.) Herald, who appears to know all about the matter, thus discourses about kissing: Of course you must be taller than the lady you intend to kiss. Take her right hand in yours, and draw her gently towards you. Pass your left arm over her right shoulder, diagonally down across her back under her left arm, and press her to your bosom. At the same time she will throw her head back, and you have nothing to do but lean a little forward and press your lips to hers, and the thing is done. Don't make a noise over it, as if you were firing percussion caps, or trying the water cocks of a steam-engine, nor pounce down upon it like a hungry hawk upon an innocent dove, but gently fold the damsel in your arms, without deranging the economy of her tippet or ruffle, and by a sweet pressure upon her mouth ravel in the sweet blissfulness of your situation, without smacking your lips on it as you would over a roast duck.

EYELASHES.—In Circassia, Georgia, Persia, and India, one of the mother's earliest cares is to promote the growth of her children's eyelashes, by tipping and removing the fine gossamer-like points with a pair of scissors, when they are asleep. By repeating this every month or six weeks, they become, in time, long, close, finely curved, and of a silky gloss. The practice never fails to produce the desired effect, and it is particularly useful, when, owing to inflammation of the eyes, the lashes have been thinned or stunted.

STATUE OF JEFFERSON.—A special committee of the Virginia Legislature have reported a bill which authorizes an appropriation of $10,000 for a statue of Thomas Jefferson, and gives the commission to Mr Galt, a young Virginia sculptor. The Richmond Enquirer says there is but little doubt of the passage of the bill.

M. Bediui, whose sailing from New York for Europe has been announced by telegraph, was compelled to make a secret departure to avoid the mob. He was put on board the steamer Active at Staten Island, and boarded the steamship Atlantic at the Narrows.

Female gamblers are becoming quite numerous in New York city. In some of the "hells" of that city the sexes are indiscriminately associated. From this there is of course a fruitful harvest both of crime and licentiousness.

THE CARNIVAL AT RIO JANEIRO.—Here, in the capital of Brazil, the carnival is compressed into three days; and the amusements consist in throwing wax balls filled with water upon every one you can. To vary this lighter fun, buckets or tubs full of water are also used, and many persons go about with large syringes holding half a gallon. The fun consists in soaking thoroughly every one you can; and, this being eminently a "city of magnificent distances," a person may be soaked with water a mile or two from his residence. It can scarcely be called a safe amusement in a city where the yellow fever is prevailing and where any such exposure is attended with serious danger. The better class content themselves with wax balls, and gentlemen from the streets and ladies from their windows, keep up a sharp contest until the ammunition on either side is exhausted The city is, however, given up to the rule of the blackguards for three days, and a respectable person finds himself, while on his way to business, or while paying a visit, surrounded by half a dozen scoundrels, who will very thoroughly soak him before they have done with him. It is worse than useless to offer resistance or to show fight, for custom has allowed the gang in such cases to set to work upon their victim with, fist, feet, or whatever is handiest and he is happy if he escape serious injury. This has happened more than once in the case of respectable foreigners, who, ignorant of the savage custom of the country, have naturally considered the assault upon them as one to be repelled, and have knocked down one of their assailants, all of whom have then, with courage peculiar to the Brazilians, boldly attacked the unarmed stranger. No age, no sex, no office is sacred; and the writer of this has even known the wax balls to be thrown at persons in carriages accompanying a funeral.

BALL ROOM BELLES.—It seems to be the highest ambition of the most beautiful women to be known as "the belle of the ball." To achieve this vain distinction she undresses and dresses with the sole aim of showing off her finest points, without regard to comfort, not to say modesty. Charms which nature intended as domestic secrets, "sweet and precious," are publicly exhibited in all their naked loveliness; and profane eyes and tongues are permitted to revel in unmuslined mysteries, sacred to poetic reveries and lover's dreams.

The extreme decollete fashion of dress—this baring of the bosom to the breeze of public breath, is a desecration of the highest form of beauty that the Divinity has yet revealed to man. It robs woman of her most ethereal charms, by cheating the imagination of its divinest allusion. The enchantment vanishes as the reality becomes transparent, and the goddess no longer floats in roseate robes of clouded splendor, but sinks from "high Olympus to the plains," a mere flesh and blood shepherdess of common life and common clay. [N. Y. Mirror.

LIBRARIES IN THE EASTERN CITIES.—The public libraries of New York contain an aggregate of 295,000 volumes. The largest of these is the Astor Library, which contains 80,000 volumes; the Society Library contains over 30,000; the Mercantile about 40,000; the Historical Library 25,000; and the Apprentices' 17,000. Philadelphia is not far behind New York in libraries. In all the public libraries of Philadelphia, the aggregate of volumes is nearly 240,000, a number equal, in proportion to the population, to that of New York. The largest in Philadelphia is the Library Company's collection, containing over 65,000 volumes. The Philosophical Society's Library has over 20,000; Academy of Natural Sciences, 15,000; Apprentices, 14,000; etc. Boston, with scarcely one-fifth of the population of New York, has more than one-half the number of volumes in its public libraries; and its private libraries are probably superior to those of any other city in the world.

In the three cities named, there are probably not less than three million books; a considerable number of them accessible to all who are able and desire to read.

COL. BENTON.—The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun says:

Col. Benton is preparing an onslaught on the Nebraska bill, in conjunction with the Pacific Railroad project. Col. Benton's opposition to the bill is much to be regretted. In the coalition formed by the present administration, it was a blunder to overlook and exclude the great men of the party. With the exception of Marcy, there is no prominent statesman in the whole coalition; and he, if I am not very much mistaken, is not a very willing—certainly not a very enthusiastic supporter of the Nebraska bill. He is, however, bound to go for it, strong officially.

CAPACITY OF THEATRES IN THE CONTINENT OF EUROPE.—A theatrical journal gives the following statement of the number of spectators the principal theatres of the European continent are capable of containing: The Grand Opera, 1,800; Francais, 1,180; Opera Comique, 1,500; Odeon, 1,550; Italien, 1,300; the Kurnthner-Thor, at Vienna, 1,800; the Burg-Theatre, in the same city, 1,070; the Théntre Royal, at Berlin, 2,078; the Theatre Royal at Dresden, 2,000; the Court Theatre, at Munich, 2,500; the Court Theatres at Hanover, Stutgard and Darmstadt, each contain 2,000 places; the theatre at Hamburg, 2,300; and the San Carlo, at Naples, 4,000.

DISAPPOINTMENT OF FILLIBUSTERS.—The New York Times states as a fact, that the cartridge factory at Ravenswood at the time of the late terrible explosion there, was engaged in filling an order for a million of cartridges, which had been contracted for, to be delivered by a given day. And as that "given day" happened to be a day or two before the day of sailing of the Northern Light for Nicaragua, the Times intimates that the order aforesaid was given by the Nicaragua Land Company, with a view to facilitate certain filibuster schemes they have in view in Mosquito and thereabout.

HOTEL THIEVES.—The New York Times describes this class and their mode of operation. The operator generally dresses richly, is arrayed with jewelry, viz: diamond studs, pins, rings, and watch and chain, of the most costly qualities. The acquaintance of some respectable gentleman stopping at one of the leading hotels is then sought, and if made, the rogue manages to appear very agreeable, and continues to court the friendship of his new acquaintance. The fellow is noticed by the officers of the house as being intimate with some guest, but he may or may not stop at the same house. Under these disguises he has full liberty to loiter about the parlors, drawing-rooms, and elsewhere about the premises, and, whenever an opportunity offers, an overcoat, cloak, or other garment, is abstracted, where temporarily laid down by the owner.

The oldest man married in Massachusetts last year was 76 years. Two brides were 80 each. The youngest girl who blushes and said yes to the question whether or not she would "love, honor and obey" a husband, had seen the roses of only 14 summers bloom, while the youngest boy whose marriage is recorded in the tables was 18.

The Tampa Herald of the 1st inst learns, by the arrival of the steamer J. T. Sprague, that four of the Indian delegation to the Seminoles in Florida have visited Billy Bowlegs at his headquarters, and that he has requested an interview with the entire delegation, a part of which remained at Cariesonhatchie. The whole number are now in the Indian country, but of their success nothing is known.

Mrs. Lucy Audubon has presented to Congress, through Mr Everett, a petition, asking for the purchase of the original drawing of the work of her late husband on the birds of America.

"Actors," it is said, "are bountifully paid in Australia. Mr and Mrs. Stark, from America," are reported to be among the most successful, receiving "£60 a week, though not first rate."

It is asserted in a French publication that the Empress Josephine's mantua-maker's bill for the first ten months of 1806 amounted to 175,887.—£7,000 odd—$35,000!

A vessel cleared from New York last week for Constantinople, having as part of her cargo 975 barrels of rum!

MOBILE CUSTOM HOUSE.—The Committee of the Alabama House of Representatives have reported a deficiency bill which embraces an appropriation of $65,000 for the completion of this building. The previous appropriations have been $200,000.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE ERIE RIOTS UPON PHILADELPHIA.—The Indiana Sentinel says that, at least $2,000,000 of the capital of Indiana merchants, which would otherwise have gone to Philadelphia, will be diverted to New York or Boston, in consequence of the Erie riots, and the countenance they have received from the city of Brotherly Love.

Hon. F. P. Stanton of Tennessee, addressed the Young Men's Democratic Association of New York on the 3d inst.; on which occasion resolutions were unanimously adopted approving of Senator Douglas's Nebraska bill.

Samuel Warren, the author of the Diary of a Physician, and Ten Thousand a Year, is engaged on a life of Sir Astley Cooper.

The city of Montgomory, Ala., was lighted by gas, for the first time, on the night of the 7th.

EDUCATION.

GREENSBORO' FEMALE COLLEGE,
GREENSBORO', N. C.

FACULTY:

CHARLES F. DEEMS, D. D., President and Professor of the Natural Sciences and Belles-Lettres.
REV. TURNER M. JONES, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and the Ancient Languages.
MONS. ERNEST JOUANNE, (of the College of Henri IV., Paris,) Professor of the French Language and Literature.
THEODORE WOLLE, Esq., Professor of Music,
MISS N. JANE SPEER, Miss NANNIE T. SPEED and Miss LUCY McGEE, Assistants in the Literary Departments.
MISS AUGUSTA M. HAGEN, Madame JOUANNE and Miss CAROLINE A. BLAKE Assistants in the Department of Music.
MISS R. L. SIMPSON, Drawing and Painting.
THOMAS C. BLAKE, Esq, Steward.
MRS. T. C. BLAKE, Governess.

This Institution is situated in a healthy part of Central North Carolina. It is under the charge of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In the selection of the Faculty the Trustees have had reference first of all to superior qualifications, and as far as practicable have obtained ladies and gentlemen of Southern birth and education.

The course of study is as full and as thorough as that in the best Female Seminaries. While particular attention is paid to the solid branches of education, sufficient regard is had for the ornamental; but above all the culture of the morals of their pupils is considered the great work of the teachers. Special lessons of economy are inculcated. The pupils are not allowed under any circumstances to contract debts Parents deposit money in advance. All the expenditures of the scholars are under direct supervision of the President, and their purchases are made by their teachers. Perhaps in no similar institution of its numbers have the bills of the pupils been so small in the aggregate as at this College during the past year.

The department of Natural Science is furnished with the excellent apparatus, some of the instruments being of the highest finish, with all modern improvements. Lectures are delivered on Chemistry by the President, and on Natural Philosophy by Prof. Jones, weekly, and are accompanied by experiments In the selection of the Professor of French regard was had to purity and accuracy of pronunciation, and the present incumbent of that chair possesses more than ordinary qualifications for his office. The practical use of the language in conversation is the aim of daily lessons.

In the department of Oil Painting the teacher does not seek to give her pupils simply a "pretty picture" at the close of the session, but the principles of the art are assiduously taught in the expectation that those who have special talent for design may prosecute self-culture after leaving the school.

All the principal teachers have had much experience in the business of their profession, and "thoroughness" is the motto throughout the whole Institution. The Faculty are working under this formula: "We are striving to make out the largest but the best school in the land."

TERMS:

$70 a session (of 21 weeks) for Tuition and Board, including washing, fuel, lights, furnished rooms and attendance; $20 extra for use of the Piano or Guitar, or for Oil Painting; $5 for Drawing or French or Latin. The Trustees believe that no school of its grade at the South offers such advantages on such favorable terms.

For further particulars application may be made to the President of the College.

The next session will open December 23, 1853. jan6-6t

BARDSTOWN FEMALE INSTITUTE,

REV. A. A. MORAISON, A. M., Principal.

This Institution is under the patronage of the Louisville Annual Conference, and is located in Bardstown, Ky. Bardstown is located on the turnpike from Nashville to Louisville, with a line of daily stages passing through, and is 39 miles south of the latter city. Bardstown is pleasantly located, and is proverbial for health. The Institute buildings are large and commodious, and the pleasure grounds attached pleasant and spacious.

The Institution is furnished with a full Board of experienced and accomplished Teachers, and the course of study as select and thorough as can be found in any similar Institution in the land. The school is permanently established, and in point of healthiness of locality and facilities for a thorough Female Education, on reasonable terms—this Institution offers peculiar inducements to Southern Methodists and to the Southern community generally.

TERMS PER SESSION OF TWENTY WEEKS.
(Board payable in advance: Tuition at the close of this Session.)

Primary Department	$ 8 00
Junior Class	12 00
Middle Class	15 00
Senior Class	18 00
Music on Piano or Guitar	20 00
Vocal Music	4 00
Drawing and Painting	10 00
Greek, Latin, French or German	8 00
Boarding, including Washing, Lights and Fuel	40 00
For Fuel in school-room in winter	1 00

The next session will commence on the 30th of January inst.

REFERENCES:

Rev J D McFerrin, Nashville, Tenn.; W H Hickman, M D; Hon O W Hite, Bardstown, Ky; Rev C B Parsons, Rev E Stevenson, Rev E W Sehon, Rev A H Redford, Louisville, Ky; and the Ministers of the Louisville Conference generally.

Bardstown, Jan. 5, 1854.—6t

EMORY and HENRY COLLEGE.

WASHINGTON COUNTY, VA.

THE SPRING SESSION of this Institution will commence on the 12th January, 1854. There is, we believe no College in the South offering stronger inducements to young men desirous of a thorough course of collegiate instruction.

TERMS:

Tuition per session of 5 months	$15 00
Board " "	31 50
Washing " "	5 00
Fuel " "	2 00
Contingent charge " "	1 25
	$54 75

With a location famous for health, with ample Libraries and Apparatus, with a full and efficient Board of Instruction, and with a degree of cheapness unparalleled, any young man with limited means, fair abilities and proper energy can here acquire a superior, liberal or business education. For further information address

E. B. WILEY, President,
Emory Post-office, Va.

jan6-6t

BUSINESS CARDS.

$50 TO $150 PER MONTH

Can be easily made in selling the

POPULAR BOOKS,

Published by MILLER, ORTON & MULLIGAN, successors to Derby & Miller, Auburn, and Derby, Orton & Mulligan, Buffalo.

From the wide-spread reputation of our publications,

Book Agents, Colporteurs and Canvassers

can be sure, with ordinary diligence, of doing well, as there is hardly a family in the country but would be glad to purchase one or more books from the list, if they were brought to their door. They are all Good Books, well printed, strongly bound, and sell readily wherever offered.

To all those desirous of aiding in the noble work of disseminating a pure and wholesome literature throughout our land, we offer a RARE CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY and do great good.

Catalogues of our Publications, containing full particulars, furnished on application (post-paid) to

MILLER, ORTON & MULLIGAN,
Publishers of Popular Books,
feb15 4t Auburn and Buffalo, N. Y.

DISSOLUTION.

THE Limited Copartnership heretofore existing between the subscribers, under the firms of Derby & Miller, Auburn, and Derby, Orton & Mulligan, Buffalo, is this day dissolved. Norman C. Miller, of Auburn, and Eugene Mulligan, of Buffalo, each, and they alone, are authorized to sign the names of the late firm in liquidation.

ELLIOT G. STORKS, JAMES C DERBY,
EDWARD MUNSON, NORMAN C. MILLER,
CHAS. F. COFFIN, WM ORTON,
EUGENE MULLIGAN,
Special Partners General Partners.

Dated at Auburn and Buffalo, Feb. 1, 1854.

COPARTNERSHIP.

Norman C. Miller, William Orton, Eugene Mulligan Elliot G. Storks, Edward Munson, and Charles F. Coffin, being purchasers of the entire list of Publications, Stereotype Plates, Copy-rights, Type, Presses, Stock, &c., of the late firms, will, with increased facilities, continue the business as Publishers, Importers and general Booksellers at Auburn and Buffalo, under the firm of

MILLER, ORTON & MULLIGAN

Dated at Auburn and Buffalo, Feb. 1, 1854. 6t

WHOLESALE DRY GOODS TRADE.

SPRING IMPORTATIONS, 1854.

JOSEPH H. PALMER & CO. have in store and are receiving regularly from the European and American markets their usual supplies of seasonable Goods, viz:

PRINTED GOODS, comprising Collections of various styles and qualities; Lawns, Jaconets, Organdies, Berages, &c

LINEN GOODS—Irish Linens of every grade, Linen Drills, Linen Sheetings, Table Linens, Brown Linens, Grass Linens, Brown Hollands Brown and Bleached Duck, Planters' Linens, Farmers' Drills, Linen and Lawn Handkerchiefs every quality.

SILK GOODS, embracing plain and figured Blk Silks, Plaid Silks, Foulards, Satins, Velvets, Florences, Shawls, Handkerchiefs, Sewings, &c.

WOOLEN and WORSTED GOODS, comprising De Laines, Barages, Merinos, Alpaces, Bombasines, Canton Cloths, &c.

COTTON GOODS, consisting in part of Brown and Bleached Cotton Shirtings and Sheetings, of every quality and width; Cottonades, Cornets, Chambrays, Ginghams, Checks, Stripes, Denims, &c., at extremely low prices by the piece and package only.

JOSEPH H. PALMER & CO.,
Importers and Wholesale Dealers,
feb18 47 Camp st.

M. DUBOSE,

ATTORNEY AT LAW,
Plaquemine, La

Practices in the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Tensas, and in the Supreme Court of the State.

REFERENCES—Messrs. Wright, Williams & Co., Messrs. A. J. Wright & Co., Messrs. J. T. Donald & Co., Messrs. Joseph H. Palmer & Co., Messrs. I. D. Fuller & Co, Messrs Race & Foster, Attorneys at Law, New Orleans. jy11 1y

JOHN HOLMES. L. CLAUSS.

HOLMES & CLAUSS,

GROCERS AND DEALERS IN PRODUCE,
NO. 8 GRAVIER STREET,
NEW ORLEANS.

SAM. HOWARSON. ALEX. BROADWAY.

S. & A. HENDERSON &

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 4. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1854. WHOLE NO. 160.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

JEWISH FESTIVALS.

FAST OF GEDALIAH.

The third day of Tishri, which is the morrow of the feast of New Year, is observed as a fast day in memory of the murder of Gedeliah, governor of Judah, by Ishmael. (Jeremiah.)

WEEK OF REPENTANCE.

This is the name given to the week intervening between New Year and the Day of Atonement. Various prayers are appointed to be offered daily, as well as penitential hymns—Selichoth—to be recited before daybreak. All who are able are expected to fast every day till noon (Sabbath of course excepted.) Although all this takes place likewise in the week preceding Rosh Hashanah, yet the Week of Repentance, being immediately followed by Yom Kippur—"Day of Atonement"—is considered of far greater importance, and is therefore much more strictly observed. On the morning of the ninth day of Tishri, the eve of the

DAY OF ATONEMENT,

it is the practice of all European Jews, to kill a cock for every male, and a hen for every female, as an atoning sacrifice! A most remarkable, although involuntary, admission of the necessity of vicarious atonement. For the Jews generally make this a chief objection to Christianity, and although they find it hard to get over the various sacrifices appointed by Moses, they say that in this respect he only adapted his mode of worship to the somewhat sensual capacities of his people; that sacrifice never was of divine institution; and that with the destruction of the temples and the dispersion of the nation, it necessarily became abolished. If this be the case, why make use of the Caparoth—the aforementioned "atonement."

The reason why chickens are chosen for this purpose in preference to other animals is thus given by Rabbi Ascher: "First, because they are within the reach of even the poorest: God secondly, many wise men say (with talmudical astuteness), that the cock is to be preferred, because in Hebrew the word Geber signifies cock as well as man: hence it is proper that Geber the cock should die for Geber the man!"

The father of the family generally performs this ceremony, first for himself, by taking the animal (white fowls, being clad with the emblem of purity, are preferred), and swinging it round his head three times, he each time says: "This be my atonement, this be my sin-offering, this go in my stead to death, and my I enter the realms of eternal life;" and then repeats Psalm cvii. 10-21. After this he lays his hand upon the victim, as was formerly done in the service of the Tabernacle and Temple, as described in Leviticus. Having thus procured a vicarious atonement for himself, the Baal Habayth proceeds to perform the same rite for the rest of his family. The fowls are then carried to the Shochet, who on this day is unceasingly employed in killing these birds. Each person must eat some of his own offering. Modern Jewish doctors find the whole proceeding a great eye-sore, and have, with a great deal of erudition, endeavored to prove the custom to be derived from Paganism; whether this be so or not, I shall not now stop to examine.

In order hetter to prepare for to-morrow's fast, they do not ubstain from food on the morning of this day, but on the contrary the Rabbies recommend nine meals!—the quantum sufficit for the two days. In the afternoon, about two o'clock, they proceed to the synagogue to offer the Minchah or Vesper prayer, at the conclusion of which, about three o'clock, a very curious ceremony is performed: each man in turn prostrates himself, on the ground, and receives "forty save one" stripes from his neighbour, in sign of humiliation and mortification. Our devotees, however, are not as rigid in this performance, as the order of La Trappe,; and as regards the pain inflicted by the stripes, I should say that "forty thousand save one," like these, would not kill nfly. (I may as well mention here that the day of atonement is the only one on which the Jews now ever kneel; and to do so on any other day would he deemed an act of idolatry.)

After they return from synagogue, they prepare for the approaching festival—for although this is a fast day, and they are bid in Lev. xxviii. 27-33, to "afflict their souls," it is nevertheless at the same time held the most sacred day in the whole year. Supper must be eaten a little before sunset, after which period nothing more must he partaken of till the appearance of the stars in the nocturnel sky on the next day.

Before going to the synagogue, they will take great care to be at enmity with no man; and many feuds and dissensions are settled on this day; for they truly believe, that God will pardon no one, who entertains malice in his own heart. An extraordinary solemnity prevails all through the congregation, and very great weeping and sobbing is heard from the women, and no witnessing stranger could possibly doubt the deep earnestness and devout piety of the worshipers. Something indeed may be detructed from the merit attached to such fervor from the knowledge of the fact that fear is the main inspirer of it. For the Jew conscientiously believes that the archives of heaven undergo an annual revision on this day, and that the names of those who are "found wanting" (in piety, benevolence, etc.), are erased from the "Book of Life," in other words, that those persons will die in the course of the next year.

The worshippers have their feet, according to the Eastern fashion, without the usual covering of boots or shoes, but protected by felt slippers, enveloped in their scarfs, the married men dressed in snow-white flowing robes, and caps to correspond (as on New Year), whilst numerous wax candles shed a flickering light throughout the building. These are as many in number as there are heads of families, each sending one candle to the synagogue. At last the signal for prayer is given by the Rabbi, and the minister begins to chant, in a low, scarcely audible tone, a formula, which is repeated three times, during which the plaintive, tremulous, heart-stirring tune gradually rises to a higher pitch, so as to be distinctly heard over the whole building. The service lasts to a late hour in the evening. Many of the worshippers, however, do not leave the synagogue at all, but spend there the whole night in prayer, meditation and study of the law. The morning service begins at daybreak, and extends over the day, during which time many of the religious do not leave their seats for one moment, and some stand the whole time!

The prayers are divided, according to the sacrifices brought to the temple, into the morning, additional, and afternoon service, to which, towards the evening, another termed Neilath—"closing"—is added. This portion of the service is remarkable for the ardor with which the faithful pour forth these concluding prayers before the throne of mercy. It seems that at the reflection that the gates of heaven, through which the prayers ascend are now being closed, the flame of devotion breaks forth with renewed vigor. Vanished has every trace of languor and faintness consequent upon the fasting and confinement to a crowded place, the air of which is tainted by the exhalations of so many individuals, and the burning of so many candles; and at the recital of that portion of the service, when the unity of God is acknowledged, the edifice reechoes with the thrilling burst of hundreds of voices, proclaiming, "the Lord, he is God," repeated seven times, and bearing in their deep emotion the stamp that they proceed from souls powerfully impressed with the presence of the Supreme Being, and quailing beneath the reflection that but for his mercy there would be no hope for them.

Night at last having brought the services to a close, the Shophar sounds a single blast, and the worshippers hasten home to break their fasts, after which friendly visits are paid and mutual inquiries exchanged respecting each other's health after the trials of the day.

I copy the above paragraphs from Chambers' Papers for the People, as entirely coinciding with what I should have said on this subject, could I wield so eloquent a pen.

COLUMBIA, S. C. JOSEPHUS.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

NORTH LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: Having recently made a trip through North Louisiana, I have concluded to write for your paper a short description of the country and people, though I confess my inability to do the subject justice. My observations were confined to Morehouse, Washita, Jackson, Claiborne, Union, Bossier and Caddo. Fifteen years since the greater part of this vast country was unsettled. It is now filled with the best citizens and planters—principally from Alahama, Georgia, Tennessee and Mississippi. They have hy their industrious habits added greatly to their wordly stock, and bringing with them a respect for religion, or a steady religious life, have inoculated a new country with all the polite observances and Christian deportment which belonged to them in the land they left behind. A disposition to imigrate from the place of their nutivity brought them out West, and here they have, or many of them, cheerful happy homes.

In the parishes I have enumerated there is a great variety of soil. First, on the rivers and bayous, the soil ie alluvial and consequently very rich; on the higher locations it is lighter; there is a good deal of sand in the soil und pine among the timber; the soil will diminish unless cotemporaneous efforts are made to preserve its fertility and prevent its washing.

This land is preforred by some on account of its cheapness, the little difficulty in opening a plantation, the diversity of the scenery, and, by others, ou account of its healthful appearance and the salubrity of the atmosphere. In traversing the country from Washite city, on the Washita to Texas, instead of finding a comparative wilderness, diminutive farms, and rough cabins, as it was, in truth, thirteen years ago, when I was familiar with it, we now find large, well-improved plantations, fine commodious residences, neat frame churches, large towns busy with trade and commerce, and densely populated neighborhoods abounding in the arts and appliances to produce comfort and pleasure in life. It is indeed a beautiful country; the lowlands are rather monotonous, but present the attraction of great fertility of soil; the uplands, without affording such large returns from labor, make up the deficiency in its perling streams, und scented woods and magnificent hills, and affording a wider urea for settlements and the enjoyment of a freer intercourse from society. There is no neighborhood of any extent, or but few, but what are blessed with a Church of some denomination of Christians. The Methodists are most numerous, but the Baptists have a large membership, and other Churches have their ministers and members.

Among the Methodists there are many of firm Christian character, who have few equals in the Conference for piety, intelligence and devotion to the Methodist economy. They have many ministers of merit and reputation stationed in that interesting country.

Brothers Randall and Scott were among the first itinerants stationed there since the country commenced rapidly improving. During my visit, I had the pleasure of meeting with Rev. William Stephenson, now eighty-six years of age, and in the fifty-third of his ministry, a superannuate of the Conference. He looks quite feeble, but preaches occasionally, can ride several miles on horseback, and is able to labor on his little farm. In his active ministerial life, it is said that his sermons were patterns, in primitive simplicity and strength of reasoning, and many a heart has been, und is still, fascinated by his strong, untutored wit. Many years since he was a Presiding Elder in the Missouri Conference; then coming to Louisiana, when the northern parishes were new, he traveled several circuits, and was, as he is now, useful to all who came within the range of his influence. Dear old man, he hardly recognizes his old friends, unless they are formally introduced to him, yet his active, sympathetic mind is constantly devising means for the welfare of precious, immortal souls around him.

Rev. J. C. Burruss is a resident of Caldo parish, and, after a period of forty-three years, engaged in the ministry, has a home abounding in comforts to rest his laurels, and in the evening of life and serene age, to give quietness and rest. He is a very active local minister, giving up his time and abilities to promote the work of religion. Long may he live, und, by his fervent spirit and eloquent tongue, and happy manner, be still further instrumental in effecting the good which his piety and interest for the welfare of souls prampts him to attain.

I would add, in conclusion, that there are a great many fine schools there, and academies, a higher order of schools, filled with interesting pupils of both sexes, and that in many parts of the country there has been, during the past year, large accessions to the Church, thereby making a residence there pleasant in regard to temporal as well as spiritual things. H. B. P.

TENSAS PARISH, January 21, 1854.

WORK AND LABOR.

There is a distinction, with a difference, in these words. The Rev. Dr. Bethune lately delivered a lecture upon the above subject before the Mechanics' Society, New York. He opened his discourse with an examination of the words "work" and "labor." He held that no language has two words of precisely the same meaning. There are what are called synonyms, but they differ in at least one appreciable particular. In the Sanscrit, which has few words, the same word has several meanings: but in a corrupt and adulterated language such as ours, words are many, with many shades of ideas, and hence the necessity of defining accurately the terms used in an argument. "Battles about words" are sometimes derided: but they should not be, for they are really battles about thoughts. A new word is not apt to be invented till a new idea requires it:

"When two words," said Dr. Bethune, "nearly synonymous are retained, it is worth while to examine them; it is so of 'work' and 'labor;' they are not, and never were, synonymous, though not seldom confounded. There is a difference in their radical meanings, which implies a great moral truth. Work is English, labor is Latin; I define work as the acting of an intelligent being, beyond himself, for a chosen purpose. The beast or machine works (or better, is worked) but under human intelligence. The bee and beaver work for themselves: but it were hard to deny that what we call instinct is a degree of reason. God is the great outworker who by his works shows his attributes. Where he gives reason, he gives strength and motives. 'Work' does not express all that is seen in man's exertions; we must add the idea of distress or fatigue; and so we call it labor, which is effort accompanied with pain and followed by weariness. The same distinction runs through all languages of which I know anything. The engineer's machine works, not labors; the seaman grieves for his ship when she labors, not works. We at once recognize the difference between a working und a laboring man; it would sound absurdly to speak of a skillful laborer; while to say one is a workman conveys the idea that he has a clear head and a disciplined hand. The artist works; and though an author may indeed have labored, he would not wish to have his work labored—the critic may soften the term to elaborate. We writers use labor to conceal labor; without labor one may strike out a few sparks—but cannot have the fuel for genius to ignite. Ready writers (I do not mean any disrespect to the gentlemen before me) seldom write anything that lasts long. The laborer in California pays for his gold with his sweat; but the workers in San Francisco and New York have the lion's share. Moore's verses seem poured forth like wine from a Tuscan vase: but his hand labored them out from the collection of a thousand vintages. We say an author labors; but when the result is brought out, we vindicate spirituality, by calling it his work. The Bible is the noblest monument of our language. I shudder to see any one put forth a hand to alter it. I often wish no preacher should be allowed to use a word not used in it: at least until approved of by the highest authority in his church. How many a high-sounding windbag would then collapse into a pucker of shrivelled nonsense (laughter.) The translators of the Bible always use work and labor in the sense I have given. The Scriptures are full of God's works: no man in his senses would dare to speak of His labors. With labor is associated pain, and pain means originally, punishment. We can educe important moral truths; work is a privilege, labor the necessity attending on it. The English aristocracy, of both sexes, are fine physical specimens contrasted with our fashionables—with the youths, who tease the bootmaker so to stiffen the leather that there shall be a calf somewhere else than directly under the hat. (Laughter.) Working is sympathy with Almightiness; we may well be content to labor, if we be only allowed to work. Work is a pleasure and a dignity, it is the vindication of our right to what God has provided for his children. Labor is, in itself, the result of degradation, but work may communicate some of its dignity to labor, when it employs it. I protest against some gross errors in the phraseology of Political Economy. We hear of the dignity of labor, but it can have none apart from the intelligent purpose of work. Labor is spoken of as the only ally of capital, and the wealth of a country as equal to the labor employed; while the labors on farm and in factory has been lessened one-third or more by machinery without the production being lessened. Let us set the cost of a product, not by labor but work. Those who call workers with the body, producers, and with the brain, non-producers, forget how a thinker in his laboratory teaches the farmer how to procure a tenfold increase. And so of the other professions; what would the world be without them? Political Economy has been called cold and heartless; the reason is, it has confounded work with labor." Dr. Bethune concluded with some severe strictures on what he termed "Poor Richard," taught to children before their catechism, and tending to make work appear desirable only as a means to money. He repeated that work should be regarded as a privilege, and an approximation to the Most High.

RELIGIOUS ASPECTS OF METHODISM.

There is such a thing as a denominational zoology. There is a certain temperament, there are certain mental tendencies, from which, if a man is not content to remain a Presbyterian in Scotland, or an Episcopalian in England, it may be predicted which other section of the Christian community he will join. The Wesleyan body is the great absorbent of warm hearts and fervid spirits. In the frequency of its devotional meetings, in the frankness and unreserve of its Christian intercourse, in the vigor of its responses and the soaring of its hymns, and in the benevolent vivacity which finds a post and an employment for every member, it meets many cravings of the young and ardent convert. Is he crying, in the gladness of his soul, "Sing aloud unto God our strength: make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob!" Alike in the cathedral and the conventicle, he is apt to be depressed by an organic solo or a rueful dirge; but escaping to the Methodist meeting, he finds their "glory" all "awake:" they are "taking the psalm, and bringing the pleasant harp with the psaltery, and blowing up the trumpet," and with exulting rivalry, "young men and maidens, old men and children," are praising the Lord. In the eagerness of first love is he exclaiming, "Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul!" But nobody will stop to listen; and so, for an audience, he is driven away to the love-feast or class-meeting. In the exuberance of a newly-awakened zeal, would he like an outlet for his energies, a field of Christian activity? In the sanctuary which he has hitherto frequented he feels himself a cipher. He has never been invited to engage in any scheme of usefulness, and, except the neat and noiseless sexton who bows him into his pew, no one seems to know him. But he has met worshipped three Sabbaths with the Methodists when he is recognized and accosted, and three months have not passed before he is installed in the Sunday school, or with a bundle of tracts, and a roving commission, is sent out into the highways and hedges. The portrait of the great founder on the wall, a box for Wesleyan Missions on the mantelshelf, placards of the next anniversary in the shop window, the occasional dropping in of a brother during the day, with friendly inquiry as to his health of soul, hearty hand-shakings at the evening prayer-meeting, and a vesper stanza from the consecrated hymn-book, all betoken the activity, the brotherly-kindness, and the cheerful piety, in the midst of which the young Theophilus has found his ecclesiastical habitation and his congenial home.

The Society which has yielded a logician so acute as the younger Treffry, and a systematist so masterly as Richard Watson, to say nothing of a scholar so erudite as Adam Clarke,—such a Society cannot be reproached with the lack of Biblical or theological learning. Nevertheless, the lovers of metaphysical divinity and Scriptural expositieu will not be apt to join a community whose migratory ministers and perpetual excitement make it a church upon wheels. Wesleyan Christianity is emotional and experimental; it has no attraction for severe reasoners and abstract speculators; nor is it adapted to spirits sodate or sombre. Its ready-made materials are the men of feeling; the sanguine, the impulsive, and enthusiastic natures, whom the grace of God makes the best evangelists, and the kind, humane and homely natures whom the same grace converts into the salt of our English factories, the living epistles of such rural neighborhoods as are blessed with their presence. And although the predominance of the emotional element in Wesleyan membership is not without its inconvenience and its perils; although it aggravates the task of the governing body, and renders periods of internal emotion vehement and almost volcanic; still, in the normal state of the Society, it gives a peculiar animation to the services of its sanctuaries, and an intensity to its Missionary zeal, far beyond the proportion of most of the other Christian communities: and from what we know of his ardent temperament, we cannot wonder that the Wesleyan Society was the church which, after his conversion, Mr. Williams joined.—Memoir of Mr. Williams, by Rev. James Hamilton, D. D.

The Rev. E. N. Kirk, and the Rev. Theodore Parker, preached discourses at Boston, on the 12th, against the Nebraska Bill.

AN EDUCATED MINISTRY.

That men of exceedingly limited education have been and are now usefully employed as ministers of the gospel, will not be questioned. Not only is this fact clearly seen in the whole history of Lutheranism, but in almost all the sister churches. There may be found men of limited acquirement in them all may more, of limited capacity also who are, nevertheless, very acceptable and useful preachers of the gospel within certain limitations. We have no desire to see the day come when profound classical qualifications will be regarded as indispensable to the public and Church recognition of a man as a minister of the gospel. We should just as readily desire to see it assumed that no man should be allowed to excavate rocks, or work upon machinery; unless he were familiar with natural philosophy, and an adept in civil engineering.

But somehow this concession of the usefulness of an uneducated piety has come with many to be regarded as equivalent to the position that because uneducated men may be useful, education is not an advantage to the religious teacher. We have heard, over and over again, arguments from zealous, well-meaning, intelligent brethren, which, stripped of their rhetorical warmth and coloring, amounted simply to this, that education is rather a hindrance than a facility to the minister of Jesus Christ. We are always pained when we hear any such sentiments advanced. What strikes us, too, as most remarkable about the matter is this: that generally these persons whose prejudices lead them to talk thus, are among the first to object to having placed over the congregations where they reside, men who are not at least very respectable in their general acquirements of knowledge.

The success of the early Methodist preachers, and the acknowledged deficiency in education of many of them, are sometimes referred to as quite a convincing argument against an educated ministry. But, if worth anything at all, we ought to be able to present corresponding results from the labors of the illiterate among modern preachers. If the success of the pioneers of Methodism was not all attributable to deficiency in educational training, it, seems to us that a great many, especially among the young portion of the Methodist preachers of the present day, ought to be similarly successful. But says the objector, the early Methodist preachers were more self-sacrificing and holy men. Ah, indeed! if that be the case, it throws the whole matter of success upon an entirely different issue, It was not the ignorance of the clergy but the holiness of their lives that gave them such wonderful power. But is holiness incompatible with a high degree of mental cultivation? Such an assumption is little less than gross impiety—an insult to Christianity—a reflection upon its great Author—and one that neither common sense nor gospel teaching can for a moment sanction. We know of no greater earthly blessing upon a community than a sanctified intellect of high cultivation in the minister who is their spiritual instructor. Just in proportion as his mind is invigorated by habitual thought: just in proportion as he has knowledge, (and knowledge is not intuitive, but acquired)—just in proportion as he has these things, and "lends his learning to religion," is he the better prepared to wage successful war with error and exert a controlling influence for good.

The objection that if God call men he will qualify them for the work is not a sound one, if he lose sight of the means of preparation. God does not qualify men by miracle. Education must be a progressive thing, and without some education no man is fit to preach at all. Increase his knowledge, his piety being equal, and you increase his qualifications as a gospel minister.

As an Evangelical Lutheran Church we ought to seek to be an intellectual Church, a cultivated Church: and most of all, a spiritual and an influential Church. We may be deeply spiritual, and yet not a very influential body. But we desire to be felt, to let our light shine. How shall we do it? We answer, by cultivating and encouraging every enterprise for good, especially those promotive of education. If education be generally diffused among us, then as our young men enter the work of the ministry we shall find them, in this respect, well qualified for the responsible positions they assume.

We now have a considerable number of colleges and theological seminaries in our Church; they are, at least for the most part, blessed with able faculties, and destined, we trust, not only to influence every portion of Church instrumentality, but especially the ministry. The truth is, (and it is folly to conceal it,) our greatest need as a Church at this moment, after increased holiness, is an educated ministry. Great good men are needed in every age and in every Church! God has blessed us with some, he has taken from us some, and others are needed. Why shall not the liberal soil on which we tread, and the free atmosphere in which we breathe, produce as many "great men in Israel," as many "eloquent men and mighty in the Scriptures," as any other Church in the land! [Lutheran Observer.

PEEVISHNESS.—Peevishness frequently gives rise to discord. Peevishness we may regard as a family canker. It is not like an acute disease in plants, or like the devastations of the locust and caterpillar, that cause vegetation suddenly to disappear. It is a corroding malady; it eats in, and eats on, till the vital sap is wasted. Whether the evil be communicated by provocation and example, or whether it be natural and hereditary, we cannot tell; but, strange to say, there are many houses in which there is not an individual free from this unfortunate disease.

The Gadsden Treaty.

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit to the Senate for its consideration, with a view to ratification, a treaty between the United States of America and the Mexican Republic, signed by the Plenipotentiaries of the respective parties, in the city of Mexico on the 30th day of December last. Certain amendments are proposed in the instrument, as hereinafter specified, viz: In order to make the duties and obligations, stipulated in the second article, reciprocal, it is proposed to add to that article the following: "And the Government of Mexico agrees that the stipulations contained in this article to be performed by the United States shall be reciprocal, and Mexico shall be under like obligations to the United States and the citizens thereof, as those herein above imposed upon the latter in favor of the Republic of Mexico and Mexican citizens." It is also recommended that for the third article of the original treaty, the following shall be adopted as a substitute—

"In consideration of the grants received by the United States, and the obligations relinquished by the Mexican Republic, pursuant to this treaty, the former agree to pay to the latter the sum of 15,000,000 dollars in gold or silver coin, at the Treasury at Washington; one fifth of the amount on the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty at Washington, and the remaining four fifths in monthly instalments of three millions each, with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, until the whole be paid; the Government of the United States reserving the right to pay up the whole sum of $15,000,000 at an earlier date, as may to it be convenient.

"The United States also agree to assume all the claims of their citizens against the Mexican Republic, which may have arisen under the treaty, or the law of nations, since the date of the signature of the treaty of Guadalupe. And the Mexican Republic agrees to exonerate the United States of America from all claims of Mexico or Mexican citizens which may have arisen under the treaty or the law of nations since the date of the treaty of Guadalupe, so that each government, in the most formal and effective manner, shall be exempted and exonerated of all such obligations to each other respectively."

I also recommend that the 4th article be modified by striking out all after the word attempts, in the 23d line of that article. The part to be omitted is to be as follows:

"They mutually and severally obligate themselves, in all cases of such lawless enterprises which may not have been prevented through the civil authorities, after information, to aid with the Naval and Military forces on due notice being given by the aggrieved party of aggressions of the citizens and subjects of the other, so that the lawless adventurers may be pursued and overtaken on the high seas, their elements of war destroyed, and the deluded captives held responsible in their persons, and meet with the merited retribution inflicted by the laws of nations against all such disturbers of the peace and happiness of contiguous and friendly powers—it being understood that in all cases of successful pursuit and capture, the delinquents so captured shall be judged and punished by the Government of the Nation to which the vessel capturing them may belong, conformably to the laws of Nations."

At the close of the instrument it will also be advisable to substitute 78th for 77th year of the Independence of the U. S.

(Signed,) FRANKLIN PIERCE.

Washington, Feb. 10, 1854.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

Treaty Between the United States of America and the Mexican Republic, Signed at the City of Mexico, on the 30th day of December, A. D., 1853.

In the name of Almighty God, the Republic of Mexico and the United States of America, desiring to remove every cause of disagreement which might interfere in any manner with the better friendship and intercourse between the two countries, and especially in respect to the true limits which should be established when, notwithstanding what was covenanted in the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, in the year 1848, opposite interpretations have been urged, which might give occasion to questions of serious moment. To avoid this, and to strengthen and more formally maintain the peace which happily prevails between the two republics, the President of the United States has for this purpose appointed James Gadsden, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the same near the Mexican Government; and the President of Mexico has appointed as Plenipotentiary ad hoc his Excellency Don Manuel Diez de Bonilla, Cavaller tirand Cross of the National and distinguished Order of Guadalupe and Secretary of State and of the Office of Foreign Relations, and Don Jose Salazar Ylarregui and Don Mariano Monterde as scientific Commissioners, invested with full powers for these negociations; who, having communicated their respective full powers, and finding them in due and proper form, have agreed upon the articles following:

ARTICLE 1. The Mexican Republic agrees to designate the following as her true limits with the United States, for this future, retaining the same dividing line between the two Californias as already defined and established according to the fifth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. The limits between the two republics shall proceed from the point where the aforesaid line intersects the river Colorado along the middle of the deepest channels of that river, and a point distant two marine leagues, to the north of the most northern part of the Gulf of California; thence in succession, a right line to the intersection of the 31st parallel of latitude north, with the 111th degree of longitude west of Greenwich; whence another right line to 31 degrees 47 minutes 30 seconds of north latitude, where the same will cross the boundary line, descending the Rio Grande or Brave Del Norte, to the Gulf of Mexico, as defined in the fifth article of the treaty of Guadalupe. And it is agreed that, should the line before described, from the intersection of the parallel 31 degrees of latitude north, with the meridian 111 degrees west of Greenwich, and thence crossing the Rio Grande in latitude 31 degrees 47 minutes 30 seconds, traverse the Lake Guzman; said line shall be broken so as to form an angle at a point distant one marine league south of the most southern part of that lake.

For the performance of this portion of the treaty, each of the two governments shall nominate one Commissioner, to the end, that by common consent the two thus nominated, having met in the city Paso Del Norte, three months after the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty, may proceed to survey and mark out upon the land the dividing line stipulated by this article where it shall not have already been surveyed and established by the Mixed Commission according to the treaty of Guadalupe, keeping a journal and making proper plans of their operations. For this purpose, if they should judge it necessary, the contracting parties shall be at liberty each to unite to its respective commissioner scientific or other assistants, such as astronomers and surveyors, whose concurrence shall not be considered necessary for the settlement and ratification of a true line of division between the two republics. That line shall be alone established upon which the Commissioners may fix their consent in the particular, being considered decisive, and an integral part of this treaty, without the necessity of ulterior ratification or approval, and without room for interpretation of any kind by either of the parties contracting. The dividing line thus established shall in all time be faithfully respected by the two governments, without any variation therein, unless by the express and free consent of the two, given in conformity to the principles of the law of nations, and in accordance with the constitution of each country respectively. In consequence, the stipulation in the fifth article of the treaty of Guadalupe upon the boundary line therein described, is no longer of any force, wherein it may conflict with that here established, the said line being considered annulled and abolished, wherein it may not coincide with the present, and in the same manner remaining in full force where in accordance with the same.

ART. 2. With the like desire to maintain the most perfect peace and friendly relations between both countries, it has been agreed that, to remove all occasion of dispute on account of reclamations to the present date, founded on alleged Indian incursions, and to avoid all contest upon the true spirit and intention of the obligations stipulated in the 11th article of the treaty of Guadalupe, the same is hereby abolished and annihilated. The Government of the United States agrees, notwithstanding this abrogation and annulment, to provide such additional regulations as the subject may in good faith require, making it a highly penal offence on the part of any inhabitant of the United States, or the territories thereof, to purchase or receive horses, mules, cattle or property of any kind, knowing the same to have been stolen within the limits of Mexican territory, by the Indians, or by any other person; and furthermore agrees to return on demand to their legitimate owners what may have been thus stolen, so soon as the same shall have been recovered by the authorities of the United States. And in the event of any person or persons captured upon Mexican ground being carried within the boundaries of the United States, the Government of the latter engages to use every fair and honorable means that the nature and circumstances of the case will admit, to secure and return such captives to their own country, or deliver them to the agent or representative of the Mexican Government, requiring simply the repayment of the officer or agent of the United States who may so deliver or return them, the expenses incurred in the maintenance and transmission of the rescued captives. Finally, the Government of the United States promise that, on any occasion she may have to remove the Indians from any point of her territory, and to settle thereupon her own citizens, especial care shall be taken not to place said Indians under the necessity of seeking new homes in the Mexican territory.

ART. 3. In consideration of the grant received by the United States, and the obligations relinquished by the Mexican Republic, pursuant to this treaty, the former agree to pay to the latter the sum of fifteen millions of dollars, in gold and silver coin, at the Treasury at Washington—one fifth of the amount on the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty at Washington, and the remaining four fifths in monthly instalments of three millions each, with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum until the whole be paid—the Government of the United States reserving the right to pay up the whole sum of fifteen millions at an earlier date, as may be to her convenient. The United States also agree to assume all claims of their citizens of whatever right, title or foundation, which may have arisen since the date of the signature of the treaty of Guadalupe, or which may not have been provided for therein, or of any corporation, company, or citizen of the same, including the claim of the so called concession to Garay, whose lawful existence Mexico does not recognise even as applied, thus extinguishing this among the other claims of citizens of the United States against the Republic of Mexico, said United States obliging themselves not to make any payment on account of the so-called concession to Garay, without having previously delivered to the agent of the Mexican Government accredited at Washington, all the evidence and documents used by the holders of said concession in establishing their rights and claims legally relinquished in favor of Mexico by such holders and claimants; and it is agreed in the reciprocal release of obligations that the Mexican Republic exonerates the United States of America from all claims of Mexico or Mexican citizens which may have arisen since the date of the treaty of Guadalupe, so that each government, in the most formal and effective manner, shall be exempted and exonerated of all obligations to the other respectively, whether of themselves or on behalf of their respective citizens up to the date of the signature of the present treaty.

ART. 4. The Government of the United States shall organize a Board of Commissioners, which shall meet in the city of Washington, or of Mexico, as the President of the United States may direct, within one year from the date of the exchange of the ratification of this treaty, for the purpose of examining and deciding the claims assumed by the United States in the preceding Article, according to the principles of justice, the law of nations, and the treaty in force between the two Governments, and whose award shall be final and conclusive, and the United States exonerating Mexico from all demands on account of the claims of their citizens mentioned in the preceding Article, and considering them entirely and forever cancelled, whatever their amount, undertake to make satisfaction for the same in a sum not exceeding five millions of dollars; and if, for the purpose of discharging their duties, the Board of Commissioners should meet in the capital of the Mexican Republic, the government of the same will afford all necessary protection for the continued pacific exercise of its functions, and will extend every facility in the furnishing to the Commissioners and claimants all such documents establishing their rights as they may require, and which may be within the extent of its reach to supply.

ART. 5. The provisions of the sixth and seventh Article of the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo having been rendered nugatory for the most part by the cession of territory granted in the first Article of the Treaty, the said Articles are hereby abrogated and annulled, and the provisions as herein expressed substituted therefor. The vessels and citizens of the United States shall at all times have free and uninterrupted passage through the Gulf of California, to and from their possessions situated north of the boundary line of the two countries; it being understood that this passage is to be by navigating the Gulf of California and the river Colorado, and not by land, without the express consent of the Mexican Government; and precisely the same provisions, stipulations and restrictions in all respects are hereby agreed upon and adopted, and shall be scrupulously observed and enforced by the two contracting Governments in reference to the Rio Colorado, so far and for such distance as the middle of that river is made the common boundary line by the first article of the treaty.

The several provisions, stipulations and restrictions contained in the seventh article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, shall remain in force only so far as regards the Rio Brave del Norte, below the initial of said boundary, provided in the first article of this treaty—that is to say, below the intersection of 31 deg. 47 min. parallel of latitude, with the late treaty, dividing said river from its mouth upwards, according to the fifth article of the treaty of Guadalupe.

ART. 6. All the provisions of the eighth and ninth, sixteenth and seventeenth Articles of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo shall apply to the territory ceded by the Mexican Republic in the first Article of the present treaty, and to all the rights of persons and property, both civil and ecclesiastical, within the same, as fully and effectually as if the said articles were therein again recited and set forth.

ART. 7. No grants of land within the territory ceded by the first Article of this treaty, bearing date subsequent to the 25th day of September, when the Minister and subscriber to this treaty, on the part of the United States, proposed to the Government the question of boundary will be considered valid or be recognised by the United States, or will any grants made previously be respected or be considered as obligatory, which have not been located and duly recorded in the archives of Mexico.

ART. 8. The two high contracting powers, fully impressed that, under the auspices of peace upon the basis of mutual good faith, and of respect which nations reciprocally owe, that their prosperity and well being must increase, especially when, from vicinity, their interests grow so be mingled and identified, and recognizing the reciprocal obligations of civilized governments and the laws of nations, agree by these presents, in proof of that entire confidence which they mutually entertain, and of that friendship which they desire to be as perfect, unalterable, and complete as possible, that whenever the tranquillity and interior repose of either country shall be threatened or disturbed by unlawful invasion of any of the citizens or subjects of either power against the territory of the other, respectively, they will cheerfully cooperate in their endeavors to suppress all such attempts. They mutually and especially obligate themselves, in all cases of such lawless enterprises, which may not have been prevented through the civil authorities before formation, to aid with the naval and military forces, on due notice being given by the aggrieved party of the aggressions of the citizens and subjects of the others, so that the lawless adventurers may be pursued and overtaken on the high seas, their elements of war destroyed, and the deluded captives held responsible in their persons, and meet with the merited retribution inflicted by the laws of nations against all such disturbers of the peace and happiness of contiguous and friendly powers. It being understood that in all cases of successful pursuit and capture, the delinquent so captured shall be judged and punished by the government of that nation to which the vessel capturing them may belong, conformably to the laws of each nation.

Art. 9. Should, there at any future period, which God forbid, occur any disagreement which might lead to a rupture of their relations and reciprocal peace, they bind themselves in like manner, to procure by any possible method the adjustment of their differences; and should they still, in this manner, not succeed, never will they proceed to a declaration of war without having previously paid attention to what has been set forth in article XXI. of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo for similar cases, which article, as well as the XXII., is here re-affirmed.

Art. 10. This Treaty shall be ratified and the respective ratifications shall be exchanged at the City of Washington, within the exact period of four months from the date of its signature, or sooner, if possible.

In testimony whereof, we, the Plenipotentiaries of the contracting parties, have herewith affixed our hands and seals, at Mexico, on the 30th day of December, A. D., 1853, in the thirty-third year of the independence of the Mexican Republic, and the seventy-seventh of that of the United States.

Signed, James Gadsden.
Manuel Diez de Bonilla.
Jose Salazar Y'Carzequi.
T. Marino Monterde.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25.

Meeting.—The Publishing Committees of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will meet, by appointment, at the office, 36 Camp street, the first Monday in April.

Rev. A. A. Morrison.—We would call attention to an educational institution so well recommended and organized as that advertised at Bardstown.

Book Store.—Mr. Fleming's advertisement will direct to one of the neatest and most freshly supplied depot of books, pamphlets and stationery in the city. We are pleased to learn he is meeting the good success he well deserves.

Harper for February.—The "cuts" are restored, and this great monthly is itself again. None but the Harper's could keep a magazine of such elegant finish and fullness, with its immense circulation, going forth with hardly an appreciable check, under the greatest book-fire that has occurred since the burning of the Alexandrian Library. The National reputation is felt to be involved in these chief representatives of our mechanical, mercantile and literary enterprise, and there is corresponding sympathy in their calamity and the way they overcome it.

By the way, if "36 Camp street" did not supply us with an early copy, we could easily find it out—they seem to be everywhere at once. The booksellers hang out the sign, the clerk-boys loiter on the sidewalks to get a peep at Punch's leaves, and the merchant, jolting home in crowded omnibuses, is ripping the fresh leaves for an ante-dinner repast. A few evenings since we were of a half dozen, seated round a table in a steamboat cabin, when, looking up to see what our fellow passengers were reading, we counted five out of the six with the "last Harper."

Ocean Springs.—A little trip on the Lake Coast this week had as much rest and pleasure in it, for us, as the dusty summer tour which many labor expensively through. We say little, because it was short—only two days. The elegance, dispatch and accommodating deportment of the Lake steamers contributed as much to this as the salubrious and beautiful villas that dot the coast. We speak now, especially, of the Creole, Captain Walker, and his polite, man-of-all-business clerk, Mr. Chapman, and of Ocean Springs. Patients, with stubborn maladies, have hovered about its salubrious waters all the winter, and, we suppose, when spring and summer sets in, they will be as thick as the pool of Bethesda. Several extraordinary cures have been wrought there. Buildings, both private and public, are going forward handsomely. A town is growing up with American dispatch. The track of the Mobile and New Orleans Railroad lies through it.

President.—The Board of Trustees and Visitors of Centenary College, La., on the 19th inst., elected Professor Barker to the vacant presidency. Mr. B. is now President of Allegheny College, Pa. When the Transylvania University was adopted by the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, in 1846, Professor B. was one of the faculty elected by that body. If we mistake not, his department of instruction was Ancient Languages. This is a high endorsement of his fitness as an educator; and the [illegible] beyond the action of the Board, that we at present here. It leads us to wish that the President elect may accept, and to hope much from his acceptance.

THE CZAR AND THE POPE.

Nicholas of Russia is ready to say with Jehu, "Come with me and see my zeal for the Lord." His religious feelings have, as he says, been outraged of late by—Turkey. Within her limits there are twelve millions of the members of the body of which he is the Head, who need, who claim, his protection, and they shall have it. He has sent eighty thousand warriors and is preparing to send two hundred and fifty thousand more to "the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

His church, or rather, the Russo-Greek, extends throughout a great part of Siberia in Asia, and also embraces the population of that vast region of the world stretching from the Baltic to the Black and Caspian seas, and from the river Danube to the oural mountains.

His claim, if good, to be the protector of the twelve millions in Turkey proper would extend equally to the millions of that communion in Egypt, Abyssinnia, Lybia, Arabia, Syria and the Grecian Isles.

The Greek Church is, he affirms, the only true church, of right the universal Church; and as the divinely authorized Head of it, he can tolerate no other in his dominions.

These high pretentions he backs with his sixty millions of people and with a political power and material wealth exceeding that of the Pope, or even that possessed or wielded absolutely by the Church of Rome in her best days.

His piety has been outraged in the least objectionable quarter if we may judge from the past. The proclivity to pick a quarrel with Turkey has long shown itself in Russian diplomacy. The encroachment upon Turkish dominion has been going on for the last three centuries. In 1552, Astrakan and and Kasan were taken from one and added to the other; in 1739 the port of Azof; in 1774 Crimea; four additional ports on the Black Sea and permission to build a Greek church—the germ of the present claim; in 1792 the cession of the coast of the Black Sea as far as the mouth of the Dneister, and the possession of Georgia and Kuban; in 1829, the islands of the Danube and the right of interfering in the internal affairs of the Danubian provinces; not to mention many other encroachments by war and diplomacy which subsequently yielded nothing.

This is the absorption of territory by Russia only on one frontier. In another direction she has absorbed Poland. Fifty years ago the Russian and Austrian frontiers were 200 miles apart: now they are contermianous for 500 miles; and if Russia obtains the principalities this will be increased to one thousand miles. Heretofore her frontier was conterminous with that of Turkey in Europe for eighty miles, but if she succeeds in her designs it will extend five hundred miles along the shores of the Danube.

To provoke the Czar's zeal for the Lord is, therefore, not unattended with danger. He differs from the Pope who would have civil power subserve the Church; he would have the Church subserve the civil power. The one rallies under "Cæsar and God;" the other under "God and Cæsar." Their aims are one—to subjugate the world by politico-religious power. If the Pope has less territory, fewer soldiers, and less money than the Czar, it can scarcely be set down to the fact of his being too religious to desire them. Ha! would he not give his great episcopal toe to stand awhile in the shoes of his autocratic cousin! However, the Czar is a good deal of a Pope himself. Peter the Great, in 1700, placed himself and his successors at the head of the Greek Church in Russia, and thus constituted the Russo-Greek Church. Since that time successive Emperors have completed the subjugation of its synods, dignitaries and membership. At present, no ecclesiastical act has force without the approbation of the Czar; every ecclesiastical dignity is in his gift, and his religious influence over the great majority of his subjects is as absolute as his civil authority. The systematic development of the Church as a means of establishing a religious and political unity of all the inhabitants of Russia was begun by the present Czar, and has been carried on by him with a most energetic perseverance.

A population of several millions, belonging to the Greek Church, in union with Rome, was in 1839 withdrawn from that union in a most rigorous manner, and many clergymen who refused to adopt the imperial ordinance for the rule of their conscience, were punished by transportation to Siberia. Attempts, and not unsuccessful ones, were made to seduce the Protestant peasantry of the Baltic provinces to join the Russian Church; and Protestant missionaries, who had been laboring for the conversion of Mahomedans and Pagans, in various parts of the empire, were prevented from continuing their labors.

The Czar has had decidedly the advantage of the Pope in his field of operations. The one has had to make headway in countries far advanced in civilization—suspicious of his movements, and which have once thrown off his yoke: the other has overrun a vast, semi-barbarous region, and converted immense hordes by the same act that extended the boundaries of his empire. By as much as this mass was easily and forcibly converted by so much is it to be dreaded, as a material and moral power in the hands of one man, such as perhaps has never been exercised by the monarch's of any civilized countries.

The more immediate danger which this power threatens is that of our American Missions in Turkey. At Constantinople, Smyrna, Brusa, Trabizond, Erzroum, Mardin, Mosoul, Urumiyeh, Bagdad, Basrah, Aleppo, Beyrout, Abeinh, Damascus, Safet, Jerusalem and Jaffa, there are flourishing missions, which have been established by American Protestant churches.

From the observations of recent travelers these missions have given a strong impulse to civilization and religious liberty throughout Turkey. Within a few years, the Sultan has secured, by a firman, full protection to all his subjects from religious persecution, and has granted to Protestants all the privileges of a distinct religious community; by which enactments the free circulation of the Bible is now secured. It is certain that the present rapid social improvement of Turkey would be greatly retarded by the success of the Russian arms.

It is certainly a great mercy that two such as the Pope and the Czar are not united. That was a dark hour when Herod and Pilate made friends. May the two Church-systems which they severally represent, so prostituted, so earthly, and so fearfully dangerous to civil and religious liberty, ever be against each other, as the last hate of the Whore and the Beast of the Apocalypse!

"TAKE A DRINK."

"This familiar invitation contains the philosophy of New Orleans political life. It is a more important condensation of wordly wisdom than any of Rochefaucault's maxims and includes more practical sagacity than Machiavel's most elaborate work. It is an invaluable vade mecum for the politician's memory, and the readiest passport to fame. At present it is universally practised, and will continue, doubtless, for some time a popular phrase. After the election, its intrinsic value may decrease."

This is the language of the Delta of yesterday, and when things have come to a pass that the secular press makes such confession, is it not high time to awake? If this influential paper deplores the state of things it describes, why did it not lend its influence, two years ago, to rescue "New Orleans political life" from its shame? Then was submitted the direct question—"License or no License!" The secular press was dumb. The question in some wards and districts was carried for "no license." According to law, those wards and districts were entitled to be rid of the nuisance of "New Orleans political life." Again, the secular, so able in its expositions of law about the batture, etc., and generally so independent, saw a servile city administration succumb to the "philosophy" of our "political life" and was dumb.

Because the different sections of the city voted simultaneously, they were denied the benefit of their separate action. Those that would be temperate are chained to the dead body, and there is no deliverance.

We are glad to perceive that "political life" is essaying another philosophy in the thrifty little town across the river—Algiers. Capt. Hughes, one of its leading citizens, informed us that the new State law, which went into operation 1st January, raising the whiskey retailer's tax to $100, instead of $50, as before, is rigidly enforced; and, in addition, the police jury have raised the parish tax from $50 to $200. Making the annual license of each of these pest houses $300. Yet, it is a circumstance of ill omen that seven out of ten paid it promptly! So great are their profits they thrive under a tax that would kill an honest business. The ligature must be drawn tighter. We shall have to come to prohibition.

THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

A Catholic journal enumerates sixteen newspapers in this country, printed in English, and devoted to the interests of the Papacy. Their names and localities are as follows:

"Western Tablet, Chicago, Illinois; Shepherd of the Valley, St. Louis, Mo.; Catholic Vindicator, Detroit, Mich.; New York Freeman's Journal, American Colt, and New York Truth-Teller, all in the city of New York; Buffalo Sentinel, Buffalo, N. Y.; The Pilot, Boston, Mass.: Catholic Herald and Catholic Instructor, Philadelphia, Pa.; Pittsburg Catholic, Pittsburg, Pa.; Catholic Mirror, Baltimore, Md.; U. S. Catholic Miscellany, Charleston, S. C.; Catholic Messengor, New Orleans, La.; Catholic Telegraph, Cincinnati, Ohio; and Catholic Standard, San Francisco, California.

"Not a very formidable force, surely, considering the extent of the field, and the arduous work to be done. It is also observable that six of the most important of these are edited by renegade Protestants, who not only make the best editors but the bitterest controvertists and defenders of Popery. This fact would seem to show at least two things: that Catholicism is not the best friend of intellectual culture, and that none make such bitter zealots as apostates. [Evangelist.

Doctor Eliphalet Nott, who, for fifty years, has been President of Union College, last month made it a donation of money, securities and property, estimated to be worth more than $600,000. When Doctor Nott undertook the management of Union College, it was in a sickly and unpromising condition; from which it was mainly raised by his untiring industry, his prudence, and his great abilities. It is now one of the wealthiest colleges in the country. While he was doing this he made himself known as an inventor and author, and by laborious research and industry has been amassing a large private fortune. But this, he has jealously kept sacred, not for himself, but for the cherished object of his life. Grown to almost princely proportions, he uses it now, in accordance with his long entertained purpose, a series of endowments that will place Union College above every similar institution in the land.

METHODIST PRESS.

Sunday Varieties.—The Buffalo Advocate is almost hopeless of us here; and the "Northern," a good while ago, doomed us to return to the swamps again. As for the latter—no fear. The Crescent City is going ahead. As for the former—too much truth in the tale of wickedness. But, under God, matters are mending. We hope, by and by, to present a better bill of fare than the following, which the Advocate copies in part from the New York Dutchmen. Sad enough picture. Come over and help us. Don't stand away off there, quaking at the idea of yellow fever and uttering jeremiads. Jonah did not pity Nineveh in that way:

The way they mix Sabbath matters in New Orleans is rather more picturesque than commendable. From the Delta, dated Sunday, January 15, we clip the following:

"SUNDAY NOTICES."

The Rev. Theodore Clapp will preach in the First Congregational Church in St. Charles street, at 11 o'clock this morning.

The Rev. Sylvester Woodbridge, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, corner of Camp and Calliope streets, will preach this morning at 11 o'clock, and in the evening at 7 o'clock. Eligible seats reserved for visitors and strangers.

The Rev Dr Pierce, of Georgia, will preach in Carondolet street Church, at 11 A. M., to-day, and also in the evening. A collection towards the expense of building Morena street Church will be made in the morning.

The Rev. A. T. Mann, of the Georgia Conference, will preach in Felicity st. Church.

A purse of $300 will be contested for to-day at 12 o'clock, over the Metairie Course, the race being one mile heats, best three in five. This kind of race makes betting spirited, and is always popular with the crowd.

There will be a trotting match over the Union Course to-day, for $900; between Flora Temple and Green Mountain Maid. Both of the mares are celebrated for great speed. The trot takes place at 12 o'clock M.

Miss Julia Dean, this evening, is to appear at the St. Charles Theatre, in her favorite part of Madeline, the Belle of the Faubourg.

Mrs. Charles Howard and her husband make their re-appearance at Placide's Varieties this evening in the play of the Striking Likeness.

A "chicken dispute" also came off on the same day, while the evening was enlivened with four concerts and a military ball. A great city that New Orleans. We wonder where they expect to go to? Deacon Jones says they will "take the down train and bring up in the great depot of Beelzebub." "Shouldn't wonder a mite."

Now the right hand column is relieved somewhat by these considerations:—the Monday morning papers often speak of the thin attendance of the day before as thin, and smart actors do not now, as formerly, choose Sunday night's performance for a benefit. There is some improvement—much—though room for more. Upon the left hand column we remark that Dr. C.'s congregation are building a church on the corner of St. Charles and Julia streets, octagonal form, cost $70,000—as large as a theatre and finer. At Mr. Woodbridge's church there has lately been a protracted meeting of much interest—a revival. And the two Georgia preachers had full houses, to whom they gave a substantial benefit. And at night an immense Bible meeting was held in Odd Fellows' Hall, and $1600 collected for building the New Orleans Bible House. The scale is turning for good. Let us take courage.

A Vindication.—Our cotemporary of the Memphis Advocate will see that Noah, Job, and—the Devil get their dues:

We put these three persons in the same category, not because of their similarity of character, but because of the similarity of usage with which their names frequently ment. Even the Devil should have his due, and Noah and Job most undoubtedly. Well, then, we say, that they are three of the most slandered individuals on earth. Do you ever see a drawer or a secretary with its various contents thrown into the most admirable confusion? Forthwith it is called Noah's Ark. This is false. Noah's Ark was a model of order and arrangement. Do you see a person fretting at the most inconsiderable trifles? They declare that they have enough to try the patience of Job. Not so. Job's trials are unparalelled in domestic history. Do you see an individual constantly giving way to inordinate passions? He declares the Devil is incessantly persecuting him. No such thing; it is his own wicked heart. Here, then, are three old and popular slanders, which it is high time should be put down in this age of progress.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate is going ahead. Truly, it has a great mission, as the editor and agents seem to be aware. It is now closing the first half of third vol., with 4000 copies issued weekly, and increasing at the rate of 200 per month. The editor thinks it the best point in the Church, for a paper, and talks as a seer:

The next paper regularly established by the M. E. Church, South, anywhere near this latitude, and west of the Mississippi river, will likely be established in the city of Santa Fe, and he done about the time of the General Conference of 1862, or 1866 at the furthest, if indeed it should not be necessary to do so in 1858. And now mark our prediction. By the General Conference of 1862, the St. Louis Christian Advocate, if properly conducted, will have the largest number of subscribers, and the most extensive circulation of any paper in the bounds of the M. E. Church, South! Nor would it at all surprise us if such should be reported to be the case at the General Conference of 1858.

The last two numbers, brought by same mail, are marked with unusual editorial activity. Brother McAnally takes ground against exempting churches and church property from taxation. Regards it as acknowledging a principle, which, carried out, leads to union of Church and State. The Church prospers best when let alone—wants no patronage. But the main point upon which the apprehensions of our cotemporary bear may be gathered from the following:

When some particular denomination shall have gathered millions upon millions of dollars worth of property, which, as a sect, they hold exempt from taxation, while the same individuals composing this sect have very little individual property, and others, not of that sect, have to pay heavily for the protection of that Church property, then it will be felt as a burden. This is now the case to a considerable extent in many of our large cities, and the evil is increasing every day. Already it demands the serious attention of every good citizen, and the sooner the proper remedy is applied the better.

The following may give a hint of our excellent cotemporary's views about strengthening the Episcopacy. It is a small part of a description of the men fit for that office. Not quite so terse as St. Paul's. The impression it makes on our mind is a pleasant, but not very definite one. The outlines are not sharp, but sufficiently comprehensive:

Finally. Give us for our bishops whole men—not parts of men—men of clear heads and warm hearts, who "know their duty, and dare to do it"—men whose intellectual range is wide, whose penetration is deep, whose discriminations are clear, ready and just, whose judgment is well-balanced and correct, who are possessed of a large share of that valuable commodity called "common sense," united with a warm and faithful heart, where dwell all those graces which adorn the Christian character, and unitedly constitute, in the fullest sense of the word, the Christian gentleman, characterized by zeal, energy, perseverance, faith, love and holiness—men who have been tried under a variety of circumstances, and amid a variety of scenes, from all of which they have come, "like gold tried in the furnace," all the purer, brighter, and the better for the burning. Give us two or three such men, in connection with those we now have, and when it please God to call them to their reward on high, He will see to it that the mantle will fall on some Elisha, who will thereby be prepared to take their place on earth.

An Old Fogy.—A writer, of Jersey city, in an article in the Advocate and Journal, makes light of a plan for a great Central Methodist Seminary.

We suspect he is an old fogy, in an uncommon mood of humor. Instead, he proposes the establishment of an institution to be called the "Central Salvation Seminary," of which some preacher, with the degree of P. P. R.—Professor of Plenty of Religion—shall be president, and in which there shall be a professor of prayer meetings, a professor of class meetings, a professor of pastoral duties, and a professor of manual labor. He suggests the location of the Central Salvation Seminary in the vicinity of Baltimore, where Gospel grace and Jerusalem fire can be had in plenteous quantities.

The Central Christian Advocate, organ of the M. E. Church, North, published at St. Louis, tells us that the editor of the Shepherd of the Valley recently made a trip to Chicago for the purpose of delivering a lecture there. On his return he gave his readers a sketch of his trip, in the course of which he complimented the Romanists of Chicago, by saying that "St. Louis itself, the Rome of the United States, can boast no more uncompromising Catholics," etc.

The editor demurs, and presents facts to face this boasting:

"Rome of the United States?" Thank God, not yet! Despite Jesuit cunning and forecast, planning and maneuvering, not yet, not yet! Protestants have not stood idly by, and suffered the field to be occupied to their entire exclusion. Evangelical religion has not only obtained a foothold but a permanent lodgement here. Side by side with their Roman neighbors, have been reared the places of true worship, until now Protestants can point to their numerous heavenward spires and thank God and take courage. Thirty years ago, and Rome possessed the entire field. This day Protestant churches outnumber as four to one, and Protestantism is the prevailing influence, and is daily acquiring increased strength and energy.

Female Colleges.—The South Carolina Conference has entered late, but advisedly, into female education. We like the way they went about it. The locations chosen are regarded the best—Columbia for the low and middle country—Spartanburg for the up country. They are both of easy access by railroads from all parts of the State, and doubtless patronage will be ample. The S. C. Advocate says:

"The Convention for the purpose of locating one or more Female Colleges under the special patronage of the South Carolina Conference, was held in Columbia, on Wednesday, the 8th inst. The Conference, at its late session, in order to secure general satisfaction and cordial co-operation in the important enterprise of establishing seminaries of the highest grade for female education, ordered that a Convention should be held at the earliest practicable time, composed of delegates from all the localities applying for such establishments, and of five representatives from its own body. To this Convention it left the final settlement of the number and location of the Colleges, and the measures necessary to their immediate establishment.

"The following places were represented in the Convention:

Columbia, Camden, Newberry, Laurens, Union, Williamston, Buncombe and Spartanburg.

"The deliberations of the Convention were full, spirited and courteous; extending through a morning and afternoon session; and terminating in the selection, at the first ballot, of Columbia and Spartanburg as the sites for locating two Female Colleges under the control and patronage of the Conference. A communication from the town of Lenoir, in North Carolina, informed the Convention that arrangements had been made and a sufficient amount subscribed for a Female College there, and asking that it should be recommended to the patronage of the Conference. This was accordingly done. The following gentlemen were appointed a building committee for the Columbia Female College:

Messrs. A. Wallace, W. W. Walker, S. S. McCully, T. H. Wade and R. Bryce. For the Spartanburg College, Messrs. S. Bobo, J. W. Tucker, J. B. Tolleson, T. D. P. Vernon, and D. W. Moore.

"These committees were instructed to proceed immediately to make arrangements for putting up suitable buildings, so that the institutions may be officered and open their halls for instruction at an early period next year.

Four Names for Christians.—The Scripture gives four names to Christians, taken from the four cardinal graces, so essential to man's salvation: saints, for their holiness; believers, for their faith; brethren, for their love; disciples, for their knowledge.—Fuller.

The Portland Advertiser says it is a supposition generally conceded to be true, that cords of wood given to the poor are re-corded above.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THE RULE OF OUR GOVERNMENT—AGAIN.

Mr. Editor: "A multitude of words darken council." Brother Fisher seems to be a man of words. Well, words are said to be "signs of our ideas," but there may be a confusion of words and ideas. In my former article, I took no "exception" to "a sufficient number of bishops, to meet the actual wants of the Church," or their probable usefulness. On these points we are not at issue. The only point of difference is, the difference between "itinerant general superintendency" and "Episcopal districts"; between "joint superintendents," as recommended by Mr. Wesley, and established by constitutional law in 1808, and the same superintendent or bishop having jurisdiction of the same district or "field of labor for four years." The one is general: the other sectional. The one is a unit; the other subdivision. The one is itinerant general supervision or jurisdiction; the other is dividing the work into distinct dioceses. The one is a bond of general union; the other is calculated to engender sectional feelings, and to "destroy" an essential "rule of our government."

I suppose every discriminating mind will perceive the real points of difference.

Brother Fisher asks, "Does Brother Garrett know that Episcopal districts are now in existence, and have been for years?" I answer no. I have the latest edition of the discipline, I have been a careful reader of the Church organs, and have been conversant with the affairs of itinerant Methodism for sixty years, and yet I had not learned what my younger brother seems to know.

I know that the superintendents published "plans of Episcopal visitations" to supply the work and to suit their convenience, but "Episcopal districts" is a new idea. The good brother says, "There must be more bishops" (no objection)—"the work must be divided out among them into suitable districts." Here lies the rub, here I demur.

But he adds, "As I suppose our fathers intended it should be, and indeed as our primitive bishops did it." Strange mistake! The very thing which the fathers intended to prevent, by the "limitations and restrictions." Who were the "primitive fathers?" Was it Coke, Asbury, Whatcoat and McKendrie? Did they "divide the work among them into suitable districts?" I know the contrary. I sat in Conferences with them all. No, truly, they were "joint superintendents," itinerant general superintendents, and traveled through the connection at large.

The "old landmarks" are not yet removed by the General Conference, and I trust they will not be.

L. Garrett.

Vernon, Mississippi, February 1854.

CORRECTION.

MINUTES OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

On the fifth page of the printed minutes, which are now being sent out to the members of the Conference, the figures $22,699 81 has fallen, by mistake of the printer, opposite the words "Publishing Fund," instead of "For Missions," etc. To correct this, each preacher, before distributing the minutes among the people, will draw his pen or pencil through the words "publishing fund," and let the figures stand for the amount collected for missions.

The amount collected for the Publishing Fund was intended to be left blank, as the Committee on Sunday Schools did not furnish the Secretary with it. Such failures, on the part of our brethren having charge of matter to appear in the minutes, often involves the publisher's in no little trouble, and makes the publication imperfect.

Thos. W. Dorman,
Secretary of Alabama Conference.

Periodical Literature in Greece.—Rev. A. N. Arnold, Missionary to Greece, writing from the ancient city of Athens, Nov. 22d, 1853, says: "We have not less than fifteen weeklies and semi-weeklies, besides six or seven monthly and semi-monthly magazines, and all printed in Athens. Can any of our Western cities, that have grown up, like Athens, within twenty-five years, and contain less than thirty thousand inhabitants, beat this?"

This is pretty well for the city of Pericles and Demosthenes. Some of these periodicals advocate religious liberty, with almost a Roger Williams' fullness and earnestness. It may not be long before a periodical advocating Baptist principles, in the same apostolic simplicity and purity that Paul would preach them were he to stand again on Mars' Hill, will be established there. The intellect and soul of old Greece is waking up, and we may live to see a Greek empire established on the ruins of the Ottoman, having its seat in the city of Constantine. [Western Watchman.

Family Prayer.—A person of great quality was pleased to lodge a night in my house. I durst not invite him to my family prayer, and therefore, for that time, omitted it; thereby making a breach in a good custom, and giving Satan advantage to assault it. Yea, the loosening of such a link might have endangered the scattering of the chain.

Bold bashfulness, which durst offend God, whilst it did fear man! Especially considering that, though my guest was never so high, yet by the laws of hospitality, I was above him, whilst he was under my roof. Hereafter, whomsoever cometh within the doors, shall be requested to come within the discipline of my house; if, accepting my homely diet, he will not refuse my home-devotion; and sitting by my table will be entreated to kneel down by it.

The McDonogh Case.—A dispatch from Washington of the 16th says: "The Supreme Court here has sustained the legality of the McDonogh will. This decision of course gives to New Orleans and Baltimore an income from property valued at from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000, applicable to the purposes of educating indigent children."

It is stated that Mrs. E. C. Judson, widow of the late Dr. Judson, missionary to Burmah, is in the last stages of consumption. Her physicians have but little hopes of her recovery.

Last year there were conveyed between the United States and Europe, by the British and American mail steamers, 4,600,000 letters, and 1,880,000 newspapers.

REMOVAL OF CIVIL DISABILITIE

We are not sufficiently acquainted with minuter details of the social state in Louisi to be confident of the advisableness of a ste legislation which one of our city represe tatives, Judge Kearney, is, we find, proposing our Legislature. But we know that i humane and has been adopted as expedien Virginia, South Carolina, Kentucky and o Southern States, where we should judge it necessary than here. As to the fitness of policy for our precise condition, we cannot pronounce: It is for our Legislature to do so. can only wish that it may be found proper. measure of which we speak is an Act in following words:

"An Act to remove civil disabilities, in certain cases.

"Be it enacted, etc.: That all free pers having less than one-sixteenth of negro bl in their veins shall, for all civil purposes, received and treated in law as white pers from and after the passage of this act."

It strikes us, however, that with this meas should go others fit to check the further for tion of the class of persons, in whose favor suppose it well to make this provision of la

Alexander Hamilton.—Alexander Hamil was one of the men about whom Mr. Web loved to speak. He entertained for his char ter the highest respect and admiration. Webster was fond of instituting historical p allels. He thought there was a striking res blance in the histories of the younger Pitt Hamilton. They both were men of premat intellectual strength. They both attained known at very early periods of life. Pitt made Prime Minister when he was twenty-f years old, and Hamilton had written some his best essays on the financial condition of country when he had not passed that age. Th was also a striking resemblance in their st of composition, and turn of mind. They w both men of great determination and of ind itable courage. Both were conservative in politics, and cared little for popular cla They were both eminent financiers. Pitt, his genius and skill, was "the pilot who we ered the storm" when England was surroun by impending ruin; and Hamilton was the American Secretary, who "smote the roc national resources, and abundant strea revenue gushed forth, and touched the corpse of the public credit, and it sprung u feet." Both were the leaders and idols of respective parties, and were, consequently, aligned and hated by opposing factions. Ha ton was a brave and accomplished soldier; P though he had never "led a squadron in field," carried England in safety and in umph through a long and bloody war. was the best parliamentary debater and or of his time in England; and Hamilton equally distinguished among the orators and baters of America. Pitt was the favored M ister of his sovereign; Hamilton was the e ished friend, associate and favorite of Washi ton. [Cincinnati Gazette.

Spain.—The scandals of the Spanish have been the theme of gossip for months, the young queen has been charged with ir larities such as [illegible] murdered Spanish que of former times [illegible] ours in history. Even legitimacy of the [illegible] Infanta has been doubt and her death, when a few days old, while enlarged the sphere of gossip, excited no re among the people. Indeed the event was occasion of displaying about Madrid, place in reference to the queen, in which there mors truth than decency. Queen Isabella, indeed, last hurrying into all those excess political as well as moral, that usually ma the career of weak women placed in promin positions, and infatuated with a favorite lov lier improprieties have excited the people. B ministers and most devoted servants have s monstrated with her, and, having lost the af tion of her subjects, she attempts to enfo submission and compel allegiance. According she has exiled Generals Concha and O'Donn formerly two of her most faithful Captain General in Cuba, and several others to wh she is in a great measure indebted for the p servation of her crown. Their offence was th too high a sense of morality, and their opp tion to the scandalous royal intrigue. No can suppose that such a high-handed mea can succeed in crushing the rebellious feel of the people. Isabella the Second is too we in her own character, and her government too destitute of physical as well as moral pow for a coup-d'état to be enduringly succes Such affairs require the hand of a Napol sustained by a great name and a great ar Without these the little woman cannot viol ordinary decencies, or insult and outrage sta men of ability and long service. Such thi were scarcely tolerated in the darkest days Spanish history. They will never do in t nineteenth century, and we shall expect to h soon of stormy times in Spain.

Gold Assaying in South America.—The p cess of gold assaying among the native miners South America is very simple. A fragment quartz is pounded, and rubbed to powder tween two pieces of granite. A bullock's hor of black color, is the only assay instrument. is cut longitudinally into two equal pieces, pa ly on the curve, so that one-half forms a kind long spoon, the inside of which being polish The powder being placed in the spoon, the wa is poured in it and shaken, and then poured A second and third water being applied, nothi is left but the coarser articles at the botto and at one edge of them, conspicuous on t black horn, is seen a fringe of gold powder, gold be present. With a keg of water at back, and his spoon in his wallet, and a lit parched meal, the mine-hunter wanders amo the barren rocks in search of a treasure, wh he sells when discovered, and seeks for anoth the claims of labor being practically regulat by natural aptitudes. The man who buys mine digs the ore, breaks it up into the size walnuts, lands it into hide sacks, borne mules, and sells it to the "beneficiador," benefiter, in the valley below, who passes through the mill. Having settled upon a st stream, with a fall from four to five feet, builds up two walls to enclose it on each si and a back wall to form a small reservoir, w a spout and plug to let out the water at pleasure. Over the side walls, with considera labor, he contrives to lay a flat circular gran stone, some five feet in diameter, with a hole some fifteen inches through the middle. T middle of the stone is hooped round with stave which stand up eighteen inches in the form of tube.

The outside is surrounded with similar stav so that a water-tight circular trench is form with a granite bottom. Through the centre hole is passed the straight stem of a tree, sh with an iron pivot, standing on an iron sh fast to a block below. The upper part of t tree is stendied in a beam above, supported two upright posts. Through the middle of t vertical shaft is a horizontal hole, with a hor izontal shaft projecting on each side. In t horizontal shaft, at nearly the level of the fo below, are affixed in a circle, like the spokes a wheel, a number of wooden spoons, about thr feet in length. To the horizontal arms abo are tied by raw-hide cordage a sort of flag pa ing-stones, with their faces bearing on the fl granite below. The water being turned on t spoons, the paving-stones are drawn round b the motion of the shaft, and grinds the quart An improvement on this is to use two vertic roller-stones, eighteen inches thick and five fe in diameter, with a circular hole in the center through which the horizontal shaft or arm passes, and forces them round. As the stones vary in their speed on the inner and outer edges there is a grinding as well as a crushing proces When the machine is at work, a quantity of quicksilver is thrown into the trench, and th quartz with it. A small stream of water run in, and at one portion of the rim there is a hol for it to run over, which it does, carrying th floating mud with it. As it runs over, it falls into a goat-skin, with quicksilver at the bottom Out of this goat-skin it falls into a second, with more quicksilver; and so on from one to another, according to the amount of fall. When the quicksilver is supposed to be saturated, the mi is stopped, the quicksilver is taken out of th receptacles and poured into a linen bag of fine texture and three or four thicknesses. The quicksilver is squeezed through this bag; and the thickening amalgam is finally rammed down with a sort of rolling-pin.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—In Greensboro, Alabama, on the 9th inst., by Rev. C. C. Calloway, MR. J. J. MILTON to Miss M. E. HUCK. In Eutaw, by the same, on the 14th, Dr. R. E. WATKINS to Miss ANNA OLIVER, all of Eutaw.

By Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, Jan. 19, in Benton County, Ala., MATTHEW ALLEN to Miss JANE DIAMOND.

OBITUARY:

DIED—At his father's residence in Perry County, Ala., on the 29th day of December, 1853, GEORGE JACKSON THOMAS, in the 22d year of his age. He embraced religion and joined the M. E. Church, South, about seven years since.

About the 1st of October last he was attacked with hemorrhage of the lungs, but was not confined to his bed until a few weeks before his death. He bore his affliction with great patience and resignation, and frequently spoke of the worth and excellence of the Christian religion, exhorting all who came about him to be faithful until death, and meet him in heaven. He was very affectionate and much devoted to his friends; but gave unmistakable evidence that he believed it would be far better to depart and be with Christ. When his dissolution drew near, he took each one present by the hand and calmly bade them farewell, and passed triumphantly home.

CHARLES MCLEON.

DIED—In Attala County, Mississippi, on the 19th January, 1854, MRS. HARRIET M., wife of JOSEPH SHULEN, aged 45 years. She had been a member of the church for twenty-two years. None who knew her will need any eulogism to increase their respect for her memory, or heighten their assurance of her happiness. Trained by a pious aunt, she was taught early to reverence the Bible and love the gospel of Christ. Her principles were formed from the purest models, and her character developed under the happiest influences of piety. In her early life she yielded her heart to God, and was blessed with an assurance of his love. To a disposition naturally amiable, was added the "meek and quiet spirit" of the Gospel. While she won upon all around by her kindness in word and look, she failed not to impress all with the firmness of principles, by a dignity which sustained cheerfulness without levity, and gentleness without softness; a kind neighbor, an affectionate wife, a devoted mother. Finding that her life was fast ebbing out, she raised her dying eyes, implored Heaven's blessing upon a mourning husband and ten weeping children, telling them not to grieve after her, but prepare to meet her in Heaven. Thus passed away, from earth to Heaven, a sister devoted to the cause of God. While her voice is not to be heard mingling with the devotions of God's people on earth, doubtless another harp and a new voice swell the hallelujahs of Heaven.

A FRIEND.

DIED—In Fayette county, Tenn., 17th November, 1853, MRS. ANN M. HARDY, in the forty-seventh year of her age. She was the oldest child of WM. and CATHERINE PALMER, of Brunswick county, Va.; professed religion, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church; while young, was married to the late Larkin Hardy, in 1826, and lived in Nattoway county, Va., till the fall of 1847, when she moved to Tennessee.

Many of the preachers of Va. and Tenn. remember her liberality and kindness to them, in always making her house their home. She lived the life of a devoted Christian, and died in peace, leaving one daughter and a large number of relations and friends to mourn her loss.

Richmond Christian Advocate please copy.

Second round of Quarterly Meetings on the Gainsville District, Alabama Conference:

Gainsville and Sumterville	April—8–9
Belmont	" 15–16
Livingston	" 22–23
Warsaw	" 29–30
Macon Circuit	May—6–7
Wahalak	" 13–14
Lenderdale	" 20–21
DeKalb	" 27–28
Prairie Hill	June—3–4
Macon Station	" 10–11

N. B.—The District Stewards are requested to meet in Guinsville on April 8.

W. MURRAH.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square, first insertion	$1 00
Each subsequent insertion	50
One Square, one year	15 00
One Square, six months	10 00
Two Squares, one year	25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

General Intelligence.

The following is the report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the City for the week ending at 6 o'clock A. M. on Sunday, the 19th inst.: Odd Fellows' Resi, 1; Cypress Grove No. 1; Cypress Grove No. 2, 13; Charity Hospital, 9; St. Patrick's, 26; Catholic No. 1, Second District, 5; Catholic No. 2, Second District, 7; St. Vincent de Paul, Third District, 17; Lafayette, Fourth District, 27; Hebrew, 2. Total, 108.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT—By and with the advice and consent of the Senate. James Gadsden, of South Carolina, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United Stntes to the Mexican republic.

Consuls of the United States:—George M. Chase, of Maine, for Lahaina, in the kingdom of Hawaii. Charles L. Denman, of California, for Acapulco, in Mexico. George R. Dwyer, of Massachusetts, for Mazambique. George H. Boundin, of Pennsylvania, for Zurich, in Switzerland. William Hart, jr., of California, for Port Louis, in the Isle de France. Philip T. Heart, of New York, for Glasgow, in Scotland. Thomas H. Hyatt, of New York, for Amoy, in China. William Wildebrand, of Wisconsin, for Bremen. Duncan K. McRae, of North Carolina, for Paris. James McDowell, of Ohio, for Leith, in Scotland. John T. Pickett, of Kentucky, for Vera Cruz, in Mexico. Robert G. Scott, of Virginia, for Rio de Janeiro, in Brazil. James M. Tarleton, of Alabama, for Melbourne, in Australia. Thomas W. Ward, of, Texas, for Panama, in New Grenada. Edward Worrell, of Delaware, for Matnnzas, in Cuba.

WESTERN RAILROADS.—Chicago seems to be a favorite point of railroad communication and connection. It has fourteen trunk lines of railroad, and thirty-four extension branch lines communicating with it, embracing an extent of 779 miles of railroad. In addition to this, there are ten trunk lines and three branches making 1626 miles more. There will be daily leaving and entering the city of Chicago, on the first of May next, forty-six trains, making in all ninety two trains per day over the roads, to accommodate travel and commerce. Here is a fact which, had we time, it would be worth while to stop and contemplate. A fact of still greater magnification is, that less than two years ago they had only one railroad entering the city, the Galena and Chicago Union, and that was finished only a few miles.

Louisiana Legislature.

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 16.—The Senate was not in session.

HOUSE.—Mr. Kearney offered a joint resolution to withdraw the Swamp Lands of the State from sale until the Legislature can pass a bill providing for said lands. Laid over.

Reports were made by Mr. Davidson, from the Judiary Committee; Mr. McDonald, from the Committee on Internal Improvements; Mr. Pugh, from the Committee on Public Education; Mr. Miller, from the Committee on Public Lands, a bill to amend the Swamp Land act of 1853; Mr. Philips, from the Committee on Finance.

On motion of Mr. Boatner, the resolution instructing the joint Committee on Public Buildings to examine the roof of the State House, and have all necessary repairs made, and also to provide for a better mode of lighting the Rotunda, was taken up.

On motion of Mr. Miller, the resolution was amended so as to require the committee to report to the House the expense, before proceeding to contract for the execution of the work contemplated. The resolution was adopted.

BILLS INTRODUCED.—By Mr. Kearney, to enlarge the right of making donations: referred. By Mr Olney, for the appointment of inspectors and measurers of lumber in New Orleans: referred. By Mr McCormick, to amend the militia law of the State: referred.

On motion of Mr. Philips, the bill to facilitate the settlement of accounts of tutors and curators was taken up. After some discussion, the bill was recommitted to the Judiciary Committee.

The bill to appropriate $1600 out of the Swamp Land fund to enable the U. S. Commissioner to employ a clerk to assist in approving the Swamp Lands selected by the State, was taken up and passed.

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 20, 1854—Senate.—On motion of Mr. Lacey the rules were suspended and the bill to provide for the navigation of the river Amite and the Bayou Manchac, was taken up.

The yeas and nays being called for, on its final passage, resulted in eighteen yeas to two nays.

Mr. Richardson, on leave, called up the House bill for the relief of the veterans of 1814–'15, appropriating $15,000 for that purpose. Referred.

Mr. King, on leave, called up the Senate bill entitled an act relative to motions and arrests in judgments in criminal cases.

Mr. Martel, on leave, called up the bill entitled an act to improve the navigation of the Atchafalaya. Passed.

An act to provide for the subscription by the city of New Orleans to the stock of the N. O. and G. N. Railroad, and the stock of the Opelousas and Great Western Railroad, was made the special order of the day for Thursday next.

A resolution was introduced instructing swamp land Commissioners to cause a survey to be made of that portion of country lying in the Parish of Madison, known as Diamond Island Bend.

In the House there was no quorum.

Louisiana Legislature.

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 21, 1854.

In the House to-day the Judiciary Committee, to whom was referred the bill introduced by Mr. Olney for the appointment of Inspectors and Measurers of lumber and staves in the city of New Orleans, reported unfavorably. The same was, at the suggestion of the Chairman, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

On motion of Mr. Bullard a bill to incorporate the first Presbyterian Church in the city of New Orleans was taken up, read a third time and passed.

Mr. Olney introduced a bill to establish a Quarantaine station at the mouth of the Mississippi, for the prevention of the yellow fever and other pestilential diseases in the city of New Orleans. Referred to the Committee on Health.

A bill creating the office of Inspector of weights and measures for the Fourth District of New Orleans. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. Smart introduced an act to restrict the Judges of the Supreme Court to decisions of questions of law in all cases submitted to them.

The House then proceeded to the orders of the day, and took up the bill authorizing the Parish Treasurer to employ the Sheriff in the sale of sixteen sections. Read a third time and passed.

The roll was then called—when it appeared only 41 members were present.

The Sergeant-at-Arms was directed to call in the absentees.

In the Senate, Mr. Richardson introduced a bill adopting the electoral basis, instead of the one now in operation.

Also, in favor of biennial, instead of annual sessions of the Legislature.

The bill introduced by Mr. King was then called up, in relation to tacit mortgages, and gave rise to a long and animated discussion, in which Messrs. King, Lacey Wickliffe and Moore took part.

The principal objection was to the first section of the bill, which provides that no mortgage shall take effect unless the same be recorded on or before the 1st of April, 1855.

It was contended that this was an ex parte facto law which destroyed the obligation of a contract already existing, and that the Legislature had no right to destroy a vested right.

Mr. Lacey, who spoke at great length, stated that if this objectionable feature was removed, he would vote in favor of the bill, as it was perfect in all other respects.

Pending the discussion on this subject, the Senate adjourned until to-morrow morning, 10 o'clock.

C.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 23.—Senate.—The bill to abolish tacit mortgages was laid on the table to-day by a vote of fifteen to ten.

House.—The House was occupied until four o'clock to-day, debating the eligibility of Messrs. Corcoran, Nixon and Weisheimer to their seats. The resolution declaring them ineligible was finally laid on the table.

Congressional.

SENATE—Washington, Feb. 13, 1854.—Messrs. Everett, Seward, Foot, Clayton, Sumner, Chase, and Brodhead presented petitions remonstrating against the repeal of the Missouri compromise act, all of which were laid on the table.

After the presentation of a number of petitions, etc., the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the Nebraska bill

Mr. Weller addressed the Senate for nearly an hour in support of the bill.

Mr. Houston being too indisposed to proceed to-day, the bill was postponed until to-morrow.

The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of a bill, upon the motion of Mr. Slidell, granting land to Louisiana to aid in the construction of a railroad in the State, which, after some debate, was postponed until Wednesday next.

HOUSE.—On motion of Mr. Maco it was resolved that a select committee be appointed to investigate all mistakes or frauds in the disbursements of money to the Collins mail line of steamers, and other steamers, with power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. Chandler made an ineffectual effort to call up the resolutions proposing to show the gratitude of the nation to the San Francisco rescuers.

Among a variety of other business, Mr. Craig offered a resolution, which was agreed to, requesting the President of the United States to inform the House whether any negotiations are pending between the United States and Peru, for the removal of the restriction on the exportation of guano from that country, and what is the present state of the negotiation.

Mr. Taylor, of Ohio, offered a resolution, which was adopted, instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of removing the Military Asylum near Washington, to Mount Vernon.

OHIO AND MISSISSIPPI RAILROAD.—This important road, which will connect Cincinnati and St. Louis by an almost air line route, and form the western link of the line to which Baltimore looks for the completion of her connection with St. Louis, is being rapidly urged to completion. The entire length of the road is 335 miles, of which 160 miles will be opened within the next two months. The whole road, it is thought, will be completed by the 1st of October next.

The members of the Minnesota Legislature have resolved to give one day's pay to the Washington National Monument.

The sale in England of guano was 24,600 tons in 1846, and 64,000 in 1853. At present the demand far

Later from Texas.

The steamship Perseverance arrived last evening, bringing Galveston papers of the 19th.

The Legislature was to adjourn on Monday the 13th inst. The general impression was that there would be a called session. The Austin correspondent of the Galveston News, writing the 11th, says: A bill has passed the Senate, donating ninety-four sections, of six hundred acres each of land, to the Brazos and Galveston Canal Company.

The general appropriation bill passed to-day, also the bill prohibiting the sale of spirituous liquors, without the consent of the people residing within the several counties of the State.

An act has passed authorizing the Governor with the consent of the Senate, to appoint three competent commissioners to modify the laws of the State of Texas. They are to receive fifteen hundred dollars per annum, each, and report the result of their labors to the next Legislature.

The Galveston News, of the 17th, in its commercial article, says:

We have still to report a continuation of a very quiet appearance of business here and at Houston. The movements of merchandise as well as produce have been exceedingly light, and by the advice now before us from high points of all rivers, the prospects for navigation appear as remote and doubtful as ever. In 1852, rivers opened at this time, being then considered unusually late.—The present delay must be considered even more unfortunate, because according to the present prospects, the delay of shipment will lead the bulk of crops into a depressed and unpromising condition of the markets.

Planting time having come near, the unusual dryness begins to cause apprehensions of interference with preparations for the coming crop.

Later from Havana.

By the arrival of the Black Warrior at Mobile, we have received Havana papers to the 17th inst.

The Diario de la Marina talks much of the measures taken or on foot for the prevention of smuggling. It thinks they will be practically sufficient. We must doubt if there be any that will much avail, where imposts are high and the government weak and ill administered. The art of putting down contrabandists has never yet been much understood any where among the Spanish race; nor is it likely to be discovered for them by Cubans.

As usual, the newspapers of the island give us, by the smallness of the events which serve for news, the idea of a people much occupied not a little happy in shows, dances, and saint's-days, theatres, bull-baitings, and cock-fights. The inauguration of a new bell in the chapel of a village, the successful erection of a clock in the steeple of a town church, an arrival of fine fighting bulls, the great ceremonies that grace every small occasion, all bespeak a very simple-minded and quiet population, who play much, work little, and are lucky enough to be satisfied with humble pleasures and diverted with dull amusements.

Under date of the 11th, we find an official order of the Captain-General, prohibiting the transportation, within the island, of carbines (under which description they probably include all hand-guns suited for war rather than the chase), or other arms, for sale, without a regular permit from the Governor, granted upon an application, setting forth their description, quantity, destination, owner, the person to whom sent, etc., etc. In short, General Pezuela does not intend to let any Filibuster magazines be formed in Cuba—a necessary piece of prudence.

There is a great scarcity in Cuba, of staves and other stuff for encasing sugars. Of course, prices have risen much; but as the crop has, to a great degree, been sent to market, they cannot well be maintained, especially as freights are high, from the want of shipping. Cuba abounds in wood; but, from in part inertness, and in part the dearness of labor, draws from abroad what she has at her doors: just as our own South brings its ax-helves and many other like things from Maine.

The Government is erecting at Villa Clara, a barrack for infantry, three hundred and seventy yards long: that is, a quadrangle of above ninety yards at each of its sides. It will cost sixty thousand dollars, and is in rapid progress.

The Habaneros are rejoicing much over the arrival of the pianist Gottschalk among them, by the steamer Crescent City, on the 14th inst. They say that the dilettanti who have already heard him in a private performance, are charmed with him and look on him as worthy of the high reputation which preceded him. A lady of high rank had fitted up for him a fine suite of rooms in her palace, and was to entertain him. The young violinist, Paul Julian, was likewise in Havana, and greatly admired.

The condition of the currency has long been a serious evil in Cuba. To remedy it, the Governor has devised and sent to Spain for the royal approval, a plan, by which, gold of Spanish coinage shall pass at the rate of seventeen dollars to the doubloon or ounce: while there is to be a special silver coinage for Cuba, about six per cent less pure than the home currency. By producing this, the erection of a mint in Cuba is asked, or that a half million of this coin be at once struck in Spain. Foreign coins are to be received at their value on assay, less the seignorage.

The Captain General had ordered that the work of building a monument to those who were killed while resisting the invasion of 1851 shall be immediately commenced, for which purpose $22,000 has been appropriated. A statue of the Queen is to be placed upon it.

Later From Nassau.

By an arrival at Charleston, the Courier of that city has dates from Nassau to the 8th inst. The Royal Gazette of the 18th ult. says:

The House of Assembly last week were occupied in preparing and presenting an address to his honor the Lieutenant Governor, in reply to his opening speech of the present session of the Legislature, receiving petitions, and passing a vote of indemnity to the Receiver General and Treasurer for the return of £560 4s 8d., being part of the duty collected by him on goods taken out of the America ship Polar Star, while on shore upon the Moselle Shoal, and subsequently brought into this port by sundry wrecking vessels.

The brigantine Baltic, Captain Gould, arrived at Nassau on the 3d inst., from St. Thomas, which port she left on the 27th ult. The cholera had almost entirely disappeared in that island.

The Nassau Guardian of the 8th inst. publishes the report of the Select Committee of the Legislature on the Tariff, by which we perceive that it is proposed to reduce materially the taxation on the necessaries of life—especially flour, wheat and rye, corn meal, sugars, coffee, salted meat and fish and other articles generally consumed by the masses of the people, while on the other hand, in order to make up the deficiency to be occasioned to the revenue, it is contemplated to advance the ad valorem duty of five per cent, to fifteen per cent.

The export duty on salt is to be abolished. The duty on wheat flour is to be 3s., and on rye 1s. 6d. per bbl., and on rice 1s. 6d. per cwt.

The following provisions, interesting to owners and masters of vessels, we extract from the report:

5. That there shall be imposed and paid into the Public Treasury of these Islands, a toanage duty of sixpence per ton, on each and every ton of the registered tonnage of every vessel (except as hereinafter mentioned) arriving within these Islands from any port or place without the limits thereof; provided always, that the following vessels shall be totally exempted from the payment of such duty, viz: steam vessels, vessels arriving in ballast and departing in ballast, or arriving with cargo and not landing any part thereof, as also vessels which may put into any port within these Islands, through distress of weather, or for the purpose of refitting and repairing damages sustained during the voyage on which any such vessel may be then proceeding, or to obtain supplies of provisions and water, or either, or any articles necessary for the safety of the said vessel, or the comfort of the persons on board, and whether the cargo or lading of such vessel, or any part thereof, shall have been landed or not; provided, that if landed, the same be re-shipped without any part thereof being sold or disposed of in the way of trade, or any cargo being shipped on board of such vessel.

6. That the entrance fees payable at the port of Nassau, under the 8th Vic. c. 40, be levied and paid at all the ports of entry of the Colony.

7. That the clearance fees at present imposed and collected be continued.

on goods sold by the Marshal of the Admiralty Court be continued.

European News.

From the New York Sun, of the 15th, we copy the following details of the European news received at that port by the steamship Africa:

THE WAR NEWS.—A letter from St. Petersburg, quoted by the Constitutionnel, pictures that the Czar evinced the most perfect calmness on being informed of the entry of the fleets into the Black Sea. He is even said to have remarked: "I expected the resolution come to by France and Britain. I am not, therefore, taken by surprise. Every order has been given beforehand in anticipation of an act which, by breaking treaties, releases me from the obligations of them." Then follows some bombast to the effect that "Russia can afford to lose its fleet, but not its honor!" Gortschakoff is reported to have replied to the Emperor's inquiry if he could make head against the fleets: "Conquer them?—no. Fight them to the death?—yes.

The London Times, in repeating what we have already published, that the Czar has asked for further information respecting the intentions of the fleets in the Black Sea, calls it a singular and evasive reply. The Times further states that the Czar has commissioned Count Orloff to proceed to Vienna on a special mission, and empowered him to state on what terms the Russian Government would be prepared to enter into negotiations for peace. This move is evidently intended to anticipate the effect of the ultimatum addressed to the Court of St. Petersburgh by the Four Powers, and to shift once more the basis of negotiations perhaps, also, to endeavor to shake as far as possible, the union between the Four Powers.

Count Orloff is a nobleman of the highest rank in the Russian Empire, and enjoys the full confidence of Nicholas. His influence is believed to have hitherto been directed towards moderate measures. Further accounts state that he is accredited not only to Vienna, but to Berlin, Paris and London. This special mission would enable the Czar to back out of the dilemma he is in, without too much wounding his feelings. Nicholas is said to be in so strong a state of excitement that his physicians fear apoplexy.

A telegraphic dispatch from Vienna, dated Thursday evening, says:

"Advices from Constantinople, of the 16th instant, state that a portion of the Russian fleet was cruising off Anapa. To prevent a collision, six vessels of the combined fleet convoyed six Turkish steamers from Sinope to Trebizond."

The Russian Embassador at Paris has had two interviews with the Minister for Foreign Affairs, for the purpose of demanding explanations relative to the entry of the French fleets into the Black Sea. The Times correspondent has reason to believe that the dispatches received by M. de Kisseleff touch on several points, the principal of which is, of course, the presence of the combined fleets in the Euxine. The Emperor of Russia is forbearing enough not to consider it as a cause for war, and he believes, or affects to believe, that the English and French fleets have only quitted their anchorage in the Bosphorus, not by way of menace, but to act as mediators between the Russian and Turkish navies. A delicate allusion is made to the "affair" at Sinope.

His Imperial Majesty protests that he had no hostile design by the defenceless condition of the Turkish squadron at Sinope, but acted under the impression that he was justified in preventing the Turkish fleet from carrying succor of any kind to the rebels on Russian territory, and against his sovereign authority. It is also intimated that (perhaps with a view of preventing any mistake), a paragraph, how concise he does not care, in the Moniteur, expressive of the neutrality of France, would be very agreeable: but it is indispensable that the word neutrality shall be printed with its complete allowance of syllables and letters. The Embassador has not received any definite answer beyond a reference to the dispatch which announced the fact itself.

It is certain that on the fact of the Russian Embassador not having demanded his passport, as the result of his conference with the Minister of Foreign Affairs, are founded hopes that an amicable arrangement is not yet beyond the limits of probability, and that the firm attitude of England and France is at last giving the Czar serious alarm. It is said that the disposition now shown by Austria is very favorable, but it cannot be concealed that those who indulge in these hopes are very few indeed, and the opinion most generally entertained is, that this new move of the Czar is of a piece with his policy throughout.

ENGLAND.

Anna Marin Jones, a novelist of some repute in her day, has just died in London in the most abject poverty.

An old lady named Mary Madget, aged 72, died at Chelsea, London, a few days since. Her history was an eventful one. Her grandfather was an English nobleman. At the age of 18 she eloped with her husband, a wealthy American, who owned large property in Pennsylvania and South Carolina. Shortly afterwards they sailed for the United States, but the vessel was captured by a French privateer and carried into Brest. They managed to escape, resided a short time in England and again set sail for America, but were once more captured by the French. The French ship was in its turn captured by the Americans and taken into New York. For some years she resided with her husband in South Carolina, but during the troubles her husband was killed and she fell ill. Stripped of all her property she managed to get a gratuitous passage back to Britain after twenty years absence. Unable to find her relatives, she applied to the British Government, but the Government refused to do anything for her, in consequence of the absence of the original of one of the documents on which she founded her claim. For a long time she was on the verge of starvation, until, at length, some distant relative gave her a small annual donation, on which she managed to subsist. At last she died suddenly, as above stated.

The London Daily News contains an estimate, apparently correct, that for the annual outlay on the Navy, Britain, instead of 32 war steamers, might have seventy-seven of the largest sized steam line of battle ships, such as the Duke of Wellington. 130 gun ship. The balance of the money is spent on jobbery.

FRANCE.

The Moniteur publishes a report of the Minister of Finance on the financial results of the year 1853. The receipts and expenditures are nearly balanced. The deficit will not exceed four millions of francs.

Louis Napoleon has decreed the coinage of five and ten franc pieces in gold.

Victor Hugo is about to leave Jersey to reside in Portugal.

The Parisians spend more than $2,500,000 a year upon their dramatic entertainments.

SPAIN.

We have advices from Madrid to the 21st. The Gazette publishes a series of Royal decrees relative to supplementary credits, opened in the Ministeries of Marine and War, to the amount of 17,000,000 reals.

The Messager de Bayonne publishes a private letter from Madrid, written three days before the coup, the writer of which thus foreshadows the course upon which the Ministry appears to have entered: "The Ministry has resolved upon accomplishing the coup d'état, but the Marquis de Sierona will first leave the Cabinet. Among the measures which will be adopted, the proclamation of the state of siege in the capital and province of Madrid will be one of the first. The Senate will be suppressed, and several notabilities of the opposition will be exiled. The liberty of the press will be diminished or altogether suspended. Several military chiefs who were stationed in Madrid have been removed, among others the Duke de Ea and Brigadier Solano.

AUSTRIA.

The whole of the Bohemian army corps have received orders to march to Hungary. The army already concentrated on the Croatian, Servian and Transylvanian frontiers, amounts to 80,000 men. It is known at Vienna (says a correspondent) that Omar Pasha neither receives or sends any dispatches without their being shown to the revolutionary leaders, and since the defeat of the Russians at Citale, the Imperial Government has become seriously alarmed.

The Archduchess Elizabeth, the widow of the Duke Ferdinand of Modena, was betrothed, on the 22d, to Charles Ferdinand the Second, brother of the Archduke Albrecht, who is civil and ernor of Hungary. Prince Charles Ferdinand is commander of the 10th army corps in Hungary.

ITALY.

On the night of the 17th ult., some fresh arrests were made at Milan. Among them, that of a lady, who, as well as the others arrested, were immediately conveyed, with a strong escort, to Mantua.

TELEGRAPHIC.

Four Days Later from Europe.

ARRIVAL OF THE BALTIC!

COTTON IRREGULAR—BREADSTUFFS DECLINING!

Important Political News—Negotiations Broken Off—Embassadore Recalled—Active War Movements.

NEW YORK, Feb. 20.—The Collins steamer Baltic has arrived here, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 8th inst., four days later than the accounts brought by the Canada. She brings important intelligence, of which the following is a summary:

LIVERPOOL MARKETS.

LIVERPOOL, Feb 8.—The cotton market opened at the beginning of the week with a good demand, but latterly the inquiry has fallen off. The sales, however, reach 25,000 bales for the three business days since the departure of the Canada, about 6000 bales of which have been taken on speculation. Prices have been rather irregular, but without any material change, most of the circulars quoting the rates at the close as follows: Fair Orleans, 6¼d; Middling Orleans, 5¾d; Fair Uplands, 6¼d; and Middling Uplands, 5¾d per lb. Holders have not been pressing on the market.

Flour has been dull and drooping, and prices have declined about 1s per bbl. The closing rate for Western Canal is 41s, and for Ohio 42s 6d per bbl, holders latterly not being anxious to realize at these rates.

Corn has also given way in prices, and White and Yellow are quoted alike at 50s per quarter. Wheat has further declined, the closing rate for White being 12s 4d per 70 lbs.

Lard has been in moderate request from the trade and for export, at about the same price as last quoted.

Pork and Beef have been dull, without any material change in the rates.

Bacon has been active at steady prices.

MONEY AND TRADE.—The Money Market at London has been rather more animated. Consols at the close are quoted at 91¼.

There has been no change of any moment in the Manchester trade.

General Nowe—Eastern Affairs.

NEGOTIATIONS BROKEN OFF—MINISTERS RECALLED.—The last proposals of the Emperor of Russia have been rejected. Count Orloff's mission has proved an entire failure, and negotiations are broken off.

The Russian Embassadors at London and Paris have withdrawn, and the English and French Ministers at St. Petersburg have been recalled.

PREPARATIONS FOR WAR.—England and France have now openly commenced preparing for war. Several of the Cunard steamers have been taken by the British Government for the transportation of troops to Constantinople, and war ships and steamers are in active preparation to leave the French ports with troops.

THE FLEETS.—The allied fleets at the last accounts were at Bessica Bay, and the Russian fleets were concentrating at the port of Kaffa on the coast of Crimea.

TURKS CROSSED THE DANUBE.—Omer Pacha has crossed the Danube with a Turkish force of 50,000 men.

Further by the Baltic.

EASTERN AFFAIRS.

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—The following are additional particulars of the news brought by the Baltic.

ORLOFF'S MISSION.—Count Orloff declined visiting Berlin upon leaving Vienna, and it is presumed that he had intimations of a rebuff at that capital, in case he should have proceeded there.

PRUSSIA.—There are some further difficulties in Servia. It is said that the Government of that country has yielded to the solicitations of the Russian Consul at Belgrade, and will refuse to accept the two firmans of the Sultan.

CZAR AND NESSELRODE.—The Emperor of Russia is said to be fully aware of the critical position that he occupies, and that he will endeavor to avoid a general conflagration if he can do so, and at the same time preserve his honor. Count Nesselrode is again somewhat in the confidence of the Czar, and his influences are in the ascendant.

NICHOLAS AND VICTORIA.—It is stated that the Emperor of Russia is about to write an autograph letter to Queen Victoria, in which he will endeavor to convince her that he is not the aggressor in this war.

SHIPMENT OF TROOPS.—About ten thousand men will soon be collected at the English depots, ready for transportation by the Cunard steamers to Constantinople. They will form the first expedition. The 46th regiment, which was under orders for Australia, has now been ordered to hold itself in readiness for foreign service.

COMBINED FLEETS.—At the last accounts the allied fleets were at Beycos Bay (not Bessica).

THE TURKISH POSITION.—The passage of the Danube by Omer Pacha, with 50,000 troops, was a brilliant movement, by which he has divided the Russian army. Omer commanded in person.

Advices from Bucharest to the 28th state that the Russians had made a retrograde movement, and fallen back upon Rimnik. The last accounts of Omer Pacha report him to have been within two days march of Bucharest, which he was expected to attack at once, as the Russian force at that post was much weakened. Omer intended to attack the rear of the Russian army on its march from Karjova to Kalefat.

The report of Omer's intended attack on Bucharest has been confirmed by a dispatch received by the Turkish Embassador at London, and also by the Russian accounts.

The latter state that bad weather, and the inundation of the river, has prevented them from crossing the Danube.

FRANCE.—In accordance with the recommendation of the Council, Louis Napoleon continues to make the most active preparations for war. Immense orders for ammunition, arms and accoutrements have been issued, and were in course of execution with great haste. The greatest activity continued to prevail in the Navy department. Prince Napoleon has returned from his mission to Belgium.

STEAMBOAT LOST.—Louisville, Feb. 21.—The steamboat J. M. Niles was sunk yesterday on the Falls below this city, in consequence of having struck a rock. Her cabin parted from her hull soon after she struck, but no lives were lost, all her passengers being landed at New Albany in safety. The Niles had a heavy cargo on board, and two flatboats in tow.

NEW YORK MARKETS.—New York, Feb. 20.—The Flour market here is much depressed, and prices have declined 25c per bbl. Sales of Ohio at $8 87½ per bbl. Mess Pork is selling at $15 75, and Prime at $13 to $13 50; per bbl., prices generally being a shade lower. Sales of Lard in barrels at 10½c per lb.

OHIO RIVER.—Pittsburgh, Feb. 20.—The river here has fallen almost two feet since Saturday. There is now 7 feet water in the channel.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 20.—The river here has risen 3½ feet during the last 48 hours.

LOUISVILLE, Feb. 18.—The river here is now at a stand, with 8 feet water in the canal. The Fanny Smith has departed for New Orleans.

LOUISVILLE, Feb. 20.—The river is rising slowly, with 7 feet 4 inches water on the falls. The steamboats Granite State, Crescent City and Norma have arrived, and the Monarch and Falcon have departed for New Orleans.

THE CUMBERLAND.—Nashville, Feb. 20.—The river has been rising steadily since Saturday night, with occasional rain. There is now six feet water on the shoals. Weather still cloudy.

ARRIVAL OF THE CANADA.

Halifax, Feb. 17.—The Cunard steamship Canada has arrived here, bringing intelligence fully confirmatory of that brought by the American.

All the allied fleets had returned to their former anchorage at Bessica Bay, a movement which created much surprise.

Queen Victoria delivered her speech in person at the assembling of Parliament on the 31st of January. She referred to the Eastern question at some length, expressing regret for the difficulties that had arisen. Stated that her exertions in conjunction with her allies, would be continued to produce an amicable settlement, and hoped that peace would still be preserved. She, however, considered it necessary to have an augmentation of the military and naval forces, and expressed the belief that such measures would soon effectually contribute to the restoration of peace.

A debate on the Eastern question opened very early, but nothing important had been done when the Canada left.

It was remarked that the members of the American Legation were not present at the delivery of the Queen's speech.

On her way to the Parliament House, the Queen was warmly and frequently cheered, and while Prince Albert was occasionally hissed.

The House was very full, much more so than usual at the opening of a session.

Commodore Quesada of the Spanish Navy, has been appointed Naval Commander at Havana.

The revolutionary feeling continues to be manifested in Spain. In many parts of the country handbills of a seditious tendency are very freely scattered. The Queen grows more and more unpopular.

The reply of the British and French Governments to the Czar's questions relative to the entry of the allied fleets into the Black Sea was delivered on the 1st of February to the Russian Embassadors at Paris and London.

The troops under General Guyon were about to cross the frontier and attack Alexandropole.

It is stated that the object of Count Orloff's mission to Vienna is to obtain permission from the Emperor of Austria for the Russian troops to March through Hungary. It is said to be the intention of the Czar to visit Vienna in person in case of Orloff's failure. Orloff's interview with the Emperor of Austria was short and unsatisfactory.

The number of troops to be furnished by France, to aid the Turks, is eighty thousand, while England will send only 10,000, all expenses, however, to be equally divided between the two Governments.

Louis Napoleon has sent experienced officers to the Danube and into Asia, to report upon the condition of the Turkish armies in those quarters. The officer sent to the Danube reports that the Turkish army there is deficient in cavalry, but efficient in other respects, and is quite able to keep the Russians in check.

Louis Napoleon has also written to the King of Belgium, impressing upon him the necessity of supporting the allies, and stating that he cannot occupy a neutral position without increasing the displeasure of France.

At a meeting of the Council at the Tuileries, on the 30th January, it is stated that it was decided to send forward the eighty thousand troops destined for Turkey in four bodies.

HALIFAX, Feb. 16.—According to the reports brought by the American, the Russian troops were suffering awfully from disease, which was causing the death of numbers.

Prince Gortschakoff was proceeding into Little Wallachia.

The Russian forces were still prosecuting their march on Kalafat. Their defeat was considered almost certain.

Numerous insurrections had taken place among the inhabitants of Wallachia, and many of them had been shot for affording assistance to the Turkish troops.

The reply of England and France to the last Russian note is said to have been firm and decided, and intimative of their resolution to sustain the position which they have already assumed.

In the battle at Kalafat, on the 25th or 26th ult., and in which the Turks are reported victorious, the Russians had 50,000 men engaged.

It is rumored that there has been a collision on the Black Sea. No particulars are yet given.

Great excitement was existing in Servia.

The whole Russian fleet left Schastopol on the 12th ult., towards Ibatum.

The overland mail, which had been received in England, brings intelligence that the Imperialists had regained possession of Amoy.

The Insurrectionists still retained possession of Shanghai.

Canton was quiet.

GREAT SNOW STORM.

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—A tremendous snow-storm, with high wind, prevailed all yesterday and last night all along the Atlantic coast. At this place, at Philadelphia and Baltimore, the snow lies two feet deep on a level, while it has drifted in many parts of the country to a depth of five to ten feet. The railroads in this State, in Pennsylvania and in Maryland are generally choked up and all the trains between this city and Baltimore are stopped. It is feared that much damage has been done at sea.

THE STEAMER AFRICA.

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—The steamer Africa has succeeded in getting off the Shoals on which she grounded the other day, the tide being very high.

CALIFORNIA STEAMERS.

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—The steamers Star of the West, North Star, and George Law, sailed to-day from this port.

Further from Europe.

THE EASTERN QUESTION IN PARLIAMENT.

BOSTON, Feb. 18.—The steamer Canada arrived at her wharf this afternoon.

Her papers contain the following report of a recent debate in Parliament on Eastern affairs:

In the House of Lords, the Marquis of Clanricarde complained that the Queen's speech gave no indications of the intention of the Government with regard to the war movements in Europe. He charged that the Emperor of Russia had been deceived into this war by the want of energy exhibited by the British Cabinet. Lord Clarendon defended the Government and the Emperor of Russia.

The Earl of Derby said that there was no allusion in the speech to other foreign relations, and particularly referred to the message of the President of the United States, of which no notice had been taken, although it embraced important matters in which England was concerned.

The Earl of Aberdeen replied in defence of the policy of the government, but gave no explanation of affairs relative to Turkey. He also went into the defence of Prince Albert, the recent imputations thrown upon him having given rise to the debate. Other members of the government party also spoke in vindication of Prince Albert.

THE MAIL STEAMERS.—The Government engineers had reported that the mail steamers are unfit for war purposes.

NEW YORK MARKETS.

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—The Flour market here is without further change. Sales of Ohio at $8 87½ per bbl.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

(From the Dublin University Magazine.

CLEAR SHINING AFTER RAIN.

The wind doth moan, and the cold rain fall,
And the garden blooms no more;
But the dark clouds fly
Over the wintry sky,
And the sweet flowers now that decaying lie,
Shall the spring restore.

So care may come with a blighting breath,
And the hopes of life decline;
But the tear and sigh
With the hour fly by,
As the wind and rain from the cloudy sky,
Flieth the bright sunshine.

And Death his shadowy wing shall spread
Over the young head, fair and gay;
As the flower shall fade
Flieth its graceful shade,
His youth in the bed that the worms invade
For the mouldering prey.

In vain the wind and the rain shall beat
Over the dreamless sleeper there;
Though many a year
Shall the winter sere,
Return with the howling tempest drear,
To the sons of care.

Blow on—for the winds be calm to him,
And his grave sweep softly o'er;
On his darkened eyes
Shall a dawning rise—
The sun of a sinless paradise,
To set in storms no more.

Death of Washington.

Proceeding still farther over a very bad road, we came suddenly in view of the Potomac; and Mount Vernon, with its mansion house and smooth green lawn, was before us. Having sent in our address, we received permission from the courteous branch of the family, who now held the estate, to enter and survey the interior. We were struck with its extreme simplicity, the lowness of the walls and ceilings, and the bare floors which were waxed, not as with us, carpeted.

"Passing through the great hall, ornamented with pictures of English hunting scenes, we ascended the oaken staircase, with its carved and antique balustrade; we stood at the door—we pressed the handle—the room and bed where he died were before us. Nothing in the lofty drama of his existence surpasses the grandeur of that final scene; the cold which he had taken from exposure in overseeing some parts of his grounds, and which had resisted the earlier domestic remedies that were applied, advanced in the course of two short days into that frightful form of the disease of the throat, laryngitis. It became necessary for him to take to his bed. His valued friend, Dr. Craik, was instantly summoned and assisted by the best medical skill of the surrounding country, exhausted all the means of his art, but without affording him relief. He patiently submitted, though in great distress, to the various remedies proposed; but it became evident from the deep gloom setting upon the countenance of the medical gentleman, that the case was hopeless; advancing insidiously, the disease had fastened itself with deadly certainty. Looking with perfect calmness upon the sobbing group around him, he said: "Grieve not, my friends; it is as I anticipated from the first; the debt which we all owe, is now about to be paid; I am resigned to the event." Requesting Mrs. Washington to bring two wills from his escritoire, he directed one to be burnt, and placed the other in her hands, as his last testament, and then gave some final instructions to Mr. Lear, his secretary and relative, as to the adjustment of his business affairs. He soon after became greatly distressed; and, as in the paroxysms which became more frequent and violent, Mr. Lear, who was at his side, assisted him to turn, he with kindness but with difficulty, replied—"I feel I give you great trouble. It is [illegible] perhaps, it is a duty which we all owe to another—I trust that you may receive due attention when you shall require it."

As the night waned, the fatal symptoms became more imminent—his breath more laborious and suffocating and his voice soon failed him. Perceiving his end approaching, he stretched himself to his full length, he folded his own hands in the necessary attitude upon his chest, placing his finger upon the pulse of his left wrist, and thus calmly prepared, and watching his own dissolution, he awaited the enmmons of his Maker. The last faint hope of his friends had disappeared; Mrs. Washington, stupefied with grief, sat at the foot of the bed, her eyes fixed steadfastly upon him; Dr. Craik, in deep gloom, stood with his face buried in his hands at the fire; his faithful black servant, Christopher, the tears uncontrolled, trickling down his face, on one side took the last look of his dying master; while Mr. Lear in speechless grief, with folded hands, bent over his pillow on the other.

"Nought broke the stillness of his last moments but the suppressed sobs of his affectionate servants collected on the stair case; the tick of the large clock in the hall as it measured off with painful distinctness the last, fleeting moments of his existence, and the low moan of the winter wind, as it swept through the leafless snow covered trees. The laboring and weariest spirit drew nearer and nearer its goal; the blood languidly coursed slower and more slowly through its channels—the noble heart stopped—struggled—stopt—fluttered—the right hand slowly slid from the wrist, upon which his finger had been placed—it fell at the side—and the manly effigy of Washington was all that remained upon the death couch!" [N. Y. Courier and Enquirer.

Goethe upon Lord Byron.

Lord Byron was altogether in the dark about himself. He lived most passionately from day to day, and he never knew and cared what he was about. Indulging himself with every license, and approving of nothing in others, it was natural that he should be at war with himself, and the world with him. From the very beginning, he offended the most eminent writers with his "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers."

At a later period he could not live with them without taking a step backwards, and revoking some of the better things he had said. In his works he continued his opposition and censure; he attacked the State and Church. This inconsiderate opposition compelled him, at length, to leave England, and, in the course of time, it would have driven him out of Europe. Everything was too narrow for him. Enjoying as he did the most unlimited personal liberty, he felt himself oppressed; to him the world was a prison. He went to Greece, not from his own free will, but because his false position to the world compelled him to take that step.

His renouncing all tradition; and all patriotism, was his ruin, and his revolutionary tendencies, and his agitation of mind, prevented a proper development of his talents. This eternal opposition and censure is, moreover, highly derogatory to his excellent works, such as they are. For not only does the reader share the poet's discomfort, but all this opposition tends to negation, and negation is nothing. What can be the advantage of saying that bad things are bad? And when I say that good things are bad, I do a great deal of harm. Whoever would do good in the world ought not to deal in censure, he ought not to pay any attention to what is wrong, and he ought always to do that which is good. We ought not to destroy, but we ought to construct what may be pleasing to humanity.

Lord Byron is to be considered as a man, as an Englishman, and as a great genius. He derives his good qualities from his quality as a man; his bad qualities are owing to his being an Englishman and a peer of the realm. His genius is incommensurable.

All Englishmen, as such, are without reflection. Dissipation and party spirit prevent all quiet development. But they are great as practical men.

Lord Byron, for instance, was never able to reflect on himself, and reflections generally were by no means his forte, as it proved by his motto: "Plenty of money and no government," for plenty of money makes in fact no government.

But he succeeds in all he produces, and of him it may be said that inspiration supplies the want of reflection. He was always a poet, and hence what came from his heart, was excellent. He came by his pieces as women come by pretty children; they do not think of them, and do not know how or in what way.

His is a great and innate genius, and I have never known of any one who possessed true poetic power to such an extent as he. In his conceptions of the world, and his clear view of the past, he is as great as Shakspeare. But Shakspeare's pure individuality is more powerful. Byron knew this, and that is the reason why he does not say much about Shakspeare, though he had whole scenes from his plays in his memory. He would gladly have ignored him, for Shakspeare's humor is a stumbling stone in his path; he feels that he cannot compete with it. He did not ignore Pope, because he had no reason to fear him. He respects him, and quotes him on all occasions, for he is well aware that Pope is a mere wall compared to him.

His high rank, as an English peer, was very obnoxious to Byron. Every genius is hampered by the outer world, and much more so a genius whose lot is cast in a high position, and who is encumbered with wealth. A certain middle estate is most congenial to genius; hence all great artists and poets spring from the middle classes. Byron's passion for the nalimited would not have been so dangerous to him, if his birth had been lower, and his means smaller. But as it was, he had it in his power to do all he wanted to do, to follow the impulse of the moment, and this entangled him in unmeaning quarrels. Besides, how could a man of high rank have respect and consideration for any other class? He gave utterance to every movement of his soul, and he was consequently always engaged in a conflict with the world.

It is a curious fact, that a great portion of the life of a high-born and wealthy Englishman is spent in elopements and duels. Lord Byron himself tells us that his father ran away with three women. Under such circumstances, how can a man be expected to be a steady son?

He lived always in a state of nature, and he must always have been sensible of the necessity of self-defence. Hence his practice of pistol shooting. He might expect a challenge at every hour in the day. He could not live a solitary life; hence, in spite of all his whimsicalities, he was very indolgent to his companion. For a poet he was really as quiet as a lamb.

Byron would be much greater as a poet if all his opposition had vented itself in Parliament. But as he scarcely came to make a speech, he kept all his invectives against his nation in his own heart, and nothing was let to him but to work them up into poetry. A great many instances of Byron's negative spirit may be designated as Speeches Out of Doors.

Byron's Cain shows how unsatisfactory the Church doctrine was to a fine mind like his, and how he struggled by means of that piece to emancipate himself from the doctrine which had been forced upon him. The English clergy have no reason to be grateful to him.

Byron's women are capital. Women, indeed, is the only vessel into which we moderen may pour our ideality. Homer has caricatured every thing else in his Achilles and Odysseus; the bravest man and the wisest.

Although Byron died at an early age, it cannot be said that literature lost much. Byron could not go farther. He had reached the summit of his creative power, and however much he might have written, he could not have enlarged the limits which were fixed for his genius. In that incomprehensible poem of the Last Judgment, he went to the extremes of his capabilities.

The Late George Lippard.

The editor of the Cleveland Paindealer, who enjoyed in an emiaent degree the friendship of this remarkable man, gives the following sketch of his life and character:

Mr. Lippard was born about the year 1823. When scarcely sixteen years of ago he was left an orphan, without money and without friends. Rich relatives who should have extended a fostering hand to him and his only sister, treated them with cold neglect. The impulsive, warm-hearted boy was left to battle his way in the cold, wide, wide world, with none but "Providence his guide." His talents secured him a place in a Philadelphia daily newspaper, where he rapidly attained fair wages, from which he contrived to support himself and sister.

At the age of twenty-one he published his first novel, "Ladye Annabel," a wierd-wild romance of the Rosicucian School. It bears traces of extraordinary talent, transcending in our opinion, the celebrated "Monk," by M. G. Lewis, Mrs. Radcliffe's "Mysteries of Udolpho," or any other masterpiece in that class of fiction. The work was popular, and the general favor of his reception induced the author to continue his efforts in the field of exciting romance. "The Legends of the Revolution," were the next product of his pen. Their fidelity to nature, their fine poetical garb, and the spirit of patriotism and veneration that breathed over every page, commended them at once to public taste. Their popularity is unabated to this day, and though all else should fail, will ensure perpetuity to the author's name. Of his later productions, the "Quaker City," "Jesus and the Poor," "The Nazarene," "Legends of Mexico," "The White Banner," the "Upper Ten and Lower Millions," the same general comment may be applied. They are eloquent, impetuous, out-spoken, well-meant, vindications of the poor, and their rights and titles to a fair share of this earth's lands and goods—exhibiting everywhere a spirit of sacrifice, devotion and earnestness. Should we select either of his numerous works for special eulogy, it would be "The White Banner." It was the dear and cherished child of the author. It contains the sum of his earthly aims, and his religious aspirations.

Mr. Lippard was in the full tide of literary success, (and was earning money—notwithstanding the mean advantages taken by booksellieg harpies of his generous and confiding nature—) until betwaea two and three years ago, when misfortune rained upon his dwelliag. He first lost his sister, to whom he was teaderly attached, and, not long after, death struck down his geatle, lovely and affectionate wife. Another blow, and his only child was taken from him. His sensitive mind shrank from these combined adversities. Away from the wreck and waste of his household gods, he wandered forth a broken-hearted man. For him was no more joy, nor happiness or earthly peace. With unflinching heroism, he devoted himself to building up the "Order of Brotherhood," of which he was the chief officer, and which had attained a goodly strength under his excelleat tact and watchful care. He was, we believe, a member of the orders of Odd Fellows and Masons. Those who casually met Mr. Lippard could form no just estimate of his geaius and moral worth. To do so required an intimate acquaintance. The playful levity, which he assumed at times, was but the superficial element of his character. Beneath were deep and sacred purposes and manly zeal. No effort, however, could tear from his heart the holy images there enshrined. To them his mind reverted with a tender fondness, that "grew by what it fed upon." He ever sorrowed and ever sighed to join his loved ones in that distant Aideun where the world's wrongs are "set aright," and this world's woes giva place to perfect bliss. His prayer is granted.

Poor Lippard. He was a life of toil, of sorrow, of unrequitted work, of noble impulses misunderstood, of generous enterprises unfulfilled. Like Coleridge, he might have said—

> "To be beloved is all I need.
> And whom I love, I love indeed."

Those who enjoyed his tender friendship will drop a tear to his hallowed memory.

The Author of Alton Locke.—While lingering there, I observed Lord Carlisle greet, with much cordiality, a slight, pale, refined, clerical looking man who stood near us. After a few minutes' conversation, his lordship introduced this gentlemen to me as the Rev. Charles Kingsley, author of "Alton Locke." I did not meet him without emotion—for I had been most deeply impressed by the power and purpose, the terrible earnestness of his writings, the heart-crushing pathos, the fearful vividness of his pictures of misery, of the mortal desperation of the struggle of the poor with want and wretchedness, and all the horrible shapes of sin and despair. You see few indications of the impassioned strength of Mr Kingsley's genius in his countenance or conversation. He is quiet in the extreme, even while talking of art like an artist and a poet. I should think his mental life inwardly intense, rather than outwardly demonstrative, except through the pen. He spoke of America with much interest, and with fine appreciation of the spirit of her institutions. [Grace Greenwood's "Haps and Mishaps."

Bulwer, who is only 48 years old, (though he has been thirty years before the public,) is likely to become one of the next conservative ministry. His property in Hertfordshire—Knebworth, near Stevenage—is worth about £15,000 a year. His works add £2000 a year to this reatal, and his new publications—for he cannot help writing—may be calculated at about as much more. If Lady Bulwer were defunct, I doubt not that Bulwer would obtain a peerage. On the terms on which they now stand, he would decline an honor to be shared with her. Lady Bulwer, whom I recollect as a lovely young creature some twenty-five years ago, has gradually been changed into a stout, coarse-minded woman, and certainly has not improved the delicacy of her mind by familiar association with Mrs Trollope, with whom she lives. [N. Y. Sunday Times.

What's the difference between an attempted homicide and a Cincinnati hog-butchery? "Don't guap!" One is an assault with intent to kill, and the other is to kill with intent to salt!

A Lady's Wants.

Elizabeth, the daughter of Sir John Spencer, who flourished in the middle of the sixteenth century and was known as the "Rich Spencer," married an English nobleman, to whom, a few years after her marriage, she addressed the following letter:

"My Street Life—Now that I have declared to you my mind for the settling of your estate, I suppose that it were best for me to bethink what allowance were best for me: for, considering what care I have ever had of your estate, and how respectfully I dealt with those, which both by the law of God, nature and civil policy, wit, religion, governmeat and honesty, you, my dear, are bound to, I pray and beseech you to grant to me, your most kind and loving wife, the sum of one thousand pounds per annum, to be paid quarterly.

"Also, I would, besides that allowance for my apparel, have six hundred pounds added yearly for the performance of charitable works: these things I would ast, neither be accountable for.

"Also, I will have three horses for my own saddle, that none shall dare to lend or borrow; none lend but I, none borrow but you.

"Also, I would have two gentlewomen, lest one should be sick; also, believe it would be an indecent thing for a gentlewoman to staud mumping alone, when God has blessed their Lord and Lady with a great estate.

"Also, when I ride hunting or hewking, or travel from one house to another, I will have them attending, so for each of those said women I must have a horse.

"Also, I will have six or eight gentlemen, and will have two coaches; one lined with velvet to myself, with four very fair horses; and a coach for my women, lined with sweet cloth, orelaid with gold; the other with scarlet, and laid with watchet lace and silver, with four good horses. Also, I will have two coachmen, one for myself, the other for my women.

"Also, whenever I travel, I will be allowed not only coaches and spare horses for me and my women, but such carriages as shall be fitting for all; orderly, not pestering my things with my women's, nor theirs with chamber-maids', nor theirs with washmaids'.

"Also, I unndresse, when I trnvel: I will have them seat away with the carriages to see all safe; and the chambermeids shall go before with the grooms, that the chambers may be ready, sweet and olean.

"Also, for that it is indecent for me to crowd myself with my gentleman usher in my coech, I will have him have a convenient horse, to attend me either in city or country; and I must have four footmen; and my desire is that you will defray the charges for me.

"And for myself, besides my yearly allowance, I would have twenty gowns apparel, six of them excellent good oaes, eight of them for the country, and six others of them excellent good oaes.

"Also, I would have two put in my purse two thousand pounds and two hundred pouads, and so you to pay my debts. Also, I would have eight thousand pounds to buy me jewels, and six thousand pounds for a pearl chain.

"Now seeing I have been, and am so reasonable unto you, I prey you to find my children apparel, and their schooling, and all my servants, men and women, their wages.

"Also, I will have all my houses furnished, and all my lodging chambers to be suited with such furniture as is fit, as beds, stools, chairs, cushions, carpets, silver warmieg-pens, cupboards of plate, fair haagings, etc.; for my drawieg chambers in all houses, I will have them deliostely furnished with hangings, couch, oanopy, oushions, carpets, etc.

"Also, my desire is that you would pay your debts, build up Ashly House, and purchase lende, and lend no money (as you love God) to the Lord Chamberlain, which would have all, perhaps your life, from you; remember his son, my Lord Wildan, what entertainments he gave me when you were at the Tiltyard. If you were dead, he said he would be a husband, a father, a brother, and he said he would marry me. I protest, I grieve to see the poor man with so little wit and honesty to use his friend so vilely; also, he fed me with untruths concerning the Chartar House; but that is the least; he wished me much harm; you know how. God keep you and me from him, and such as he is.

"So now I have declared to you my mind, what I would have and what I would not have; I pray you, when you be Earl, to allow a thousaad pounds more than now I desired, and double atteadance. Your loving wife,

"Eliz. Compton."

Rules for Escoating Ladies.—The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald, in a long homily on the conduct of ladies in the capital, among other things, says:

Never, or very rarely, offer to carry a lady's shawl or parasol, or put your hand on her shoulder or round her waist (as is often done) in assisting her out of the carriage, or into her seat. To undertake woman all such clapping and clawing is the most insufferable rudeness. The proper way when you alight, is to offer your left arm as a support for the lady's right hand, and to hold your right hand in readiness, should the exigencies of skirts, etc., permit her taking it with her left. In ascending a staircase, keep side by side with the lady, but do not be too ostentatious in offering your arm, lest in attempt to take it she neglects the management of her skirts, steps on her dress, and either falls or tears it out at the waist.

If you attend two ladies, place the one next you who is entitled, either by rank or preference, to the post of honor—but on no account whatever walk between them. A man with a lady on each arm is a laughable paraphrase of a donkey laden with two panniers. Observe a different rule, however, in taking your places in a concert room. The gentleman in those should be preceded and followed by a lady. At table, a gentleman and lady who have a guest (I speak now of the hotel table, for we are really getting to know scarcely any other in this country;) always place him or her between. If the guests are also two, then you place your lady guest between your wife and yourself, while the gentleman takes the other end of the line, leaving the ladies in the middle. The logic, as well as the convenience of all these little arrangements, will be suggested by a single thought—and how much awkwardness, and consequent mortification and annoyance, would be avoided by a careful observance of these simple rules.

A New Parisian Device.—A man named Boissonneau was tried by the tribunal of correctional police, in Paris, for a very ingenious, though scarcely credible, species of robbery. He one day went to a pastry cook and said, "I shall require to-morrow 400 brioches;" (a sort of bun.) "They shall be got ready, sir," replied the pastry cook, after having asked his name and address. He then went to a watch maker opposite, and selected a watch of 200f. As the trader was picking it up, he said, "I am a wholesale butter dealer; the pastry cook opposite owes me 400f—he will pay you—come with me." The watch maker followed the man to the pastry cook's. "I have come to tell you," said the prisoner, "that I shall only want 200—and that you must give the other 200 to this person, your neighbor." On this the watch maker unsuspectingly allowed him to walk off with the watch, but to his profound astonishment, there arrived the next day, not 200f, but 200 brioches. The trick was then discovered. Nothing was seen of the man until a few days ago, when he was recognized by the pastry cook's boy, dressed in grotesque style, and selling pencils in the midst of a crowd. The tribunal condemned him to a year's imprisonment. [Galignani's Messenger.

Removal of the Dead.—The discussion about removieg dead people in New York, to make way for new streets, is going on warmly, and the sacrilegious proposition is very forcibly opposed. With regard to the extension of Albany street through Trinity churchyard, in which dead bodies are deposited to the depth of thirty feet, a writer in the New York papers says, in a postscript to a long article in deprecation of this measure: "Suppose such an improbable event as the ultimate success of this sacrilegious measure, what is to become with the mould and skeletons? The width of the street is 50 feet, the excavation will be 30 feet in depth, and the graveyard is 200 feet wide, which gives three hundred and sixty thousand cubic feet of human dust and bones. What will you do with it—dump it in the docks—fill vacant lots with it? Let our ships sink at low tide into an ooze of decayed humanity? Let our up-town housekeepers build coal-bins and potato-bins in the dust of their ancestors? Will the people bear this? Certainly not. Will they bear the enormous expense necessary to avoid it? Just as surely not. The only way in which the dire dilemma can be avoided is to respect the dead."

Newspapers.—After being long in the newspaper world, an editor must be very dull or very unsocial, who does not form a tolerably intimate acquaintence with all the papers on his exchange list. Chatting with them at his leisure every day of the week, he feels as if he knew personally each of the editors, and could draw a tolerably faithful portrait of his moral and intellectual, if not his physical features. Regular authors, who sit down to write books, may very well manage to conceal their personality, or appear only in a false and artificial guise. But it is next to impossible for the editor, who is every day talking with the public, and has no time to wait for anything except that which comes uppermost, to hide himself or appear other than he is. Impulsive or cautious, modest or self-conceited, courageous or timeserving, warm hearted and generous or cold and stolid, kind and forgiving or cynical and malignant, these nice are seen by others in their newspapers, as plainly as they see themselves in their looking-glasses. Judging editors by this standard, it would be difficult for a man to pass a morning hour among a more agreeable, well behaved and intelligent set of gentlemen, than the editors with whom we chat every day, through the medium of their papers.

Editors improve in their social qualities, become more tolerant to others, and less self-opinionated, as they obtain more experience in their professions. The painful sense of responsibility, which weighed upon them when they entered the profession, wears off as they discover that they are by no means carrying the world on their shoulders, and that though they are at perfect liberty to pitch into anything and everything, it by no means follows that anybody but themselves cares a copper whet they pitch into. It is only when the press acts as the organ of enlightened public sentiment, that its power is at all formidible. [Richmond Dispatch.

Settling a Bill.—Four sharpers having treated themselves to a sumptuous dinner at the Hotel Montreuil, were at a loss how to settle for it, and hit on the following plan: They called the waiter and asked him for the bill. One thrust his hand into his pocket as if to draw his purse, the second prevented him, declaring he would pay; the third did the same. The fourth forbade the waiter from taking any money from either of them, but all three persisted. At last one said: "The best way to decide is to blindfold the waiter, and whoever he first catches shall settle the bill." This proposition was accepted, and while the waiter was grouping his way around the room they slipped out of the house one after another.

What's in a Name?—A Washington letter suggests that the new territory obtained from Mexico under Mr. Gadeden's treaty, to which the fanciful name of Arsconia has been given by him, be called Fagendia, as being the fag end of something. The latter is not appropriate for several reasons. The territory in question is the beet or creek end of Mexico, and again, if the name were adopted, it should be "Fagendia No. I," as it unquestionably is but one of a series to come into the Union either by treaty or conquest.

Cost of a Daily Paper.—The Times and Transcript, of San Francisco, estimates the weekly cost of a daily paper at San Francisco at $2700, or $140,000 per annum. There are some twelve of these daily newspapers and some ten weeklies; so that we may safely estimate the cost of San Francisco newspaper literature at $1,500,000 per annum.

Sir John Franklin.—The British Admiralty have announced that if intelligence of Sir John Franklin or his ships, the Erebus and Terror, and of the officers and crews being alive, is not received by the 31st of March next, they will be considered as having died in her Majesty's service.

Great Speed.—The American clipper ship Red Jacket has made the voyage from New York to the dock at Liverpool in thirteen days, one hour and twenty-five minutes. In one day, Thursday the 19th January, she made 413 miles, which is said to be the greatest distance over run in twenty-fours by anything afloat.

The Alabama Loan Bill.—The Governor of Alabama has affixed his signature to the bill loaning $100,000 to the Mobile and Ohio Railraid Company, thus making it a law.

It was reported that over fifty deaths occurred on board the Antarctic during her passage from the wreck of the San Francisco to Liverpool. This is a mistake. The official report made by Lieut. Winder shows but twenty-one deaths.

Bayard Taylor thinks the ostire abolition of flogging in the Navy was a measure of mistaken philanthropy, of which the lazy seamen take advantage to the injury of their more honorable shipmates and of the service.

It is stated that the increase of crime, in the State of New York, during the past ten years, has been at the rate of about 13 per cent., while the population has increased in the same time, at the rate of 28 per cent.

The Buffalo Post says: "There are thirteen thousand marriageable girls now in the factories of Lowell. It is pleasant to know in this world of misery that there are thirteen thousand men yet to be made happy."

There is to me a dinntiaess about early flowers, that touches me like poetry. They blow out with such a simple lovelinces among the common herbes of pastures, and braathe their lives so unobtrusively, like hearts whose bealings are too gentle for the world. [Willis.

A large anti-Bedini meetiag was held in Philadelphia on the night of the 10th, at which resolutions were passed denouncing the conduct of Senators Cass, Douglas, Mason and Everett, and asking Congress to suspend diplomatic relations with Rome.

Man is like a snowball. Leave him in idleness against the sunny face of prosperity, and all the good that's in him melts like fresh bulterin hot days; but kick him around, and he gathers his strength every revolution until he growe to an avalanche. To make a figure in the world, you must keep moving.

February was established by Numa Pompilias as the second moath in the year. According to Ovid, in his "Fasti," a curious record of Roman customs, all objects which were thought to have the effect of moral purgation in the religious ceremonials of that people were called Februn. Our Saxon ancestors called February Sprout Kale, from the sprouting of the cabbage, still called Kale in Scotland.

It is stated that Mr. George Law is rapidly disposing of the two hundred thousand guns he some years since purchased of the Government, and is getting for them quadruple the sum he paid for them. The demand from abroad for American manufactured muskets and other firearms is represented to be far greater than the supply.

JEFFERSON BOOK STORE.

W. FLEMMING, BOOLSELLER and STATIGNER, corner of Jackson and Tchoupitoulas streets, Fourth District, New Orleans, would respectfully call the attention of Country Merchants, Colleges, Academies, Public Schools, etc., to my

LARGE STOCK OF SCHOOL BOOKS,

Consisting in part of—

SPELLING BOOKS, READING BOOKS, DICTIONARIES, Grammars, Rhetoric, Composition, Chemistry, Botany, Mineralogy, Geology, Natural History, Astronomy, Drawing, Book-keeping, Geography, Biography, Natural Philosophy, Elocution, Logic, History, Arithmetic, History, Geometry, Surveying, Mensuration, French Grammars, Dictionaries, Readers, etc.

SPANISH, GERMAN AND ITALIAN GRAMMARS, Dictionaries, Readers, etc.

GREEK AND LATIN BOOKS of all descriptions.

MISCELLANEOUS AND STANDARD WORKS; RELIGIOUS AND THEOLOGICAL WORKS, all denominations, which he offers to sell at much lower prices than heretofore sold in the South.

FANCY EMBOSSED NOTE PAPER AND ENVELOPES;

LETTER, CAP AND RECORD PAPER, of all qualities, Ruled and Plain.

BLANK BOOKS of all descriptions and sizes;

CHEAP PUBLICATIONS, MAGAZINES AND NEWSPAPERS;

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS;

ANNUALS for 1854, of all descriptions and styles of binding;

ALBUMS, FANCY PORTFOLIOS, WORK BOXES, WRITING DESKS, PORT MONNAIES, CARD CASES, MUSIC, etc

For sale, on reasonable terms, by

WILLIAM FLEMING,
fe25 1y Bookseller and Stationer.

☞ All orders promptly attended to.

D. B. TURNBULL. A. TURNBULL.

TURNBULL & CO.,

CARRIAGE REPOSITORY,

No. 11a Gravier street, rear of St. Charles Hotel, New Orleans.

☞ Every description of Carriages made to order.

D. B. & A. TURNBULL, fe14 1y Manufacturers, NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

A certain Secretary of State being asked why he did not promote merit, aptly replied, "Because merit did not promote me."

A desperate riot occurred among the Irish at Portland, Me., on the afternoon of the 11th. Several persons were badly injured, and one was killed. The police, aided by the priests, made several arrests.

The House of Representatives of Massachusetts, on the 14th inst., passed the resolutions against the Nebreska bill by a vote of 240 yeas to 18 nays. Of the latter, 11 were democrats and 2 were whigs.

It now appears from official statements that the Crystal Palace speculation will turn out a grand failure. The entire capital stock, all the receipts, and one hundred and twenty thousand dollars more have been spent, thus leaving the company in debt.

EDUCATION.

GREENSBORO' FEMALE COLLEGE,

GREENSBORO', N. C.

FACULTY:

CHARLES F. DEEMS, D. D., President and Professor of the Natural Sciences and Belles-Letters.

REV. TURNER M. JONES, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and the Ancient Languages.

MONS. ERNEST JOCANNE, (of the College of Henri-IV, Paris,) Professor of the French Language and Literature.

THEODORE WOLLE, Esq., Professor of Music.

MISS N. JANE SPEER, Miss NANNIE T. SPEED and Miss LUCY McKEE, Assistants in the Literary Departments.

MISS AUGUSTA M. HAGEN, Madame JOUANNE and Miss CAROLINE A. BLAKE Assistants in the Department of Music.

MISS R. L. SIMPSON, Drawing and Painting.

THOMAS C. BLAKE, Esq., Steward.

MRS T. C. BLAKE, Governess.

The Institution is situated in a healthy part of Central North Carolina. It is under the charge of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In the selection of the Faculty the Trustees have had reference first of all to superior qualifications, and as far as practicable have obtained ladies and gentlemen of Southern birth and education.

The course of study is as full and as thorough as that in the best Female Seminaries. While particular attention is paid to the solid branches of education, sufficient regard is had for the ornamental: but above all the culture of the morals of their pupils is considered the great work of the teachers. Special lessons of economy are inculcated. The pupils are not allowed under any circumstance to contract debts. Parents deposit money in advance. All the expenditures of the scholars are under direct supervision of the President, and their purchases are made by their teachers. Perhaps in no similar Institution of its numbers have the bills of the pupils been so small in the aggregate as at this College during the past year.

The department of Natural Science is furnished with an excellent apparatus, some of the instruments being of the highest finish, with all modern improvements. Lectures are delivered on Chemistry by the President, and on Natural Philosophy by Prof. Jones, weekly, and are accompanied by experiments. In the selection of the Professor of French regard was had to purity and accuracy of pronunciation, and the present incumbent of that chair possesses more than ordinary qualifications for his office. The practical use of the language in conversation is the aim of daily lessons.

In the department of Oil Painting the teacher does not seek to give her pupils simply a "pretty pictnre" at the close of the session, but the principles of the art are assiduously taught in the expectation that those who have special talent for design may prosecute self-culture after leaving the school.

All the principal teachers have had much experience in the business of their profession, and "thoroughness" is the motto throughout the whole Institution. The Faculty are working under this formula: "We are striving to make not the largest but the best school in the land."

TERMS:

$70 a session (of 20 weeks) for Tuition and Board, including washing, fuel, lights, furnished rooms and attendance; $20 extra for music on the Piano or Guitar, or for Oil Painting; $5 for Drawing or French or Latin. The Trustees believe that no school of its grade at the South offers such advantages on such favorable terms.

For further particulars application may be made to the President of the College.

The next session will open December 28, 1853. ja6-8t

BARDSTOWN FEMALE INSTITUTE.

Rev. A. A. Morrison, A. M., Principal.

This Institution is under the patronage of the Louisville Annual Conference, and is located in Bardstown, Ky. Bardstown is located on the turnpike from Nashville to Louisville, with a line of daily stages passing through, and is 30 miles south of the latter city. Bardstown is pleasantly located, and is proverbial for health. The Institute buildings are large and commodious, and the pleasure grounds attached pleasant and spacious.

The Institution is furnished with a full Board of experienced and accomplished Teachers, and the course of study as select and thorough as can be found in any similar Institution to the land. The school is permanently established, and in point of healthiness of locality and facilities for a thorough Female Education, on reasonable terms—this Institution offers peculiar inducements to Southern Methodists and to the Southern community generally.

TERMS PER SESSION OF TWENTY WEEKS.

(Board payable in advance: Tuition at the close of the Session.)

Primary Department	$ 8 00
Junior Class	12 00
Middle Class	15 00
Senior Class	18 00
Music on Piano or Guitar	20 00
Vocal Music	4 00
Drawing and Painting	10 00
Greek, Latin, French or German	8 00
Boarding, including Washing, Lights and Fuel	40 00
For Fuel in school-room in winter	1 00

The next session will commence on the 30th of January last.

REFERENCES:

Rev J B McFerrin, Nashville, Tenn.; W. H. Hickman, M. D.; Hon G. W. Hite, Bardstown, Ky; Rev C. B. Parsons, Rev E. Stevenson, Rev E. W. Sehon, Rev A. H. Redford, Louisville, Ky; and the Ministers of the Louisville Conference generally.

Bardstown, Jan. 5, 1854.—6t

EMORY and HENRY COLLEGE.

WASHINGTON COUNTY, VA.

THE SPRING SESSION of this Institution will commence on the 12th January, 1854. There is no better no College in the South offering stronger inducements to young men desirous of a thorough course of collegiate instruction.

TERMS:

Tuition per session of 5 months	$15 00
Board " " "	31 50
Washing " " "	5 00
Fuel " " "	2 00
Contingent charge " "	1 25
	$54 75

With a location famous for health, with ample Libraries and Apparatus, with a full and efficient Board of Instruction, and with a degree of cheapness unparalleled, any young men with limited means, fair abilities and proper energy can here acquire a superior, liberal or business education. For further information address

E. M. WILEY, President,
Emory Post-office, Va.

jan3-6t

BUSINESS CARDS.

$50 TO $150 PER MONTH

Can be easily made in selling the

POPULAR BOOKS,

Published by MILLER, ORTON & MULLIGAN, successors to Derby & Miller, Auburn, and Derby, Orton & Mulligan, Buffalo.

From the wide-spread reputation of our publications,

Book Agents, Colporteurs and Canvassers

can be sure, with ordinary diligence, of doing well, as there is hardly a family in the country but would be glad to purchase one or more books from the list, if they were brought to their door. They are all Good Books, well printed, strongly bound, and sell readily wherever offered.

To all those desirous of aiding in the noble work of disseminating a pure and wholesome literature throughout our land, we offer a RARE CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY and do great good.

Catalogues of our Publications, containing full particulars, furnished on application (post-paid) to

MILLER, ORTON & MULLIGAN,
Publishers of Popular Books,
feb18 4t Auburn and Buffalo, N. Y.

DISSOLUTION.

THE Limited Copartnership heretofore existing between the subscribers, under the firms of Derby & Miller, Auburn, and Derby, Orton & Mulligan, Buffalo, is this day dissolved. Norman C. Miller, of Auburn, and Eugene Mulligan, of Buffalo, each and they alone, are authorized to sign the names of the late firm in liquidation.

JAMES C DERBY,
ELLIOT G. STORKE, NORMAN C. MILLER,
EDWARD MUNSON, WM ORTON,
CHAS. F. COFFIN, EUGENE MULLIGAN,
Special Partners. General Partners.

Dated at Auburn and Buffalo, Feb. 1, 1854.

COPARTNERSHIP.

Norman C. Miller, William Orton, Eugene Mulligan, Elliot G. Storke, Edward Munson, and Charles F. Coffin, being purchasers of the entire list of Publications, Stereotype Plates, Copy-rights, Type, Presses, Stock, &c., of the late firms, will, with increased facilities, continue the business as Publishers, Importers and general Booksellers at Auburn and Buffalo, under the firm of

MILLER, ORTON & MULLIGAN.

Dated at Auburn and Buffalo, Feb. 1, 1854. 3t

WHOLESALE DRY GOODS TRADE.

SPRING IMPORTATIONS, 1854.

JOSEPH H. PALMER & CO. have in store, and are receiving regularly from the European and American markets their usual supplies of seasonable Goods, viz:

PRINTED GOODS, comprising Calicoes of various styles and qualities; Lawns, Jaconets, Organdies, Barages, &c.

LINEN GOODS—Irish Linens of every grade, Linen Drills, Linen Sheetings, Table Linens, Brown Linens, Grass Linens, Brown Hollands, Drown and Bleached Duck, Plaid Linens, Farmers' Drills, Linen and Lawn Handkerchiefs, every quality.

SILK GOODS, embracing plain and figured Dress Silks, Plaid Silks, Foulards, Satins, Velvets, Florences, Shawls, Handkerchiefs, Sewings, &c.

WOOLEN and WORSTED GOODS, comprising De Laines, Barages, Merinos, Alpacas, Bombazines, Canton Cloths, &c.

COTTON GOODS, consisting in part of Brown and Bleached Cotton Shirtings and Sheetings, of every quality and width; Cottonades, Cambrics, Chambrays, Nankeens, Checks Stripes, Denims, &c., at extremely low prices by the piece and package only.

JOSEPH H. PALMER & CO.,
Importers and Wholesale Dealers,
feb18 47 Camp st.

M. DUROSE,

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

Plaquemine, La.

☞ Practices in the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Tensas, and in the Supreme Court of the State.

References—Messrs. Wright, Williams & Co., Messrs. A. J. Wright & Co., Messrs. J. T. Donald & Co., Messrs. Joseph H. Palmer & Co., Messrs. I. D. Fuller & Co., Messrs. Rose & Foster, Attorneys at Law, New Orleans.

jy11 1y

JOHN HOLMES. L. CLAUSS.

HOLMES & CLAUSS,

GROCERS AND DEALERS IN PRODUCE,

NO. 8 GRAVIER STREET,

ap29 NEW ORLEANS.

SAM. HEND

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

{ J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 5. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1854. WHOLE NO. 161.

THE SHIP AT ANCHOR.

Is she not beautiful? reposing there
Oh her own shadow, with her white wings furl'd;
Moveless, as in the sleepy sunny air,
Rests the meek swan in her own watery world.

Is she not beautiful? her graceful bow
Triumphant rising o'er the enamor'd tides;
Trial, glittering in his noonday sunbeam, now
Just leap and dis along her polish'd sides.

A thousand eyes are on her; for she floats
Confess'd a queen upon the subject main;
And hark! se from her decks delicious notes
Breathe, softly breathe, a soul-entrancing strain.

Music upon the waters, pouring soft
From shore to shore, along the charmed wave,
The seaman's dreariest toils beguiling oft,
And kindling high the ardor of the brave.

Yet, wafted by the morning's favoring breeze
Far from the slumbering fleet and leaf hung bay,
That matchless bark upon the faithless seas
Shall wind her wild and solitary way.

There, haply tempest borne, far other sounds
Than those shall tremble through her quiv'ring form,
And as frau surge to mightier surge she bounds,
Shall swell, toned lamalie, the maidenly storm!

In vain she spurns the ignoble calm, and loves
To front the tempest in his gathering hour;
Wafted, as to life, the fleet-wing'd wander roves
Where loudest lift he winds a voice of power.

Then go, deceitful beauty! bathe thy breast
Forever where the mountain billows foam.
E'en as thou wilt—the hour of peace and rest
Is not for thee—the ocean is thy home!

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

JEWISH FESTIVALS.

FEAST OF TABERNACLES.

"On the evening of the fourteenth day of Tisbri, this feast commences. (Lev., xxiii, 42.) The interval between the day of atonement and this festival is employed in preparations for this festive period. Each family fits up some room—especially built for this purpose, for a booth, or erects one in the court yard or garden. The ungenial climate of the north, and the advanced season of the year (generally late in September), will not allow the Jew to make the booth his regular dwelling place during the festival, but he at least takes his meals in it.

"Another peculiarity of this festival is the use of a branch of a palm-tree, or a willow, myrtle and citron. It is these which, according to tradition, are meant by Leviticus xxiii, 40. The willow branch and the myrtle are tied to the lower part of the bough of the palm-tree, but the citron is kept separate; and it is the duty of every congregation to provide these requisites for the use of the members. There are, however, few religious Jews, who, if they can afford it, do not procure them for their private use. Grasping the palm-branch with the right hand, and with the left the citron, and holding them close together, a benediction, expressive of the occasion, is pronounced, and the uranean slightly shaken. This ceremony is gone through every morning during the seven days of the festival, and by each individual separately. No Jew would taste food before the performance of this rite."—Chambers.

The five intermedinte days, between the two first and the two last of the feast of Tabernacles, or Succoth, are only celebrated as semi festivals, like the corresponding four days on Passover. The seventh day of the feast is called Hoshanah Rubbah or "Great Hosannahs"—by some "Willow Feast." This latter name it owes to the number of willow, or osier twigs used on the occasion. On the eve of this day (as well as on the eve of the first day of Pentecost, where I forgot to mention it), all the pious keep vigils at some particular house, where they read portions of the first four books of Moses, the whole of Deuteronomy, passages from the Sohar (a book of cabalistical myths), and the whole of the Book of Psalms. The alleged reason for this custom is that on the following day the celestial cabinet is said to determine on the weather of the coming winter. In order then that their prayers for rain should be more promptly heard, the Rabbins enjoined that they should watch and pray the preceding night, that the Lord may be gracious to them. Others say that on this day, the sentences, pronounced by the Divine Judge on the day of atonement, are finally ratified, and handed over to the angels appointed for this purpose. Wherefore, they say, it is the duty of every Jew, to repent on this day; because, if his sentence should happen to be an unfavorable one, and the Lord should find him now in a penitential mood, the sentence will be forthwith annulled! This is perhaps carrying the doctrine of "the eleventh hour" a little too far.

"The eighth day should properly conclude the festival; but rabbinical authority has added a ninth, under the title of Simchath Torah or 'Rejoicing of the Law.' This, as its name betokens, is a day of great merriment, in which even the gravest rabbis—of course in their own way—take part, expressive of their delight in, and attachment to, the Law, the last section of which is publicly chanted in the Synagogue; for the Pentateuch is divided into fifty-four sections, according to the number of Sabbaths, contained in an intercalary year; and on each Sabbath, beginning with that following this festival, its respective portion is read, so that the whole cycle is completed on the Sabbath before, or rather, as established by custom, on that festival. The Synagogues on this occasion exhibit scenes of extraordinary bustle, and not rarely, also uproarious joy. In the evening, the places of worship are crowded, and the boys are seen entering with little gayly-painted banners and wax-tapers in their hands. The Synagogues are most sumptuously lighted; and before the ark generally glitters a veil of very costly materials, not unfrequently gorgeously bedecked with pearls and precious stones.

"After a short service, the veil is drawn back, the ark opened, and the scrolls of the law—covered with costly stuffs, and occasionally also with plates of precious metal—are solemnly handed by the beadle to various persons summoned by name to the ark for that purpose. This done, a portable canopy carried by several youths, is extended over the minister and wardens, who, with the scrolls in their hands, head a solemn procession, which is joined by all other bearers of scrolls, the youth, and the little boys, the latter holding in their hands the banner alluded to, at the tops of which, lighted wax-tapers are fastened, all chanting hymns in praise of the law."—Chambers.

This concludes the series of festivals, called "the Days of Awe;" and now the Jew is free to follow his usual avocations for six months, with only Sabbatary interruption. One more article will serve to wind up my connection with the reader.

COLUMBIA, S. C. JOSEPHUS.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

EPISCOPAL DISTRICTS.

MR. EDITOR.—In view of the interest manifested with regard to "strengthening the Episcopacy" by increasing the number of Bishops in our Church, I desire to submit the following plan to the judgment of those who are interested in the matter.

1. Let the ensuing General Conference elect five or six additional Bishops.

2. Let the general work be so arranged as to form eight or ten Episcopal Districts.

3. Let each of the Bishops be assigned to an Episcopal District for the ensuing four years.

4. Let the Bishops be required to hold a Conference in every Presiding Elder's district once a year.

5. Let the following be inserted as a section in the Discipline:

OF THE DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

Question 1. Of whom shall the District Conferences be composed?

Answer. Of all the traveling and local preachers in the Presiding Elder's district.

Ques. 2. Who shall preside in the District Conferences?

Ans. The Bishop, or, in his absence, the Presiding Elder. If the Bishop and Presiding Elder should both be absent, the Conference shall elect a president pro. tem.

Ques. 3. What is the regular business of the District Conference?

Ans. 1. To take cognizance of all the local preachers in the district, and to inquire into the gifts, labors and usefulness of each preacher, by name.

2. To renew the license of local preachers when in the judgment of the conference their gifts, grace and usefulness, will warrant such renewal.

3. To elect Deacons and Elders in the local connection. Provided, that no person shall be so elected without the recommendation of the Quarterly Conference, of which he is a member.

4. To try and suspend, expel or acquit any local preacher in the district against whom charges may be brought.

Some of the advantages of this plan are,

1. It would enable the bishops to visit every portion of the work, not merely as presiding officers, but as the chief pastors of the flock. It is a strange fact that the great majority of our members have never seen a bishop, and perhaps a majority even of our preachers have never seen one except at an Annual Conference. Now, when it is considered that there is an almost universal desire on the part of both preachers and people to become acquainted with their bishops, and especially to hear them preach; it seems that a persistence in the present course of policy would hardly be expedient, and that great good would result from a more intimate relation between the Church and her superintendents.

2. By arranging the work in the manner proposed, the bishops would be saved from the necessity of traveling so much by public conveyances, and could more easily control their own time so as to preach to many congregations on their journeys. They would not be under the necessity of traveling so far to reach their work, nor of being from home so long at a time. It would enable them to become acquainted with all the preachers, both traveling and local, and also with the geographical position of the circuits and districts, and thus be better prepared to arrange the work and station the preachers at the Annual Conferences.

3. By remaining on the same work four years consecutively, the bishops would gain a more thorough knowledge of the condition of the work in every respect, and thus be better qualified to "oversee the spiritual and temporal business of the Church." And by changing their fields of labor at the end of four years, all the advantages of an itinerant general superintendency would be secured.

4. By committing the examination of character and trial of local preachers to the district conferences, the great principle that "a man shall be tried by his peers," would be carried out in reference to them, as it is with regard to all other classes in the connection. It seems, too, that there would be a manifest propriety in confiding the election of deacons and elders in the local connection, in part, at least, to the local ministry. It would, moreover, be a great convenience to many of our local brethren if they could be ordained without being under the necessity of going to the Annual Conference. It is well known that many of them are elected for years before it is convenient for them to be ordained.

It may be objected, in the first place, that the plan of laying off the work into Episcopal Districts, would be in violation of the third restrictive rule, which prohibits the General Conference from changing "the rule of our government so as to destroy the plan of our itinerant general superintendency." It may be answered, If so, the rule has been violated for many years, for the Bishops invariably lay off the work into distinct fields of labor, and while this arrangement continues it is understood that each bishop has exclusive jurisdiction over his particular portion of the work. Now what does it matter so far as the principle is concerned, whether the arrangement is made for one year or for four. The necessity for this division of labor is seen at once from the consideration that it would be impossible for each one of the Bishops to superintend all and every part of the entire church, at the same time, without producing conflict and confusion. The design of the rule was evidently to raise a constitutional barrier against diocesan episcopacy, and it is presumed that no one desires to transcend that barrier. If the plan proposed should be adopted the bishops would still be itinerant and the superintendency would, as a whole still be general, in the sense in which it is so at present, so that the rule, both in its letter and spirit, would, it is believed, be complied with. It may be objected that district conferences were once tried and proved a failure.

It is true that from 1820 to 1836, there was a provision in the Discipline in reference to district conferences, and that they in a great measure failed to accomplish the end proposed. But the reasons of this are very evident. In the first place, none but the local preachers who had been licensed two years, were required to attend them. In the second place, they had nothing to do but what the quarterly conferences might do if the district conferences failed to meet, which was left somewhat optional with them, especially after 1824. The fact that all the traveling preachers in the districts would be members of the conference; the presence of the bishop, the ordination services, &c., in the plan proposed would give such interest and importance to the occasion as would probably secure a very general and regular attendance. It may be remarked further, that it would be returning to "the old land-marks."

Robert Emory says, "in 1792 the Discipline contemplated the holding of an Annual Conference in each Presiding Elder's district. And such was the practice of that day; as many as four such conferences being held in a month, and twenty of them in a year, by a single bishop." History of the Discipline, page 118.

Again, it may be objected that it would be an innovation—that the system has worked well, therefore let it alone.

It may be answered, "Let well enough alone," is a very good maxim, when it is indeed "well enough." But nothing is "well enough" that can be made better. And although the system has worked well, it by no means follows that it may not be made to work better. The language of Bishops Coke and Asbury was, "we think ourselves obliged to view and review annually the whole order of our church, always aiming at perfection: standing on the shoulders of those who have lived before us, and taking the advantage of our former selves." This is "old fashioned Methodism."

I desire to say, in conclusion, that with regard to the cardinal principles of Methodism, I want no change. I would, if possible, give them a greater efficiency by so adjusting the machinery as to have less friction and thereby gain greater speed in "reforming the world and spreading scriptural holiness over all lands." A. T. M. FLY.

Jackson, La., Feb. 20, 1854.

PREACHING TO THE HEART.

Preach to the heart, young man. Away with all your transcendentalism; your high-flown theories of the origin of evil, predestination, and Adamic imputation. Preach right to the heart, and leave these for older heads, if you can find any foolish enough to attempt it. Preach as Jesus Christ preached. Tell us of the bruised reed and the smoking flax. Tell us of his love, and what we must do to obtain that love. It is not our intellect so much that we want transformed. We don't care how sin got hold of us. All we know is—and we know it to our sorrow—that here it is; yes, just here in the very core of our hearts, working away with all its havoc and misery, and death. And we want to get rid of it. O, we are sick—sick at heart—sick all over; and we want a great physician. Tell us where we may find him. Tell us how we may. We are wounded by the shaft of affliction; where shall we go for comfort? We are distressed and heavy-laden; where shall we go for rest? We are baffled and torn, and tempted; where shall we go for succour? I had rather cheer the lonely widow's heart—O, I had rather heal a soul, wounded and torn by sin, than feed the intellect of the proudest philosopher that ever walked God's earth. I know Jesus Christ would love me the more for it, for it is just what he used to do.

But did not Paul preach to the head? But you are not Paul; nor have you been caught up to the third heaven; nor have you been called and directed by God, as he was, to lay the foundation of the Christian fabric. He has laid them, but here he has left them. How cautious, how reverent; how he shrinks when approaching the boundary of the fearful unknown! "Who art thou, that replies against God?"

Preach to the head. Yes; just so much as it is necessary to convince. But men are convinced that they are sinners. Their conscience has told them of it; the Bible has told them; they are convinced of it, but they want to feel it; and when they begin to feel it, they want Christ. They want him as you and I, young man, wanted him, when, broken-hearted and contrite, we lay at his throne pleading for his mercy; as the poor jailer wanted him when he cried, "What shall I do?" And when we have received Christ, we want him kept before us. We still want to hear of his love; of his precious example which he charged us to follow; we want to hear how he went about doing good; how he comforted poor sorrowing hearts; about his long nights of prayer; his temptations and glorious triumphs; that we may go and do likewise. And then we want to know, too, how to die as well as live; how to suffer as well as enjoy. O, how much we, poor sinners, want to know; and how short the time to acquire it; how shorter still to practise it! Tell us all this, and then, when we have done with this sin, the ages of eternity will have rolled around ere we shall have done with it—then tell us what the Bible has withheld. Independent.

"YOU LED ME TO CHRIST."

So said one who formerly sat under our ministry, when, after a separation of years, we renewed our acquaintance with her in her last sickness. As we entered the chamber, where she lay in the last stages of consumption, turning toward us with a radiance almost celestial, she exclaimed, "You led me to Christ. I was brought up in error. I lived in worldliness. I felt at ease in my sins. Your sermons awakened me. Your conversation enlightened me. You led me to Christ,—and my husband, and my sister also. I am so glad to see you before I die. I am at peace. Christ is precious. I am going to be with my Savior. You led me to Christ."

Our emotions found a brief, tearful, broken utterance in prayer; and the day following, we learned that she had gone to be with Christ.

No joy, saving that only of personal communion with God, can equal that of leading a soul to Christ. No other act has such a far-reaching influence, no other act lays hold so directly upon eternal interests, or brings us into such living sympathy with heaven.

We recently received a letter from a foreign missionary, that revives one of the most tender associations of former years. "Can I ever forget," he says, "that through college you were my chosen friend! For years we sat side by side in the same recitation-room. We were side by side in the boarding-house. We investigated together the same subjects, we read the same books, engaged in the same recreations. And more than this,—we kneeled together at the same mercy-seat. Can I ever forget, dear friend of my youth, that, when running in the paths of thoughtlessness and sin, forgetting the early instructions of my sainted mother, lulling my conscience to sleep, and every month throwing off some restraint, you took me by the hand, and with more than a brother's tenderness led me to the cross of Christ! And though our homes are now on different sides of the globe, and we perhaps shall never meet again till we meet in the better land, we no doubt both of us often revert with more than a passing interest to the association of those early years."

Almost every Christian can recall some such association with one and another whom he has led to Christ. And doubtless every one who has had this experience, will testify to the fullness and the permanence of the joy it brings to his own soul. Why then do we ever relax our efforts for the conversion of souls? For what earthly gratification are we willing to forego this high celestial blessedness!

Paul looked forward to the recognition of those whom he had been instrumental in leading to Christ, as one of the highest of the secondary delights of heaven,—those delights that range next to that of seeing Christ face to face. "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming! For ye are our glory and joy."

With such anticipations of heavenly joy resulting from the conversion of souls, shall we not give ourselves with increasing and unceasing earnestness to these labors of love? How thrilling the welcome, at the gate of heaven, from one and another now rejoicing in its glory, "You led me to Christ!"—Ind.

AMERICAN YOUNG MEN.—American history presents many remarkable instances of young men taking prominent and commanding stations at an age which would be thought very young in other countries. We subjoin a few striking examples, from the list of those who have passed off the stage of human action.

At the age of 29, Mr. Jefferson was an influential member of the Legislature of Virginia. At 30, he was a member of the Virginia Convention; at 32, a member of the Continental Congress; and at 33, he wrote the Declarntion of Independence.

Alexander Hamilton was only 20 years of age when he was appointed an Lieutenant-Colonel in the army of the Revolution, and Aid-de-camp to Washington. At 25, he was a member of the Continental Congress; at 30, he was one of the ablest members of the Convention which framed the Constitution of the United States; at 32, he was Secretary of the Treasury, and organized that branch of the Government upon so complete and comprehensive a plan, that no great change or improvement has since been made upon it.

John Jay, at 29 years old, was a member of the Continental Congress, and wrote an address to the people of Great Britain, which was justly regarded as one of the most eloquent productions of the times. At 32, he prepared the Constitution of the State of New York, and in the same year was appointed Chief Justice of the State.

Washington was 27 years of age when he covered the retreat of the British troops at Braddock's defeat; and the same year was honored by an appointment of Commander-in-Chief of the Virginia forces.

Joseph Warren was 29 years of age when he delivered the memorable address on the 5th of March, which aroused the spirit of patriotism and liberty in this section of the country; and at 31 he gloriously fell in the cause of freedom on Bunker Hill.

Fisher Ames, at the age of 27, had excited public attention by the ability he displayed in the discussion of questions of public interest. At the age of 30, his masterly speeches in defence of the Constitution of the United States, had exerted great influence, so that the youthful orator of 31 was elected to Congress from the Suffolk District over the revolutionary hero, Samuel Adams.

Joseph Story entered public life at the age of 29; he was elected to Congress from the Essex District when he was 32; was Speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives at 32, and the same year was appointed, by President Madison, a Judge of the Supreme Court of the United States.

De Witt Clinton entered public life at 28; Henry Clay, at 26. The most youthful signer of the Declaration of Independence was William Hooper, of North Carolina, whose age was but 24. Of the other signers of the Declaration, Thomas Haywood, of South Carolina, was 30; Ethridge Gerry, Benjamin Rush, James Wilson and Matthew Thornton were 31; Arthur Middleton and Thomas Stone were 33.

TEXAS PROGRESS.

At a mass meeting, held at the city of Austin, January 23, 1854, the friends of learning took the initiatory step, and furnished an exponent of their sentiments, by the appointment of a Central Committee of Education.

The Committee consists of Rev. J. W. Phillips, Chairman; W. M. Baker, Secretary, Rev. D. Baker, D. D., E. Walbridge, And. Neil, Rev. J. H. Smith, and L. C. Cunningham. They were directed—

1st. To correspond with the friends of education throughout the State in order to arouse and unite them in the cause of education. 2d. To call a State Educational Convention.

The Convention has been fixed in Huntsville, on 10th June next.

The matters coming up before the Convention are such as these: The gathering of statistics in regard to the Colleges, Academies and Schools in the State: The number of children, male and female, attending school, and the number not attending: The average expense of schooling: The best Text Books: The best mode of teaching: The propriety of a Superintendent of Instruction being appointed by the State: The desirableness of Universities being erected by the State—if so—how many? where to be located? and on what basis? The expediency of State aid to existing institutions of learning: The importance of the complete education of the youth of Texas in the State of Texas, and the manner of providing for it: Normal schools: The memorializing the Legislature, or not, upon anything connected with education, and such other subjects as will naturally suggest themselves.

This is noteworthy and praiseworthy in Texas, a young State, but mammoth, leading off on Railroads, Temperance and Education.

The imigration to this rapidly-improving State is unprecedented. The Texans are public spirited—especially for railroads. They have so much spare land they can hardly give it away fast enough. In temperance, too, the Empire State is progressive. The following newspapers, most of which decidedly-leading journals in Texas, have taken a stand and spoken out openly and boldly in favor of a legal prohibition of the liquor traffic: News, Galveston; Telegraph, Houston; State Gazette, Austin; Advertiser, Bastrop; Texas Presbyterian, Huntsville; Northern Standard, Clarksville; Texas Star, Gilmer; Chronicle, Nacogdoches; Trinity Advocate, Palestine; Colorado Tribune, Matagordu; and the Wesleyan Banner.

Galveston has a population of about 7000; San Antonio, 7000; Houston, 4500; Brownsville, 4000; New Braungels, 3500; Indianola, 1500; Austin, 1500; Jefferson, 1500; Marshall, 1500; Henderson, 1000; Bastrop, 800; Palestine, 800; Rusk, 600; Nacogdoches, 600; Washington, 600; La Grange, 550; Victoria, 500; Lavacca, 500; Gonzales, 500; Seguin, 500.

With a population of five hundred thousand, they have fifty-one newspapers, mainly well supported and ably conducted.

One small church in Palestine, Texas, gave one thousand dollars in 1853 to the domestic missionary cause.

The imigration to Texas, during the present season, is estimated at two hundred thousand. The present population of the State is supposed to be about five hundred thousand.

The Legislature has passed a common school law, and set apart two millions of dollars, the interest of which is to go to the support of schools in each county, in proportion to population. One tenth of the public revenue! What now State has done more for the cause of education?

EASY TO MAKE SERMONS.—The following incident is related of the venerable and eminent Dr. Nesbit, formerly President of Dickinson College, Carlisle:

"It amazes me that ministers don't write better sermons; I am sick of the dull, prosy affairs," said a lady, in the presence of Dr. Nesbit.

"That it is no easy matter, my good woman, to write good sermons," suggested the doctor.

"Yes," rejoined the lady, "but you are so long about it. I could write one in half the time if I had only the text."

"Oh, if a text is all you want," said Dr. N., "I will furnish that. Take this one from Solomon, 'It is better to dwell in the corner of a house top, than in a wide house with a brawling woman.'"

"Do you mean me, sir," inquired the lady, quickly.

"Oh, my good woman," was the response, "you will never make a sermonizer; you are too soon in your application."

THE SULTAN OF TURKEY IN THIS MARKET.—It is reported that the new steamer now building according to the plan of General Norris, of Philadelphia, which is intended to make the run to Europe in six days, is sold to the Sultan of Turkey. She is nearly completed. The vessel will be 230 feet long, 35 feet beam, and will draw seven feet six inches water. She will be 1400 tons burthen, with a draft of 1000 tons. Her kelsons are made of metal, hollow, and many other parts of the ship are alike. She is sold to the Sultan for $230,000, without any trial. It is expected she will soon put to sea. [N. Y. Herald.

Gen. Samuel Dale.

HIS GREAT CANOE FIGHT.

In 1784, when Samuel Dale was yet a boy, his father moved from Virginia, and made a settlement near the site of the present town of Greensboro, Geo. But a few days had elapsed when the subject of our sketch—a youth of sixteen summers—found himself an orphan; and, in virtue of his seniority, guardian of seven brothers and sisters. Disposing of them in the best manner his limited resources would allow, he joined a company of volunteers, raised to repel the invasions of the Creeks; and here commenced that military career, which only closed when the difficulties of his country ceased. We do not propose to follow it up. Whoever is acquainted with the history of the Indian Wars—with the bloody battles of Burnt Corn and Holy Ground—the terrible massacre of Fort Mims—the hazardous expeditions of Claiborne, and the Seminole campaigns of Jackson—knows enough to appreciate the iron nerve and daring intrepidity of Gen. Dale. We will only notice a few of those remarkable adventures with which his life is so replete.

His celebrated "Canoe Fight," in the Alabama river, in which he and two of his company braithed, with clubbed rifles, nine Indian warriors, in fair and open combat, is a kind of household word, with our old settlers. Every old crone on the river, could relate to you the incidents of the bloody conflict; while her aged partner, whose head had whitened with the growing improvement of his State, would babble down to the bank, and point out the very spot in the bright waters where the two canoes met, and if, perchance, the reader has ever made a trip down the river, on that elegant boat, which bears our hero's name, (Sam Dale,) he has doubtless had designated to him, by the courteous Captain, the time-honored old Beech which marks the spot, as well as the high projecting bank which had previously sheltered the dauntless of his band from the fire of the Indians.

Soon after the bloody tragedy of Fort Mimms, many of the whites, urged by their defenceless condition, and the increasing hostilities of the Indians, took refuge in Fort Madison. As Gen Claiborne was prevented from marching to their aid, by the hostile movements of the enemy about St. Stephen's, Capt. Dale and Col Carson were left in command of the Fort. As soon as his wounds, received at Burnt Corn, were sufficiently healed, Dale determined to change his line of conduct from defensive to offensive. With seventy men, he proceeded southwestwardly to Brazier's landing on the Alabama. Here they found two canoes, belonging to a negro, named Cæsar, who informed them that there were Indians above there, on each side of the river. He also tendered them the use of the canoes, and proffered to act as their pilot. Captain Dale immediately placed the canoes in charge of Jeremiah Austill and six men, who were ordered to keep them parallel with the party on land. Arriving at the mouth of Randon's Creek, the canoe party discovered a boat, filled with Indians, who, however, immediately paddled to the shore and fled. The land party, finding it impossible to continue their route, on account of the thick cane and vines, were ordered to cross over, and proceed on the other side. While they were effecting a passage, Dale and several of his men kindled a fire a short distance from the river, to prepare their day's meal. Thus engaged, the unsuspecting party, by and by, to the river, so as to gain the cover of the projecting bank, they discovered a large flat-bottomed canoe, containing eleven armed and painted warriors. The party behind them now retired, leaving Dale to choose his own course towards those in the boat. As both of his canoes were on the opposite side, Dale ordered the largest one to be manned. Two of the warriors now left their boat and swam for shore; but a ball from the unerring rifle of James Smith perforated the skull of one, who immediately sunk; the other gained the shore and escaped. Eight men had, in the meantime, manned the larger canoe, and were approaching the Indian boat; but coming near enough to see the number of rifle muzzles over the edge of the boat, they hastily paddled back to the shore.

Dale, exasperated by this "clear back out," as he termed it, of his men, shouted to them in a scornful tone, "to look and see three brave men do what eight cowards had shrunk from;" and followed by Austill and Smith, sprang into the smaller canoe, which the faithful Cæsar had just brought over. Paddling their canoe directly toward their enemies, they soon commenced the "Canoe Fight" proper—so celebrated in Alabama tradition.

When within twenty paces of the Indians our heroes arose in their canoe, to give them an opening broadside; but unfortunately, the priming of their guns was wet, and they failed to fire. Had not the same accident befallen the enemy, the result of the canoe fight might have been very different. Dale now ordered Cæsar to bring his boat alongside the other, and hold them together. The warriors, confident of their strength, and eager to grapple with three men, whose guns would not fire, allowed their boat to move leisurely along with the current. As the two neared each other, the Chief arose, and with an ejaculation of defiance to "Big Sam," leveled his gun at Smith's breast; but before he could draw trigger, the latter directed a blow at him, which would have proved fatal, had it not been adroitly avoided. The canoes came together with a jar, which threw Austill slightly off his balance, and ere he could regain it, a well directed blow from a war-club, prostrated him across the boat. A half dozen powerful arms were raised to complete the work, when the heavy rifle of Dale came down upon the head of the Chief, with a force which sunk it deep into his skull. Smith had been not less active, and his trusty barrel had fallen with like effect upon the skull of another warrior, and the two now felt their death throes, in the bottom of the canoe. Austill had, in the meantime, recovered, and added his strength to the work of destruction. The bold Cæsar held the boats together with an iron grasp, and with one foot in each, our heroes fought. Two successive blows from Austill's rifle, despatched two of the enemy, one of whom fell overboard. Thinking to make sure of his foe, by a second stroke, Austill leaned forward to strike, when he was again prostrated by an Indian club. The exulting savage, never forgetful of a scalp, raised the war-whoop—seized his victim by the hair—the scalp-knife glittered in the air, when another timely blow from Dale's clubbed rifle divided his skull. Tradition says, that so great was the force of the blow, the skull was split from the crown to the vertebral column. In the meantime Smith, at the other end of the canoe, grappled with two lusty warriors. He was a powerful man; but the chances now were against him. The iron clinches of one of his assailants are upon his throat—the tomahawk of the other above his head! He sees his danger; one foot is in one canoe, one in the other; with a desperate effort he gets both feet in one canoe, and draws one Indian after him, while the sudden movement separates the end of the boats and leaves the other behind, to meet the fate of those who had already come within the range of Dale's and Austill's rifles. Smith now had his enemy in his power, and soon dispatched him. The conflict now became equal—three to three. The savages, reduced in number from nine to three, now fought with the energy of despair. Light and active, they avoided many of the blows of the whites; and dealt, in return, such well directed ones, that they were beginning to tell in their favor, when Dale, calling to Cæsar to hold the boats firmly together, sprang upon one of the seats and dealt a blow which shivered a club which had been directed to meet it, and leveled another warrior. The remaining two were left to have destruction meeted to them at the hands of the victorious Dale; who, while Smith and Austill leaned upon their bloody, and brain-bespattered rifles, despatched them at two successive blows. During the whole of this sanguinary conflict, the heroes were encouraged by the continued cheers of their comrades, on either bank. Of the nine warriors, Smith killed two, Austill two, and Dale five. "Having laid them all low," says Mr. Pickett, "these undaunted Americans began to cast them into the bright waters of the Alabama—their native stream, now to be their grave. Every time a savage was raised up from the bottom of the canoe, and flung into the water, the Americans upon the banks set up shouts long and loud, as some slight revenge for the tragedy of Fort Mims. The Indian canoe presented a sight unusually revolting—several inches deep in savage blood—thickened with clods of brains and bunches of hair, etc."

A few years previous to the canoe fight, Gen. Dale was engaged in another hand-to-hand rencontre, hardly less exciting. There is so much of the spirit of wild adventure and romance connected with the incident, we are surprised that it has not, ere this, been made the basis of one of our thrilling border tales. When the Indian hostilities first began to assume a threatening attitude, in consequence of the Galphinton treaty, a white woman was seized by a party of Indians, and carried into captivity. All attempts towards recapturing her seemed fruitless; indeed, so many similar cases occurred, that they failed to excite that interest which we would naturally expect. Dale, however, having gained some information as to her whereabouts, determined—and with him determination was but another word for accomplishment—to rescue her. Setting out alone, his experience in trailing soon brought him upon the heels of the savages. Finding himself near them, with his characteristic coolness, he stopped at a spring to drink and refresh himself previous to beginning his work. While stopping to drink, two of the party, who were nearer than he thought, sprang upon him. Without attempting to rise, he drew his hunting knife, and with an under stroke, killed one of his assailants; then rising suddenly, he threw the other from him, and ere he could regain his feet, dispatched him. Thus much accomplished, he took the trail of the others—followed them many miles—came upon them asleep—knifed three of them—cut the thongs of the captive woman, and was about to commence his triumphant march homeward, when another warrior, whose position behind a log had screened him from view, sprang upon him. Weak from the loss of blood, and in the deadly grasp of the savage, Dale would now have fallen by the hands of a foe, whom he had ever conquered, had not the liberated woman snatched up a tomahawk and split the Indian's skull. The mutual deliverers, having exchanged congratulations upon their fortunate escape, were soon in the midst of their rejoicing friends. General Dale, in after life, often said that he had given up all hope of life in this instance, and could hardly believe that the weak emaciated female, whose captive thongs he had just cut, could be his deliverer.

The biographer of Gen. Dale, John H. F. Claiborne, of Mississippi, cite the above incident, and vouches for its truth. The tales of Knight-Errantry could hardly equal it in romance and wildness of adventure; and no Bois-de-Gilbert of the Middle Ages, in "panoply complete," could boast greater triumphs of his lance, than could Gen. Dale of his hunting knife!

After the treaty of peace, Gen. Dale, in the northern part of Alabama, where his old log cabin was the seat of an extensive and generous hospitality. In 1836 he was elected to the State Legislature, in which he served with his characteristic openness and independence of character. An interesting anecdote of him is related by Mr. Claiborne, in his biographical memoir. We give it in the author's own language: "Some time ago Gen Dale was held in Mobile, as an honor upon a note. The debt was in the hands of a stranger. Accompanied by an officer he sought the creditor, and found him in the saloon of Cullum's far-famed hotel. 'Sir,' said the General, 'I have no money to pay this debt. The principal has property—make him pay it, or let me go home and work it out.' The Shylock hesitated. 'Very well,' said the veteran, in tones that rang indignantly through the apartment, 'Very well, sir! Look at my scars! I will march to jail, down Mulss street, and all Mobile shall witness the treatment of an old soldier!' These simple words fell like electricity upon that high-toned people. In half an hour a dozen of the brightest names of the city were upon the bond; and before morning the debt was paid, and a full discharge handed to the General.

Gen. Dale died in 1841, at his residence, with the fortitude of a soldier, and the resignation of a Christian." We know not better how to close this article, than by quoting from the well written biography, which we have already used:

"In many respects, physical and moral, he resembled his antagonists of the woods. He had the square forehead, the high cheek-bones, the compressed lips, and, in fact, the physiognomy of an Indian, relieved, however, by a fine benevolent Saxon eye. Like the red man, too, his foot fell lightly upon the ground, and turned neither to the right nor left. He was habitually taciturn; his face grave; he spoke slowly and in low tones, and seldom laughed. I observed of him, what I have often noted as peculiar to border men of high attributes, he entertained the strongest attachment for the Indians—extolled their courage, their love of country, and many of their domestic qualities; and I have often seen the wretched remnant of the Choctaws encamped around his plantation, and subsisting upon his crops. In peace, they felt for him the strongest veneration—he had been the friend both of Tecumseh and Weatherford—and in war the name of 'Big Sam' fell on the ear of the Seminole, like that of Marius on the hordes of the Cimbri!" [Georgia University Magazine.

VASHEY, THE RICH COLORED BARBER.—The newspapers announce the death of John B. Vashon, the colored barber of Pittsburgh, who died at the railroad station in that city, whilst about to start for Philadelphia to take his seat in the convention of the soldiers of the war of 1812. Vashon was a light mulatto, the son of a Virginia planter of the same name. He died worth two hundred thousand dollars. One of his sons is a lawyer in New York. The people of Pittsburgh are indebted to him for the first public baths established in that city. Until the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania decided that people of color were not legal voters, Vashon enjoyed the right of suffrage. In 1830 he supported a gentleman for the Assembly, upon the ground that he was "a fashionable man," the meaning of which was that he bought his soap at Vashon's shop.

On one occasion Vashon visited the Falls of Niagara, and there met with a Pittsburgh acquaintance, who introduced him to a friend from Rochester, N. Y., as "Colonel Vashon of the Mexican army." Shortly afterwards Vashon met this gentleman in Rochester, who paid him great attention, introduced him to the leading notabilities of that city, and the Pittsburgh barber was for some days the lion of the place. Vashon kept his own counsel, and on his return to Pittsburgh, related the story with great glee, always winding up with the remark, "See what a thing this prejudice of color is! As long as they thought me a Mexican colonel, I was good enough company for any body!"

Vashon considered himself as a sort of Western rival of the late Thomas S. Auners, of this city, whom he described as "a very pompeous man." [Bizarre FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.—The Rev. H. H. Hawkins, a colored preacher, formerly a slave of Gen. Taylor, now residing in Canada, states that there are 400 runaway slaves in Canada West, all from Kentucky. There are in the whole of Canada 85,000 fugitive slaves. In the town of Chatham 750 fugitives, and in the new town of Baxton 180 families of fugitives are settled.

Gen. Dale, on account of his great size and strength, was known to the Indians as "Big Sam."

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1854.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—I. M. K.—Trinity, La.—has sent us $5 for the Sacramento Church, California. The money has been forwarded suitably to his directions.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.—The Hon. J. Perkins—M. C. of this State—has laid us under obligations for a copy of "Message and Documents, 1853-4"—a bound vol.; also for a copy of the Nebraska bill and Report of Com. on Territories, in the Senate.

WARNING.—We have complaints put in occasionally that the wrappers, with the address of the Advocate, are torn off on the way, and thus somebody gets the reading of the paper without paying for it, while he that pays does not. This is trying. Perhaps a remedy will be found; for a city paper, after uttering the same complaint, says they are trying to invent a spring gun at that office, to put in their papers, that shall shoot all who open them, that are not paying subscribers. Reader, do you feel safe?

MINUTES OF LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—After much delay, from some untoward circumstances, the Committee of Publication have brought out these minutes in a cheap yet tasteful form of twenty-nine pages. They are now on their way to the different points for distribution, and every member of the Church, every friend ought to have a copy. As we do not belong to the Committee of Publication, all those who have sent us requests and directions, touching the minutes, are informed that they have been turned over to the Committee.

It is to be regretted that this Conference document is not enriched by the publication of the Conference sermon, preached by Rev. Richmond Randle—Text, Rom. 1:15, "As much as in me is I am ready to preach the gospel," etc. A most suitable and edifying discourse, discussing with unction what constitutes a readiness and preparation for the ministry; and the extent of devotion to it—"as much as in me is."

TOBACCO.—A book has just been published in England, by one Dr. Stowell, who maintains that "the tobacco plant was the fur bidden fruit." The anti-tobacco movement is getting pretty strong and general, and will be pressed upon the consciences of "users." The press is noticing three several pamphlets on tobacco, its history, nature and effects; tobacco, its evils, as they affect body, mind and morals; and tobacco diseases, with a remedy for the habit.

These are all prize essays. They contain much curious and interesting information—the following for example:

"In 1624, Pope Urban VIII. excommunicated all snuff-takers who defiled St. Peter's Church by taking a pinch within its walls.

"In 1690, Pope Innocent XII. renewed the bull; but in 1724, Benedict XIV., having become a snuff-taker himself, repealed the edict."

Whether it is Apostolical, in 1854, to take snuff, the pamphlets do not state.

We doubt if these prize essays contain a more palpable hit than that of a little boy 6 years old—son of a friend of ours—"Father, I dreamed last night I saw an angel going up to heaven with a cigar in his mouth—smoking."

POST OFFICE CURIOSITIES.—There is a good deal of the comic in our mail book. Who gave the names to the Post Offices? In Mississippi, we have Anti-bank, Dark Corner, Habolochitto, Noxapater, Long Percimmon, Oskochickama and Duck Hill. Alabama has some queer ones—as Lucky Hit, Rabbit Town, and so on. Florida abounds in euphonious Indian titles, as Sop Choppy, Cheesewiska, Homassass, Okahumka. "No. 2" is of pale face origin. Louisiana not behind any in "hards," with plain traces of French and Spanish ancestry. Cowshattie Chute is not easily beat; and there are Hap-Hazard and Hard Times. One place we can neither remember or spell. We asked the Postmaster the English of it. He said it was, "Red squirrels running out of a hollow tree set on fire." Lick Skillett, Buck-Snort, Rakepocket, Nip and Tuck, and Slip-Up and Snatch It, are names of growing towns in Texas.

BAPTIST CHURCH.—The Baptist Church in this city have fixed on an eligible lot—corner Camp and Bacia streets—but not begun to build. Their friends in the States adjoining show a determination to build up an "interest" in the emporium of the South-west, worthy of their Church. At present they have none, in chapel shape. Some $15,000 or $20,000 are yet needed to complete the house of worship, and Rev. Wm. H. Bayliss has been appointed agent to travel and collect funds. He not only goes forth under the appointment of the trustees, but his appointment is also confirmed by the Domestic Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention. Some thirty thousand dollars have already been subscribed and the above amount is still needed to complete the work according to the design.

THE PASTORAL OFFICE.

The minutes of the Alabama Conference for the last year, present many and full statistics, most of which have been laid before our readers. This issue is enriched by the Conference sermon, preached by appointment, by Dr. Summers. Text: Acts xx 28. It is in the style of the preacher—clear, terse, comprehensive, discriminating and forcible. One point in the sermon does not to our mind, possess this character—an important one too, and practical. Dr. Summers is capable of clearing up a point, and as he raised this one, we regret that he did not more fully discuss it. On page 27 he says:

"They who assume the pastoral office must take heed to themselves that they possess the requisite intellectual acquirements. We do not affirm that every one who is called by God to preach the gospel is clothed with full pastoral powers. Many a man whose duty it is to preach the word is so beset with embarrassments that he cannot give himself wholly to the work."

It would not be difficult to reconcile the above theory of a call to the ministry to the practice of the "many," but how it can be reconciled with the text, is not so clear to us. Indeed, where is the text in the Scriptures for that popular theory which is here so distinctly adopted? A shepherd without a flock, an "overseer" without a charge, is an anomnly for which some are not so clear that the Holy Ghost is responsible. Are there two calls—one to preach, another to be a pastor? Are both from God—or one only, which one? And what are the requisite acquirements for each? The following vindication of the Scriptural doctrine, a divine call to the ministry, as held by the Methodists and some others, from the charges brought against it, is so conclusive and triumphant, we quote at length:

"Nor let it be said that this doctrine tends to schism and fanaticism. The transfer of the divine prerogative in the premises to men, whether the candidates themselves, the people whom they are to serve, a prelacy or a presbytery, is the fruitful source of schism, whether it generates fanaticism or not. The Holy Ghost is the great bond of union, and the recognition of all his functions is the sure way to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace—and the converse is equally true. To assert the Headship of Christ can scarcely lead to schism; and tho' it may be and has been abused to fanatical purposes, yet this is not its legitimate tendency. Were we obliged to identify the divine call to preach with the profession of every one who imagines or pretends such vocation, then, indeed, fanaticism might be fostered; but this is not the case. The divine call may be subjected to a careful scrutiny and a thorough trial—indeed, it challenges the closest investigation. As the Word of God Spirit does not set aside the corroborative testimony of our own spirits, but rather demands and secures it, in order to the production of a satisfactory assurance of our adoption, so the divine call to the sacred office does not supercede rational evidences and providential indications in regard to our duty, but rather admits them to a concurrent testimony in the premises. And as no one is obliged to receive our asseveration in regard to the witness of the Spirit to our adoption, without the correspondent fruit of the Spirit in our lives, so no one is bound to receive our asseveration in regard to the divine call to the ministry, unless we can furnish rational evidence that we are really the subjects of a supernatural vocation. It would be treasonous and schismatical to recognize any one as a minister of Christ who does not profess to be sent by him and to be moved by the Holy Ghost to take upon him this office. But it would be hazardous to take any man on his profession, without due examination and proof. Hence the repeated commands to try those who desire the office of a bishop—to subject them to a thorough probation—and not to suffer them to enter the pastorate of the church until by the evident possession of gifts and graces it shall be morally certain that, in regard to their professed vocation, they are not deceived themselves nor attempting to deceive others. If we are to pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into his harvest, surely we are not to send forth laborers ourselves, without asking whether those we would appoint have been sent forth by him, thereby ignoring his prerogative in our practice after recognizing it in our prayers!"

EDUCATION IN ALABAMA.

Seldom has any State Legislature arrayed more talent—working talent—than that of Alabama, lately adjourned at Montgomery. Among its chief acts was a system of Public School instruction. There are 100,000 children in the State who receive no school instruction. These soon will be grown up men and women—citizens. How vast, prospectively, as well as presently, the benefits accruing to morals and wealth, by their redemption from that brutality that is bred of ignorance!

To support this system, the following appropriations have been made:

1. The annual interest, at eight per cent, on that portion of the surplus revenue of the United States deposited with Alabama, under the act of Congress of the 23d of June, 1836.

2. The annual interest, at eight per cent, on the proceeds of certain lands granted by the United States for the use of schools in the valueless sixteenth sections in that State, under the act of Congress of the 11th of August, 1848.

3. The annual interest, at six per cent, on the fund which has accrued, or may hereafter accrue, from the sales of the sixteenth sections in the several townships in the State.

4. The annual sum of one hundred thousand dollars, from any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

5. All sums of money which may hereafter accrue from escheats.

Its outlines are the election by the Legislature of a General Superintendent of Education, with a salary of $2500; the election of three Commissioners of Free Public Schools in each county by the qualified voters; and the election of three Trustees in each township in like manner. To these various officers are confided the entire educational interests of the State; and the duties are so distributed between them as to secure the establishment of a common school in every township; the employment of competent teachers; the distribution of the fund, &c.

Mr. W. F. Perry, of Talladega, has been elected Superintendent of Public Schools—over B. F. Porter, Rev. A. A. Lipscomb and others. If he be equal to his competitors, his selection is an admirable one. The Legislature adjourned sine die on the 18th ult.

At the opening of the Georgia Legislature, which adjourned at Milledgeville on the 17th ult., we alluded to the interests of Public Education, as urged upon it by State journals of such high standing as the Columbus Times and Sentinel and others. But it was a failure. The legislators talked and talked about moving the State House, but left the enlightenment of the people to the old pedagogue system. Rich in natural resources, out of debt, intersected with railroads, Georgia has a 50,000 army of illiterates that neither read or write, and is going on to raise more.

PER CONTRA.—The Legislature of Alabama has committed one insult against the moral and republican sense of the people, which, after allowing all the credit due, leaves them in just disfavor. The present retail liquor law of that State is as oppressive as it is offensive. It allows six men to fix upon any community a monstrous evil, without the right of redress by the residue of such community even if a thousand oppose it.

Petitions, remonstrances and appeals of over one hundred thousand citizens were before the late Legislature, yet that body declared it inexpedient to amend the law or refer the matter the people at the ballot box. The feelings such a course has aroused will lead to something unfavorable to ambitious aspirations. A State Temperance Convention has been called at Montgomery, the 31st May, and State organization resolved upon.

SOUTHERN BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

We are requested by Messrs. Campbell & Sons, of Nashville, Tenn., to call the attention of [illegible] clerks and other agents, to their late circular, requesting a list of the merchants, manufactures (by machinery), banks, insurance, railroad companies, etc., in each county in the States of Kentucky and North Carolina, and all the States south of them, together with such statistics in relation to value of property, population, churches, high schools, commercial prospects, etc., as they might be able to furnish.

Their Southern Business Directory and General Commercial Advertiser, is exciting much attention among business men North and South, and, as far as we are able to learn, is likely to succeed well. We hope it may.

We are requested to tender a tribute of thanks to all the clerks of courts and other agents, who have remitted lists as above, and that a copy of the work, with their office card, will be sent to them postpaid.

It will be a very great kindness, if all county officers to whom the said circular has or may come, or who may see this notice, will forthwith make out a list as above and send it to their address, at Charleston, S. C. (care of Messrs. Walker & James), or to Nashville, Tenn., care of Hugh Carroll, Esq.

From the recommendations of this work by the press and business men in Tennessee, and elsewhere, together with the number and character of the agents employed, it may well be expected to be worthy of public attention. We need a work giving a full reference to the business and growing prospects of the South. An hour or two only by the agent in each county, will make the work just what the proprietors and their patrons wish to see.

That the number and character of all the newspapers in the South, together with their days and terms of issue may be represented in the proposed directory for the Southern States, it is proposed that they all give this notice two insertions in the editorial page, and forward the numbers as above directed.

This courteous exchange has been made between Rev. Mr. Campbell and the press and county officers wherever he has gone. All others will please do the same, for which a copy of the directory will be sent postpaid. Let no one fail.

MORE BUNCOMB.—The Legislature of Louisiana have adopted a resolution inviting the "distinguished patriot"—John Mitchell—"to the seat of Government of this State." What they intend to do with him when he gets there—should he be silly enough to come—is not stated. Is it to say civilly, "be seated," or to dinner him, or elect him something? What does it mean! And what is it for! Mike Walsh suggested when our Congressmen were tasking their ingenuity to compliment Captain Ingraham that he be presented with a pair of silver spurs. Spurs on a man-of-war! Keen and just satire that. When shall we have done with this nonsense.

THE NO LICENSE LAW.

The Caddo Gazette, Shreveport, La., tells us how the law works that has lately gone into operation there. We mean no disrespect to the good people of Shreveport; but judging from the rum influence, as represented there four years ago, our first and last visit to the place, we infer that if "no license" can be carried out there, it need not be despaired of in most places. We quote from the Gazette:

This law has been in operation in this place for something more than a month; in the mean time we have not heard of a single infringement. It seems to be the desire of our citizens to give the law a fair trial. Judging from the improvement already taken place, we have no doubt but it will give general satisfaction.

Ladies can now promenade our streets with something like pleasure. No boisterous language greets their ears at every corner of the streets, as was wont to be the case one short month ago. No midnight revels disturb the repose of our now quiet city. To be sure, we occasionally hear sundry hints about "back room," "large dimajohn," best cognac," and "have a time," but this is confined to interesting specimens of young America, who, when they have arrived to years of discretion, will look upon such actions as things that were.

Even the opponents of this law are compelled to acknowledge the decided improvement that has already taken place. Contrast Sunday now with Sunday one month ago. Then our grog-shops and streets were full of half inebriated men, frequently flourishing pistols and bowie knives; here and there lay specimens of king alcohol's power. These, combined with the usual complement of horrid oaths, made up a scene disgusting in the extreme. But now how different, no grog-shops, no boisterous language, no street fights, and no hideous noises uttered by infuriated men. All is quiet and serene. Our churches are filled to overflowing, and the sermons listened to with intense interest. This is no imaginary fiction of ours, but one which all our citizens are conversant with.

If such is the result in one short month, have not our citizens a cause to rejoice? We think so, and furthermore, we think the morals of Shreveport will contrast favorably with any town in the United States."

REVIEWS.—The North British Review, February, 1854, has been received from Leonard, Scott & Co., the prompt, energetic republishers at 79 Fulton st., New York: Also the last Edinburg. The table of contents, as usual, weighty. Blackwood for January, is to hand.

The most interesting paper in Blackwood [illegible] Nuntuse," From it we learn that black and green tea are prepared from the same species of plant; the difference in color and in effects are produced by the modes of handling. For green tea, the leaves are roasted almost immediately after they are gathered. They are dried off quickly after the rolling process. For black tea, they are allowed to be spread out in the air for some time after they are gathered. They are then further tossed about till they become soft and flaccid. They are now roasted for a few minutes and rolled, after which they are exposed to the air for some hours in a soft and moist state. Lastly they are dried slowly over charcoal fires. The colored green teas are made by mixing Prussian blue and gypsum, and reducing them to a fine powder, which is applied to the teas during the process of wasting. The Chinese never drink these teas and are much amused with the idea that the "outside barbarians" should prefer them to those of a natural green.

REVIVALS.—A protracted meeting in the Methodist Church, at Springfield, La.—conducted by Rev. C. R. Godfrey—closed on the 14th ult. with gracious results. There were twenty-seven white members and six colored added to the Church.

We are happy to learn that a religious meeting of much interest is in Lake Providence, La. The ministry of the pastor, Rev. R. J. Harp, has opened auspiciously to that people, who have been among the greatest sufferers from last summer's pestilence. Let the living say, "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence. But we will bless the Lord, from this time forth and forever more."

MENEELY'S BELLS.—The bells from the extensive establishment of Messrs. A. Meneely's Sons, West Troy, New York, received at the World's Fair recently held in the city of New York, the highest premium, or only silver medal, awarded for bells.

Their church, factory, steamboat, school house and plantation bells, as well as their chimes, were adjudged by the committee to be "the best in fullness and richness of tone, clearness of vibration and workmanship" of any on exhibition.

The aspect of European affairs is certainly most threatening: threatening enough to shake all our confidence in our own original persuasion that Louis Napoleon and especially the English Government were too wise to let a general European war be kindled up. In spite of all appearances, we still doubt their intentions, still disbelieve the sincerity of all their warlike demonstrations. So, evidently, does that able and resolute politician, the Czar. Are they not playing a very bold game of brag against him? If they are, it is a very foolish business; and, indeed, a foolish business at best. For the hazard of a general war is one which must be incurred; and it cannot be incurred without madness.

ACCIDENT AT THE ORLEANS THEATRE!

A NUMBER OF LIVES LOST!!!

A sad accident occurred Sunday evening at the Orleans Theatre, resulting in the loss of a number of lives and the injury of a great many spectators. The full particulars we are not able to give, owing to the lateness of the hour and the distraction and confusion consequent upon such a scene as is rarely seen. But the general features of the occurrence, and a list of the greater portion of those injured, we are able to append.

The construction of the Orleans Theatre, as it was, is familiar to people in almost every section of this country. During the last winter, however, it was remodeled and enlarged, and rendered much more airy and beautiful. Under its new arrangement the parquette remained as before, but the dress-circle was carried forward so as to wholly over-arch the latticed boxes beneath, and extend nearly twice as far front as the galleries above. Directly over the dress-circle, on both sides of the building, was a second tier, and above that still another gallery reserved for colored people. The dress-circle was sustained by pillars from the parquette, but they did not rise so as in any way to support the second and third tiers. These were sustained only by beams placed in the walls and iron rods running between the two, without yielding material strength to either.

The performances last evening were for the benefit of M. Carrier and the new vaudeville entitled La Petite Fille de la Grande Armee, in two acts, together with the single act vaudevills of Une Service a Blanchard, were presented. The house was crowded for the occasion, particularly in the second tier and colored gallery. There were very few ladies present, except in the latticed boxes in the rear of the house or beneath the dress circle, but a great many gentlemen were in the parquette and dress circle. The performances had progressed as far as the second act in the first vaudeville when the beams supporting the colored gallery on the left of the stage gave way, and within five minutes afterward the whole of that side of the theatre was a perfect wreck and ruin, some six or seven individuals were killed outright and probably thirty-five or forty others more or less severely injured.

Fortunately, for those who were below, as well as for those in the galleries, the gallery did not fall at once but gradually—the upper part forcing down the latter until all the supports were sundered, when both parts gave way with a crash, and amid screams and yells from all parts of the house, fell into the dress circle and over into the parquette. We shall not undertake to describe the confusion that ensued: some struggling amid the ruins—others dying: some hastening for friends known to be there, and others hastening to break the sad news. It is only marvellous that any escaped where escape seemed to be almost impossible and death almost certain. The whole force of the company immediately came to the rescue, and put forth every exertion to relieve and succour the injured.

A list of the injured, so far as we were able to procure it, is as follows. It is not possible that it can be full. Many were conveyed away by friends, and some were taken to private residences. The number, in full, of those killed and wounded must amount to between forty and fifty:

Florian Malus, Notary, aged about 27 years, living on Royal street—killed.
Fergus Toledano, aged 14, living across the river—killed.
Salvador Pratts, Bourbon street—not expected to live.
Mr. Delery—very badly hurt.
An American, name unknown, residing on St. Philip street—slightly hurt.
Charles Roman, of the firm of Roman and Kernion, and son of the late Governor Roman—severely injured.
Isacerder Ramos—slightly injured.
Mrs. Lafont—slightly injured.
Henry Bouligny, aged about 25—severely injured on the breast.
E. A. Michel, Sergeant-at-Arms of the old City Council—severely injured.
A small child found nearly dead, with a scantling across its neck.
Two negroes known to be killed.
Several negroes known to be badly injured.

Of the thousands who were not at church on Sunday night last, fifteen hundred were at the Orleans theatre! What happened there our readers are informed by the above, which appeared in one of the Monday morning papers. On calmer inquest by the coroner it was ascertained that only two were "killed outright." The two upper galleries were suspended by iron rods from the roof. These rods of English iron had been bent to fix them in the rafters. In bending they were more or less cracked and broke; and with the unusual heft of the "colored gallery," and perhaps applause, they fell. So a committee of builders decide.

It is not for us to say what are "judgments." Even churches have had accidents not very unlike this. Presumption rather than piety often interprets such things. God is his own interpreter. But there are reflections that can be safely made here. It would be brutish not to consider them.

It was on Sunday night! So much for the moral tendencies of the drama, the opera—caught in the act of Sabbath-breaking.

The Recorder of the District was there! He who next morning sat in the tribunal (if his contusions permitted) to administer the laws of the city for its peace and safety, its reputation and well-being! Proh pudor! What have the God-fearing, the moral, the Bible-reading, to hope for from such officials? Can they be true to human laws who trample the divine under foot and by their example teach others so to do? Under such rulers this city groans. As long as the "colored gallery" only is crowded at the Sunday night theatres, which have so reflexive an effect upon public taste—so long as the mere canaille of the white population resort there, we may hope to make and bring to bear a correct and elevated public opinion that shall put them down. But do we elevate men and invest them with influence, that while the negroes are crowding the gallery they may give character to the "dress circle," at Sunday night theatres?

Judgment or not—who, we ask, would like to be summoned from a Sunday night theatre to appear before his Maker's bar! To be overtaken by sudden death in the path of duty or in the places of prayer, is not to go into eternity as the unshriven ghosts of those whose mangled bodies were picked out of the ruins of the Orleans theatre on Sunday night.

☞ A warning: We blush to say it that certain ones standing fair in the Church at home, when visiting New Orleans on business or pleasure, as thousands are at this time, instead of seeking the churches seek the theatres. They are not known and can pass unchallenged in the crowd and they will take a turn into the world and see it. Not a month ago, a lady, seated among strangers, as she thought, at Placides, waiting for the curtains to rise, was startled by a voice at her side: "What, are you here, too!" A backslidden Methodist and Presbyterian were face to face! Take care, friend—take care. This trap may fall on you sometime, when least you are aware. That would sadly spoil the mask face and reveal the incog. And if not here—there is a time when all secret things shall be revealed. We hope that "name unknown" given in the reporter's list may not turn out to be some backsliden Christian professor who was there where he had no business to be.

As one of the incidents of our chequered life, we state a fact that came to our knowledge on the next day. A wife and her daughter went to the —— Methodist Church on Sunday night last; the husband to the Orleans theatre. While the father narrowly escaped with his life, the daughter, at a mourner's meeting the same hour, professed religion and joined the Church. Who would not rather sit in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus.

METHODIST PRESS.

THE NEBRASKA BILL.—The Christian Advocate and Journal, 16th ultimo, discusses gravely and earnestly the bill now before Congress. The editor offers no apology for entering on such ground, that there are some political movements so essentially connected with religion and morality, so identified with the national welfare, as founded upon the Christian religion—the only standard of good morals, because none other is accompanied by the authoritative sanctions necessary for their enforcement upon the human conscience—that a religious journal is still more bound to discuss them than journals of a purely secular character. Such are the subjects of peace and war, the Bible in public schools, and the Nebraska bill.

It is needless to say that he opposes the bill. With the immorality of breaking compacts, he includes the inexpediency too. Such being his positions, these are his prophecies:

We are aware that leading politicians, even of the North, doubt the general anti-slavery feeling of the people of the non-slaveholding States. Hitherto, the expression of this feeling has been suppressed, in a great degree, lest it should encourage the violent measures of the ultraists; and, also, by the influence of political party interests which demanded the sacrifice. But when there is nothing to hope, there is nothing to fear. It was universally believed that the Missouri compromise was safe in the hands of either of the great parties into which the people of this country is divided. When the people of the free States shall find themselves deceived and betrayed, there will come a disruption of the old party organizations, and new associations will be formed, having for a common object protection against slavery propagandism. A necessary consequence of violating the Missouri compromise will be an effort, which cannot long be resisted, to repeal the Fugitive Slave law, and to carry out the principles of the Wilmot proviso. Party political combination will resist while there remains a hope of "the loaves and fishes," but they will wheel into line as soon as it is found that a change of tactics offers a surer way to get office. Let the Nebraska bill pass, and we predict that no one now living will see another slaveholding State, south or north of the compromise line, admitted into the Union; or another territorial government organized without a stringent provision for the exclusion of slavery. We predict, too, that the Fugitive Slave law will be ultimately repealed, after a struggle which will shake the confederacy of these United States from centre to circumference.

These disturbances of the country, and that, too, upon an issue which more than all others shakes to the centre, are to be deprecated; but now the thing is up, and that, too, upon a proposition originating in the North, it had as well be put down right, and in no other way will it rest. Is it not better, on this subject, to recognize a sound principle—that of non-intervention, than a geographical line—as the 36 degrees 30 of Missouri compromise. The constitutionality of the latter has always been doubted by the best minds. Its very nature kept the question open to new agitations in construction and application. The former gives some reasonable promise of finality.

As for violation of the Missouri compromise, this has been done already, not at Southern but Northern instigation. Why was not New Mexico left to the working of Missouri compromise. It was south of 36 degrees 30. The South asked nothing more. But no: a new one must be made to suit the case; and hence resulted the legislation of 1850. Now, it is proposed to organize territory north of 36 degrees 30. Of course the last compromise stands. But no: the old one suits now and must be put in force! Verily, it is a bad rule that wont work both ways. The Nebraska bill does not propose to the people of the United States to kill the covenant of 1820, but only to do that lawful thing—bury their dead out of their sight. Our Northern friends would have two laws on the same subject,—that of 1820 and 1850, and work either as it suits them. To this the South and her constitutional friends object, and with reason. The two compromises are contrary—the old must give place to the new—and if this involves any violation of treaty, it is chargeable to those who, refusing to stand by the one, made the other necessary. With such a view, the Senate the other day adopted the amendment to the Nebraska bill by a vote of 35 to 9.

Speaking of the Missouri compromise—

"Which, being inconsistent with the principles of non-intervention by Congress with slavery in the States and territories, as recognized by the legislation of 1850, commonly called the 'compromise measures,' is hereby declared inoperative and void; it being the true intent and meaning of this act not to legislate slavery into any territory or State, nor to exclude it therefrom, but to leave the people thereof perfectly free to form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way, subject only to the constitution of the United States."

So much does the odious charge amount to, of a want of fidelity to treaty flouted in this direction. We are no politician, but cannot let this unfair, invidious and untenable editorial of a leading cotemporary of the religious press pass without remark. The "Abolition allies" will please remember that if a covenant has been broken, they did it, and if any fuss or damage ensues, they are responsible for it. We hope they will find their responsibility and hold in their fast men and ultraists.

The Richmond Advocate, quoting our editorial, "A Methodist in Search of a Bishop," says:

It may not be out of place to offer a remark or two on its reference to our views. On proposition as to the distribution of Bishops was based upon the general sentiment that three would be elected. It was not intended to oppose a large increase; and there is no in favor of this increase, in the suggestion of our cotemporary as to the necessities of new Conferences, and the importance of bringing Episcopal influence to bear on expanding populations within them. We earnestly desire to see the Episcopacy of Methodism brought to bear directly upon the Church, and not merely on the Conferences or through them reflexively upon the Church as is the case under the present system. There is, we think, a great deal of power in the office that would enure to the interests of Methodism, if rightly applied, and it can only be so applied by an augmentation of the number, all of which, however, is lost by the present arrangement. Nor do we intend to present it as a sinecure. We regard it as a "necessity," "a working office," to be filled by working men; "a luxury to the Church," because it will bring them more frequently to a "feast of fat things." It is time "a live Bishop" should cease to be a wonder among Methodists. Our people should not only occasionally "cross their track," but be frequently brought face to face with them in the service of the sanctuary, and the communings of social intercourse. There are plenty of men in the Church to fill this office with ornaments acceptability and usefulness.

REFORM AMONG SERVANTS.—A correspondent of the Nashville Advocate treats practically upon the "Religious and Moral Training of the slaves of the South." The duty of the master to provide for the religious and moral well-being of his servants is asserted. They are part of his household—his family. It is his bounden duty to promote their morality, restrain them from sin, guard them from temptation. He alludes, in this connection, to an abuse that cannot have escaped the observation of no one who ever thought on this matter. We commend these words to Christian masters:

"Again, what preservation have you thrown around the chastity of your servants in the way of regulating their associations, constructing their sleeping apartments, and impressing upon their minds a high sense of the value and importance of unturnished virtue? Perhaps, now, in all your arrangements for the association of male and female you have never had an eye to this thing; and, by consequence, almost every temptation to licentiousness has been placed before them with but feeble and few efforts, on your part, to awaken them to a sense of the fearful deformity and damning nature of this lewdness. Is it then strange, that they should be addicted to such dissolute habits? I am fully aware of the delicate nature of the subject; but then its importance demands an unequivocal expression—a speaking out in plain terms; for it is, unquestionably, one of the great vices of their history—one which, if not cured, must for ever keep them in most degraded and corrupt immorality. We need never expect their elevation to high sense of moral principle, with such a moral incubus upon their vision. Reader, ponder well and impartially on this subject. Suppose the virtue of the white population were no better guarded, and they were no higher in the scale of intelligence, how much better would their habits be?"

And yet the estimate in which marriage is held is a far more serious evil. It must be raised if we would do anything for the salvation of these thousands at all adequate to our opportunities or responsibilities. At least two thirds of all the droppings, trials and expulsions, that Church discipline requires originate directly or indirectly here.

Is the divine injunction, "Those whom God hath joined together, let no man put asunder," properly appreciated amongst them, or by the masters, with regard to them?

There is a ripeness of sentiment on this subject that gives token of early legislative notion. The last Legislatures of Georgia and Alabama had it before them to forbid the separation of husband and wife at legal sales or partition of estates—one of them, on the suggestion of the Governor's message.

But whether the State moves or not, this writer thinks the Church has a duty to do and suggests his plan:

"I answer, if the State will not take action upon it, let the Church do it. Let, for instance, the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, put into their Discipline, a rule providing that the marriage rite shall be in due form solemnized by regular specified officers, and that without this, it shall be deemed illegal, and subject to such trial and punishment as other gross misdemeanor. Let it further provide, that after such solemn form, whosoever shall put them asunder, shall be deemed as putting asunder those whom God hath joined together, and if he be a member of the Church, shall be dealt with accordingly. These, certainly, would have a very powerful influence in strengthening and rendering the bond sacred in the estimation of the slaves; and would greatly elevate it in the minds of masters, and prove a very great safeguard to the holy relation. And by so far as it would thus solemnize the bond and render it sacred, it would elevate the standard of virtue among them, and relieve them of that mighty incubus, which is such an obstacle to the progress of the gospel, and to the awakening of the conscience to a sense of moral principle. If you would make the slave a proper gospel subject, clear away these obstacles to its success."

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

PREGNANT ADMISSIONS.—The S. C. Advocate remarks upon an editorial of the Episcopal Recorder concerning a memorial addressed to the House of Bishops on the extension of the bonds of the communion of the P. E. Church. The main point suggested in the memorial is the practicability of some ecclesiastical system, broader and more comprehensive, leaving that church untouched, yet providing for more freedom in opinion, discipline and worship.

The movement seems to have grown out of the opinion held, the Recorder says, by the great mass of thinking men in the P. E. Church, that with her present canonical system and traditional usages she is incompetent to the work of preaching and dispensing the gospel to all sorts and conditions of men, and so inadequate to do the work of the Lord in this land and in this age.

Our cotemporary, quoting the following language, thinks "these are pregnant admissions. That they should be voluntarily made by an Episcopal journal as deservedly influential as is the Recorder, may be set down as significant sign of the times."

The Recorder declines taking positive ground concerning it, until the project assumes definite shape under the hands of the committee to whom the memorial has been referred; and which consists of five Bishops Meanwhile, that journal feels free to say, that as the Church of England herself incurred a guilt approaching to that of schism in the disownment of the Puritans in 1620, and the Methodists in 1740, so the Episcopal Church in this country can in no way better atone for those great errors than by at least rendering to those who now hold her articles intact, a union on those principles which formed the common basis of the reformation.

The California Advocate of 27th January, says: "Bishop Simpson, in the good providence of God arrived on the steamer Goliah, on Monday evening, from the wreck of the Golden Gate at San Diego. Rev. Mr. Reasoner came in company with the Bishop, and two young ladies, since married to Rev. H. S. Sheldon and Rev. J. Mellenry Caldwell. All are well."

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

RESOLUTIONS OF THE TUSKEGEE QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.

At the first Quarterly Conference for Tuskegee circuit, held at Rocky Mount, 20th February, the following resolutions were presented and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we request our delegates to the next General Conference, to be held at Columbus, Ga., in May, to use their strongest efforts to have the fifth answer of section 19th, chapter 2d of our Discipline so altered as to read—No elder, deacon, preacher, official or private member among us, shall distill or vend spirituous liquors without forfeiting his membership in the church."

Resolved, That the above resolution be sent for publication to the Southern and New Orleans Christian Advocates.

B. K. MOTLEY, Sec'y.

Lockland, Ala., Feb. 20.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—On Thursday, the 23d inst., by the Rev. W. P. Barton, Mr. WM. J. KELLER to Miss SARAH C. ANGELL, daughter of Dr. James Angell, of Woodville, Miss.

MARRIED—On February, the 8th, by Rev. D. Carmichael, Mr. WM. N. CUNNINGHAM to Miss MARY E. CARTER, of Talladega county, Alabama.

MARRIED—On February 28th, by Rev. H. N. McTyeire, G. H. LYONS and Miss MARTHA A. STARNS, all of this city.

MARRIED—Feb. 14th, by Rev. Robert W. Pence, Dr. JOHN A. THOMPSON, of Cottengin, Miss., to Miss MARY F. PRICE, of Moscow, Alabama.

OBITUARY:

In the death of Mrs. MARY WHITE FOUNTAIN, consort of John Fountain, Esq., this community and the church of Christ sustained one of the greatest losses resulting from the late destroying epidemic. She departed this life on the 19th of Sept., 1853, in the 46th year of her age, of yellow fever. Cumbridge, on the eastern shore of Maryland, was her birth-place, and in that State she leaves many relatives and friends who will deeply mourn her departure from among us. Mr. Fountain removed from Maryland to Vicksburg in 1838, and his excellent wife as well as himself united with the Methodist Church, and by a life of self-denying piety won to herself numerous devoted and loving friends who will ever mourn her sudden death. Few women possessed higher characteristics of a noble mind and refined and elevated principles. She possessed great mental strength and her judgment was strong and matured by diversified reading and experience. She sought and acquired knowledge with constancy, delight and success, and under other auspices she might have been ranked among the eminent literary women of our country. Many a poetic gem whose authorship was unknown has found its way from her pen into a wide circulation—admired and cherished as of "purest ray serene;" and other evidences of her talents and gifted spirit are not wanting among her acquaintances to attest the brilliancy and power of an imagination and mind surpassed by but few. But numerous solicitudes and the cares that ever press upon the minds and hearts of parents in new countries where large families are to be reared and educated under unfavorable circumstances, pre-occupied her attention and drew forth all the energy of her character in behalf of her family, and now eight intelligent children, with their father, mingle their tears over her memory and feel that the world contained few such mothers.

Nor were her sympathies and womanly influences confined to the loved circle of home altogether. The Church, the Sabbath School and the happiness of all around her occupied part of her best time and purest affections. As a Christian she was ever disposed to make the Book of God her daily study and constant companion. Her "affections were set on things above," the things prized and sought by others, she deemed comparatively valueless, and saw only the evidences that heaven alone is worthy of our highest regard in the transient things which absorb the thoughts and hearts of the masses of the community. And these beautiful and divine thoughts and principles she uniformly endeavored to impress upon the hearts of her family, and long as memory is faithful to its trust will the dear and deeply smitten children and bereaved husband bear in mind these great and solemn lessons. Home was the place she above all others loved, and it was in her power in a singular manner to make that home happy. But now that home is solitary—a fearful blank reigns where joy abounded, and a loneliness the tomb alone can produce withers the heart. We think of severed ties never to be re-united on earth—of blighted hopes that can bud and bloom no more in this cold vale of sorrow, of friendship and love, wrapped, as it were, in the winding sheet and the funeral face, gentle voice and pleasant words all closed from our sight and hearing forever—and oh! how sad are the reflections that thus press upon our hearts. The life of this good woman was the great guide to our estimate of her faith and piety. Her disease was fierce, painful and distracting; at times of tranquility, her heart reverted at once to all the dear objects of a Christian's love and faith, and when the mind wandered from its wonted path of tranquil reason it went in fond pursuit of some of her dear children sick in other apartments, for every room had its sick: and but for the distressing fact that the whole family were prostrated or nearly all of them, and the consequent trouble and anxiety of mind she experienced, her valuable life might have been prolonged. that it pleased God in wisdom and mercy to take her to himself, and it is ours to bow humbly and adoringly to his will, for "the Lord gave and the Lord has taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." The sleep of the grave shall end; the body that sleeps shall rise again; Christ rose that we might rise.

So Jesus slept, God's dying son
Pass'd thro' the grave and bless'd the bed;
Rest here blest saint till from his throne
The morning break and pierce the shade.

Vicksburg, Miss., 1853. CYPRESS.

DIED—February the 7th, 1854, SARAH A. WHITE, in the 34th year of her age. Sister White was born in Franklin county, Miss., and from thence, with her parents, removed to Concordia Parish, La. She united herself with the M. E. Church in the year 1840, and ever after lived a life consistent with the glorious gospel of Christ. But she never professed to have obtained the comforts of our blessed religion until a short time previous to her death. When it became evident that she must depart soon, she was exhorted by her husband to confide in the merits of that blood which cleanseth from all sin, and he requested her to let him know whether she felt the efficacy of that blood applied. She seemed earnestly engaged in prayer for some time, when she called her husband to her bed-side and said: "I feel that God has forgiven my sins, and that I love Jesus; I feel that Jesus can make a dying bed feel soft as downy pillows are." After which she gave some direction with regard to her children, and then turning to her mother exhorted her with all present to meet her in heaven.

Sister White has gone to her reward where she will experience the depth, breadth and height of God's sanctifying grace and love, apart from all that can afflict or make sorrowful.

She has left four little children, a bereaved husband and many friends to mourn their loss. May God incline their hearts to walk in her way, and may their last end be like hers.

URIAH RILEY.

Trinity, La.

☞ Nashville and Louisville Christian Advocate please copy.

☞ List of LETTERS AND FUNDS received at the office of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, for FEBRUARY, 1854:

B—J B Brown $3; Jas Battley $1 50; H N Bridges $150.

C—D C B Connerly $11 00; D C B Connerly $10 00; J Cleaveland $1 50; J W Cooley $3 00.

D—D Duncan $4; Mrs E Dodd $1 50; Z Dowling $11. (The 50 cents we put to your credit. The P. M. here will not receive the postage. It must be paid in advance at the office of delivery.)

E—L Ereanbrack $5.

G—W R Geber $3; H H Gormany $1 50; D S Geodloe $1 50; F M Grace $3.

H—Allen B Henry $1 50; Mrs M Higgins $2; W F Herbert $3; Mrs J Haughton $1 50; R H Herbert $5.

J—R T Jones $5; J T Judkins $4.

K—H B Kemp $15; W L Kidd $1 50; H B Kemp $7 50.

L—Mrs M E Lewis $2; Mrs J Lee $1 50; Mrs M A Langley $1 50.

M—J B Markham $5; A. H Mitchell $3; J Moreland $5; G G Mortimer $5; W H Mullins $1 50; J L McAlister $5.

N—W B Neal $5; J Nicholson $5.

P—M B Patterson $1 50; L Pearce $15; M G Pulmer $3; J Powell $10.

R—C W Rezoll $2; R Randle $5; E K W Ross $3.

S—B G Sims $1 50; E Stevenson $17; J F Scott $1 50; J O Smith $1 50.

T—H Tatum $1 50; Mrs H A Taylor $2; W C Turner $5.

W—J L Wall $1 50; W Williams $6; J Wall $1 50; J Williamson $5; C J White $1 50; Miss E Ward $1 50.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square first insertion	$1 00
Each subsequent insertion	50
One Square, one year	15 00
One Square, six months	10 00
Two Squares, one year	25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for

---

The following is the report of the interments in all the Cemeteries of the City for the week ending at 6 o'clock A. M. on Sunday, the 26th inst.: Odd Fellows' Rest, 0; Cypress Grove No. 1, 1; Cypress Grove No. 2, 17; Charity Hospital, 10; St. Patrick's, 21; Catholic No. 1, Second District, 0; Catholic No. 2, Second District, 13; St. Vincent de Paul, Third District, 14; Lafayette, Fourth District, 25; Hebrew, Metairie Ridge, 1; Protestant, Girod street, 6. Total, 110.

General Intelligence.

OUR LEGISLATURE.

We remark with regret that, in the Lower House, the Committee on Commerce—to whom was referred Mr. Deason's bill to create the office of Harbor Master for the Fourth District of our city—have reported back the bill, but stricken out of it the clause requiring that the person appointed to the office be a sailor of at least a year's experience.

Now, we must look upon the removal of this judicious restriction as a perfect legislative solecism. Why do they want to make the post of Harbor Master open to men who don't know a ship's stern from her bows? Why not require that a man, in a special case like this, shall know something of his business? We hope the clause will be restored in the House, or the bill rejected. Better not have the office, if it is to be filled by unqualified men.

We find that, while the committee on sanitary measures are ready to report in favor of re-establishing a regular Quarantine, at the mouth of our river, one of our learned physicians, Dr. Kittredge, brings in a minority report, in which he maintains the following grounds:

That no system of quarantine, however rigorous, could prevent the spread of epidemics: That the only benefit to be derived from any sanitary regulations would be the appointment of a health officer, to be stationed at the Balize, for the purpose of inspecting vessels having on board of them ship-fever and small-pox: That for all other diseases, he would be useless; That, in the above cases, the ship, its crew and passengers should be thoroughly cleansed, and, as soon as that is done, pass on to the city: That the cleansing should be thorough, but its cost made trifling, and the detention so short as to offer no obstruction injurious to commerce.

Louisiana Legislature.

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 24, 1854.

This day being devoted to the consideration of private bills in the House, there was nothing of importance disposed of.

In the Senate the resolution reserving from sale the swamp lands on the Bayou Lafourche for a limited period, was taken up and passed.

The object of this bill is to suspend the sale until certain improvements, which are now in contemplation, shall have been completed, by which their value will be much enhanced; and to prevent them from being absorbed entirely by speculators. The act to aid the colonization of the free people in this State was taken up and gave rise to a long and animated discussion.

This bill imposes a tax of one dollar per head upon each free person of color in this State, to be paid annually, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act. And in default of payment, the Collector shall institute legal proceedings against such tax payer, and in the absence of property, it shall be lawful for him to arrest the person of such delinquent and hire him out at public auction or to such person or persons as will advance the amount of said tax and costs.

This feature of the bill produced much excitement, as it was considered as arbitrary in its nature and contrary to the spirit of our institutions. The bill was finally laid upon the table; after which the Senate adjourned. C.

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 25.—The Senate met and adjourned to Monday without transacting any business. In the House a report was made by Mr. Bullard from the Judiciary Committee. The resolution of the Senate to withdraw from sale or entry certain lands of the State, pending at adjournment yesterday, was taken up, and on motion of Mr. Tanner was laid on the table subject to call. The bill to amend the law for the assessment and collection of taxes in this State was passed. The Speaker laid before the House a communication from the State Engineer in relation to the improvement of Bayou Plaquemine. Referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements. The bill to incorporate the Vienna Male and Female Institute of the parish of Jackson, was taken up and passed. A large number of private bills were taken up and passed or otherwise disposed of.

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 27, 1854.—Senate.—The Special Committee, to whom was referred Mr. McKay's bill, regulating judicial sales, reported it back without amendment

Mr. Kenner being one of the committee, stated that he had no notice to attend the committee, and he considered it discourteous to him that the report should be made in this manner. The bill was recommitted. Several important bills were discussed and not disposed of.

HOUSE.—An act for the protection of merchants and vendors of agricultural products, passed unanimously. The bill gives them a lien and privileges on products sold for five days after the delivery. An act making the salary of the District Attorney of New Orleans twenty-five hundred dollars, and all others eight hundred dollars each, was passed. A Special Committee reported in favor of various amendments to the city charter.

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 28—Senate.—The act to reclaim the swamp and overflowed lands was debated but not disposed of.

House.—The Committee on Federal Relations reported back Mr. Roberts's "Koszta resolutions" without expressing any opinion.

An act to provide for filling vacant Judgeships was passed.

Mr. Jordan introduced resolutions asking Congress to make appropriations for a quarantine below New Orleans.

Later from Havana.

By the arrival of the Philadelphia we have received dates from Havana to the 24th inst.

The papers by her contain little news, and none of any interest, except the following.

Though they come down to a date four days later than that of the rumor received at Charleston of a slave-insurrection, they make no mention of the fact, which, had it been true, must have reached them.

The Diario copies, with much satisfaction, various English documents, to prove that, in all the colonies where introduced, it has been found that the introduction of apprenticed Chinese, as agricultural laborers, has been highly successful; that the Chinaman is as industrious as the Cooly, more adroit, and much stronger; is easily governed, sober, frugal, mild, and as eager to work on Sunday, for pay, as the negro is averse to labor, paid or forced, at all times. They seem, in short, to be convinced that, in point of cheapness and efficiency, there are three grades—the negro standing lowest; the Cooly a good deal higher; the Chinaman, a good deal the highest of all. And, indeed, from what is reported of the Chinese in California, there may be more truth in these statements than there usually is in those which abolitionists usually make.

On the 21st, the Captain General issued an order forbidding the practice of calling back favorite actors and dancers, and forcing them to repeat performances which have pleased the audience. He says that it is cruel thus to overtask the poor performers, in a climate like that of Havana; and that it is unjust thus to exact, by calls often capricious, tasteless, and proceeding from the worst part of the spectators, more than the actors have bargained for. All this is, certainly, wholesome enough doctrine; but we doubt if the parties interested will thank his Excellency.

The Government is much enlarging and extending the mole of the port of Havana. This fine harbor will thus be rendered still more secure to the greatly increasing trade which is, every day, more and more attracted thither.

FROM THE ITALIAN OF METASTASIO.

Placido zephiretto incontri il mio ogetto.

Oh, gentle zephyr, should'st thou nigh
My loved one chance to stray,
Tell him thou art a burning sigh,
But where, oh, do not say

Oh, timpid streamlet, should'st thou hear
His footsteps chance to swell,
Say that thou art a passionate tear,
But where, oh, do not tell.

Latest News from Mexico.

By the steamer Texas, Capt. Place, arrived Saturday night, from Vera Cruz on the 22d inst, we have received our usual files from the City of Mexico and Vera Cruz respectively down to the 18th and 22d.

The most important intelligence which we collect is the marching of the 12th regiment of the line to Sonora to act against Capt. Walker. The 12th is, we believe, the crack regiment of the Mexican army, and is about 1000 strong. A regiment of cavalry had also been dispatched, between three and four hundred strong.

Gen. Herera, late President of the Republic, and one of its best soldiers and citizens, died at Mexico on the 12th inst., after a long sickness. He left behind him a name very justly respected among his countrymen, and a great public sorrow.

Santa Anna had published a decree for the establishment of a School of Commerce, in which are to be taught all the elements of that pursuit, together with the chief modern languages.

In Durango, two engagements with parties of the barbarian invaders had happened, the Indians being beaten in both. In the one, several of them had been killed; in the other, they had been put to flight with the loss of all the plunder they had made—that is, some three or four hundred horses and mules, and possibly some of their number killed or wounded.

From Mazatlan a letter had been received, saying that news had come from Guaymas of the landing at Ensenada of six or seven hundred adventurers to reinforce Captain Walker, and that a Frenchman had handed over to the Government a letter from Count Raousset, announcing preparations for an expedition against Sinaloa.

The President had publishee a decree by which all Mexicans banished from the Republic for political offences, re-entering Mexico without express permission from the Government were to be seized and punished under the law of August last against conspirators.

By another decree, the widows and orphan daughters of all such as received pensions for military services were to lose them upon getting married. Don Antonio Canales and Don Jesus Cardenas had been forbidden, under pain of death, to return to the department of Tamaulipas.

The Government of Sonora had ordered a monthly levy of four thousand dollars, to provide for the expenses for meeting the threatened invasion of Walker. It was to be raised on all incomes of a hundred and fifty dollars and upwards.

Don Francisco Mora had been appointed Minister Plenipotentiary to the Governments of New Grenada, Venezuela and Ecuador.

Santa Anna had taken another measure for marking the public gratitude to the founders of Mexican freedom. He had ordered that all those who had taken part with Hidalgo and Morelos in the rebellion of 1810 should be placed on the list of pensioners.

Gen. Jarero, who fought so bravely at Cerro Gordo, and was some time in this country, prosecuting a claim before the Board of Mexican Commissioners, has been appointed President of the Supreme Tribunal of War and the Navy.

On the 30th January, four peasants, named Galicia, Flores, Vargas, and Mendoza, were executed at Puebla for highway robbery.

Santa Anna had issued a decree which we may call a navigation act, laying discriminating duties on the vessels of all such nations as have not treaties with Mexico at the rate of fifty per cent. in addition to the ordinary.

A special decree has been passed ordering all invaders of the Mexican territory when taken in arms to be shot with very little ceremony.

California News.

ARRIVAL OF THE PAMPERO.

The steamship Pampero, Capt. Flanders, reached her wharf in this city, from San Juan, on Saturday morning, bringing news from San Francisco to the 1st instant.

We find little of importance in our exchanges.

A charge of bribery against Mr. Peck, senator, from Butler, had created some excitement. A Mr. Palmer had sworn that Peck offered to sell his veto and influence for $5000. The Senate resolved itself into a judicial tribunal on the matter, and was engaged in making investigations.

An unfounded report of the failure of the banking house of Adams and Co. caused a run upon them, during which $416,000 were paid out and the run finally ceased.

The weather had been very cold.

The steamboat Helen Hensley exploded her boilers, on the 19th, killing two men and injuring several others.

The Herald of the 1st inst. says:

The U. S. sloop-of-war Portsmouth is expected to sail to-morrow, accompanied by a U. S. Mail steamer, on a cruise along the coast of Lower California, to arrest, as far as the power of the General Government can be exercised, any violation of the integrity of the Mexican territory by any lawless incursion of men claiming to be American citizens.

The Theatre at Placerville was burned on the 30th ult., and property to the value of twelve or fourteen thousand dollars was destroyed.

By an arrival from China, files of Hong Kong papers have been received up to December 11. From the Overland China Mail of that date we learn that the revolutionary party were still in possession of Shanghai. Trade continued to be carried on at that place under the provisional regulations of the British and American Consuls. Vessels of all flags are in request, and the Mail states that the exports of teas and silks are far greater than those of last year.

The United States Mail steamship Golden Gate sailed from Panama for San Francisco on the first of January, and when within about five hundred miles of San Diego, broke her larboard shaft, and drifted four days, when she made steam with one engine, and made her way into San Diego with one wheel. In coming out, she ran ashore, and a violent gale soon after setting in, she came very near being lost. She leaked badly, but on discharging all her coal she was got off. The Columbia, which went to her assistance, arrived at San Francisco on Sunday, January 29, and reports that the Golden Gate will sail for San Francisco as soon as steam pumps arrive. It is said that the injury to the Golden Gate can be repaired in a short time, when she will resume her trips to Panama.

WALKER'S REPUBLIC! SONORA ANNEXED!

The last advices from President Walker were to the 19th of January. He had then annexed Sonora—by proclamation: and changed the nomenclature of the republic. The following are his decrees effecting this:

REPUBLIC OF SONORA.

Decree No. 1.

All decrees of a general nature heretofore published as decrees of the Republic of Lower California, are hereby republished as decrees of the Republic of Sonora.

Given under my hand, at Fort McKibbin, this 18th day of January, 1854. WM. WALKER, President of Sonora.

Decree No. 2

1. The Republic of Sonora is here divided into two States, to be styled respectively the "State of Sonora," and the "State of Lower California."

2. The State of Sonora comprises all the territory within the following boundaries, to wit: Beginning at a point in the Colorado river, opposite its mouth, and the middle of the stream thereof; running thence along a line midway between the banks of said river, to the boundary line between the United States and Mexico, as established by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, thence along said line until it strikes the summit of the Sierra de los Mimbres; thence along the summits of said Sierra to the head waters of the river Fuerte; thence down the middle of the stream of said river Fuerte to its mouth.

3. The State of Lower California comprises all that territory south of the boundary line between the United States and Mexico, as established by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and lying west of the river Colorado and the Gulf of California.

4. All islands in the Gulf of California lying opposite the coasts of the State of Sonora and Lower California, are attached to one of these States respectively, according as said islands be nearer to the coasts of one State than to those of the other.

Given under my hand, at Fort McKibbin, this 18th day of January, in the year of our Lord, 1854. WM. WALKER,
President of Sonora.

REPUBLIC OF LOWER CALIFORNIA

Decree No 3

The name of the Republic is hereby changed, and henceforth all decrees, laws and processes issued, shall run in the name of the "Republic of Sonora."

Given under my hand, at Fort McKibbin, this 18th day of January, in the year of our Lord, 1854. WM. WALKER,
President of the Republic of Lower California.

REPUBLIC OF LOWER CALIFORNIA

Decree No 4

The State of Sonora, lately declared by the President of Mexico a Department of the Mexican Republic, is hereby constituted a portion of the Republic of Lower California.

Given under my hand, at Fort McKibbin, this 18th day of January, in the year of our Lord, 1854. WM. WALKER,
President of the Republic of Lower California.

Later from the Isthmus.

The steamship United States, Captain Lucas, from Aspinwall the 22d inst., arrived Tuesday morning.

The steamship Empire City arrived out at Aspinwall on the morning of the 22d inst., with about 600 passengers taken from the Georgia at Norfolk. She was to sail on the same evening for New York with $850,000 in treasure and about 200 passengers.

The Aspinwall Courier contains the following items:

Over twenty vessels are to be seen at or closely adjacent to our wharves at this time. The amount of shipping to this port has been constantly and rapidly increasing for several months past. We confidently look forward to the day when our harbor will be literally crowded.

The steamer Clyde, of the W. I. R. M. line, arrived at this port from St. Thomas this morning. She brought London dates to the 17th. She landed her mails, passengers and a considerable number of Carthagenian laborers for the Panama Railroad Company, and left for San Juan this morning.

The Courier publishes the following letter from the Darien Exploring Expedition:

U. S. SLOOP CYANE, Caledonia Bay,
New Granada, Jan 27, 1854.

Dear Courier—An opportunity of communicating with you having rather unexpectedly offered itself, I hurriedly embrace it. We arrived here on the 18th. Capt. Hollins held a grand pow-wow with some fifteen or sixteen chiefs. At first they were very averse to our landing on the isthmus, and absolutely refused to give their consent; they at length, however, consented that we should land, but only for the purpose of recommitering the proposed route of the ship canal. On the 19th, a party of twenty-eight men and officers, principally from this ship, well armed and provisioned for ten days, landed under command of Lieut. Strain. On the 24th, four of the party returned, having penetrated a distance of twenty miles into the interior. These latter started next morning with a reinforcement of ten men and extra provisions. The report of the said returned party is not at all favorable to the prospect for a ship canal; for they estimated on a fair calculation, that the elevation of the lowest points over which they passed are about one thousand feet in height They followed the Caledonia river, and you can judge the size of the stream when the party walked up the bed of the river all the way.

The English brig of war, Espiegle, arrived on the 19th, having on board Mr. Gisborne, Dr. Cullen, and a party of English engineers detailed to survey a route for the proposed ship canal.

On the 20th, the English survey schooner Scorpion, and the French steamer Chimari arrived—the steamer having on board a party for the canal route survey, and the schooner being intended for the survey of this harbor.

The English and French party combined started on the 24th. On that day, a party of five, detached from Strain's party, returned to the ship, and reported the obstacles and hardships which they had encountered. They stated that they had left Strain and his party in the mountains eighteen miles distant. They left the ship again with a reinforcement of ten men and ten days' extra provisions, under charge of Lieut. Fauntleroy. While I write, I see detachments of the French and English party returning to their vessels, and am informed they have come after provisions. A glance at the letter of Lieut. Fauntleroy, who overtook the English party the day after he left, fully indicates that their own conclusion upon the premises acquired thus far, is, that the route is impracticable.

Since the above was written, some 180 New Granadian troops under Col. Codazzi, have been landed here, and will be sent across the route upon which the explorations are being made, for the purpose of establishing posts along the line, and forming a garrison at San Miguel, the Pacific extremity of the line, etc.

The latest accounts from the expedition on shore are not all satisfactory. We are expecting to see hostile movements on the part of John Bull's representatives here, on account of the murder (of which your readers are doubtless apprised) of several of the crew of H. B. Majesty's ship Virago, near San Miguel.

Our party must by this time be encamped on the shores of the Pacific.

Much dissatisfaction is expressed towards Dr. Cullen, the author of a book which certainly, to say the least, gave very plausible reason why the canal could be and should be built—a blessing for him if he could vanish to parts unknown, to escape the ridicule and contumely which he is very likely to receive from his own countrymen as well as the other individuals which he has inveigled into the chimera, I cannot call it any thing else. We will have completed the survey of this beautiful harbor in about a month; the anchorage is very commodious, perfectly safe, and capable of containing 1000 sail of the line.

I forget to mention that the English and the French parties are camped eighteen miles from here, and awaiting the arrival of provisions; some of the English engineers have pushed on with our second party, under the charge of Lieut. Fauntleroy.

Destructive Fire at Mobile.

LOSS OF TWO STEAMBOATS.

We learn by an extra from the office of the Mobile Tribune that about three o'clock on Saturday morning a fire broke out on board of the steamboat Sam Dale, lying at the wharf between Dauphin and St. Francis streets. The boat in a short time was so enveloped in flames that no measures could be adopted to check them. By five o'clock she was burned to the water's edge and the remains sank.

The steamer Ambassador was lying in proximity, and, notwithstanding the efforts of the crew and others to haul her into the stream, she also took fire and was burned to the water's edge.

The steamer Wilcox and the schooner Alida were lying near the Dale, and took fire; but by the exertions of those present were saved in a damaged condition

The schooner Whig, also a lighter, and laden with salt, had her topmast burned, and some slight damage to her rigging.

A quantity of goods intended for the Ambassador was consumed, notwithstanding the most strenuous efforts of the firemen to save them.

There was a heavy and constant rain during the whole time, with a fresh wind from the southeast.

Capt. Frank Johnson, of the Sam Dale, was asleep at the time on board that vessel, and the fire made so rapid strides that he had to leap into the water to save himself from the flames.

A negro who jumped overboard was drowned. Another negro is missing, supposed also to be drowned.

The books and the principal papers of the Sam Dale were lost. An iron chest, containing some money and papers, was sunk, but hopes are entertained of recovering it.

The iron chest of the Ambassador, containing five or six thousand dollars, and all her principal books and papers were saved.

The loss is estimated at between $70,000 and $80,000.

Each boat was insured $5000 in each of the offices—the Fulton and the Marine Dock Insurance Companies—making $10,000 on each boat $5000 on each boat was also insured in some office at the West.

In the Supreme Court, at Elvira, N. Y., on the 17th, in the case of Wm. Ransom against the New York and Erie Railroad Company, for injuries received by a collision at Chemung on the 4th of July last, the jury rendered a verdict of $14,000 in favor of the plaintiff.

New York Letter.

NEW YORK, Feb. 18, 1854.

It was supposed, not long since, that the glory of Barnum had departed. People wondered at it, but they were convinced of it nevertheless They had become so used to the airs played by his head in the balcony, that it was a bore to the passers by. A little diversion was created in his favor when he announced that the Giraffes and the bearded Woman, together with all his other curiosities, could be seen for the wonderfully low sum of twenty-five cents. But after a while these novelties began to wear out—the giraffes had been looked at enough, and the bearded woman been heard enough by all who had curiosity to find out how hair on a woman's face feels. When "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was brought upon the boards there, with all the addenda of three or four large pictures and half a dozen smaller ones—all miserable daubs, without any merit, unlifelike and stupid—it was thought that perhaps he might gain a little of his lost ground. But it was soon discovered that his representation was not comparable to the one at the National—so he had to give it up Meanwhile the "Museum (with Menagerie combined)" up Broadway had been started and obtained a foothold. A large number of tigers, lions, monkeys and cats, together with the Siamese twins—Mr Hollis, a man without arms, and a little dwarf—which a stuffed ostrich as a sort of frontispiece below. This rivalry, it was predicted, would knock him up. The prediction was false. The hero of Jenny Lind, Tom Thumb and Washington's nurse, has been true to himself and his greatness. He has emerged from the cloud that surrounded him—and, gathering together all the big chickens of the country, shines out in all the splendor of his former reputation. He has his Museum now, and, on all sides, you are overwhelmed almost with the crowing of cocks and cackling of hens. By the way, it struck me that "the cock, that is the trumpet to the morn," which "doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding voice awake the god of day," is certainly not a Shanghai. Of all the awful croaking voices that ever struck the ear, certainly his is the most detestable—but this, en passant. In every direction you see, piled one on top of the other, cages containing the aforesaid slaughters—gray, white, speckled and brown. Pouters, Polanders, Turkeys wild and tame, pigeons, doves, barn-yard fowls, geese, cranes, interspersed here and there with a deer, a gazelle, and every variety of rabbit—though how they came to be classed among the fowls of the air it is hard to conceive. And above all, what to the President is most interesting, these coops are surrounded, from morning until night, by gaping and open-mouthed crowds. Not one thinks of looking at anything else The giraffes are allowed to chew their hay unmolested. Tom Thumb's carriage is no longer an object of curiosity. The happy family are left to the quiet enjoyment of their happiness. It is nothing but chickens, chickens, chickens, and among them all it is universally admitted that Barnum is the cock of the walk.

I happened to have an opportunity yesterday of seeing the steamer Ericsson. She was returning from a trial trip. I am sorry I cannot say much in her praise. Her wheels were moving, and that was all. The wind was in her favor, blowing quite fresh, and she had several sails set. With these advantages, she was not going more than one mile an hour It is stated this morning that something was the matter with the machinery. There is always a screw loose somewhere about it. I don't see what good is ever expected to come out, on the complete success of the invention. All the inventor claims is, that a speed of seven or eight miles an hour can be obtained. This is no object; steamers are of no great use, except in navigating the northern part of the Atlantic. The fastest of them will be necessary only for the transmission of the mails in the Pacific ocean; but, take them on a long voyage—from here to San Francisco, for instance—and a clipper ship will beat them all. Witness the runs made by the Sovereign of the Seas, White Cloud, etc.

There is to be a grand anti-Nebraska meeting to-night. The first was a decided failure. This one is called by mechanics of every description, with a few merchants. Whenever the mechanics are wanted as tools and instruments, they are very much glorified. Before elections, they are generally made of much importance It is astonishing, after the votes are counted, how the politicians who craved them, and coaxed and caressed them before, ignore their existence even; or, if they do coldly return the familiar salutations of one, he then apologizes to the friend he is with, saying, "a rude fellow, but honest, I believe; has influence among a certain class; have to know those sort of people slightly." They are made to feel this very often (for they have some sensibilities, if they do have to get up early in the morning), and a few days after an election they all swear off from being imposed upon. But it's no use. When the next "grists" comes, and they are called upon and told that they are the patriotic, they believe what they are told, and allow themselves to be made tools of again.

SPECTATOR.

DESPERATE AFFRAY WITH BURGLARS.—A gentleman named William Wright, residing in South Ninth street, Philadelphia, had a desperate encounter with burglars on the night of the 17th inst. He was awakened by the ringing of a bell at the head of his bed, which was so arranged that a rear door of the house could not be opened without giving an alarm, and on quietly proceeding to the lower part of the house, he found four burglars engaged in rifling the apartments. Two of the burglars proceeded to the upper part of the house, and Mr. Wright, who was armed with a revolver and a broken javelin, attacked the two that remained. The alarm revealed the others, and the whole four were arrayed against Mr. Wright. He fired five shots from his revolver, and used the other instrument with which he was armed, with effect. The noise of the firing and the cries of an ind who was in the house, brought the watch, but the whole of the burglars succeeded in escaping. The apartment in which the affray took place, gave evidence of its severity. Portions of the clothing of the burglars, marked with blood, strewed the floor, and the walls and ceiling were perforated with bullets. Two of the burglars are believed to have been seriously injured.

A HEAVY VERDICT.—The Hudson county, N. Y., Circuit Court, has been engaged for two weeks in the case of Lovejoy vs. Baldwin, which was on the 18th brought to a close. It appears that the firm of Lovejoy & Wadsworth have been rather extensively engaged in real estate transactions and buildings in the city of New York. Mr. Wadsworth was taken sick and went to Spencerton, Columbia county, N. Y. Baldwin, who is a brother-in-law of Wadsworth, went to Lovejoy and stated he had purchased the interest of Mr. W in the business. Lovejoy, without proof of the statement, allowed Baldwin to transact business as a partner, in which capacity he received funds to the amount of $100,000, a part of which he paid out on account of the firm. Wadsworth recovering his health, appeared and claimed his share. He subsequently sued Lovejoy, and recovered $33,000. Lovejoy sued Baldwin, who had moved to Jersey City, and the result of the suit is a verdict of $71,815 48, which was rendered on Saturday.

THE RUSSIAN FLEET.—The following is an exact account of the Russian naval force in the Black Sea:

4 three-deckers (one old)	120 guns each	total guns 480
11 line-of-battle, 90 and 84 guns		902
6 frigates, 54 guns		324
2 frigates, 48 guns		96
5 corvettes, 36 guns		180
4 corvettes, 24 guns		96
2 brigs, 22 guns		44
10 brigs, 18 guns		180
8 brigs, 14 guns		112
5 brigs, 12 guns		60
5 brigs, 6 guns		30
3 brigs, 12 guns		36
6 brigs, 10 guns		60
1 old 84-line-of-battle ship, 21-gun brig (unserviceable)
a few steamships		00
Total guns afloat		2419

THE "COLT" REVOLVERS.—The Baltimore Times, in an article upon the memorial which Colt, the pistol manufacturer, has presented to Congress, praying for relief, upon the ground that he is the inventor of the revolving principle in fire-arms, asserts that he is not the inventor, and says that a revolving gun, upon exactly the same principle and with the same mechanical detail as Colt's pistol, is preserved in the Tower of London It was invented and in use at the time of the Edwards, shortly after the invention of gunpowder.

Ex-Senator Strange, of North Carolina, died near Fayetteville in that State on the morning of the 18th.

ORIGIN OF THE NAMES OF THE STATES.—The following information relative to the derivations of the names of the States will be found interesting: Maine was first called Mareonshen, but about 1638 took the name it now bears, from Maine, a province in the west of France The name is originally derived from the Cenomanni, an ancient Celtic people. New Hampshire was the name given to the territory granted by the Plymouth Company to Capt John Mason, by patent, in 1629, and was derived from the patentee, who was Governor of Portsmouth, in Hampshire, England. Vermont is from verd, green, and mont, mountain. Massachusetts was named from a tribe of Indians in the vicinity of Boston. Roger Williams says the word signifies blue hills. Rhode Island was so called in 1644, in relation to the Island of Rhodes in the Mediterranean. New York was named in honor of the Duke of York, to whom this territory was granted. Pennsylvania was called after Wm. Penn. In 1634, the Duke of York made a grant of what is now the State of New Jersey, to Lord Berkely and Sir George Cartaret, and it received its name in compliment to the latter, who had been Governor of the Island of Jersey. Delaware was so called in 1702, after Lord De La Ware. Maryland was named in honor of Henrietta Maria, Queen of Charles I., in his patent to Lord Baltimore, June 3, 1632. Virginia was called after the virgin Queen of England, Elizabeth. The Carolinas

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

MASQUERADE OF FREEDOM.

When Freedom first appeared beneath
Right simple was the garb she wore,
Her brows were circled with a wreath,
Such as the Grecian victors bore:
Her vestures all of spotless white,
Her aspect stately and severe;
And no one moved in all man's sight
As lovely as a Maiden Queen.

And queenlike, long she ruled the throng,
As ancient records truly tell:
Their strength she took not from the strong,
But taught them how to use it well.
Her presence graced the peasant's floor,
As freely as the noble's hall;
And 'neath the humbler was the door,
The still more welcome was her call.

But simple manners rarely range
Beyond the simpler ages' ken,
And as the Virtues sometimes change
Their vestures and their looks, like men.
Pride, noble once, grows slow and vain,
And Honor stoops to vulgar things,
And old Obedience clanks the rein,
And murmurs at the rule of kings.

So Freedom, like her sisters fair,
Has felt the impulse of the time,
Has changed her garments's blameless hue,
And wound the colors dear to crime,
First to a Phrygian cap she stabled,
And here within her gusty sphere;
And ever, when abroad she walked,
Men knew Revenge was following near.

She moves again—the death-drums roll,
The frantic mobs their chorus raise,
The thunder of the Carmagnole—
The war-shout of the Marseillaise!
Red run the streets with blameless blood—
The guillotine comes clanking down—
And Freedom, in her drunken mood,
Can witness all without a frown.

[Blackwood's Magazine.

The Battle of Citale.

The London Times gives the following particulars of the battle of Citale, from a private letter:

On Friday, the 6th of January, the Turkish troops, under the orders of Ishmail Pacha and Ahmed Pacha, marched to attack the Russians, who had fortified themselves in the village of Citale, which is about five hours march from Kalefat. The force of Ishmail Pacha was composed of three regiments of regular cavalry and one regiment of Bashi-Bozouks, with six guns. Ahmed Pacha was stationed at some distance from the village, with 30 or reserve troops, consisting of five battalions, and also six guns.

The Russian force in the village consisted of three battalions of infantry, commanded by Colonel Bonnegarde, three squadrons of hussars and two squadrons of Cossacks, with six guns.

The Turkish troops were, as will be seen, superior in number; but the position of the Russians, who were distributed in all the houses of the village, which is of great extent, and which is surrounded by a double ditch, rendered the attack extremely perilous, as the enemy, well sheltered, were enabled to direct a murderous fire upon the Turks, without the latter being able to reply to it.

In spite of this evident disadvantage, Ishmail Pacha gave orders for the attack, and went himself into the village under a shower of balls fired from all the windows. At first the Turks received very serious injury; but although this circumstance somewhat disorganised their attack, their impetuosity was by no means checked. The greater portion of the soldiers, who had never before been exposed to musketry, nevertheless displayed indomitable courage.

After a desperate struggle they attacked the houses, and fought hand to hand with the sword and bayonet. The massacre was frightful. The Russians in vain begged for quarter. In the fever of the fight the Turks listened to nothing, and slaughtered, without pity, all who fell under their hands. The Mussulmans of the Crimea, incorporated with the Russian army, in vain appealed to their character of Mussulmans. No quarter was given to them. Gutters of blood ran down the streets from this wholesale human slaughter. To add to the horrors of the scene, it may be stated that a number of pigs which had been let loose were seen eating the dead bodies.

All who could escape the slaughter took refuge in a redoubt at the head of the village, and thence recommenced a murderous fire upon the Turks, who returned it vigorously, but not without receiving considerable injury from the Russian guns.

At last the enemy, incapable of any further struggle, decided on abandoning the entrenchments. A number of Russian troops had already evacuated the place, when a colonel of Turkish cavalry conceived the unfortunate idea of endeavoring to oppose their passage.

The Russians, finding themselves surrounded, and having no outlet for escape, and no resource but the terrible energy derived from despair, no other alternative but to conquer or die, recommenced the fight with desperation, and in a vigorous sortie they succeeded in capturing two guns. It should be stated that the Turks, upon the first success in the entrenchments, committed the incredible fault of not destroying the enemy's guns.

While the battle was thus going on in the village, twelve battalions of infantry of the Russian army and a squadron of the cavalry, with sixteen pieces of cannon, were brought to the assistance of the besieged, and attempted to place the Turks between two fires. Information of this was given to Ahmed Pacha, who, by a skilful manœuvre, directed his soldiers to the point, in order to prevent the junction with the besieged troops. For this movement he made use of three of his reserved battalions.

The advantage of the position was now on the side of the Turks, who were on ground which sloped towards the Russians; but the latter were in three times greater number than the Turks. In spite of this inequality, however, the Russians were entirely beaten, and fled in the greatest disorder. They were completely routed, a fact constituting a feat of arms on the part of the Turks, which does great honor to them, and establishes another important truth—that the Russians cannot cope with Turkish troops in equal numbers to themselves in open field, and that they can only hope for any success when they have a much more powerful force than their enemy. Their losses in these two simultaneous affairs amount to nearly 4000 men, among whom are included 50 superior officers. The Turks had about 300 killed and 800 wounded, who were sent to the hospitals at Widden, and of whom, it is hoped, the greater part may be saved.

According to the opinion of some European officers now at Widden, this affair is a most glorious one for the Turks, and, if not productive of any material result, will at least prove of great moral advantage to them.

On the next day the Russians attempted to re-occupy the redoubt from which they had been driven in the night, but the appearance of some Turkish battalions discouraged them from the attempt, and they beat a retreat.

At the time of the attack upon the village, the Turkish soldiers, particularly the Bashi-Bazouks, committed the fault of stopping to pillage before being entirely assured of victory, and by this means, in despoiling the dead, obtained some trifling articles, much to the prejudice of the general interest. It is to be regretted that it has not been possible to derive all the advantage from this affair of which it is susceptible, at least so far as regards material benefit; but, as far as regards the moral effect, there is nothing to desire.

Ishmail Pacha fought like a lion, and more like a soldier than a general. He had two horses killed under him. He was grazed with two balls—one on the shoulder, and another on the wrist. A third ball struck the scabbard of his sword.

The Turks took from the field of battle, besides a number of horses, a great many muskets, sabres, schakos, epaulettes and decorations, and also many wounded. The latter consoled themselves for their wounds by the sight of watches or handfuls of gold, gathered in the midst of danger, which they placed by their beds of pain, as a solace to their sufferings.

Justice has been done to the Bravery of the Russian officers who courageously did their duty, but were badly seconded by the soldiers, whom it was often necessary to prick with the point of the bayonet in order to prevent them from running away. Some of the Wallachian militia were incorporated among the Russian troops; but the former forces were in very bad odor with the Russian officers, and were continually subjected to their jeers. A Wallachian captain refused to march against the Turks, and he consummated his refusal by blowing out his brains. This fact may be relied on.

The Wallachian soldiers are continually deserting to the Turks, whose position is decidedly becoming advantageous. It is believed that they will shortly undertake a new expedition. Besides this, although I do not state the fact as certain, it is said that Omer Pache is about to proceed to Widden. At all events, the Turks will be received in Wallachia as liberators. The Turkish soldier enjoys a reputation for honesty and good conduct which is well founded.

All the provisions which are necessary are paid for in ready money, and no burden is thrown on the inhabitants. So much cannot be said for the Russians, who are, indeed, charged with all sorts of odious acts. About two or three weeks ago, some Cossacks, at a village near Plewan, cut off the heads of three Wallachians and violated fifteen women. Thus the Russians are strange protectors. When the Turks reached the village, with the view of assisting the unfortunate inhabitants, the culprits had escaped.

Great Britain.

Parliament was opened on the 31st ult. The crowd was much greater than usual on the route to the House, and the Queen was greatly cheered, but Prince Albert was occasionally hissed.

The Turkish Minister and several Turks in the crowd were cordially cheered.

The House was unusually full of splendid costumes, but no members of the American Delegation were present, the master of the ceremonies having sent notice that all the diplomatic corps must appear in full costume.

The following is the QUEEN'S SPEECH.

My Lords and Gentlemen—I am always happy to meet you in Parliament, and on the present occasion it is with peculiar satisfaction that I refer to your assistance and advice.

The hopes which I expressed at the close of the last session, that a speedy settlement would be effected of the differences existing between Russia and the Ottoman Porte have not been realized, and I regret to say, that a state of warfare has ensued. I have continued to act in cordial co-operation with the Emperor of the French, and my endeavors, in conjunction with my allies, to preserve and to restore peace between the contending parties, although hitherto unsuccessful, have been unremitting. I will not fail to persevere in these endeavors, but as the continuance of the war may deeply affect the interests of this country, and of Europe, I think it requisite to make further augmentation of my naval and military forces, with the view of supporting my representatives, and of more effectually contributing to the restoration of peace.

I have desired that the papers explanatory of the negotiations which have taken place upon this subject, shall be communicated to you without delay.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons, the estimates of the year will be laid before you, and I trust that you will find their consistency with the exigencies of the public service at this juncture. They have been framed with a due regard to economy.

My Lords and Gentlemen, in the year just terminated, the blessing of an abundant harvest has not been vouchsafed to us by the dispensation of Providence; the price of provisions has been enhanced and the privations of the poor increased, but their patience has been exemplary, and the care of the Legislature, evinced by a reduction of the taxes affecting the necessaries of life, has greatly tended to preserve the spirit of contentment.

I have the satisfaction of announcing that the commerce of the country is still prosperous—that trade, both export and import, has been largely on the increase—and that the revenue of the past year has been more than adequate to the demands of the public service.

I recommend to your consideration a bill, which I have ordered to be framed, for opening the coasting trade of the United Kingdom to the ships of all friendly nations; and I look forward with satisfaction to the removal of the last legislative restriction of the use of foreign shipping for the benefit of my people.

Communications have been addressed by my command to the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, in reference to improvements which it may be desirable to effect in these institutions. These communications will be laid before you, and measures be proposed for your consideration, with a view of giving effect to such improvements. The establishments requisite for the conduct of the Civil Service, and arrangements bearing on its condition, have recently been under review, and I shall direct a plan to be laid before you which will have for its object to improve the system of admission, and thereby increase the efficiency of the service.

Recent measures of legal reform have proved highly beneficial, and the success which has attended them will encourage you to proceed with further amendments. Bills will be submitted to you for transmitting from ecclesiastical to civil courts cognizance of testamentary and matrimonial causes, and for giving increased efficiency to the Superior Courts of Common Laws. The laws relating to the relief of the poor have, of late, undergone much salutary amendment, but there is one branch to which I earnestly direct attention. The law of settlement impedes the free-tom of labor, and if this restraint can with safety be relaxed, workmen may be enabled to increase the fruits of their industry, and the interest of capital and of labor be more firmly united. Measures will be submitted to you for the amendment of the law relating to the representation of the Commons in Parliament. Recent experience has shown that it is necessary to take more effectual precautions against the evils of bribery and corrupt practices at elections. It will also be your duty to consider whether more complete effect may not be given to the principles of former acts, whereby reform were made in the representation of the people in Parliament.

In recommending this subject to your consideration, my desire is to remove every cause of just complaint, to increase the general confidence in the Legislature, and give additional stability to settled institutions of the State. I submit to your wisdom the consideration of these important subjects, and I pray God to prosper your counsels and to guide your decisions.

[From the St. Louis News, Feb. 10.]

The Steamboat Explosion at St. Louis.

The steamer Kate Kearney, formerly one of the Keokuk packets, but for a few days past running in the daily line between this city and Alton, blew up about 7 o'clock this morning, at the wharf boat, foot of Chesnut street. The larboard boiler gave way just at the tapping of the bell to start out from the wharf, and in an instant the largest portion of the cabin was shattered into atoms, and numbers of unfortunate passengers, officers and crew hurried into eternity or seriously injured.

But few persons were killed outright by the explosion, though several were lost overboard, and many others are reported missing. A negro man called Naca, belonging to Capt. Adams, was killed. The dead body of George Kinley, a negro fireman, was brought to the police office this morning, and an inquest held upon it by the coronar. Up to 11 o'clock he had not been summoned to hold inquests upon any other bodies. There were reports that two or three other dead bodies were seen upon the levee instantly after the explosion, but these reports are not confirmed.

Mayor Blow caused a number of wounded persons to be sent to the Sister's Hospital. The following is a list which he sent to the Health Office:

Albert Hardy, of Alton, first engineer, 25 years of age; Favorite Hardy, Alton, second engineer, 23; J. E. Dewerly, New York, 40; John McCabe, Ireland, 38; William Cheevers, colored, Illinois, 24; Brother James O'Keefe, Ireland, 30; Brother Vincent, Pittsburgh; William Curran, Ireland, 27; William J. Stewart, clerk at Messrs. Hubbell & Hunts, 25; Charles Curauce, Garmany, 28; Daniel Keefe, Ireland, 18; Bernard Riley; E. G. McKenser, Scotland, 28; James Carauaugh, Ireland, 25; deck hand or fireman unknown. Another person unknown was sent by Mr. Hayden, clerk of the Board of Health. Nearly all of these persons are very severely wounded, some with broken arms or legs, and almost all badly scalded.

Rev. S. G. Gassaway, pastor of St. George's Church, is wounded past all hope of recovery. His skull was fractured and his leg broken in two places, besides being badly scalded. Mr. Pottle, of the firm of Pottle & Bayley, and others of his acquaintance, recognized him while he was being carried across the levee, only by his neck-tie, his face was so blackened and changed by the injuries he had received. He was taken to the store of Mr. Charles Derby, and removed thence to his residence.

Of the passengers on board from the Planters House, three were wounded. Brevet Major Buell, Adjutant General's Department, U. S. Army, slightly. Major Catlin, 7th Infantry, slightly. Son of Major Catlin, severely. Stevens, the bar-keeper, is missing. John Stewart, of Alton, was badly scalded. Mr. Irwin, of Springfield, Illinois, was blown on shore—not hurt seriously. John L. Edwards, Chester, Illinois, badly scalded. J. F. Newberry, American Express Company, seriously wounded in the head and back.

The whole front of the boat forward of the wheelhouses was completely destroyed. The wreck has been towed to the opposite side of the river. The side of the wharf boat against which she was lying was broken through, and flying timbers and missiles were scattered on the levee. A piece of boiler two feet across, and weighing about 75 pounds, was thrown more than 200 yards, and struck above a window in the fourth story of Wiggins & Anderson's store in the city building. It rebounded and killed a cart horse on the levee.

As far as ascertained with any definiteness, there are seven persons killed and missing, and thirty scalded or otherwise seriously injured, some of them past hope of recovery.

There are insurances on the Kate Kearney as follows: $5000 in the Delaware Mutual Safety, and $5000 in the Globe Mutual offices. These, however, cover losses by fire and marine disasters, and will not, of course, be paid in this instance, as they do not provide against explosions.

About two years ago, the same boiler, we learn, of this same Kate Kearney, exploded at Canton, on the Upper Mississippi, and several persons were killed, and we hear that new fines only were put in, the boat prosecuted repaired, and then put again to her perilous work.

And what now is the revelation brought out by the terrific judgment of nature's violated laws? The heavy piece of boiler, which was hurled southwest to the market block of stores, smiting it on the arch above, the fourth story window, rebounding and inflicting death in its fall to the levee, lay there, this morning, a grim witness of the cause of the desolating calamity. The interior of the boiler surface was deeply incrusted with sediment and scales of rotted iron, while a marked and deep fissure of an old fracture showed how the boiler had been stranded and towed long ago by the excess of an internal pressure.

This fact, connected with the former explosion of this same (the larboard) boiler, and the obvious rotten condition of the iron, we say, tells a fearful story of responsibility, which, we thank God, it rests not with us to bear, or to explain why we should not hear. We trust that the searching investigation which this affair must undergo may reveal that human agency is not responsible for the horrors that have darkened this day.

A TERRIBLE TRAGEDY.—In glancing through our Mexican exchanges, we perceive that the people of that country get up some excitement occasionally at their fandangoes!

The town of Quecholac has recently been the theatre of a frightful tragedy. On Sunday, the 29th of January, Don Juan Jose Arenas gave a dance at which was present a large company from Quecholac and the neighboring villages. All were so pleased that they agreed to have another on the 31st. At this, a still larger company assembled and still greater gayety prevailed. After eleven o'clock at night, the ladies were invited to go the supper room, and threw aside their mantles for the purpose. As they were passing through a passage which lead to that room, one of them fell dead from the stroke of a dagger; the murderer was the master of the house himself, Arenas. The shriek of the victim, and the sight of the crime, produced the wildest confusion. All attempted to seize the criminal; but he, armed with his dagger and a six-barreled pistol, placed his back to the wall and defended himself desperately. Among others, he wounded the son of the slain lady. Suddenly, however, finding it impossible to escape, he applied his pistol to his mouth and blew out his own brains. It seems that the lady and he were adversaries in a law suit of much importance, and that, on her having the imprudence to show herself in her adversary's house, he had, in his rage, committed this crime.

RAPID GROWTH OF THE WEST.—The Chicago Tribune, speaking of the rapid development of those elements of prosperity possessed by the "Great West," says:

The West is yet in its infancy. It has not yet passed out of its teens. Nineteen years ago, there were less than five thousand whits inhabitants in all the vast region of beautiful country lying between Lake Michigan and the Pacific Ocean! Now the number is between one and two millions!

Twelve years ago Chicago contained a population of 5000. Now, it has over 50,000!

Twelve years ago, eight to twelve days passage between Chicago and New York was considered quick time in the most favorable season. Now two days is the average, and it is to be soon reduced to but three hours more than one day!

Six years ago, Chicago had not a single foot of railroad completed, and only one in contemplation. Now it has 482 miles completed in the limits of the State alone, and over 2000 in process of construction!

Fifteen years ago, the people of Chicago bought a large part of their breadstuffs and provisions from the States of New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio. Now there is exported from this city, each year, 5,000,000 bushels of grain and 120,000 barrels of beef and pork!

ARCTIC CAVES.—Kane, the Arctic voyager, in describing some of his adventures in Baffin's Bay, in 1853, has an account of the ice-caves and their echoes which is quite interesting:

Some of the bergs were worn in deep, vault-like chasms, through which a way was practicable to broader caverns within. In the crystal solitudes echoes were startling.

A whistle—your own whistle—you could hardly recognize for the length and clearness of the ring; the clang of a ramrod was heard running down the whole length of an army in review; and when you spoke, your words were reported through the motionless atmosphere in syllables almost as long as your breath could hold out to make them. I tried a hexameter we used to quote at home, and it came back to me in slow and distinct utterance, word for word. There is a certain cousin of mine, whom I remember annoying in our school days, for this dispatch with which he could say his prayers of a frosty night before jumping in bed. My cousin's entire rations of winter prayer, I thought, would have been repeated to him by a single effort of these echoes.

THE LARGEST VESSEL IN THE WORLD.—The new steamship Himalaya, which recently arrived at Southampton from London, having averaged fourteen miles an hour during her voyage, is said to be the largest ship in the world. She is intended for the conveyance of the mails between Southampton and Alexandria. The Himalaya is of 3550 tons register, or about 4000 tons burthen, English measurement, and is of the extraordinary length of 372 feet 9 inches. This is 57 feet longer than McKay's big ship. Her breadth for tonnage is 46 feet two inches; depth of hold 24 feet 9 inches. She is built of iron. The cylinders of her engines are 84 inches in diameter, with a 3½ feet stroke, and the revolutions are from 50 to 60 per minute. The screw is a two bladed one, 18 feet in diameter, and weighs nearly seven tons. The Himalaya is ship-rigged, and carries masts, spars and sails of a size suitable for a clipper sailing ship of 1800 tons. The Himalaya cost $750,000.

A society of ladies has been organized in Savannah, called the "Mount Vernon Association," with a view to raise a sufficient sum to purchase Mount Vernon, the home and grave of Washington, with a view to preserve its desecration to ordinary business or speculative purposes. For this purpose donations are to be solicited not only in Savannah, but in all the towns of Georgia.

MISPLACEMENT OF A LETTER.—The Paris Moniteur, is announcing the presentation of the American Minister, makes one of the most delicious mistakes in English ever yet committed in France. It takes the Y which stands for Mr. Mason's middle name, makes a small y of it, and tacks it on to the end of John, thus: "Johny Mason was presented yesterday." Probably this was the first time Johny ever figured in a state paper or an official organ.

The number of vessels employed in the coasting-trade of Great Britain in the eleven months ending the 5th ult, that entered inwards, was 122,746, and the tonunge 11,808,446; while the number cleared outwards was 125,419, and the tonnage, 12,485,518.

The Toledo Blade relates that a glutton of that place, named Erastus Jones, on a wager, swallowed at one time, a peck of batter baked in cakes, a pound of butter and a pint of molasses! and closes with an N. B., that Mr. Jones wishes to obtain board in a private family.

The Cincinnati Sun, says libel prosecutions are pending against the following journals of that city: against the Times for $15,000, the Gazette and Atlas for $140,000, the Sun for $5000, and the Commercial for $200,000.

POEM

BY A YOUNG LADY, (AGED FIFTEEN YEARS AND FOUR MONTHS.)

A thunder-cloud o'ershades my life.
As black, as black as ink;
I really don't know what to do—
I cannot eat or drink

I feel a strange my starkness void,
And spirit-voices say:
In vain you trust, life's sun is set,
All hope has passed away

It's useless here to weep and cry,
Earth wears a robe of gloom;
A patent coffin let me buy,
Then cast into the tomb! [Pictorial Times

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.—The New York Herald has a lengthy article upon Mr. Hart's petition relative to international copyright, in conclusion it says of him: A fit type of the old race of publishers, who regarded authors as mere slaves, to be hired at a washerwoman's pittance, and to be thrust back again into their garret when the most had been made of them—who starved some of the noblest men modern times have ever produced, and rattled their carriage wheels by the burial ground that contained the pauper poet's bones—who built them palaces with the profits of books whose writers lay shivering in an alms house—a fit type, say we, and a lineal descendant of such as those, is Mr. A. Hart, of Philadelphia.

CONTEMPTED MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.—The Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Herald in a recent letter says: It is stated here, on high authority, that Ex-President Fillmore is about to lead to the altar Miss Elizabeth Parter, of Niagara Falls, only daughter of the late Gen. Peter B. Porter, a hero of the war of 1812, and Secretary of War under John Quincy Adams. Miss Perter is 32 years of age, and a lady of superior intellect, high cultivation, and large fortune. Her brother and herself are the sole heirs of their father's great estate, including Gont Island and other lucrative property at Niagara Falls. Miss Porter has long been a reigning belle in Western New York, and has refused many an eligible parti, it is said.

CROPS IN EUROPE.—The London correspondent of the New York Tribune of 27th inst. says, it is pretty well ascertained, that the deficiency in the wheat crop in Western Europe and England, will amount to one hundred and seventy-six millions of bushels — sixty-four millions in France, forty millions in England, and the balence in Prussia, Holland, the Rhenish Provinces and Italy.

It appears, according to Galignani, that a very good Champagne wine is made from beet-root. When the juice has been purified by the ordinary process, and a pure solution of sugar and water has been obtained, it is evaporated to a suitable density, after which it is fermented by adding cream of tartar, and the required bouquet is given by means of aromatic plants.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

We believe this to be an excellent preparation and shall therefore not hesitate to recommend it to our readers. It has been tested to numerous instances in this city, and in several which have come under our own observation, it has accomplished what other popular medicines and some of our most skilful physicians had failed to accomplish—a perfect cure, in cases of (apparently) confirmed consumption. It is the only medicine for this disease which we can heartily recommend. [Temperance Advocate, Prov R. I. march 4

Not Too Late Yet!

ONE THOUSAND MORE SUBSCRIBERS WANTED

FOR

FORRESTER'S BOYS' AND GIRLS' MAGAZINE,

The best Children's Monthly in the Country. Hear what some of the Editors say of the new volume:

"This is our favorite, as our readers very well know, and the editor is commencing the year with a better than ever number."—Hampden Post.

"Forrester's Boys' and Girls' Magazine is edited by the most popular writer for the young in this country" [Worcester Palladium.

"It is elegantly and profusely illustrated, and published at the low price of $1 00 per year." [Nantucket Inquirer.

☞ The 18th volume begins with January. Terms, $1.00 per year, invariably in advance. Liberal discount made to Clubs.

☞ Agents wanted, who can furnish unquestionable references. Individual subscribers, however, may be their own agents, by carefully enclosing a gold dollar to the Publishers.

A specimen number sent gratis to those who desire it.

J. & O. O. RAND, Publishers,
No. 7 Cornhill, Boston.

march 4 1tp

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL,

FOR THE CURE OF

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA AND CONSUMPTION.

Many years of trial, instead of impairing the public confidence in this medicine, has won for it an appreciation and notoriety by far exceeding the most sanguine expectations of its friends. Nothing but its intrinsic virtues and the unmistakable benefit conferred on thousands of sufferers, could originate and maintain the reputation it enjoys. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded, this has gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

While it is a fraud on the public to pretend that any one medicine will infallibly cure—still there is abundant proof that the Cherry Pectoral does not only as a general thing, but almost invariably cure the maladise for which it is employed.

As time makes these facts wider and better known, this medicine has gradually become the best reliance of the afflicted, from the log-cabin of the American peasant to the palaces of European kings. Throughout this entire country, Cherry Pectoral is known as the best remedy extant for diseases of the Throat and Lungs, and in many foreign countries it is coming to be extensively used by their most intelligent physicians. In Great Britain, France and Germany, where the medical sciences have reached their highest perfection, Cherry Pectoral is introduced, and in constant use in the Armies, Hospitals, Alms-houses, Public Institutions and in domestic practice, as the surest remedy their attending physicians can employ for the more dangerous affections of the lungs. Also in milder cases one for children it is safe, pleasant and effectual to cure. In fact, some of the most flattering testimonials we receive have been from parents who have found it efficacious in cases particularly incidental to childhood.

The Cherry Pectoral is manufactured by a practical Chemist, and every ounce of it under his own eye, with invariable accuracy and care. It is sealed and protected by law from counterfeits, consequently can be relied on as genuine without adulteration.

We have endeavored here to furnish the community with a medicine of such intrinsic superiority and worth as should commend itself to their confidence—a remedy at once safe, speedy and effectual, which this has by repeated and countless trials proved itself to be; and trust by great care in preparing it with chemical accuracy, of uniform strength to afford physicians a new agent on which they can rely for the best results, and the afflicted with a remedy that will do for them all that medicine can do. Prepared and sold by

JAMES C. AYER.

Practical and Analytical Chemist, Lowell, Mass.

Sold by all Druggists.

J. WRIGHT & CO., New Orleans,
Wholesale Agents.

mar4 3m

JEFFERSON BOOK STORE.

W. FLEMING, Bookseller and Stationer, corner of Jackson and Tchoupitoulas streets, Fourth District, New Orleans, would respectfully call the attention of Country Merchants, Colleges, Academies, Public Schools, etc., to my

LARGE STOCK OF SCHOOL BOOKS,

Consisting in part of—

SPELLING BOOKS, READING BOOKS, DICTIONARIES Grammars, Rhetoric, Composition, Chemistry, Botany, Mineralogy, Geology, Natural History, Astronomy, Drawing, Book-keeping, Geography, Biography, Natural Philosophy, Elocution, Logic, History, Arithmetic, History, Geometry, Surveying, Mensuration, French Grammars, Dictionaries, Readers, etc.

SPANISH, GERMAN AND ITALIAN GRAMMARS, Dictionaries, Readers, etc.

GREEK AND LATIN BOOKS of all descriptions.

MISCELLANEOUS AND STANDARD WORKS; RELIGIOUS AND THEOLOGICAL WORKS, all denominations, which he offers to sell at much lower prices than heretofore sold in the South.

FANCY EMBOSSED NOTE PAPER AND ENVELOPES;

LETTER, CAP AND RECORD PAPER, of all qualities, Ruled and Plain.

BLANK BOOKS of all descriptions and sizes;

CHEAP PUBLICATIONS, MAGAZINES AND NEWSPAPERS;

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS;

ANNUALS for 1854, of all descriptions and styles of binding.

ALBUMS, FANCY PORTFOLIOS, WORK BOXES, WRITING DESKS, PORT MONNAIES, CARD CASES, MUSIC, etc.

For sale, on reasonable terms, by

WILLIAM FLEMING,
Bookseller and Stationer.

feb25 1y

☞ All orders promptly attended to.

H. GILLINGHAM. D. & TURNBULL. A. TURNBULL.

TURNBULL & CO.,

CARRIAGE REPOSITORY,

No. 10 Gravier street, rear of St. Charles Hotel, New Orleans.

☞ Every description of Carriages made to order.

D. & A. TURNBULL,
Late of Manufacturers, NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

Dr. J. H. Keenon,

Castilian Springs,
Holmes County, Mississippi,

Is now prepared to offer good accommodations to invalids who may desire to visit Castilian Spring, or place themselves under his care for treatment. This is one of the most desirable retreats for invalids in the South, located in an elevated healthy region of country, with abundance of fine Freestone water. The mineral water is composed very strongly of Iron, Sulphur, Magnesia and Soda, and contains largely of Carbonic Acid Gas.

The diseases which it has cured are Dyspepsia, Dropsy, General Debility, Affections of the Kidneys Bladder, and the various functional and organic derangements of the Womb. This water is especially efficacious in Diseases of Females.

Board, per week—$7.

Reference—Ministers of Miss Conference

Rev. J. H. Walker, } New Orleans.
Rev. M. N. McTyeire, }

march 4 6m

EDUCATION.

GREENSBORO' FEMALE COLLEGE,

GREENSBORO', N. C.

FACULTY:

CHARLES F. DEEMS, D. D., President and Professor of the Natural Sciences and Belles-Letters.

REV. TURNER M. JONES, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and the Ancient Languages.

MONS. ERNEST JOUANNE, (of the College of [illegible] IV, Paris,) Professor of the French Language and Literature.

THEODORE WOLLE, Esq., Professor of Music.

MISS N. JANE SPEER, Miss NANNIE T. SPEED and Miss LUCY McKEE, Assistants in the Literary Departments.

MISS AUGUSTA M. HAGEN, Madame JOUANNE and Miss CAROLINE A. BLAKE Assistants in the Department of Music.

MISS R. L. SIMPSON, Drawing and Painting.

THOMAS C. BLAKE, Esq., Steward.

MRS. T. C. BLAKE, Governess.

This Institution is situated in a healthy part of Central North Carolina. It is under the charge of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In the selection of the Faculty the Trustees have had reference first of all to superior qualifications, and as far as practicable have obtained ladies and gentlemen of Southern birth and education.

The course of study is as full and as thorough as that in the best Female Seminaries. While particular attention is paid to the solid branches of education, intellectual regard is had for the ornamental: but above all the culture of the morals of their pupils is considered the great work of the teachers. Special lessons of economy are inculcated. The pupils are not allowed under any circumstances to contract debts. Parents deposit money in advance. All the expenditures of the scholars are under direct supervision of the President, and their purchases are made by their teachers. There is no similar institution of its numbers have the bills of the pupils been so small in the aggregate as at this College during the past year.

The department of Natural Science is furnished with excellent apparatus, some of the instruments being of the highest finish, with all modern improvements. Lectures are delivered on Chemistry by the President, and on Natural Philosophy by Prof. Jouanne, weekly, and are accompanied by experiments. In the selection of the Professor of French regard was had to purity and accuracy of pronunciation, and the present incumbent of that chair possesses more than ordinary qualifications for his office. The practical use of the language in conversation is the aim of daily lessons.

In the department of Oil Painting the teacher does not seek to give her pupils simply a "pretty picture" as the close of the session, but the principles of the art are assiduously taught in the expectation that those who have special talent for design may prosecute self-culture after leaving the school.

All the principal teachers have had much experience in the business of their profession, and "thoroughness" is the motto throughout the whole Institution. The Faculty are working under this formula: "We are striving to make not the largest but the best school in the land."

TERMS:

$70 a session (of 21 weeks) for Tuition and Board, including washing, fuel, lights, furnished rooms and attendance; $20 extra for music on the Piano or Guitar, or for Oil Painting; $5 for Drawing or French or Latin. The Trustees believe that no school of its grade at the South offers such advantages on such favorable terms.

For further particulars application may be made to the President of the College.

The next session will open December 23, 1853. ja8-6t

BARDSTOWN FEMALE INSTITUTE.

REV. A. A. MORRISON, A. M., Principal.

This Institution is under the patronage of the Louisville Annual Conference, and is located in Bardstown, Ky. Bardstown is located on the turnpike from Nashville to Louisville, with a line of daily stages passing through, and is 39 miles south of the latter city. Bardstown is pleasantly located, and is proverbial for health. The Institute buildings are large and commodious, and the pleasure grounds attached pleasant and spacious.

The Institution is furnished with a full Board of experienced and accomplished Teachers, and the course of study as select and thorough as can be found in any similar Institution in the land. The school is permanently established, and in point of healthfulness of locality and facilities for a thorough Female Education, on reasonable terms—this Institution offers peculiar inducements to Southern Methodists and to the Southern community generally.

TERMS PER SESSION OF TWENTY WEEKS.

(Board payable in advance: Tuition at the close of the Session.)

Primary Department	$ 8 00
Junior Class	12 00
Middle Class	15 00
Senior Class	18 00
Music on Piano or Guitar	20 00
Vocal Music	4 00
Drawing and Painting	10 00
Greek, Latin, French or German	8 00
Boarding, including Washing, Lights and Fuel	40 00
For Fuel in school-room in winter	1 00

The next session will commence on the 30th of January inst.

REFERENCES:

Rev J B McFerrin, Nashville, Tenn.; W H Hickman, M D; Jno O W Hite, Bardstown, Ky; Rev O B Parsons, Rev E Sturgesson, Rev E W Sehon, Rev A H Redford, Louisville, Ky; and the Ministers of the Louisville Conference generally.

Bardstown, Jan. 5, 1854.—6t

EMORY and HENRY COLLEGE.

WASHINGTON COUNTY, VA.

THE SPRING SESSION of this Institution will commence on the 12th January, 1854. There is no College in the South offering stronger inducements to young men desirous of a thorough course of collegiate instruction.

TERMS:

Tuition per session of 5 months	$15 00
Board " " "	31 50
Washing " " "	5 00
Fuel " " "	2 00
Contingent charge " " "	1 25
	$54 75

With a location famous for health, with ample Libraries and Apparatus, with a full and efficient Board of instruction, and with a degree of cheapness unparalleled any young men with limited means, fair abilities and proper energy can here acquire a superior, liberal or business education. For further information address

E. E. WILEY, President,
Emory Post-office, Va.

jan6-6t

BUSINESS CARDS.

$50 TO $150 PER MONTH

Can be easily made in selling the

POPULAR BOOKS,

Published by MILLER, ORTON & MULLIGAN, successors to Derby & Miller, Auburn, and Derby, Orton & Mulligan, Buffalo.

From the wide-spread reputation of our publications,

Book Agents, Colporteurs and Canvassers

can be sure, with ordinary diligence, of doing well, as there is hardly a family in the country but would be glad to purchase one or more books from the list, if they were brought to their door. They are all Good Books, well printed, strongly bound, and sell readily wherever offered.

To all those desirous of aiding in the noble work of disseminating a pure and wholesome literature throughout our land, we offer a RARE CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY and do great good.

Catalogues of our Publications, containing full particulars, furnished on application (post-paid) to

MILLER, ORTON & MULLIGAN,
Publishers of Popular Books,
Auburn and Buffalo, N. Y.

feb18 4t

DISSOLUTION.

THE Limited Copartnership heretofore existing between the subscribers, under the firms of Derby & Miller, Auburn, and Derby, Orton & Mulligan, Buffalo, in this day dissolved. Norman C. Miller, of Auburn, and Eugene Mulligan, of Buffalo, each, and they alone, are authorized to sign the names of the late firm in liquidation.

ELLIOT C. STOREY,	JAMES C. DERBY,
EDWARD MUNSON,	NORMAN C. MILLER,
CHAS. F. COFFIN,	WM. ORTON,
	EUGENE MULLIGAN.
Special Partners.	General Partners.

Dated at Auburn and Buffalo, Feb. 1, 1854

COPARTNERSHIP.

Norman C. Miller, William Orton, Eugene Mulligan Elliot C. Storke, Edward Munson, and Charles F. Coffin, being purchasers of the entire list of Publications, Stereotype Plates, Copy-rights, Types, Presses, Stock, &c., of the late firms, will, with increased facilities, continue the business as Publishers, Importers and general Booksellers at Auburn and Buffalo, under the firm of

MILLER, ORTON & MULLIGAN.

Dated at Auburn and Buffalo, Feb. 1, 1854. 3t

WHOLESALE DRY GOODS TRADE.

SPRING IMPORTATIONS, 1854.

JOSEPH H. PALMER & CO. have in store and are receiving regularly from the European and American markets their usual supplies of ceasonable Goods, viz:

PRINTED GOODS, comprising Calicoes of various styles and qualities; Lawns, Jaconets, Organdies, Barages, &c.

LINEN GOODS—Irish Linens of every grade, Linen Drills, Linen Sheetings, Table Linens, Brown Linens, Crass Linens, Brown Hollands, Brown and Bleached Duck, Planters' Linens, Farmers' Drills, Linen and Lawn Handkerchiefs, every quality.

SILK GOODS, embracing plain and figured Blk Silks, Plaid Silks, Foulards, Satins, Velvets, Florences, Shawls, Handkerchiefs, Sewings, &c.

WOOLEN and WORSTED GOODS, comprising De Laines

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, Editor.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 6. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, MARCH 11, 1854. WHOLE NO. 162.

COMMON SCHOOL FACTS.

[The following facts referring to the great School interest of the Nation, cannot fail to excite the attention of the reader. They are as accurately adjusted to the existing state of things as we have the means of doing:]

Maine taxes her banks to the amount of twenty thousand dollars a year, for the support of common schools. The income of a fund derived from the sale of public lands is seven thousand more, and every township is obliged by law to raise annually a sum for the support of schools equal to forty cents for each inhabitant. Every county in Maine has a school commissioner, at a salary of two hundred dollars, who must spend at least fifty days in a years in examining the schools of his county.

New Hampshire spent, during 1853, the sum of $205,402 upon her common schools, of which she has 2310. The male teachers are paid an average of $15 68 a month, and their board; the female teachers only $6 96 —less than half! New Hampshire has taken measures to found a manual-labor school on the shores of Long Pond, near Concord, for the reform of juvenile delinquents.

Vermont maintains 2,594 common schools, at an annual cost of $218,402: pays her male teachers $13 55 a month, and her female teachers $5 54, exclusive of board. The schools are open on an average 24 weeks in the year, and they contain 39 pupils each, whose education costs the State $2 25 each per annum.

Massachusetts expends very nearly the exact sum of a million dollars a year in the support of her 4,056 public schools: besides the half million that is paid to privats schools and colleges, of which there are about 820. The male teachers are paid on an average $27 25 per month, the female teachers $15 36; and the schools are open seven and a half months in the year. The school libraries contain, altogether, 91,539 volumes; and apparatus to the amount of $23,825 has been distributed. The State supports three normal schools and one Reform school. In the latter the boys work six hour a day and study four.

Rhode Island boasts 335 schools, which are maintained at an annual cost of $115,160. In this State the militia commutation tax is applied to the support of the schools.

Connecticut has 1,642 public schools, a Normal school, a Reform school and 403 private schools. The school fund alone yields a revenue of $143,693. Male teachers are paid on an average $18 50 per month; females $8 20. Of the teachers employed last year, 230 had had ten years' experience; 430, five years; 500 three years; 570 less than one year; and 45 schools were broken up thro' the incompetency of the teacher. Summer schools were kept in all the districts except 112.

New York expended, in the year 1852, the sum of $2,249,814 upon her public schools, which number is 11,587. There are also 1472 private schools in this State. The number of children taught during the year was 882,507, of whom 4,416 were colored. There are thirty public schools composed exclusively of colored children, and several schools for the Indian children in the Reservations. The number of volumes in the district libraries is a little over a million and a half. The schools are kept open an average of seven and a half months: but there were more than 200,000 children who attended school less than two months in the year 1852. New York has a Normal school, n High school, and, we believe, three Reform schools, or houses of refuge. In the Normal school, there are usually from ten to fifteen Indian youths, preparing to become teachers of their own people.

New Jersey has 1500 common schools, supported by an annual expenditure of $272,737. The whole number of children under instruction is 94,605, of whom 1953 are colored; New Jersey has an invested school fund of very nearly $400,000.

Pennsylvania maintains 9,699 public schools at a cost of a little more than a million dollars a year. The average rate of compensation for male teachers is $18 75 per month; for females $11 46; but the schools are kept open on an average only five months in a year. In Philadelphia there are a Nomal and a High school. The public schools of Philadelphia cost $7 16 a year for each pupil.

Delaware has 236 common schools, and expends $49,469 a year in ther support.

Maryland has a school fund of $150,000, particulars respecting the expenditure of which we do not possess.

Virginia, so far as we know, has no organized system of public schools; nor, we believe, have North Carolina, Florida and Arkansas.

South Carolina supports 1,023 common schools, attended by 9,022 pupils, at an annual cost of $40,580. Gov. Means, in his message, Nov. 1852, says: "There seems to be a general belief that it—the free school system—works badly except in large cities. Conducted as they are in the country, I do not hesitate to pronounce it an almost useless expenditure of the public fund; yet I am far from being willing to recommend a discontinuance of the appropriation. I am sure the system could be so altered and improved as to work well with us." He recommends the appointment of a suitable and competent person to travel over the State to witness its operations, and suggest improvements.

Georgia has a school fund of $23,086, the interest of which is divided among the counties according to the population.

Mississippi has no uniform school system. Each township has a school fund arising from the lease of lands granted by Congress for common school purposes—every sixteenth section in each township having been so granted. The lands are leased mostly for ninety-nine years. The money thence arising is loaned annually, at no less than eight per more than ten per cent per annum interest. This interest is the amount applied to tuition, etc., annually from a township fund. There is also a county fund, arising from fines, forfeitures, licenses, etc., which is distributed in those townships that are destitute, or have but a small school fund.

Louisiana imposes a tax for school purposes of one mill on a dollar, and a poll tax of one dollar on each white inhabitant. There is also a school fund of $125,025. The State supports 704 schools, at about $4 90 per scholar. Yet there are more than 20,000 white children in the State who do not attend school at all.

According to the Report of the Superintendent of Public Education, the directors of schools in some districts do not know how to read or write. In signing the warrants of teachers in some of the districts, there were two-thirds of the directors who signed with their mark. These things are a reproach to the State. Shall the next generation of Creoles be left to that foreign ecclesiastical incubus which has kept them down in all their past history? Rather, will they not throw off that grinding oppression? And, by sustaining and perfecting the public schools, take that rank in the scale of intelligence which is the right of all Americans? The Papist leaven under which the past generations have grown up is being purged out. And, notwithstanding the utmost efforts of Papists and Archbishops, Louisiana is now spending annually $450,000 in aid of a Free School System.

Tennessee has a school fund of nearly a million and a half dollars.

Kentucky has a fund nearly as large as that of Tennessee, and expends $111,000 a year for school purposes; but out of the 215,195 children in the State, only 60,825 attend school.

Ohio spends somewhat more than $300,000 a year in maintaining her 9,916 schools. In one year—1852—Ohio built 171 school-houses. The State is in earnest on the subject of education.

Indiana holds property, in trust, for the education of her childen, which is valued at five millions of dollars. The income of this property, which consists chiefly of land, is to be devoted exclusively and forever to the support of free schools.

Illinois has a school fund of nearly a million of dollars, which State borrowed some years ago, at an interest of six per cent. The State can boast of 3,000 school houses and 76 school libraries. Male teachers receive an average of $17 64 a month; females $10 32, and the schools are kept open six months and twenty-three days in a year.

Missouri has a school fund of half a million; and, in addition to this, the Legislature has appropriated one-fourth of the revenue of the State for the support of the free schools, which swells the amount to be annually distributed, $140,000.

Iowa has made a spirited beginning in behalf of public education. The constitution provides that a Superintendent of Public Instruction shall be chosen by the people for three years, and that all lands granted by Congress to this State, all escheated estates, shall constitute a perpetual fund, the interest of which shall be applied to the support of common schools; and all monies received for exemption from military duty, and for fines imposed by the courts, shall be appropriated to support such schools, or for the establishment of school libraries.

Wisconsin has a school fund of $816,220, and expends already more than $120,000 a year for educational purposes. There are only two thousands schools in operation, which are provided with libraries, to the extent of 11,000 volumes. There are 66 school houses of brick, 74 of stone, 778 of logs and 812 framed, and all are valued at $261,086 32. The highest valuation of any school house is $5,550, and the lowest $150.

California has made splendid provision for the future. The constitution provides for the election of a Superintendent of Public Instruction, to hold office for three years. By the same instrument the proceeds of the public lands granted to the State for schools, the 500,000 acres granted to new States under the act of Congress, estates of persons dying without heirs, shall be a fund, the interest of which, and the rents of unsold lands, are to be inviolably appropriated to the support of common schools. The Legislature has established a Board of Education for the State, consisting of the Governor, the Superintendent of Public Instruction and the Surveyor General. Each town elects three persons as commissioners of schools for the town, and a constable as a common school marshal. Provision is also made for County Superintendents. The Legislature has devoted one-twentieth part of the tax upon real and personal property to the support of common schools. The public school system is already in operation, and more than 4000 children are reported to be under instruction. In this State only has Popery succeeded by a trick, upon the public treasury, thus drawing for her schools a proportion of the common fund. But this advantage gained by trick, at the heel of a legislative session, it is expected will be of short continuance.

The Texas Legislature has passed a common school law, and set apart two millions of dollars, the interest of which is to go to the support of schools in each county, in proportion to population. One-tenth of the public revenue!

Alabama is just now inaugurating her common school system. At two dollars a scholar, as the minimum, and annual fund of $280,000 would be required for it. But the system is so arranged as to require a smaller sum—only about $148,000, in addition to the $80,000 annually distributed from the Sixteenth Section Fund. With this amount, which is only a little over one-fifth of the present revenue of the State, and which could be applied without any increase of taxation, good free schools might be established in every township.

For the free instruction of the people, therefore, there are in the whole United States, in round numbers, 60,000 schools, which are supported at an annual expense of six millions of dollars. What a stake Popery is playing for—how vast the organization and powerful and all pervading this Republic. To suppress or corrupt it to her own purposes would be worth her while. And yet she must overthrow it or be overthrown by it.

How important that the Bible be a text-book in all these schools: that a Scripturnl morality be the basis of this vast educational superstructure!

In many of the States the plan is crude—in all it is reaching after a higher perfection. And perfection is a work of time and calls for the exercise of patience. A vast movement like this, proposing to bring the advantages of education to the door of every home, must necessarily experience a multitude of most serious difficulties. Its effective organization will be a gigantic task. Physical obstacles are to be overcome—prejudices are to be subdued—warm and generous feelings are to be enlisted—and everywhere the spirit of education is to be awakened among these classes, insensible, in a great degree, to its claims, before the system can take root in our soil. A great work is to be done in forming such a general sentiment as will rally the requisite strength and sympathy around it.—And hence, the conditions of this work ought to be understood and appreciated. No unreasonable expectations should be indulged. It is not a thing of magic. The waving of a wand will not cover the Union with a beautiful net-work of public schools. It is a matter of enthusiastic toil, a prodigious enterprise, and offers the States of the Confederacy a glorious field of rivalry. Hasty hopes are to restrained—party meddling to be rebuked.

These States which have been most successful in this beneficial undertaking, have consumed scores of years in arduous, persevering exertion. Massachusetts alone has taken over a century to perfect her Common School System. Ohio, with her 10,000 school districts and 838,000 youths enjoying the blessings of free instruction, has bestowed the labor of one generation on the consummation of this mighty object.

TEMPERANCE BILL IN MISSISSIPPI.

People are beginning to believe that one of the rights and duties of Government is to protect its citizens, and that no man's rights are invaded thereby—not even that hitherto sacredly guarded murderer, the dram-seller.

We publish, as a matter of general interest, a bill which has passed both branches of the Mississippi Legislature, to suppress the sale of spiritous liquors. It passed the Senate on the 14th ult., after having been adopted in the House.

We presume the Governor signed it, and that it is now a law. It has some peculiar excellencies and is such as Temperance men asked for. Hereafter the existence of a dram-shop will not be a matter of sufferance but petition. If any petition can be got up, anywhere, we suggest that it be preserved and the list read at the first coroner's inquest over a drunkard's corpse:

A BILL, to be entitled an act to regulate the granting of License to retail vinous and spiritous liquors.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, That it shall not be lawful for the Board of Police of any county, or the corporate authorities of any city or town, in this State, to grant license to retail vinous or spiritous liquors to any person or persons applying for the same, unless the person or persons applying for the same shall first produce a petition for the issuance of such a license, signed by a majority of the legal voters resident in the Police district where such liquors are to be sold; and if such liquors are to be sold within the limits of an incorporated town, then by a majority of the legal voters resident therein.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That the said Boards of Police, before issuing any such license, shall require and take bond from the applicant with two or more sureties, to be approved by said Board, payable to the President thereof, and his successors in office, in the penalty of five hundred dollars; conditioned that the person to whom such license shall be granted, shall keep a quiet, peaceable, orderly house for retailing spiritous liquors in said district, city or town, (as the case may be,) and shall not permit or allow gaming to be carried on in such house, or on the premises thereunto belonging, and shall not retail or otherwise dispose of spiritous liquors to slaves or Indians; and whenever at any time such bond shall become forfeited, the same shall be put in suit and prosecuted, and the amount recovered shall enure to the benefit of the common school fund of the county; and upon a violation of the conditions of said bond, the said Board of Police shall have full power, at all times, to revoke and annul such license so granted, if said Board shall be of opinion, after causing the person having any such license to appear before said Board, and due investigation had thereon, that the conditions have in anywise been forfeited; and upon such license being so revoked, the amount of money for the remainder of the time said license has to run out from such revocation at the rate paid for said license when they were issued, shall be returned to the person or persons whose license issued has been so revoked. And Provided, The person whose license shall be so revoked shall have the right, upon giving bond and security, of appealing from the decision of said Board of Police, so revoking the same, to the Circuit Court of the proper county.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, That if any person shall violate the provisions of this act, by retailing vinous or spiritous liquors without license, granted according to the provisions of the same, he, she or they, upon conviction thereof, shall be liable to all the pains, penalties and forfeitures now prescribed by law for retailing without license.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, That druggists, apothecaries and physicians shall only sell vinous and spiritous liquors for medicinal, sacramental and culinary purposes, in less quantities than a gallon; that they shall in no case vend the same to any person whatever, unless the person offering to purchase, shall give satisfactory evidence that such liquor is for medicinal, sacramental or culinary purposes alone, and if said druggist, or apothecary shall permit the drinking of said liquors in his store or upon his premises, he shall, upon conviction thereof, be liable to all the pains and penalties of this law; and all violations by any person whatsoever, of the plain intent or meaning of this act or the act hereby revised, by any evasion, subterfuge or chicanery of any sort, shall be held and deemed as serious an offence against this, and the act hereby revived, as a violation of the letter thereof, and be equally punishable under the provisions of the same.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, That this act shall apply with full force and effect to all steamboats, flatboats, store-boats and other water crafts or itinerant vendors of spiritous liquors, when within the limits of any district in which this act is binding: Provided, That this section shall not be applicable to transient steamboats passing or temporarily stopping at any point in this State.

SEC. 6. Be it further enacted, That any person or persons who may own or have interest in any vinous or spiritous liquors, which may be sold contrary to law, such person or persons so owning or having an interest as aforesaid, shall be liable to all the pains and penalties of this act.

SEC. 7. Be it further enacted, That such special enactments upon this subject as now stand upon the statute books of this State, are exempted from the operation of this act, and are hereby declared to be in full force and effect, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 8. Be it further enacted, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to divert the money received for licenses and fines arising upon a violation of this act, from being applied as is now prescribed by law.

SEC. 9. Be it further enacted, That all petitions for licenses shall lay over one month for consideration and for the reception of counter-petitions, and when any name shall be found on both petitions, one praying for a license and one against the granting of said license, the name thus found on both petitions shall be counted in the negative, and the Board of Police or Incorporation granting said license, shall govern themselves accordingly.

SEC. 10. Be it further enacted, That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

PARIS CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

PARIS, Feb. 6, 1854.

I have just received encouraging news from the different circuits of the French Methodist Conference. Now opening have presented themselves in Rouen, Boulogne, St. Malo and numerous villages of the South of France. Our missionary receipts have generally been larger. In some localities the circuit income has nearly been doubled. But the best of all is that God has been and still is with us, converting sinners and sanctifying believers. In one place, where preaching had been unsuccessful for more than a twelvemonth, nine persons have at length been converted, and formed the nucleus of a small church. In my birth-place, a small village in the South, the same number of souls found peace a fortnight ago, whilst many Christians are earnestly seeking after holiness. In all circuits there is an increase of members.

A very interesting door has been opened lately to Methodism in the island of Corsica, where Popery and banditism have long reigned unrestrained. In consequence of a petition signed by about forty persons in Bastia, one of the chief towns of the island, a young Corsican, who had been the principal instrument of the religious movement, has been taken up by our Conference as a catechist, and after a few ministerial visits from Dr. Cook, our President, and the Rev'ds. M. Gallienne and J. L. Rostan, the chairman of our districts, pastor Frejet has been sent there. The required authorization from the Prefect to hold religious meetings was granted some weeks ago, but in consequence of the stir made by the clergy, it has lately been withdrawn. It seems indeed that the Popish clergy has been altogether enraged at the idea of Protestantism entering a place of which they have so long been the sole masters, and no means have been left untried to turn us out. Solemn novennas to the patron saint of the island, processions and masses without number, a visit paid by the Bishop to the Pope, in order to have his advice on such an emergency, rabid articles in the political papers against Luther, Calvin, (they know nothing of Wesley); the Protestant ministers declared to be heretics, agents of trouble and discord, sent by the Bible Societies to invade the Catholic States; caricatures in which the Protestant minister, called a minister of the devil, is seen dropping into hell, where serpents, demons, horrible monsters, and I know not what else, are awaiting his arrival with such anxiety that the poor fellow cannot but make a most pitiful figure; such are some of the miserable means by which the priests strive to frighten us away, and to excite against us the civil authorities, the people and the rabble. As to the authorities, they have in part succeeded, since the authorization to preach has been withdrawn under pretence that we are socinists (one of our tracts being entitled "A short speech on Socialism," and being directed against it.) The rabble have, as yet, thank God, let us alone. As to the people, that is the mass of the inhabitants, they decidedly are favorable to us, because they hate the priests, who have done them no good, and have kept them in ignorance. This was strikingly exemplified in the words of a man who was sent by the priests as a spy to one of our meetings, and was heard the next morning to exclaim in a shop, "Ah, what ruffians these priests are! what lies they have told us concerning these Protestants! Now that I have heard them, I will always go and hear them!" Some of the inhabitants have shown their pleasure at our coming in a way which may seem new to you, as it does to many Frenchmen from the Northern Departments. They have given serenades to the minister, according to the Italian fashion; and he says that the mingling of voices and instruments, awaking him now and then in the dead of night, had a most pleasing effect on him.

In France, scarcely a week passes now without new cases of religious persecutions coming to light. Since I sent my last letter, the Court de Cassation, or Court of Appeals, the highest in this country, has decided that the decree of the 25th March, 1852, against clubs and meetings of all kinds, equally applies to religious services, so that no meeting for religious purposes can be held henceforth without leave of the Prefect, and that permission can be withdrawn at pleasure. In consequence of this decision, meetings have already been forbidden in Villefavard and Chatau-Ponsac, where they had been peaceably been held for the last ten years! In the first of these localities, there is not a single Papist; and yet the Rector of the Academy will not allow a Protestant school to be opened, and has actually sent a Romanist to hold the Parish school. This teacher, however, has been unable to begin his school, as he cannot find any lodgings in the place.

In another Department, near Montauban, a pastor has been ordered to appear before the authorities, because he had sold a few almanacks and given Bibles and Testaments to his flock, without having a bookseller's license. According to the theory now put forth for the first time, a man can neither sell nor give books to his intimate friends, unless he have first taken an oath of allegiance to the Emperor, obtained from the Mayor a certificate of good morals(!) and received a license from the Prefect!

Until lately the Methodists had been exempted from these persecutions, which had fallen on the Baptists, the Protestant Reformed and the Free Churches. But we are now at last assimilated to our Christian brethren. At Alais, the second town in the Department of the Gard, south of France, the Rev'd. C. Gilly, who came out last year only as a Methodist minister, has been condemned, a fortnight ago, to fifty francs ($10) for having held meetings, professedly religious, without the previous consent of the Prefect. You may enquire, perhaps, what will our Church do, in such a case. Why, simply pay the fine and begin again.

Not so, however, our English brethren. The Committee of Council of the Evangelical Alliance, British organization, have sent over to Paris, to be submitted to the approval of the ministère in the capital a draft of resolutions, one of which is as follows:

"Resolved, That the affectionate assurance of the cordial feelings of this committee be communicated to those brethren in France who have recently met to consider the line of their duty under the persecutions excited against them by the party of the priests. That there seems reason to apprehend, unless the Government of the Emperor should make a speedy and decided stand against the unjust influence of the Vaticans, that evil days are in store for the friends of the Bible in France. That our prayers should therefore be offered for the Emperor that our co-religionists may lead 'quiet and peaceable lives' under the shadow of his authority—and for the ministers of the gospel that their faith and courage not fail them in the hour of trial, and that, if called to undergo incarceration for the cause of Christ, they may be able to submit to it with joy that they are counted worthy to suffer for his sake."

This I take to be merely the beginning of a series of protests, petitions and speeches, destined to wake up the friends of religious liberty in England, and reach the Emperor of this country.

The Rationalist party in the Reformed Church is making great efforts to organize under the pompous title of "Christian Universal Alliance," a counter society to our beloved Evangelical Alliance, which will admit not only Protestants, but also Papists and Greeks, the only basis of the association being the love of God, of men and of Jesus Christ. Three committees have already been named, one for alms-giving to the poor, one for the patronage of children unable to pay for their schooling, and one for the propagating of the principles of the alliance. Time will show what they can do. The Espérance, organ of the Evangelical party, published last Thursday a most masterly answer to their allegations.

The new year has seen the appearance of two new monthlies amongst our religious organs. One is the Christian Review, which promises to be well written and well sustained. Amongst the contributors will be the Revs. Adolphe Monod, De Pressense and others of our best men. Terms $3 per annum. The other periodical is an humble sheet entitled "The friend of the poor and the afflicted," and destined to make known our benevolent societies and institutions.

Great efforts are being made here for the second time to obtain from shop-keepers the shutting of shops and stores on the Sabbath day. An English merchant has come over for the purpose, and I hope in my next to be able to report progress.

Eight churches were opened in France in the course of last year. Of these one, at Alençon, was shut by authorities, two months after the dedication. The priests were afraid, it seems, of its success.

The Methodist Book-room has at last received the necessary license, and was formally opened at No. 8, Rue de Parme, on January 23d. May it do much to spread Evangelical truth all over the land. J. P. C.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

JEWISH FESTIVALS.

FEAST OF LIGHTS.

On the twenty-fifth day of the ninth month, Kislev, begins the "Feast of Lights," or Chanuckah, "consecration," as it is termed by the Jews. This as well as the feast of Esther, described below, are only semi-festivals, and not attended with any particular solemnity. The festival which lasts eight days is said to have originated in consequence of a miracle which happened during a very rigorous siege in the time of the second temple, when the holy oil for the perpetual light was expended, and miraculously renewed until the raising of the siege. To commemorate this miracle, the Jews light wax tapers, one on the first evening, two on the second, and so on, adding one every evening to the eighth day. Every male Israelite above the age of infancy lights these candles about twilight; some prayers and hymns, preceding and following the ceremony. The Sabbath, included in this eight-day festival, is regarded as a very propitious occasion, and generally devoted to merry-making. Some of the hymns, (which, however, partake more of the character of Schiller's Punschlieder—drinking song) sung on this day, bid every true son of Abraham to go and sell houses and lands, and lay in the wherewithal to have a jovial time of it on this Sabbath. If any Jewish readers should feel disposed to question this, you will please ask whether they have never heard or even sung, "Hai, hai, bethor, timcor, tachor" etc.* The history of the origin of the festival may be found in extenso, by consulting that veracious historiographer, Flavius Josephus.

The tenth day of the tenth month, Tebeth, is celebrated as a fast day, and recognized in Zachariah viii. 19. The next month Shvat, is undistinguished by any religious ceremony; and thus we are brought to the finale of the ecclesiastical year; for the last of the festivals is Purim, or the

FEAST OF ESTHER,

which is observed on the fourteenth day of the twelft month, Adar, and in leap-years of thirteen months, it takes place on the same day of the thirteenth, Veadar. The origin of this feast is as fully detailed in the Book of Esther, that our business is only with the ceremonies and customs to which it has given rise. The fast on the eve of the festival, is called Taanith Ester—fast of Esther—also explained in the Bible. Chambers gives the following account of it: "On the eve of the thirteenth, as well as on the morning of the fourteenth, the whole congregation meet in the synagogue, in order to hear the solemn chanting of the book of Esther. Purim is the festival when good cheer is expecially enjoined. At the evening meal, the grave and generally very abstemious rabbi indulges an additional glass of wine. This license he takes at the express recommendation of the Talmud, which relates strange tales of pious men, who, in consequence of their indulgence in the treacherous liquor, made odd blunders in their encomiums on Mordecai. Among the young folks frolic and fun reign paramount. They disguise themselves in a grotesque manner, (a la Carnival) and thus pay visits to their friends, reciting gay verses and occasionally performing parts of the book of Esther, dramatized for the purpose; while at the same time, faithful to the customs of their ancestors, presents are interchanged by friends and acquaintances (Esther ix. 22)—This opportunity is also taken by many charitable persons to assist the necessitous, by affording them relief in a most delicate manner, under the appearance of a Purim present. Nor are the schoolmasters and other scantily-salaried congregational officers forgotten on this occasion."

And now, Mr. Editor, I have done, and beg you most kindly to receive my thanks for your Christian forbearance, in allowing my unworthy articles so much space in you columns. Circumstanced as I am, I have not been able to make these sketches as perfect as I should have wished, and would have done, had I had access to a good library of oriental literature; but my object, I believe, is accomplished: for on setting out I remarked that my aim was to impart to your readers some information useful, instructive, and entertaining, relating to the most ancient people now on the face of the globe; and this, I trust, your readers will allow I have performed.

In taking leave of my readers I cannot help regretting the necessity that now compels me to sever a connection that has become a very pleasant one, to me at least, though I dare say that my attachment may not have been reciprocated. To those who may wish to pursue their inquiry into this interesting subject still further, I would advise to procure "The Old Paths" of Dr. A. McCaul; "Modern Judaism," by Allen; another work of the same nature by Moses Margoliouth. The scholar would be richly compensated in reading Wagenseil's "Tela Ignea Satanæ," as well as the various Hebrew liturgies, translation of the Mishnah, etc. To the German scholar, a vast mine is opened in this department of theological literature, and if he can lay hold of Eisenmenger's "Entdecktes Judenthum," he will find enough to occupy him half a life-time. This latter work, however, must be read with a great deal of allowance for the prejudices and animosities of mediæval Jew-haters. There is no name, I believe, more odious to the modern Jewish theologian than this same Eisenmenger: "the lying Basnage," (as they call that able historian,) ranks next Milman's History of the Jews, which entre nous, smacks very strongly of Rationalism, is very popular with them. But the best post-biblical history of the Jews and of their literature, which combines great erudition with a very pleasing style and impregnable veracity, is that of Jost, a German Jewish Doctor. The Harpers have for several years been preparing a translation of this work; but I fear that the sheets shared the same fate with the rest of their establishment.

If I receive sufficient encouragement, I design publishing these sketches, in book form; adding of course numerous matters which could not well be discussed in the narrow limits of a newspaper article. And now vale!

Columbia, S. C. H. BEAR.

*Dr. Stein, the present chief rabbi of Frankfort-on-the-Maine, thus renders the first stanza of the above hymn:

"Ei laufet,
Verkaufet,
Die Güter,
Ihr Brüder,
Zu mehren
Die Ehren
Des Weihnachten Sabbathe."

Which in a liberal prose translation may be rendered thus: "Brethren, hasten to sell house and lands to increase the honors of this festive day."

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

"THE TRUE BASIS."

MR. EDITOR: In your paper of February 18th, is an article under the above head—in which you seem to commend the views of Dr. Lee, of the Richmond Advocate—especially "as to the proceeds of the Book Concern." Permit me, courteously, but frankly, to state my objections to some of the positions. There seems to be (so I think) a want of clear distinction and proper discrimination. "Book-selling" merely "for the support of the ministry," or "raising money for the support of the ministry," abstractly considered, and the "proceeds of the Book Concern," or a fund for the relief of "superannated preachers, their widows and orphans," are very different things. The Book Concern, or its "proceeds" was not originally designed or expected to "support the ministry" in general, or to make the ministry independent of the Church—or to relieve the Church from the duty of supporting those who ministered in spiritual things. According to the annual minutes of Conferences, there were as early as 1786, two descriptions of funds; one was a "yearly collection," applied to "making up the deficiencies of the preachers," and the other was the preachers' fund for the superannuated preachers, and the widows and orphans of preachers. These two kinds of funds were distinctly marked in the minutes until 1789, when "the yearly collections" were discontinued. In 1791, the contributions for the fund "for the superannuated preachers," &c., was yearly applied to necessitous cases and "the balance deposited in the book fund." The contribution to "the fund for superannuated preachers," &c., exceeded the sums appropriated for several years. In the year 1795, when I was admitted into full connection, each preacher in full connection was required (out of his pittance of quarterage) to pay $2 annually to increase "the fund for superannuated preachers, widows and orphans;" this was continued for several years, and, whatever there was of this fund, I believe, was merged into the book fund or Book Concern, the "produce" or profits of which were to be appropriated for the same charitable purpose—for it was viewed as a pure and noble charity. And the sixth restrictive article furnishes clear evidence that this was the view taken of the matter by the General Conference of 1808.

Now, I suppose that Mr. Asbury and the venerable men who composed the General Conference of 1808, were as competent to judge of "the spirit and teachings of the New Testament," or the point "beyond which the church has no power to operate," as any man now living. Two important purposes were contemplated in the creation of the "book fund" and carrying into successful operation the Book Concern.

First, the spread of religious knowledge—and secondly, that of relieving the sufferings of needy "superannuated preachers and widows and orphans of preachers."

Sixty years ago, the book fund was small when John Dickens was publishing small works in Philadelphia—works which, though small, were vitally important in the work of "spreading Scripture holiness," and fulfilling the mission of itinerant Methodism. Sundry superannuated preachers were employed by Bishop Asbury as "traveling book stewards," to sell and circulate those books, which were well calculated to spread religious knowledge, and inspire a spirit of deep and ardent devotion. The proceeds or profits of this Book Concern was indeed designed to support or to meet the wants of worn-out preachers, &c. This was surely better than "steamboating to support the ministry." But why give an "uncertain sound!" Why talk about "a Book Concern to meet all the demands of the ministry, and thus relieve the people of their support!" Of making "the one independent of the other," and producing "one of the sorest curses with which a Christian people could be visited"! Why raise "a man of straw" and fight it? Such a Book Concern or such a "moneyed institution" never [illegible] —never was intended, and is not likely [illegible] exist, especially while the General Conference keeps within its chartered limits.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Men in the vigor of life and occupying favorable positions, may write and talk fluently about "voluntary contributions," and "to no other source has the ministry a right to look for this support." This doctrine will apply very well to an effective ministry, but to apply it indiscriminately to all classes of ministers, is injudicious. "The laborer is worthy of his hire;" but what becomes of the superannuated minister when he is worn-out in the service, unable to labor? "Facts are stubborn things;" many a hapless worn-out preacher has languished in poverty—treated not unlike the old horse, turned out upon the common, to graze or die! I know what I say. In the course of sixty years I have had the mortification to witness many such cases. And what becomes of the "widows and orphans" of those "who have died in the work"! Alas, for their condition, if robbed of this little source of comfort! To meet such necessitous cases, as well as to spread Scripture holiness, was the primary design of the Book Concern and chartered funds; the "produce" of which was esteemed sacred for special purposes, by the fathers of Methodism, of which the bound volume of Minutes and the sixth restrictive article affords plenary evidence.

It may be deemed (by some) presuming in me to come in contact or conflict with editors and popular men, but integrity of purpose, a knowledge of facts, and authentic records (I think) sustain me. L. GARRETT.

Mississippi, Feb. 26, 1854.

P. S. That there has been error in erecting costly buildings and other expenditures, need not be doubted, and that this operated against "cheapening the price of books," and lessened the "produce," is very probable. The Book Concern should be "general" as to usefulness, like the general superintendency—local interests and local convenience aside—and in both, economy should be consulted.

L. G.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, MARCH 11, 1854.

☞ We are requested to remind the brethren of the Conferences, that as the time for the departure of their delegates is drawing nigh, they should bestir themselves in lifting the collection necessary to defray the traveling expenses.

ANNUAL REPORT.—The Secretary, Dr. Durbin, has forwarded us the 35th Annual Report of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church. It is a well filled document—luminously arranged, and presents the modus operandi of the Society in gathering and disbursing funds, extending its operations and selecting its instruments, so as to challenge the confidence of the Church and world in its management and increase public liberality.

JEWISH FESTIVALS.—The last of this instructive, unique and well written series of articles with which the readers of the Advocate have for a year been entertained, is this week concluded. They are such as only an intelligent Christian Israelite could furnish, and such the author is. "Josephus" is Mr. H. Bear, who began writing during a temporary residence in Louisiana, and finishes in South Carolina. Who does not rejoice as he contemplates this grievous yoke of ceremonies which the fathers were unable to bear, at the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free!

EXTRAVAGANCE.—Speak not of the tax Church members pay for the support of Christian institutions. "It is a constant drain on my pocket"! Indeed, friend. And you would be in a sad case but for a "constant drain" on God's goodness. Then how noble and permanent the good accomplished! The children of this world pay dearer for their ephemeral joys. Last week a Bachelor's ball came off at Odd Fellows' Hall, that cost $15,000. The music bill was $2500. Next morning what was there in the shape of value received? No Church, no almshouse, no charitable endowment stood forth, a monument and reward of their liberality. But instead, were crude surfeits, dull pains and lethargies, aching heads and empty hearts.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK.—We received the March number of this highly-prized monthly a few days in advance of the time. It is ornate and beautiful, beyond its predecessors in the richness, number and splendor of the engravings.

PERSONAL.—The Lake Providence Herald thinks that Hon. Thomas H. Benton's work, entitled "Thirty Years' View, or, a history of the workings of the American Government for Thirty Years," now in course of publication, might be safely recommended to our schools as a text-book, to familiarise children with the use of the personal pronoun "I."

GEORGIA.—According to the census of 1850, the population was 906,185. Churches: There were 879 Baptist, 5 Christian, 1 Congregational, 20 Episcopal, 6 Free, 2 Friends, 8 Lutheran, 795 Methodist, 1 Moravian, 97 Presbyterian, 8 Roman Catholic, 30 Union, 3 Universalist and 7 of Minor Sects, which [illegible] church property worth $1,209,359, and [illegible] of accommodation 627,197 persons.

GOD'S COVENANT PEOPLE.

Rev. S. Bonhomme, Missionary of the "American Society for the Melioration of Jews," is now in this city preaching in the churches. We had the pleasure and profit of hearing him last Sabbath, in the Presbyterian church: again on Tuesday night: and on Thursday night in the Methodist church. He has appointments before him for some time, and we doubt not his visit will do good to God's ancient covenant people and quicken the interest of Christians in their spiritual welfare. Mr. B. is a converted Jew; his sermons are instructive and earnest and evangelical; his labors onerous and self-sacrificing, and his heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is that they may be saved. His faith is not weak. And one cannot hear him without having something of the same spirit of faith kindled in his own bosom.

We like to hear an Israelite on the prophecies—they seem to be in their element there. Mr. B.'s Sunday morning sermon was on Hosea iii. 4-5. His description of the people "dispersed" was graphic—their anomalous condition and preservation—no bond or protection of Government for nineteen centuries "without a king;" no true worship of God—"without a sacrifice;" and yet not fallen into idolatry—"without an image." And now the fulfilled prophecies and signs of the times point to their gathering in their own covenant land and conversion to Christianity, preceding the millenium. Thus his plan.

It may not be unedifying to our readers to have laid before them some facts touching the present condition of the Jews as regards Christianity and the means in use for their conversion.

There are fifteen millions of Jews in the world—twice the number that were in the palmy days of David and Solomon. The present are halcyon days to them—the securest and quietest they have known since the overthrow of their kingdom. The history of their persecutions is long and startling. Seven times have they been banished England—seven times, France. Ferdinand and Isabella made victims of 800,000 of them. Now a Jew is one of the ministry of Spain. Napoleon did much for them. In England the public sentiment is in favor of removing their last disability. And in the United States the children of Abraham have for the first time found themselves at rest. For this the Jews love the United States and its Constitution above all others, and make our most devoted citizens. Here, without let or hindrance they advance to the places they are able to win, in finance, literature or politics. There are in the United States 150,000.

In 1809, the first systematic efforts were begun for their conversion to Christianity; though no generation since the Christian era has been without individual converts, by ordinary means. It was called the London Jews' Society, under the auspices of the Church of England. Now this Society numbers 39 stations and about 100 missionary preachers—all converted Jews. In Jerusalem it has one congregation: in London another—Palestine Place, the foundation of which was laid by Duke of Kent, in 1816. Six or seven hundred converted Jews have been brought in here. Services are held in three languages—Hebrew, German and English. The Ritual is translated into Hebrew: and 100 Jewish children are constantly under Christian instruction, in a school attached.

A third Jewish Christian Church and congregation is in Posen, Poland, and the fourth in Constantinople. The last under the care of the Free Church of Scotland. The A. B. F. M. have had two missionaries at work for several years in Constantinople, who report that thousands of Jews believe and would profess Christianity, but for rabbinical tyranny.

There are now 20 distinct missionary organizations operating in various parts of the world—England, France, Germany, etc., for Christianizing God's covenant people. These employ 300 missionaries, and the results are 15,000 converted Jews, now in their fellowship. Many converts attach themselves to the evangelical churches and ministry—these are not included. In America twenty-five converted Jews are in the ministry. In England fifty have been ordained.

From an abstract of the late Annual Report, we learn that the American Society was established in 1820; but operations did not begin on the present plan, for want of missionaries, till 1842. There are now eight missionaries, three colporteurs and four students for the ministry attached to this Society. It publishes an interesting monthly in New York, called "The Jewish Chronicle," at one dollar a year, which is devoted exclusively to intelligence of its proceedings and objects. We advise those who would keep posted up on a matter of fast growing interest, to procure it. The entire expenses of the Society last year—agents, missionaries, printing—all, was $13,289 03. Its Board is made up as its patrons, by the various evangelical churches.

This shows that something can be done in this field—yea, much: and much remains for doing. The subject has an intrinsic interest—a sacred one. The antiquities of our religion are wrapped up in this people's history—the patriarchs, prophets, apostles, were Jews, and of them, according to the flesh, Christ came. And they must be converted, before the fullness of the Gentiles comes in.

Mr. Bonhomme represents the interest felt in his mission among the Jews as greater in the last three months than any previous period these ten years. They receive him readily in their houses and counting-rooms, and come out to hear his sermons, as he proves from the Scriptures that Jesus is the Christ. He represents their prejudice against the Nazarene as giving way, everywhere. They read his tracts.

That problem which statesmen cannot solve—"the Eastern Question"—Mr. B. is assured finds its solution in prophecy. The Turks must be driven out from the holy places to make way for the return of God's covenant people, whence they have been scattered abroad. They shall look on Him whom they have pierced and mourn for Him. The Tabernacle of David, which is fallen down, is to be built again, and "The light that shines on Zion's hill Illuminate the world."

Mr. B. thinks an eventful dispensation approaches—is even at the door. The Christian Church must be prepared to bear her part in ushering it in. May she have wisdom to read aright the signs of the times.

COURSE OF LECTURES.

Rev. S. Bonhomme, Missionary for the American Society for promoting Christianity among the Jews, will deliver a course of lectures in this city on the following subjects. The course will begin next week: of times and places due notice will be given in the daily papers. Admittance free:

I. Calling of the Jews—their national covenant and preservation.

II. The destruction of the political power of Turkey.

III. The national restoration of the Jews to Palestine and the introduction of the glory of the latter day.

IV. The Invasion of the Northern (or Russian) power and their destruction in the land of the Jews—The battle of Gog and Magog.

V. The destiny of the Jews as a Nation.

VI. The destiny of the United States—as a subject of Scripture prophecy.

VII. The rise, progress, decline and downfall of Romanism—according to prophecy.

The Missionary will preach on Sunday next, 11 A. M., at Felicity street (Methodist) Church, and at 7 1-2 P. M., at Moreau st. (Methodist) Church. Collections will be made after sermons, for support of the mission. The public are invited—seats free. Israelites are especially invited. The intrinsic interest of these themes and the style of their discussion justify the expectation of large and attentive audiences and liberal support.

AN INCIDENT.

On a Sabbath day in last August, when the epidemic was at its worst, we were on the way to a preaching appointment in the lower part of the city, and our attention was arrested by an emigrant ship just brought to anchor at one of the wharves. The steamtug had not yet moved off and the ropes were being made fast: an eager but not large crowd were ashore and some climbed up the ship's sides to welcome their friends and families, just arrived from "Faderland." The numerous throng of emigrants were flush with hope and joyous excitement. The ship had made a short trip from Bremen. Their German complexions glowed under the midsummer warmth: and clad in thick coats and short waisted frocks, they were soon dispersed. We could but pity them. They were as sheep led to the slaughter. A bystander remarked upon their unconscious rashness—"Might as well have their throats cut."

How they sunk under fever, thirst and want and soon rested in the Potters' Field, the Sexton's records may unfold. But they did not all die. One, at least, lived. A German woman entered our gate the other day with a basket of eggs on one arm and of onions on the other. Selling these around was her living. There was something of peculiar desolation about her, thus buffetting the world alone, with her two baskets of merchandise. Women soon find out each others troubles. It turned out she was one of the Wirtemberg passengers—this August day arrival. With her tale of woe the tears started;—"Ah, mine husband and mine six children—all dead—wid fever in two weeks together. Ah, mine Got—what me git well for, I cry mine eyes off. O, what come to this 'Merica for?"

ARCHIEPISCOPAL THEATRICALS.

The Paris correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser, in his last letter writes as follows:

"The peoples' Theatre in the new rue de Rivoli, will probably be enacted, and who do you suppose asks for the privilage of its management? The Archbishop of Paris. His intention is to control, by the interm dium of a delegate, of course, the plays received and performed. The government has always taken the ground that the theatres are a powerful engine of public instruction, and so attached them to the Ministry of the Interior. The clergy seem now to acknowledge their influence, and desire to derive from them the good fruits they may be enabled to bear. The object is to purify dramatic literature, elevate the stage, and through it, to act directly and powerfully upon the education of the masses."

Now for winking statues and weeping Madonnas. The actors, being trained, will not be so clumsy as some priestly hands have been in bringing these things upon the stage.

REVIVAL.—We have been visited at the West Ward, Mobile, with a gracious revival of religion. It has been in progress about two weeks, and its results as far as they are visible to human eyes, are truly cheering. About thirty-five have embraced religion, and of these, twenty-seven have joined the church. My colleagues of the other churches in the city and visiting brethren, together with our P. E., Bro. Garrett, labored as they had opportunity. Taken altogether, it was an extraordinary work, such as made all hearts [illegible] present. We do not expect the good work to stop soon or be confined to this charge. We want this to be the revival year for Mobile, and as is our faith so will it be.

WM. M. LOVELADY.

Mobile, March 6, 1854.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

IMPERTINENCE REBUKED.

[A friend from North-western Louisiana sends us the following communication, adding in a note that "something like the above is necessary for our defence." Perhaps he and his neighbors are alarmed for their social status, on account of the report that has gone out through so respectable and widely circulated a journal as the "Home and Foreign Record." A missionary deputation may be even now on foot at Princeton, of ardent young theologues, to redeem them from heathenism. Perhaps some one of the many AGENTS that spring up in that region for raising funds to "send the gospel to the destitute," has coined money already on the doleful account! Having lately visited that region and found it one of the best supplied in our country with wealth, intelligence, churches, preachers and gospel privilege, we should undertake to set the correspondent of the Record right—or rather his readers, did not our correspondent do the business. By the way, we suggest to our friends who feel aggrieved, that this was a "young one." Our Presbyterian brethren (toward whom we like to cultivate the best relations) should have learned by this time that their cause and our common Christianity gains nothing by sending forth these conceited talkers and scribblers, to enter into other men's labors and depreciate them. Their published statements bear the inherent evidence of error—to use no harsher word. Yet they circulate them. Do they expect to foster a healthy missionary spirit on such chaff? This hopeful young divine, discoursing so complacently of "the prattle" of those he chooses to designate "uneducated men," finds churches ready to his hand, large and attentive congregations, etc. Who achieved these results, built the houses and reduced the community to order? Where have been the "educated men," represented by him? The people had never seen but one of his sort before.] ED. N. O. C. AD.

MR. EDITOR: I accidentally laid my hand on an odd newspaper to-day, "The Home and Foreign Record," published in Philadelphia. My attention was arrested by a communication purporting to come from a "Missionary in Louisiana," and headed "Great destitution—the right spirit manifested," and signed J. E. D. I am at no loss as to the author of the article in question. He is a new recruit from the ministerial manufactory at Princeton.

He says, "I have been laboring in North-western Louisiana since the 1st of July, the place designated in my mission. When I arrived here my intention was to remain quiet through the summer months, but I soon found this was impossible so great was the destitution in our Church, and the people were so anxious for preaching. I have ridden all over Claiborne, Bosier, Caddo, DeSoto and Bienville. In each of these parishes I find Presbyterians who have long been without the gospel!" If he had said they had long been without Presbyterian preaching, this might be true as far as I know, but to say that they had been without the gospel, looks to us, at least, as though he would be understood to say that the gospel is only preached by Presbyterian preachers. There are a good many Baptist and Methodist preachers traveling and located in the Parishes above mentioned, who statedly on Sabbath days preach to large and respectable audiences, and our Presbyterian brethren may have the privilage (and many of them do) of hearing the gospel preached. But this declaration is in character.

I can assure my quondam brother that I have often seen Presbyterians here and in other places, enjoy themselves finely in their associations with Baptists and Methodists. I have seen their eyes suffused with tears and their countenances lit up with expressions of joy and peace and holy consolation, and I have heard them shout aloud in the great congregation the praises of God for his goodness to the children of men. Was it the gospel that affected them so, or was it something else?

Speaking of Mansfield he says: "I spent five days there preaching to a large and attentive audience. The Spirit of the Lord was with us. I cannot describe my feelings to you at the close of our meeting there. The people of Mansfield had never seen but one other Presbyterian preacher!" I wonder where they came from, for I have seen a good many who were called Presbyterian preachers, but may be they were not. "Some of the members of our little band wept bitterly when I left them."

It was our privilege to hear our brother once or twice during his brief sojourn among us, and I suppose I ought to be very thankful for it, but candidly I saw nothing in the young man or his ministrations that was remarkable, unless, perhaps, he looked a little act. As to the audience being well behaved, etc., that is not uncommon for the citizens of Mansfield. No matter who preaches, they esteem it their duty to keep quiet and to listen to what the preacher says. But "some of our little band wept bitterly when I left them." As a matter of course. Who could refrain from tears at such a time? They thought, no doubt, that it would be a long time before they would be so highly favored again!

Again he says: The continual cry is, 'let us have educated men to preach to us. We are worn out with this continued prattle of uneducated men, who always sing the same song.'"

Mr. Editor, I am no apologist for ignorance, and especially in the ministry, but as it is evident a thrust is here made at the Baptist and Methodist preachers, I have thought this charge of our young friend deserved a passing notice. He has been to college, has learned to translate a little easy Greek and Latin, and forsooth, looks upon himself, as a

our young friend will become sober, as Pope says

And suppose we admit the charge. What then? Why, as a matter of course, a collegiate education being so necessary to the proper preaching of the gospel, and the people so worn-out with prating circuit riders, Presbyterian preachers ought to be scattered throughout the length and breadth of the land as "thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks in Vallembrosa." Capacious churches in every village, town and neighborhood, and thousands upon thousands of hasty feet would on Sabbath days press to the sanctuary to learn instruction from those educated oracles: and Baptist and Methodist preachers would be out of repute and their chapels deserted. Is this so? It ought to be, if "the people are so worn-out," &c. But is it so, I ask? Where? Not in "North-western Louisiana"—this "Missionary ground," and our young friend the first except one to enter the field! Light is coming in upon us from the East, and we may look soon for better times!

W. W. B.

Macsfield, La., Feb. 21, 1854.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

THE LATE WM. GODFREY.

BRO. MCTYEIRE: I presume you have before this time received a suitable obituary notice of the truly excellent man whose name heads this article; yet I am unwilling to let the opportunity pass without paying a short tribute to his worth.

Brother Godfrey was "one of the excellent of the earth," and he will long be remembered as such by those who knew him well. If he had an enemy in the world I knew it not. All who knew him recognized in him a Christian gentleman of the purest integrity. His firmness of character was happily combined with a large measure of Christian kindness and gentleness of spirit. He was emphatically a reliable man, as a citizen, as a neighbor and as a Christian.

Again: he was an eminently useful man, not merely negatively good; an enlightened and principled Christian, he was always ready for every useful work, and especially was he always ready to labor for the prosperity of the Church of his early and permanent love. He was a strong Methodist and loved the doctrines and discipline of his Church. For her prosperity he ever cherished an abiding interest. His long and useful life was given to her service, not as a minister, it is true, but as a faithful laborer in another department of his Master's vineyard. He was not one of those who had to be dragged into the work, nor was he one who went where he was not needed. As a Christian he had a large measure of "Church patriotism." This was a very prominent trait in his character.

I have said he was strongly attached to the Methodist Church; and yet, his was not the love and the zeal of a partizan; his spirit was truly catholic. He loved the Scriptural Christian wherever found. His generous heart was richly imbued with the purest charity; a kinder spirit I never knew. The law of Christian kindness was written on his heart, and by his life he illustrated its beauty and excellency.

Our deceased friend not only loved the Church, but he sincerely reverenced her authority and kept her rules "for conscience' sake," and taught his children to do the same thing. His punctual attendance upon all the services of the sanctuary was the same throughout his long connection with the Church. And to the close of his life he took a special interest in our Missionary and Conference collections. In this his example was worthy of imitation. I remember, last fall, when the preacher in charge of the Greenesville district was kept at home by severe family affliction, and his colleague was temporarily laid aside by bad health, brother G., though scarcely able to get on or off his horse, rode over his neighborhood and called on the members of the church for their annual contributions for these objects. One of less zeal and of less industry would have felt themselves excused by the rapidly increasing infirmities of age. Alas, how few there are who can be found to imitate such an example!

To the last hour of his life he was an industrious and faithful officer in the Church. He died a few miles from home while attending Quarterly meeting. This was just where we should expect such a man would desire to die, and it was right that he should thus die—die among his official brethren, with whom he had so often met in council. How desirable thus to die, in the service of the Church and in the midst of those whom he loved and with whom he labored in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ.

As a Christian master, brother Godfrey I believe, as nearly conformed to the requirements of the New Testament as any man I ever know. No one could visit his pleasant home without perceiving that those whom God had placed under his authority were treated by him as those for whom he expected to give account.

There was another trait in the character of this good man which deserves special notice; and that was his sincere love for Christian ministers. Of the greatness of his love for them and of the sincerity of his solicitude for their comfort and happiness, his whole life was an eloquent proof. What minister of the gospel ever visited his house without being impressed with the conviction that here is a family where the ambassadors of Christ are loved for their master's sake. The warm-hearted, Christian and gentlemanly reception by the head of the household, was in perfect keeping with the deportment of every member of his family. Many, very many of the servants of Christ, amid their toils and discouragements, have had their faith strengthened, and their hearts comforted by the brotherly kindness shown unto them there; and they will learn with mingled emotions of sorrow and of joy that our beloved friend and brother has been called away from his place of usefulness on earth to his home in heaven.

"Servant of God, well done,
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy master's joy."

Feb. 1854. A FRIEND.

Rev. J. Perkins, M. C., has laid us under [illegible]

"THE WAR IN CUBA."

Such was the cry with which the newsboys, Tuesday evening, were, after the arrival of the news from Cuba, which we give in another column, making the streets vocal, under our windows. Of course, one of those sensations which is celebrated next day, by its friends, as an "excitement"—perhaps even an intense excitement"—arose. As, however, we have here been often played upon, to the top of our gamut, on such strings, the "excitement"—if it was one—was a quiet and rather a short one. For it soon came to be known that no blood had been drawn nor even any powder burnt. There was an outrage, to be sure, and some thought it of very great size, so that we ought at once to go to war about it. Others, however, remain quite calm; being instructed by past events, not to get excited, until they be sure there's something to be excited about.

Penitentiary Report.

We have received the Annual Report of the Board of Directors of the Louisiana Penitentiary for the last year, accompanied by some very interesting schedules with regard to the number of convicts, their crimes, color and places of nativity. The Directors have altered some of the previous regulations of the Penitentiary, and suggest other alterations still, which will, in their opinion, conduce to the good of the prisoners as well as to the benefit of the State. During the past year, a new cell room, with two hundred additional cells, has been completed according to a plan laid down by the Legislature, at an expense of $41,341 18. The Directors recommend that as soon as practicable, white prisoners shall be allowed to work seperately from colored convicts, and also express a very decided opinion against the future leasing of the Penitentiary, inasmuch as the institution can amply support itself under good State officers, and the discipline of the prison be better kept up, and the objects of imprisonment more fully attained.

The Physician reports that the general health of the prison has been ordinarily good, excepting during the occurrence of yellow fever; and that even then there were very few fatal cases, as is amply shown by the number of deaths, which amount in the whole to only thirteen; and of these, three are known to have been from other diseases.

The Chaplain reports that he has endeavored to arrange and enlarge the library of the institution, and solicits from the Legislature an appropriation for that purpose.

The total number of prisoners on the first of January was 283. During the year 78 prisoners had been discharged on account of the expiration of their sentences; 13 died, 5 were pardoned by the State Legislature, and one by the President of the United States; 106 prisoners were received during the year, and 97 discharged, died or pardoned. There are 186 white men, 82 colored men, and 15 colored women. Of this number 44 are confined for murder, 27 for robbery, 22 for manslaughter, 68 for larceny, 10 for arson, 14 for entering houses to steal, and 10 are put down as negroes forfeited to the State. This city has furnished 181, or nearly two-thirds of all who are imprisoned. The parishes of Jefferson, St. Landry and St. Mary have furnished 19, 13 and 10, and the remaining parishes from 1 to 8 each.

Of the convicts, fifty, or nearly one-fifth of the whole number, are natives of Ireland. No other foreign country furnishes so many; but there are fifteen from Germany, fourteen from France, and thirty from different parts of the world, making a foreign criminal population of one hundred and nine. Subtracting ninety-seven, the number of colored convicts, we have a residue of seventy-seven white American prisoners, out of a total of two hundred and eighty-three. Of the native convicts, forty-five belong to Louisiana, thirty-eight were born in Virginia, thirteen come from New York, fourteen from Pennsylvania, and nine from the six New England States.

One hundred and seventy-three of the convicts had no occupation whatever. Among the remainder are seventeen farmers, thirteen servants, nine carpenters, nine tailors, two physicians, one lawyer, two printers and one schoolteacher.

Thinking that the statistics of the prison would be interesting to many of our readers, we have thus abreviated and condensed nearly all the literature of the Penitentiary of the State.

A MODEL WOMAN.

Of that venerable relict of nobler days and of a husband one of the most admirable men that ever adorned and served any country—we mean Mrs. Elizabeth Hamilton—we find, in one of the Northern journals, the following notice:

The widow of Alexander Hamilton has reached the great age of ninety-five, and retains in an astonishing degree her faculties, and converses with much of that ease and brilliancy which lent so peculiar a charm to her younger days. And then the old lady, after passing the compliments and congratulations of the day, insists upon her visitors taking a merry glass from Gen. Washington's punch-bowl, which, with other portions of his table-set, remains in her possession.

Mrs. Hamilton completes, on the 16th August next, we believe, her ninety-sixth year. Slight of figure, rather small in size, and originally of what seemed a feeble organization, she has yet passed to her present remarkable age, with an almost total exemption from disease, in spite of the severe misfortunes which overcast her life, in its very prime. We allude to the bloody death, first of her eldest son Philip, a young gentleman of great promise, and, soon after, the fall of her beloved lord, by what was nothing less than a deliberately executed assassination. For Aaron Burr knew, when, upon the mere pretence of a quarrel, he summoned Gen. Hamilton to the field, that he would not decline to meet him, but would never take the life of a fellow-being in private combat. To return, however, to his widow: her admirable virtues and sense, with the firm yet gentle courage and cheerfulness which these bestowed, and a piety as simple as it was unshaken, have no doubt gone far to uphold, by the forces of the mind, the natural weakness of her body. When last we saw her, less than a year since, she was still in the habit of going on foot and unattended, to visit friends who lived half a mile from her. Two years before, we had seen her, in a very hot summer's day, arrive at her own house on H. street, Washington (the Menou buildings) from a morning's walk to visit her old friend, Judge Cranch, on Capitol hill, a good way to the East of the Capitol. The distance which she had trod for this friendly purpose is a good deal above three miles.

She never was what the text which we have taken calls her—brilliant. For the woman, who shines or blaze with that sort of light, seldom have the genuine one of their sex—its gentleness, its pure warmth, its sweet reserve, its sure womanly sense, which rather perceives than reflects, and sees, at a glance, all it is fit that women (Nature's most delicate and ingenious work) should see. Though very pretty, vivacious and winning, Mrs. Hamilton was never dazzling. Neither her manners, though high-bred, nor her conversation, though spirited and full of sense, were at all of the showy order: she never said a silly, she never said a brilliant [illegible] radiates from what, in a woman, not be[illegible] moturer coxcombs lispingly adore nor fa[illegible] timentalists dilate upon, but what the hea[illegible] the understanding of all, however shall[illegible] corrupt, own, with not mere admiration love and awe—everything that is most fem[illegible] which is, we take it, a good deal better angelic. For we must confess that, so [illegible] can be judged from the most common descriptions, we look upon one woman as [illegible] full forty angels.

In short, she was just the wife for [illegible] spirit so high, faculties so powerful, a chi[illegible] so strenuous, and affections so fond as [illegible] Hamilton; and accordingly there could [illegible] tenderer union than was theirs. Not o[illegible] her loving, serene and cheerful temper g[illegible] whatever he could snatch for brief inter[illegible] repose or enjoyment, but her perfect disc[illegible] made her the confidante and her adv[illegible] sense the counsellor of his affairs; in m[illegible] the weightiest of which, he thought it [illegible] have such a woman's opinion. She shar[illegible] far as she could, his labors; and when she [illegible] not, often sweetened them by her presence. [illegible] papers, in particular, she kept in order f[illegible] and it is to her zealous care of them that [illegible] the preservation of that large and (in [illegible] sense of either the merely curious or [illegible] torically valuable) precious body of the [illegible] ton MSS., which our Government acquir[illegible] purchase, in 1849, and of which selected [illegible] tions are now seeing the light, in a Congre[illegible] series of some nine or ten volumes, edit[illegible] Mr. John Hamilton; who had previously [illegible] to the world a more limited selection, [illegible] biography of his father.

Of the value of these papers to the [illegible] history of our public affairs, during a [illegible] thirty years (1775 to 1804) which they [illegible] no one is in a better condition to speak [illegible] ourself. For we were entrusted, on the [illegible] the family, with the choice, out of a still [illegible] body, of the fifty-seven folio volumes [illegible] after excluding whatever was of no in[illegible] went into the hands of the Government.

They give a prodigious idea of Hamil[illegible] abilities, usefulness, and the confidence a[illegible] influence which these commanded for hi[illegible] most from the first moment when, a men[illegible] of nineteen, he first drew, as the Captai[illegible] volunteer artillery company, Gen. Washin[illegible] attention to the superior discipline of his [illegible] and the skillful service of his guns. Nev[illegible] any man possess a more remarkable por[illegible] mastering at once whatever he set about. [illegible] troduced, at the age of twelve, into the C[illegible] lag-house of a considerable shipping merc[illegible] in St. Croix, we find him, at only fourteen, [illegible] trusted, during his principal's absence in [illegible] country, with his correspondence and the [illegible] agement of all his operations of buying, sel[illegible] shipping, and all that. Already (as is so[illegible] his boyish letters to a young friend) he [illegible] begun to look to the state of things rising [illegible] this land of ours, and to foresee in it a com[illegible] und a career which the West Indies could [illegible] give him. At sixteen he is in Columbia Co[illegible] New York, perfecting his boyish Latin [illegible] Greek. At seventeen he is already writing [illegible] the public journals, in behalf of the cause o[illegible] colonies, papers so striking that they seize[illegible] the general attention, and are attributed t[illegible] best writers. In his nineteenth year, he [illegible] not only become a strong, popular orator, [illegible] has studied war as an art, more especially [illegible] Artillerist's part of it; and raising a compa[illegible] (chiefly at his own charge,) has joined Wash[illegible] ton's army in the Jerseys, and made upon [illegible] cautious commander so strong an impression [illegible] he transfers him to his personal staff as chief[illegible] de-camp, with the rank of lieutenant colo[illegible] llere, it is well enough known that, before [illegible] was 20, he became one of Washington's [illegible] efficient officers: but, though equally tru[illegible] has escaped attention that, until that vete[illegible] of science, Steuben, took service with us, it [illegible] Hamilton who first supplied our systems of [illegible] tactics; and Hamilton who, besides drawing [illegible] many of Gen. Washington's important pa[illegible] wrote the admirable instructions to John L[illegible] rens—a master-piece of ability—under wh[illegible] he, when Dr. Franklin had failed, hro[illegible] about the Armed Alliance of France. Ham[illegible] was then 21. In 1781, perceiving that [illegible] struggle had become, on our part, one of [illegible] nance, he turned financier; and took cha[illegible] under Robert Morris, of a part of that dep[illegible] ment; quickly displaying in it that sing[illegible] capacity which led Morris to say, on the for[illegible] tion of our present Government, that there [illegible] but one man in the country—Alexander Ha[illegible] ten—who might, as Secretary of the Treas[illegible] re-instate the public credit. It is well kn[illegible] that the present Constitution is really his p[illegible] but few are aware that its original project [illegible] in existence) was drawn up by him in [illegible] when he was only 27 years old. We could [illegible] much more; but space fails us. [Crescent.

INEBRIETY.—When this vice has taken [illegible] hold of a man, farewell industry—farewell [illegible] lation—farewell attention to thing s worth [illegible] attention—farewell love of virtuous socie[illegible] farewell decency of manners—and farewe[illegible] even an attention to person. Every thing [illegible] by this predominant and brutal appetite. [illegible] how many instances do we see men who hav[illegible] gun-life with the brightest prospect before th[illegible] and who have closed it without any ray of c[illegible] fort and consolation! Young men with f[illegible] fortunes, good talents, good tempers, good he[illegible] good constitutions, only being drawn into [illegible] vortex of the drunkard, have become, by [illegible] grees, the most loathsome and despicable [illegible] mankind. In the house of the drunkard th[illegible] is no happiness for any one. All is uncertai[illegible] and anxiety. He is not the same man for [illegible] one day at a time. No one knows of his [illegible] goings or his in-comings. When he will ris[illegible] when he will lie down to rest, is wholly a ma[illegible] of chance. That which he swallows for wha[illegible] calls pleasure, brings pain as surely as ni[illegible] brings morning. Poverty and misery are in [illegible] train. To avoid these results, we are ca[illegible] upon to make no sacrifice. Abstinence requ[illegible] no aid to accomplish it. Our own will is [illegible] that is requisite; and if we have not the [illegible] to avoid contempt, disgrace and misery, we [illegible] serve neither relief nor compassion.

WASHINGTON'S TEACHERS.—Washington [illegible] but two teachers, one an old fellow named [illegible] by, one of his father's tenants, sexton as w[illegible] as schoolmaster of the neighborhood, who w[illegible] to boast, after he was superannuated and [illegible] what addicted to strong potations, especially [illegible] the General's birthdays, that it was he who, [illegible] tween his knees, had laid the foundation of G[illegible] Washington's greatness, by teaching him [illegible] letters; and the other, the Mr. Williams alre[illegible] mentioned, who was, according to Mr. Weems [illegible] "capital hand" at reading, spelling, Eng[illegible] grammar, arithmetic, surveying, book keepi[illegible] and geography, and often boasted that he h[illegible] made George Washington as great a scholar [illegible] himself. We cannot doubt that to his thorou[illegible] ness in teaching what he did know, his gr[illegible] pupil owed much of his acquired power; for [illegible] good foundation in a few important things is [illegible] best possible beginning for a boy of ability a[illegible] enterprise. [Mrs Kirkland.

THE GENERALS OF THE BRITISH ARMY.—A writer in a late number of the London Time[illegible] gives some interesting facts respecting the ma[illegible] jor officers of the British army. He says th[illegible] nine-tenths of the major-generals are upwar[illegible] of sixty years of age. Of the two hundred a[illegible] fifty-nine full colonels, one hundred and fif[illegible] nine are upwards of ninety years of age. [illegible] period of life at which an officer in the Fren[illegible] army, unless specially exempted, is placed o[illegible] the retired list; and the remaining one hundre[illegible] full colonels are between forty-four and sixty[illegible] The writer states that the Duke of Wellingto[illegible] and Napoleon were forty-five years of age wh[illegible] they finished their military career in the field [illegible] Waterloo. The youngest major-general in t[illegible] British army at present (royalty excepted) [illegible] and there are only [illegible]

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

OBITUARY:

Sister JULIET A. YONGUE, consort of Dr. Samuel Yongue, died in this place on the evening of the 17th Janurry last. She was born in Orangeburg District, South Carolina, on the 21st February, 1805. She professed religion and joinrd the M. E. Church in the year 1826. In 1833 she removed with her family to this State. For many years she has been one of the most active and useful members in this charge; no task seemed too arduous where she could do good. Possessed of ample means, she has been to the poor, the sick and friendless, an angel of mercy. No hovel of want and suffering in the community in which she lived, but was marked with her foot-prints. In the church her place will be hard to fill, for she was thoroughly and personally identified with all its interests and operations.

My acquaintance with her had but just commenced, when I was called to see her die. She had been a great sufferer for years from frequent and sudden nervous attacks, but her activity and zeal for others made her often forget herself and estoem her own afflictions as slight and temporary.

Such seems to have been her estimate of the last attack, not contemplating danger even until the very day of her death. But though sudden the announciation of death's approach, she met "the king of terrors" unappalled. "The bridegroom's cry" found her ready and waiting—her lamp trimmed and burning. When told she would die, and asked if her confidence was unshaken, she replied: "I feel the everlasting arms are beneath me, and though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil." She said she had a realizing sense of all God's precious promises, and continued to quote them through all the intervals of her paroxisms of pain. Her bodily suffering seemed very acute, almost to the last moment.

Her death, though so triumphant, has cast a deep gloom over the Church here, all conceding that one of the most pious, active and useful of the membership is gone from among us. But "our loss is her eternal gain," and "though God buries the workmen he still carries on the work." H.

Columbus, Miss., Feb., 1854.

DIED—On the 7th of Feb., 1854, Sumpter county, Ala., Mrs. MARTHA B. LINDSEY. She was born Feb. 4, 1813, in Baldwin co., Ga.; married to brother Lindsey, Dec. 13th, 1831.

She professed religion in her 12th year, and joined the M. E. Church, in which she lived a consistent member until her death. I have seldom known a better woman. She was an affectionate wife, a loving mother, a kind mistress, a good neighbor and an humble Christian. Think God we sorrow not as those who have no hope. No, no; she always lived ready for death. Her last words were, "I shall soon be with my blessed Jesus." Thus lived and died one of the best women I ever saw. T. Y. ARMSTRONG.

February 13, 1854.

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orlean Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square, first insertion	$1 00
Each subsequent insertion	50
One Square, one year	18 00
One Square, six months	10 00
Two Squares, one year	25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line.

No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

LOCAL MATTERS.

The following is the report, so far as heard from, of the interments in the cemeteries of the city for the week ending at 6 o'clock A. M. on Sunday, the 5th of March: Protestant, Girod street, 12; Hohrew, Metairie Ridge, 1; St. Patrick's, 16; Catholic No 1, Second District, 9; Catholic No. 2, Second District, 10; Lafayette, Fourth District, 18. Total, 66.

CELEBRATION OF THE FIREMEN'S ANNIVERSARY. The seventeenth anniversary of the organization of the Fire Department of our city was celebrated on Saturday last with the usuel display and enthusiasm. It was surprising to see such an universal turn-out, under the circumstances—the threatening indications of the weather up to the hour of assembling and the condition of the streets in consequence of the previous heavy rains. The procession formed in Canal street, and so soon as the sky began to give promise of a fair day, thousands of our population crowded to the point, whence it departed upon the route laid down in the programme.

Mr. J. E. Caldwell, Grand Marshal, accompanied by his aids and followed by a large body of exempt firemen and a long list of notables, preceded the immense procession, and, together with the marshals and other officers of the various companies, preserved an order and method of arrangement which made the affair go off harmoniously. The greater number of the companies were disposed in numerical order, including organizations from Milneburg and Algiere. We should be glad to speak of each company separately—to give each its due in the matters of numerical force, decorum and manly bearing, decorations and general appearance—but lack of space forbids, and the fact that the morning papers of yesterday have preceded us with full and accurate accounts, renders it unnecessary. In point of numbers, Jackson Company No. 18 stood first and No. 6 next; and so far as fine muscular men, and neatness and beauty of uniform were concerned, we thought Perseverance No. 13 could not be excelled. A lady at the corner of Customhouse and Chartres streets, presented his company with the most rich and costly decorations for their machine, and received in return from their hands an immense bouquet, which had been presented by Miss Edgar, at the corner of Carondelet and Poydras. A banner was presented by a number of ladies to Hook and Ladder Commander No. 2, when opposite the City Hall.

After accomplishing their march through most of the principal streets of the city, the companies left their engines in Canal street, and visited Placide's Theatre, where Professor Dimitry delivered an appropriate and of course eloquent address.

This celebration may not have been quite so grand an affair as some that have preceded it, but the excellent manner in which it was arranged and executed, and the good order which prevailed, must challenge the admiration of everybody.

Suicide.—A respectable looking German, named C. H. Mergel, aged about 27 years, was arrested on Saturday afternoon in the Second District, under a charge of breach of trust. He seemed deeply affected by the circumstance of his arrest and his inability to procure immediate bail. At about 6 o'clock, a gentleman arrived at the police office to procure his release, and on proceeding to his cell, Mergel was found suspended to the grates of his window by his neck-handkerchief, a black silk one; life was not quite extinct, and he was immediately cut down, but died before medical assistance could be procured. He had taken off his hat and shoes and performed the fatal work coolly and deliberately, but with the utmost dispatch. An inquest was held upon the body and an appropriate verdict rendered.

Fatal Fall.—A man named J. M. Crawford, aged 20 years, killed himself early on Saturday morning, by jumping from a window in the third story of the Arcade Hotel. He was a wealthy planter, we are told, and had just arrived from Alabama. An inquest was held upon the body and a verdict rendered attributing the cause of the rash act to temporary Levee, the other day, where oysters are served up to the canaille, and called for a plate of cooked bivalves. They were shortly furnished, but the young chap, perhaps in order to show that he knew what an oyster should be, objected to their quality and to the manner in which they were cooked. Mr. Michael Loeg, the individual who superintended the saloon, thereupon hustled the critical youth out through the doorway, shaking and cuffing him soundly in the meantime. This was all well enough so far, but another Mr. Long, a brother of Michael, not wishing the boy to depart without some consideration for his impudence in finding fault with the oysters and his rascality in refusing to pay for them, dealt him a heavy blow upon the head with an oyster knife, inflicting a considerable gash and causing the blood to flow copiously. Accused were sent before the Criminal Court for trial, on the charge of assault and battery.

General Intelligence.

Louisiana Legislature.

BATON ROUGE, March 2, 1854.

In the Senate, Mr. Lacey, of the Judiciary Committee, reported on various bills.

Mr. DeRussy, on behalf the Swamp Land Committee, reported favorably upon making a further appropriation to aid in the navigation of Red River at Alexandria. Special order of the day for to-morrow.

Mr. Ryan, on leave, introduced a bill appropriating $15,000 to J. H. Maddox, asked for in his memorial. On motion, the bill was referred to the Committee on Claims, and made the special order of the day for Tuesday next.

Mr. Hodge, on leave, called up the House bill, entitled "An Act for the protection of merchants or vendors of agricultural products." Passed.

In the House, reports were made by Mr. Pearce, from the Committee on Amendments to the Constitution.

By Mr. Nixon, from the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. Robertson, from the Committee on Parochial Affairs.

By Mr. Donaldson, from the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. Miller, from the Committee on Swamp Lands, appointed yesterday.

On motion of Mr. Phillips, a resolution was adopted to hold evening sessions after the 6th inst., for the consideration of private bills.

The bill to amend the swamp land law having been made the special order, was taken up, and after some discussion was postponed and made the special order for Monday next.

The bill to authorize the city of New Orleans to drain the swamp and overflowed lands in its limits and vicinity, also the special order, was taken up, and on motion of Mr. Campbell, laid on the table subject to call.

The Koszta and Cuba resolutions of Mr. Roberts, of Orleans, having also been made the special order were also taken up.

Mr. Roberts, of Orleans, said that as he believed the affairs of Cuba would be properly attended to by this Government, he would move that the resolutions in relation to that Island be laid on the table. He presumed there would be no opposition to the Koszta resolutions and moved their adoption.

Mr. Gullum spoke in opposition to the adoption of the resolutions.

Mr. Bullard offered as a substitute a resolution endorsing generally the foreign policy of the national administration.

Mr. Roberts, of Orleans, proceeded to address the House in favor of his resolution, and was followed by Mr. Kearney in opposition to it.

On motion of Mr. Davidson, the whole subject was laid on the table by a vote of yees 48, nays 25.

Later from Texas.

The steamship Perseverance, Captain Lawless, arrived from Galveston Monday.

By this arrival we have full files of our Texas exchanges. There is, however, in them little news of importance.

The Bastrop Advertiser says a Mr. Shackleford is now engaged in purchasing a drove of cattle to take across the country to California. He purposes starting about the first of May next. Another drove, of near five hundred head, will start from Lockhart about the first of April.

Our town, says the Indianola Bulletin, within the last two years, has more than doubled her commercial importance, having built about one hundred and seventy houses in that time; large and spacious wharfs; docks to accommodate the largest vessels coming to the bay, and many other facilities for trade and the accommodation of emigrants, travellers and planters. Though meeting with severe adversities, her course has been upward and onward, and at no time during her existence have so many bright prospects clustered around her future, promising an early and triumphant fruition.

Experiments in sugar growing have been made in Harrison county. Col. Fitzpatrick, from two acres of cane, made six barrels of sugar and three or four hundred gallons of fine syrup.

The Galvestou News of the 3d says:

Business in our place has been dull. From the appearance of weather here the announcement that rivers had opened for navigation was confidently looked for, and preparations are made and making to meet the orders for goods on hand and expected from the country; the letters, however, received via Houston yesterday are discouraging every way, neither the Brazos nor Trinity had risen sufficiently to allow steamers to move, and some more patiences is enforced. Hopes, that navigation will come soon, are not yet abandoned. The weather at this point seems to indicate that the dry season is at an end.

The Sabine, Angelina and Neches rivers are reported rising.

The Matagorda Tribune states that Mathgorda county continues to improve rapidly, in wealth and population. Within the past few days several planters from Virginia, North Carolina and elsewhere, have arrived with heavy forces of negroes, for the purpose of settling the rich lands on Caney and its vicinity.

A few days since, J. Davidson and Jos. Harris, while hunting near Round Point, Harris county, found the remains of a human skeleton, apparently of a tall man, skull very large, teeth bad, but three in the under jaw, and four or five in the upper; had on a gray roundabout jacket, cottonade pants and unbleached drawers, no shoes nor hat to be seen; had with him a fine black coat, not much worn, and two or three pairs of old pants, a little roasted coffee in a rag, two nuts for screw bolts, one large and the other small, carefully wrapped in cloth, an almanac for 1853, some magnolia seed, and a case knife without a handle. From the skeleton being very imperfect, a good deal eaten up, etc., it is believed to have been there six or eight months.

LATER FROM SANTA FE.—The St. Louis Republican has the following dispatch, dated Independence, Mo., Feb. 23.:

The Santa Fe mail arrived to-day, having encountered severe weather on the outward bound trip, with the loss of two or three animals and the mail wagon. The dates are to the 1st of February.

The papers are barren of intelligence of an interesting character. The usual number of Indian depredations and murders are chronicled.

Gen. Armijo died recently at his residence on the Rio Abajo.

Bishop Lamy, of the Catholic Church, with a small party of an escort, is on his way to the States, and may be expected in a few days.

Business in the Territory of New Mexico was at a stand still.

No boats have yet arrived at this point. The river is rising and in fair navigable condition.

CENTRAL AMERICA.—Accounts have been received from Guatemala to the 31st Janurry. It appears that Gen Carrera, the President, had resigned the Presidency, but that Congress had declined to accept his resignation. The cause of this resignation is some conflict between the Executive and Judiciel power. [President Carrera, it seems, had sent a message to Congress demanding the dismissal of the Chief Justice.] This resignation of a Chief who has been for so many years distinguished, has caused the liveliest sensation throughout all Central America. As Carrera has hitherto had his own way in Guetemala, in all probability he will continue to have it in future.

IOWA.—The Dubuque Tribune publishes a statement of the valuation of real and personal property in Iowa for the years 1851, '52 and '53, by which it appears that the State is rat-Important from Havana.

SEIZURE OF THE U. S. STEAMSHIP BLACK WARRIOR—Intense Excitement.—The steamer Satelite arrived at Mobile yesterday from Key West, bringing the news which had been received at that port by the U. S. Steamer Corwin, of the seizure of the Steamship Black Warrior by the authorities, and her subsequent abandonment by her crew and passengers.

The Key West correspaedent of the Mobile Tribune writes as follows in relation to the affair:

KEY WEST, March 3.—The United States steamer Corwin, Lieut. Craven, commander, arrived yesterday morning at 8 o'clock from Havana, which port she left on the evening of the 1st.

By this arrival we learn that the steamship Ithek Warrior had arrived at Havana on the morning of the 1st from Mobile. As has been customary with this boat, and all other United States mail steamers touching at Havana, with cargoes for other ports, she entered at the Customhouse in ballast, although she had 1000 bales of cotton on board, which was to be landed at New York.

Captain Bulloch sent his manifest—no cargo—in ballast—to the Customhouse. Shortly after the Government official came on board and asked Captain Bulloch of that was his correct report. He replied that it was. He then went to the Customhouse, when the Collector asked him if that was his manifest; to which he returned the same answer as before. He now suspected that a plan had been laid to seize his ship for an infringement of the revenue, and taking out his watch remarked to the Collector, that according to the Spanish laws he had yet three hours to amend his manifest. He compared his time with that of the Collector, who at the same moment agreed that there was time to alter the report. Captain B then went on board his ship and prepared a correct manifest.

But before the three hours were up the officers of the Customs came on board and seized the ship. Capt. Bulloch immediately hauled down his colors, and with his officers, passengers, crew and mail went on board the United States steamship Fulton, Lieut. Com. Watson, abandoning the ship and cargo to the Spanish Government.

On the 24th ult., lighters were sent alongside of the Black Warrior, and she was discharged of her cargo. The bales of cotton were subjected to a rigorous examination, every one being cut open, as it was suspected that they contained arms and munitions of war.

Capt. Watson offered to take the Black Warrior in tow and carry her outside the Moro, in spite of the resistance of the authorities, but Capt. Bulloch and the agent, Mr. Tyng, would not consent, preferring to let the two governments decide the legality of the seizure.

Immense excitement prevailed at Havana. It was reported that the authorities had given orders to detain the Corwin, as they suspected that Capt. Bulloch would take passage in her.

When the Corwin left the harbor an immense crowd flocked to the wharves, and the flags of all the American vessels were raised as she passed by. Lieut. Watson and Bulloch accompanied her to the Guard ship in an open boat, and then took leave of her.

The guns of the Moro were pointed at the United States steamship Corwin as she went out, and the battlements bristled with armed men.

The Corwin was ordered by the American Consul to take dispatches relating to this outrage to the officials at Washington. She arrived at this port yesterday, and sailed at 10 o'clock, A. M., for Charleston.

The Key West correspondent of the Picayune, of this city, says that a few minutes before the departure of the Corwin, Capt. Bulloch received a notification that his ship would be given up to him without the cotton, but he refused to receive her on any conditions but satisfactory remuneration for all damages received by detention, etc.

THE NAVAJOS.—Capt. Dodge, the Agent of the United States among this tribe of Indians, estimates their number at about eight thousand, of whom near two thousand are warriors. They are a good deal inclined to agriculture, and last year raised sixty bushels of corn, five hundred bushels of wheat, five hundred of beans, besides a large quantity of pumpkins, melons, peaches, wild potatoes, etc. They manufacture large quantities of blankets, stockings, etc.; all their wearing apparel, and make their own weapons, such as bows, arrows, etc. They are all brought up to work, and men, women and children are constantly employed. They own two hundred and fifty thousand sheep, twenty thousand horses, and one hundred and fifty head of horned cattle.

One hundred men in the tribe own as many as fifteen thousand horses, and one hundred thousand head of sheep. Some of the Indians have forty or fifty persons to attend their herds. They treat their women with great respect, and the modern doctrine of "Woman's Rights" seems to be fully carried out in practice among the tribe. The women own all the sheep, and the men dare not sell them without their permission—nor do they ever make an important trade without consulting their squaws. They admit women to their councils. They rarely kill, but consider theft a great virtue. The Agency is one hundred and eighty miles from Santa Fe, in the heart of the Indian country. [Santa Fe Gazette.

There is at present in the Orphan Asylum in this city, says the Washington Star, an orphan child, the daughter of a married couple of the name of West, both of which ill-fated pair were victims, about twelve months ago, of want and misery. The woman fell down dead in our city, as she was begging from door to door for relief, and the husband followed her a few days after to their last resting place, having been conveyed to the almshouse where he died. Their sole companion, a daughter five years of age, was placed in the Orphan Asylum, and has now been sent for from England by the sister of the mother. It appears that they were very highly connected, the unfortunate man having been an Episcopalian minister of the Church of England, and the sister of the wife is married to a Colonel in the British army.

THE RECENT STORM AT THE NORTH.—A dispatch from Philadelphia, dated the 23d ult., to the Baltimore Clipper, states that thirteen vessels went ashore within the new Delaware Breakwater, on the night of the 21st. Among them were the schrs. S Vail and Minerva, of Fall River; the M. Clotts, with a cargo of coal, for New York; the Rachel Lane, with corn, for New York; the James Maull, also loaded with corn; the Charles Wood, the Charles Moore, Mary Harker, Gen. Scott, and Cornelia, of Fall River, and two others names unknown. One of the crew of the James Maull was frozen to death; and two of the crew of the Charles Wood perished in the rigging. One of the crew of the schr. Sussex, which also went ashore, perished after reaching the shore. Accounts of the disastrous effects of the storm on shipping are also received from the coast of New England.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE AT LITTLE ROCK.—A fire occurred at Little Rock, Ark., on the morning of the 26th ult., which destroyed a block of buildings used for stores and offices, with most of their contents, valued at about $80,000. The offices of the Gezette and Democrat and of the True Democrat were entirely destroyed, with most of the fixtures of the establishments. Most of the property was insured. The buildings burned were owned by Messrs Bleno and Burnside, of New Orleans, and Mrs. Rearden. It is thought the fire was the work of an incendiary.

SEAMEN AND THEIR WAGES.—The New York Shipping List says: "Seamen have again become scarce, and greater inducements are offered to obtain crews. The rates to Liverpool are $20 a month, with $40 in advance; to London, $20, with $30 to $35 in advance; Havre, $20, with $25 advance; North of Europe, $18, with $18 advance; Mediterreneau, $16, with $18 to $20 advance; East Indies, $14, two months' advance; California and Australia, $12, two months' advance; South America, $16, one month's advance; West Indies, $18, one month's advance; and coasting, $18 to $20 per month.

SUPPLIES OF WATER.—The city of Paris is supplied daily with twenty-two millions of gallons, London forty-five millions, Boston ten millions, New York thirty millions, and Philadelphia fifteen millions.

Deputy Sheriff Rohlsou was also at Columbus (Ga.,) on the night of the 27

TELEGRAPHIC.

FURTHER BY THE ANDES.

INTERESTING FROM THE EAST.

NEW YORK, March 1.—The steamer Andes brings dates from Liverpool up to the 14th ult., but her commercial intelligence is of an indefinite character. Her advices, however, contain several interesting items of general news.

EASTERN AFFAIRS.—It was confidentially stated, just before the departure of the Andes, that a manifesto from the pen of Count Nesselrode would shortly make its appearance, in which the final intentions of the Emperor of Russia would be announced to the world.

The latest accounts from Asia show that General Guyon had commenced offensive operations in Asia.

AUSTRIA.—The Paris Bourse was thrown into some excitement on Monday (the 13th Feb.) by a report that the Emperor of Austria had declared that he would make common cause with the western powers in the event of the Russians crossing the Danube, and an important advance in the funds took place in consequence.

LOMBARDY.—A proclamation had been issued in Lombardy ordering the arrest of all persons engaged in spreading false reports, and great excitement prevailed there and throughout Italy in consequence.

GEORGIA.—Late advices from the Georgian frontiers reported that Schamyl, the great Georgian leader, was marching upon the town of Sekitila, (?) an important military position in the Russian territory.

ENGLAND—RUSSIAN AFFAIRS IN PARLIAMENT.

In the House of Commons Lord John Russell had introduced a bill, the details of which were distasteful to both the Conservatives and Liberalists. Lord John stated to the House that arrangements had been made between the English Government and the French Embassador, with regard to the course to be taken by the combined fleets. He also said that the Government had no reason to be dissatisfied with the mission of Count Orloff to Vienna; the object of which had been to secure the neutrality of Austria in case of war, but which had resulted in failure.

BATTLE OF GUIRGEVO.—The battle of Guirgevo was a gallant, though not a very important engagement. The first movement was made by the Turks, 800 of which crossed the Danube early in the morning, supported by eight gunboats and four sailing vessels, and landing near the quarantine ground, arranged themselves in order of battle. The Russians opened a murderous fire upon the Turkish columns, and at length forced them to retrace their steps. The engagement lasted three hours, the loss of the Russians, as well as the Turks, being heavy.

LIVERPOOL COTTON MARKET.

The sales of Cotton in the Liverpool market on Thursday, the 13th February, were estimated at 10,000 bales, the demand being more active and prices steady.

FINALE OF THE GARDINER CASE—GARDINER'S DEATH.

WASHINTON, March 3.—The jury in the Gardiner case brought in a verdict of guilty, with a sentence of imprisonment for ten years in the Penitentiary. A stay of the sentence was granted, upon application of counsel, and in the meantime Gardiner took poison, from the effects of which he died this evening.

CONGRESSIONAL PRINTER.

A. O. P. Nicholson has been elected printer to the Senate in place of Gen. Armstrong, deceased.

The following are the ages of the principal reigning sovereigns: Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, 34; the King of Wurtemburg, 71; the King of the Belgians, 62; the King of Prussia, 57; the Emperor of Russia, 56; the King of Sweeden and Norway, 53; the King of Denmark, 44; the King of the Two Sicilies and the King of Bavaria, 40; the King of Hanover, 33; the Sultan, 30; the Emperor of Austria, 28; Louis Napoleon, 44.

STATUE OF WASHINGTON.—The Washington Sentinel says that Clark Mills, Esq., has entered into preliminary arrangements for the execution of the equestrian statue of Washington, for which an appropriation was made by the last Congress. The statue is to be of immense proportions, and the design now is to elevate it to a height of seventy feet, that it may be seen miles distant in every direction.

GAS IN NEW YORK CITY.—The number of public lamps in New York city is 9000, and the amount of mains, two hundred and fifty-six miles and a half. The appropriation for gas made by the city for 1853, was $300,000, of which amount one-half goes to the two Gas Companies which supply the city's need of light. Each lamp costs for setting it up and keeping it in order, independent of the light, $38.

The newspaper proprietors, of Boston on the 23d ult., held a meeting, and decided unanimously to raise the rates of advertising twenty-five per cent. This course was deemed proper in view of the advance in paper and in the price of labor, together with other accumulating expenses incident to publishing newspapers.

AN EXTREME TEST.—If you wish to ascertain the temper of a young lady, look at her nails, and the tips of her gloves. If they are jagged and much bitten, you may be sure she is peevish, irritable, quarrelsome, and too ready to show her teeth at the smallest provocation. This is an infallible test that every ill-teupered young lady carries at her fingers' ends.

A DARK DAY COMING.—There will be an extraordinary eclipse of the sun on the 26th of May next, such an one as none but the oldest inhabitants have witnessed in this vicinity. It will be similar to the great eclipse of 1806, since which there has been none resembling it nearer than that of 1830, when eleven-twelfths of the sun was obscured.

A WEDDING PARTY POISONED.—A wedding party took place at Batavia, New York, lately, and during the evening all present were taken sick. Subsequently the bridgroom, Mr. Philpott, the bride and a young man named Peard, died. Several others are still in a dangerous condition. It is supposed that some liquor they drank contained poison.

The Montgomery papers of the 25th ult. state that the rise in the Alabama has done serious damage on the river bottom plantations, and that the river is now as high as it has been for three years.

A "young lady" in New York, residing in a "palatial mansion in a fashionable avenue," swindled a clerk of a jewelry establishment out of a lot of diamonds worth $1600, by representing herself to be the daughter of Georga Law. She returned the jewels and was let off.

Mme. Georges, the great French actress, whose life, after having been a series of brilliant adventures, it is stated, has been gradually declining, has been reduced to petitioning for the office of umbrella taker at one of the doors of the Great Exhibition of 1855.

FANNY FORRESTER.—The health of Mrs. Judson (Fanny Forrester) is still declining. The Madison (N. Y.) county Journal says: "The progress of her decline, though less rapid than it was during the month of January, has not been stayed, and we have assurance that it will be."

On the 25th two men, named James Brady and Charles Seargent fell with the scaffolding attached to the suspension bridge across Niagara River two hundred and forty feet to the water, and were instantly killed. Two others saved themselves by catching hold of the cables.

As an illustration of the play going habits of the Parisians, the receipts for the various theatres which, in 1852, were 11,288,974 francs, were in 1853, 14,157,000 francs, showing an increase of 1,868,000 francs.

General Thomas D. King, an elder brother of the late Vice President King, died at Tuscaloosa on the 24th ult.

John Wallace Keene, who served as a Captain in the Mexican war, died recently in Carroll parish, in this State.

Certain books are written, not to instruct you, but to let you know the author knew something.

Intelligence has been brought to Shanghai of the death of the temporal Emperor of Japan.

Niagara in Winter.

Niagara in winter is not Niagara in summer. From the depots the hordes of uproarious porters are absent. The great hotels are desolate and closed. Their ample portieos are not crowded with the light dresses, or the lighter mustachios, of summer travel. Their parlors are dark and cold, and contain no longer the array of fashion and beauty that glorifies them in midsummer. The streets are abandoned by the tedious hackmen, and the "double to the Falls" no longer commends his useless gurrulity to every new arrival. The Indian curiosity shops no longer open wide their doors to the "taking in" of the unsophisticated representatives of the human race that pay exorbitant prices for the genuine handiwork of hypothetical princesses and unromantic forest maidens. The trees no longer shelter the bedizened daughters of the Tuscaroras, plying industrious needles and talking in hoarse gutterals to sympathizing pale faces. The hunting sights no longer stand with open eyes and lunatic maws, quick to see and eager to snap up the reluctant "quarters" of the novelty seeker. Nor do the groves and the river banks, the ferry house and the bridge re-echo with the quick steps of those who pass from Treuton to Niagara, and from this to Montreal or Nahant—the ever active wanderers of fashion, driven they know not whither, by a power they know not what. But ever all presides the genius of desolation, and the long silence is made only more intense by the ceaseless voice of the cataract and its unheeded utterance day and night.

A few visitors only see Niagara in winter. Stimulated by a desire to look upon the architecture of ice, built by the weird and viewless fingers of the mist, we went to the Falls a day or two since. The trip well repays the time and trouble. It is always well to see Niagara, and most of all in winter, to contrast its stern and ice-bound features with the gentler aspect it bears in the milder season of the year. It has its summer and its winter type, and each differs from the other as much as its noon and midnight appearance. And its effect is much enhanced by the intense solitude that prevails, in contrast with the ever present summer crowd of visitors.

At the bridge, the gate-keeper is busy with the manufacture of canes. You pass on to Goat Island, and the curiosity and lemonade shop that fronts the road, shows a thin cloud of smoke above its chimney to indicate the presence of life. Perhaps a maker of curiosities looks stealthily out and then plies his busy craft. You cross the Island, striking the shore just below the Island known as the "Three Sisters." An ice bridge binds them all to the shore, and delicate frost work lends the branches of the thick evergreens. Above the stream, hundreds of sea gulls are cutting the air in every direction, now poised far above the water, and now quietly dipping upon its surface.

The horse shoe looks cold and stern, and mingled with its waters there pours over its brink a constant shower of broken ice. The tower is accessible, but it is covered with ice, and just beneath it from the gorge below, rises up a huge iceberg, almost to the top of the Fall. You stand there and look down upon the river. The lower shore of either bank is piled up with the broken ice gradually extending out into the stream, till just below the American Fall both sides unite, and then for a mile down the river it is one huge solid field of ice, composed of cakes and fragments, piled up in endless confusion, presenting every possible shape, and cemented by the falling spray and dashing water. It is a sublime spectacle to stand and look down upon this immovable mass. Not ten thousand men could stir it, but the mild breath of a few hours may relax its closely wrought materials, may weaken its entire structure, and give it an easy prey to the turbulent waters, that now struggle in vain to destroy it. It stands there frozen into ridges and deep valleys, ridges rising forty feet above the water and vales sinking deep into its surface—left just as the wild play of the current left it—a great congealed convulsion. A path leads directly across it from the foot of the ferry case, and hundreds use it as a highway daily. But it is difficult walking, owing to the inequalities of the surface, and the many windings of the path.

At Luna Island a fine view is had, but obtained at some risk of sliding into an unknown future, and turning up as an "accident" in the gulf below. The frost has performed its most perfect work at the American Fall. The banks are sheeted with ice. Ice loads the trees and hangs over the falling water, far down the abyss in sharp points. In front of the Fall, three or four hills of ice formed of the spray and broken water, tower up to half its height. They are jagged and broken up on the side next the water, and smooth and rounded on the off side. From the top of these a look is had into the very heart of the fall, that is only obtainable under these circumstances. A friend at the Falls, who had clambered up there, speaks of it in glowing terms. He stood midway up the Fall. Below him a gulf of water angry as Phlegethon and dense with spray. Directly over his head is the water pouring down, and apparently leaping forward to overwhelm him.

On the Canada side you get the full panorama of the American side. This too is deserted. The curiosity shop and museum at Table Rock, are heavy with ice, and the mourners for Martha Rugg have left her untimely place of destruction; have folded up the cotton monument with its elegine inscription, and have exchanged their elemosynary bewailment of her piteous late, for a right merry spending of the fund derived from the fearful visitors, who listen to their plaintive narrative all the summer. Alas, poor human nature! No accident at Niagara so awful, that it has not been turned of account, by the insatiate donizons of that ilk, who thrive upon death and make money out of calamity. These fellows will have to contract for another "fatal accident," with all the attendant deplorable circumstances, for those old ones are mostly "run into the ground."

So much for Niagara in winter. A pen description gives one no idea of the wondrous beauties that invest that place at this season. If Summer crowds Niagara with visitors, Winter should do no less. Its lessons are more impressive from the very solitude of the place. The ice bridge and the ice formations may last a month and they may be broken up in a few days. But any thawing weather will despoil them of their delicate outlines and detruct from their beauty and elegance.

ROMANCE AND REALITY.—Mr. Bunce, an instructive writer upon antiquity, lifts the veil which romantic writers have thrown over some of their heroines. He says: "Our notions of a charming woman are terribly shocked when we hear of Cleopatra, even in the presence of Octavius, flying at one of her slaves, and tearing his face with her nails. I do not know if we are more or less shocked at this than at hearing how the philosophical Cato, before proceeding to meditate with Plato on the immortality of the soul, gave his attendant a blow on the mouth because he had conslitorately removed the sword, fearing that his master was about to do himself a mischief. But the ideas of different ages and countries are very dissimilar in matters of this kind. Even in fictions, where the writer has it in his power to make all his great people decorous and amiable, we find in the Arabian Nights Entertainments, the most accomplished ladies doing as Cleopatra did. Badoura, the charming Princess of China, seizes the nurse by the hair of her head and beats her till her face is covered with blood. But even in Cleopatra's days, it is gratifying to learn that Ovid, in that book of 'Art of Love,' which is devoted to instructing the fair sex how to make themselves agreeable, expresses his repulsion to a woman who loses her temper and beats and scratches her male servant. There was a Lucrezia Gonzague, a learned woman of the sixteenth century, whose name has descended to the present day with the warmest commendations of her erudition, virtue and piety. Her injudicious admirers published her epistolatory correspondence, as far as it could be collected, including the letters that she wrote on her purely household affairs. A quotation is made from one of these letters, by Bayle, the effect of which is to destroy all the reputation for goodness which her friends have endeavored to rear up for her. She is writing to Lucia, who appears to have been at the head of her domestic establishment, about a maid, Livia, and says: 'If Livia is not obedient to you, whip her till the flesh be blue, and the blood run down her heels.' Such letters as these, Bayle calmly says, might have been suppressed without any injury to the writer. I believe Lucrezia Gonzague was an impudent woman, and a hypocrite in morality and religion."

The Editor.

The Editor is a man of many acquaintances. It is a cause of wonder, both to clerk and devil, how he can remember so many names and faces. He does not remember them; but upon all his visitors—and they drop in at the rate of one a minute—he bestows a kind of civility, which is ciophuic but general, insinuating though noncommittal. If he must know who a man is, he says, "Let me see, how do you spell your name?" And this sort of manœuvering is strictly necessary. For, consider—a young gentleman who had a piece of poetry in the paper, the year before last, comes to the city and calls upon the Editor. To that young gentleman, the insertion of his "Lines" was an event, an era. His soul bounded within him when he saw them in print. He showed them exultingly to his mother, sent a copy to his sweetheart, and handed them round on the "stump" of the village store, and has thought better of himself ever since. To the Editor the printing of those lines was no event at all. He has forgotten them and their author. Yet that young gentleman leaves the office under the full conviction that he is dear to the editorial eyes, and—worst mistake of all—welcome to the editorial sanctum. This is brought about by no hypocrisy on the Editor's part. Broad and general civility does the business, and does it quickly.

The Editor looks, upon all things, subjects, events, and persons in the light of "material" for articles. A catastrophe which makes the town shudder, is to him a "feature." He says, he "regrets to learn," or he is "pained to announce," but he is not—as an editor—pained in the least; no more than an undertaker is pained to bury a man in the highest style of fashionable anguish. His business is with the grave, and it is his business to do it gravely. The Editor, upon, is "rejoiced to be able to state," or has had the "extreme satisfaction of ascertaining beyond doubt;" and in such assertions his sincerity is perfect; for the pride and joy and glory of the Editor's heart is to be the "first to communicate" to the public an important piece of intelligence. Eagerly he scans the rival sheets, to see if they have any inkling of the matter, and how sure he is to let his readers know, that in "our last number we announced in advance of all our contemporaries!" and with what a ferocity of delight "all our contemporaries" are "enabled authoritatively to contradict the statements which were so ostentatiously paraded in a morning paper."

The Editor rather stumbled into his profession, than chose it. No man has been brought up to the business. It is taught at no school. No father says to his son shall be an editor. But as the duck takes to the water, as the Jew takes to money-lending, as the game-cock takes to fighting, so the predestined Editor takes to types and paragraphing; and the impulse which bore him into the profession, never ceases to act strongly upon him. He is full of his occupation, and never ashamed of it. He perceives the promise of a paragraph from afar off. He snuffs it in the air. He sees it in a window. He catches it in the night, and prays Heaven he may not forget it in the morning. If he takes a pill, he thinks Pill-Taking in the United States would be a "magnificent subject;" and so it would. If he cuts himself with a razor, it suggests observations on the Beard movement. And he is prone to ask, whether you have any objection to his giving publicity to that remarkable fact. Yet the Editor, desperate as he is to tell the public something it don't know, always keeps back part of his information; and there is an under-current of "highly interesting Intelligence" that seldom gets into print. Editors of the audacious species have made their fortune by tapping this turbid, but fertilizing stream.

The Editor has his delusions as well as the Sub-Editor. He thinks he creates public opinion; whereas he only reflects it. The man who runs ahead of an advancing throng seems to lead it, and does lead it, as long as he runs where they want to go; but let him turn a corner which they do not want to turn, and he finds himself running alone. No one conversant with our political history can be ignorant that, in influencing votes, papers are signally impotent, and particularly the papers which are very ably conducted. Another delusion of the Editor is, to suppose that the eyes of the country are upon his paper. He little thinks that the loudest thunder that ever deafened New York, died away among the Jersey hills, and was only heard of among the Highlands. The Editor, too, is subject to delusions with regard to his circulation. He hugs the thought, that if his circulation is small, it is select, and that he goes freely in the Fifteenth Ward, and is read under chandeliers, and lies on centre tables; which latter, perhaps, he does occasionally.

In the olden time, when Kings were as demigods, hedged about with splendor, which at once revealed their consequence and concealed their persons, it happened, now and then, that a peasant became the inmate of a court, confronted majesty face to face; saw him eat, drink, etc.; heard him talk, swear, snore, sneeze, etc. Extreme used to be the astonishment of the peasant, after he had overcome, in some degree, the awe inspired by the august presence, to discover that the puissant monarch of a realm, in whose hands were the issue of life and death, whose smile was wealth, whose frown was ruin, whose word moved armies, and whose whim decided the fate of nations—was really, after all, very much like people in general. Not less is the amazement of the "constant reader," when chance makes him intimate with a King of the modern kind—the responsible Editor of a leading newspaper.

There are but two Editors likely to achieve a striking success. One is the man who in his opinions, habits and tendencies, represents a large class; and the other is he who can utterly sink the man in the Editor, and devote his undivided attention to the study of the public, whose prejudices he flatters, whose desires he anticipates, whose opinions he echoes. Do you blame him? How long would you continue your subscription to a paper which neither spared your prejudices, nor anticipated your desires, nor echoed your opinions. Upon the whole, the Editor is a good fellow. He has his faults, like other men. But, generally speaking, he works hard and late, does a thousand obliging things, comes as near telling the truth as his readers will let him, and, above all, he produces what the world could not exist without—the Newspaper. Then, refuse him not his favorite adjectives, which are, "able," "genial," "public-spirited" and "whole-souled." [Home Journal.

The Last of the Blannerhassetts.

The eloquence of William Wirt, and the memorable conspiracy of Aaron Burr, made the name of Herman Blannerhassett as familiar as a household word to the people of this country some forty years ago. His fame, misfortunes and history, embalmed in the gorgeous eloquence of Wirt, are still familiar to many. But while every declamatory school-boy recites with a voice alternating from a shrill treble to a ho

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

THE AMERICAN LEGATION.—Plain Dress. Some stir has been caused in diplomatic circles by the absence of the American Embassador from the opening of Parliament on Tuesday. The Times blunders in its account of the ceremony thus:

"Only one exception to official uniform was observable, and the gentleman in question, who appeared in evening dress, and seemed unpleasantly conscious of his singularity, was at once set down as the American Minister."

The mistake on the part of the leading morning paper was too good a thing to be passed over, and the Globe accordingly lost no time in supplying the real facts.

"Neither the Minister, nor any member of the Legation," says the Evening Ministerial Organ, "was present, information having been sent by the master of ceremonies, that members of the diplomatic corps must appear in court dress, which cannot be worn by the American Legation, without disregarding instructions."

The Daily News is highly indignant at this alleged insult put upon the American people and Government, and our democratic cotemporary speaks out in this style:

"There can be very little doubt that a deliberate insult has been offered to the great nation with which, of all others, it becomes us to entertain the best relations. We will leave out of consideration the magnitude of our trade with America, the community of language, the common stock—we will only point to the possible position in which England may be placed in the course of the war into which it seems we are entering. We hope, however, that a cause for ill-feeling will not arise between the two great Anglo-Saxon nations on a subject which is fitted to be debated only between a couple of Chamberlains of different Principalities of the ancient Germanic Confederation."

The most circumstantial account of this silly business appears in the columns of the Morning Advertiser:

"Mr. Buchanan, we understand, wrote two letters for cards of admission to his suite and others. No answer was vouchsafed to these, save a printed form, stating that court dress could not be dispensed with, and two tickets, one for a lady, who does not even exist.

"In this manner Governor Seymour, U. S. Embassador to the court of Russia, who is now on his way to St. Petersburg, was prevented from being present, although he applied to his ministar to get him a ticket of admission. He will probably be very differently entertained by the Emperor of the Frenchand the Czar of Russia, both of whom will "condescend" to dispense with court livery.

"General Webb, also, was disappointed in the same manner. This gentleman is ex-minister from the United States to Austria, and was at one time of the engineering department in the American army. The embassy is said to feel the affront deeply."

We really hope, for the credit of our country, that another mistake of this kind will not again occur. In the middle of the nineteenth century such a dispute is worse than a mistake—it is a blunder. [Liverpool Times.

SPANISH DEGRADATION.—Those who have never traveled in Spain, or who are little acquainted with the manners and customs of the country, have an idea that all Spaniards are grave and formal, like the Castilian. This, however, is far from being the case. The people of each province are almost as distinct as different nations, having manners and customs, dress and dialect, peculiar to themselves. This peculiarity is doubtless owing to the isolation of the different provinces by the chain of mountains which intersect the peninsula, and cut off intercommunication, as well as the fact that for ages these provinces formed separate and distinct kingdoms. The rude Teutonic Gallician; the industrious Catalan; the idle, jovial Andalusian; the sly, vindictive Valencian; and the grave, dignified sons of Castille, differ from each other as much as the inhabitants of distinct nations. In traveling over this beautiful country, upon which nature has lavished the choicest favors, and which, under the rule of the Romans and Moors, was a land flowing with milk and honey, the tourist is struck with the scenes of desolation that everywhere meet the view. He roams over wild unpeopled wastes, treeless and arid, where the melancholy picture is often heightened by ruined castles and villages, the signs of former prosperity passed away. The towns through which he passes, are too often the abodes of poverty and wretchedness, and an air of gloom and sadness pervades their silent streets. The sea ports have lost their former commercial importance, and the silent quays, once thronged by a busy crowd, attest the decayed condition of the land. And wherefore, it may be asked, is this poverty, desolation and wretchedness so visible in a country which possesses advantages unsurpassed by any in Christendom; where a fertile soil and every variety of climate admit of the productions of the tropical and temperate zones; where the bowels of the earth yield precious metals, coal and quarries of innumerable varieties of marble; in fine, with a position most favorable to commerce and a line of sea-coast abounding in fine harbors? Yes, wherefore is this beautiful and once flourishing land so fallen, her people so sunk in ignorance and so far behind every other civilized nation in arts and agriculture? The answer may be found in these words—bad government! [Travels in Spain.

PARIS FASHIONS.—Paris, Feb. 7.—The principal and almost exclusive topic of conversation in the drawing-rooms is the recent reception at the Tuileries, which every one is agreed was much more characterized by its splendor than by its gaiety and liveliness. Every lady was so much occupied with the long train attached to her dress, and to which all were unaccustomed, that little attention could be given to anything else. The scene has been pretty freely talked of. The Empress wore a dress composed of those magnificent tissues which were presented to her by the city of Lyons; it was cloth-of-gold, besprinkled with flowers of cherry-colored velvet. The Princess Mathilde wore a cherry-colored cloak, very deeply bordered with gold. Madame de Persigny wore a cloak which is spoken of as having cost thirteen thousand francs. Several of these cloaks were made of a tissue; but the greater number were simply composed of tissues, of which dresses might afterwards be made—the same quantity of stuff serving for both garments. This distinction in the nature of the materials was very remarkable, and made a very costly display. There are only two receptions of this kind to be held each year, and a lady cannot, with propriety, appear a second time in a cloak which has once caused a sensation.

Mead-dresses in gold and silver, recently so much in vogue, are becoming somewhat less fashionable; flowers are increasing in favor, as also feathers; for the court balls, they are placed very low at the back of the head, in such a manner that the ends fall down on the neck and even on the shoulders. The materials for the dresses of ladies who do not dance, are the same as previously worn. Cloth of gold and silver is much worn, with patterns either of a single color on the ground, or bunches of flowers of varied colors. Very charming silk gauzes are made, interwoven with garlands of flowers, of the same color, the stems of the leaves and the leaves of the flowers being in silver; this material, in white, makes delightful dresses for young ladies: they have three volants, bordered, and the body has also a special pattern for itself. A novel shape for dresses is named a "godet," and which recalls the form of the tuniques, which were formerly in fashion.

NOVEL METHOD OF SUPPORTING A THEATRE.—Odessa, the principal commercial city of Russia, on the Black Sea, boasts the distinction of a theatre, but it is a very losing concern. In order, however, to keep it going, it is a government regulation that the same man who obtains the contract for supplying the quarantines which is very lucrative, shall also rent the theatre. The consequence is, that no opportunity is lost of discovering the infectious nature of the disease which may exist on board any of the ships in the harbor, while the number of persons thus imprisoned, the long duration of their quarantine, and the exhilarant prices charged, produce more than sufficient to set off against the losses incurred by a bad theatrical season, and so it is evident, that in proportion to the increase of sickness in the port, is the company at the Odessa theatre improved, and the enjoyment of the Odessa public heightened. Indeed, it is stated that in the event of another unusually severe plague, the manager has expressed his intention of engaging Rachel.

The Courrier des Etas Unis asserts that Russian [illegible] engaged in organizing privateers in [illegible] and other American ports. Most of [illegible] York papers attach little credit to the

SAMUEL JOHNSON AND HIS FATHER.—Johnson mentioned that he could not in general recuse himself of being an undutiful son. "Once, indeed," said he, "I was disobedient: I refused to attend my father to Uttoxeter market. Pride was the source of that refusal, and the remembrance of it was painful. A few years ago I desired to atone for this fault." But by what method? What method was now possible? Hear it; the words are again given as his own, though here, evidently by a less capable reporter:—"Madam, I beg your pardon for the abruptness of my departure in the morning, but I was compelled to it by conscience. Fifty years ago, Madam, on this day, I committed a breach of filial piety. My father had been in the habit of attending Uttoxeter market, and opening a stall for the sale of his books. Confined by infirm position, he desired me that day to go and attend the stall in his place. My pride prevented me; I gave my father a refusal, and now to-day I have been at Uttoxeter; I went into the market at the time of business, uncovered my head, and stood with it bare for an hour on the spot where my father's stall used to stand. In contrition I stood, and I hoped the penance was expiatory." Who does not figure to himself this spectacle amid the "rainy weather, and the sneers," or wonder "of the bystanders?" The memory of old Michael Johnson, rising from the far distances; and beckoning in the "moonlight of memory;" how he had toiled faithfully hither and thither; patiently amongst the lowest of the low; been buffeted and beaten down, yet ever risen again, ever trying it anew. And oh! when the wearied old man, as bookseller, or hawker, or tinker, or whatsoever it was that fate had reduced him to, begged help of thee for one day, how savage, diabolic, was that mean vanity which answered, No! He sleeps now; after his fatal fever, he sleeps: but how, O Merciless, how now will that still the sting of that remembrance? The picture of Samuel Johnson standing bareheaded in the market there, is one of the grandest and saddest we can paint. Repentance! Repentance! he proclaims, as with passionate sobs—but only to the ear of Heaven, if Heaven will give him audience; the earthly ear and heart that should have heard it, are now closed, unresponsive for ever. [Carlyle's Samuel Johnson.]

EDITORS, AND WHAT IS EXPECTED OF THEM WITHOUT CHARGE.—There is many a journalist now languishing in penury, while dozens to whose success in life he gave the first impulse, roll by him in their carriages, and have forgotten his very existence. There is no country save ours, in the world, where journalists are expected to do so much work for the special benefit of others without recompense. Generally out of this country editors are inaccessible, if not anonymous; they may let you know what they think, but not who thinks it. You cannot walk into an editor's room in London or Paris, and ask him to devote his time and his columns to your own advancement or profit. Here this is done every day, even by utter strangers.

Half an editor's time—sometimes his whole day, throwing over his proper work into the night—is given up to receiving the calls, listening to the stories, and obeying the requests of one good-natured friend after another, who drops in to try his chance of getting ten times as valuable an advertisement out of him for nothing, as he would be likely to get out of the publisher by regular paying. If he fails he loses nothing, for he has plenty of brass left; if he succeeds, he has used his time to decided advantage. And thus is ofvility abused—this le good feeling imposed upon.

Many an editor receives several letters in a day, requesting him to do this or that to documents, for the benefit of utter strangers or mere acquaintances, who have no shadow of claim to tax him. [N. Y. Tribune.

THE BEARD CONTROVERSY.—Much has lately been written on the subject of beards. We perceive that the ladies in the newspapers have entered into the controversy, as will be seen by the following from a lady correspondent of a paper called the "Ladies' Own," of Edinburgh.

"Dear Mr. Editor—If you wish to retain the favor of the ladies, you must advocate the cause of the beard and moustache, those great ornaments of the male sex. Shaving is a modern innovation. Samson wore a beard, and we all know what happened to him after he was deprived of it. The patriarchs, the apostles; Luther, John Knox, and Shakspeare, were all true to nature; and we have all read of Aaron's beard, which was famed for its great length and beauty. The advocates for smooth chins cannot certainly vaunt of the antiquity of shaving, which only dates back to the Norman conquest, whereas the beard worn in its natural state dates back to Adam in Paradise. What would a lioness think of her noble consort were he shorn of his magnificent mane, and what can we think of a man under a similar bereavement? I am a married woman, Mr. Editor, and I have persuaded my husband to cultivate a beard and a moustache. They are in their infancy yet, and he keeps them covered with a muffler when out of doors, to prevent animal heat and hasten their growth. But it is his intention, at the commencement of the ensuing year, to remove the muffler, and inaugurate them to the gaze of the admiring public. Perhaps, you will ask, what interest has the public in this private matter? I answer, much. Does it not show my influence over my husband? and what I have achieved may be accomplished by other wives, and the beard and the moustache become the fashion."

The New York Mirror has the following, pleasant article upon the subject:

The beard movement is rapidly extending. We go in for it up to the lips, on the score of comfort and economy. The beard is a badge of manhood; a contrast and an offset to the smooth face of woman; a protection from the biting frosts of winter, and the blistering heat of summer. Shaving is decidedly a barbarous custom, originating in some ascetic vow, to sacrifice what nature intended as an ornament. From the misanthropic priest, "all shaven and shorn," the bare-faced fashion was adopted by French dandies, for the sake of distinction.

A man with chin new reeped feels as rough as a grater. His face is like a hatchet, and his lips like a prickly pear. He dare not kiss the babe for fear of scratching it, and making it cry. But with a soft, silky, flowing beard the most delicate infant will respond to your mossrose lips, not only without danger to its tender cuticle, but with the most delightful gusto.

The ladies may set their faces against unmutilated beards as much as they please: the fashion is bound to spread. It is an unmistakeable sign of the hairyalocracy of nature.

YANKEE DOODLE IN AUSTRALIA.—A gentleman writes from Australia to this country as follows: "At Sydney there is a neat theatre which, during the engagement of good or even tolerable artists, is sure to be well supported. In August last, Stark, the American tragedian, and his wife, performed there. The house was crowded every night of their engagement. In all English theatres that ever we had attended, whether in Ireland or England, it is a standing rule that at the conclusion of the first piece the orchestra strike up the national anthem; and that during its performance the audience remain standing. Upon the occasion of our first visit to the Sydney Theatre, we fully expected to be condemned to witness this sham exhibition of loyalty; and were in the act of deliberating with ourselves what, under the circumstances, we should do—whether we should maintain our seat, fix our hat firmly on our head, fold our arms and frown a stern defiance upon the upstanding rank and fashion of Sydney, or rush out of the box in a state of virtuous indignation—when, to our utter amazement, instead of 'God save the Queen,' came forth the majestic strains of 'Hail Columbia!' The audience seemed not to notice the event, but when, immediately after, the orchestra struck up 'Yankee Doodle,' the dress circle hissed, the pit and gallery cheered, while, regardless of both, haug went the fiddles, tantarara went the kettle drums, and 'Yankee Doodle' was brought to a close amid a storm of applause. The incident, we thought, was significant, and we made a note of it accordingly. Only once did we hear 'God save the Queen' at that theatre, and that was on a command night, when his Excellency the Governor-General entered his box."

Henry Ward Beecher tells of a pear tree in Illinois, about ten miles from Vincennes, Ind., that bore 184 bushels of pears in 1834, and 140 bushels in 1840, of large sized pears. One foot above the ground it girths ten feet, and nine feet above, six and a half feet, and its branches spread over a space of 60 feet wide.

"Prudence," said Edmund Burke, "is not only the first in rank of the virtues political and moral, but she is the director, the regulator, the standard of them all."

THE U. S. SLOOP OF WAR PLYMOUTH IN A TYPHOON.—A letter in the Baltimore Sun, dated Hon Kong, Dec. 11th, gives the following account of the loss of Lieut. Matthews with fourteen of the crew of the sloop of war Plymouth in a typhoon in the China Sea: The U. S. sloop of war Plymouth, while at Port Lloyd, Bonin Islands, sustained a very severe and melancholy loss. On the 25th of October Lieut. John Matthews left the Plymouth in one of the ship's cutters, with a crew of 14 men, to go to one of the neighboring islands on a hunting and fishing excursion. Off the harbor Mr. M. was spoken by the English schooner Koh-i-noor, bound in, and the master of the vessel, remarking threatening appearances in the weather, offered to tow the boat of Lieut. M. back to port, but the latter declined, and continued on his way. Shortly afterwards a very violent typhoon came up suddenly, and blew with terrific force. Neither Mr. Matthews nor his boat, or any of his crew, have since been heard of. Two boats in command of Lieut. Balch and Lieut. Cooper, employed in surveying, made a narrow escape; fortunately, they were near enough to land to haul their boats on the beach before the heaviest part of the gale came on, and were thus saved. The Plymouth, with her boats and those of the American whale ship Bowditch, made active and diligent search for the missing ones, but, alas! no vestige of them could be found. They must have gone down, hopelessly and helplessly, but the berseved calling to mind miracles at sea, will perhaps continue to indulge a faint hope that the lost ones may yet be heard of. The Plymouth rode out the gale in safety with 4 anchors down and lower yards and topmasts struck. The Bowditch and Koh-i-noor, were blown upon the beach, but gotten off in the spring tides.

APPREHENDED SCARCITY OF TEA.—It is said that the wholesale tea dealers at New York are making something of ado about scarcity of teas, on account of the civil war in China. Some of them figure out a large deficiency in the supplies, as compared with the imports of last year—the immediate effect of which is, of course, to raise the price of the articles in the market. The market was tested by an auction sale of the cargo of the clipper ship Surprise, which arrived a few days since. The Hysons sold at from 40 to 32½c.; the Young Hysons 46 to 40; Imperial, 51½ to 42½; Gunpowder, 50 to 38; Hyson Skin, 24½ to 22; Hyson Twankay, 64 to 23½; Oolong, 36 to 30½; Souchong, 24½ to 24.

It is also said that private letters from London state that the tea merchants of England have sent orders for all their remaining teas to be shipped in American bottoms, fearing the Russian fleet in the China seas. At last dates scarcely any American tonnage was offering in China.

REMARKABLE LONGEVITY.—Frances, a free woman of color, died on Wednesday at the Mobile City Hospital, of debility, having attained the remarkable age of 140 years. We have known several cases of Creolee living to a great age, says the Advertiser, but do not remember an instance anywhere, or of any color, attaining to such an age as the above, and we should be inclined to discredit this, but that the fact is officially reported to us from the City Hospital.

ANECDOTE OF HOGG.—Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd, being at a ducal table, the Duchess said to him: "Were you ever here before, Mr. Hogg?" The poet, with his usual candor, replied: "Na, ma Laddy; I have been at the gott (the geta) wi' beasts that I was driving into England; but I wes never inside o' the heuse before."

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

We believe this to be an excellent preparation, and shall therefore not hesitate to recommend it to our readers. It has been tested in numerous instances in this city, and in several which have come under our own observation, it has accomplished what other popular medicines and some of our most skilful physicians had failed to accomplish—a perfect cure, in cases of (apparently) confirmed consumption. It is the only medicine for this disease which we can heartily recommend. [Temperance Advocate, Prov. R. I. march 4

EDUCATION.

GREENSBORO' FEMALE COLLEGE,
GREENSBORO', N. C.

FACULTY:

CHARLES F. DEEMS, D. D., President and Professor of the Natural Sciences and Belles-Letters,

REV. TURNER M. JONES, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and the Ancient Languages.

MONS. ERNEST JOUANNE, (of the College of Henri IV., Paris,) Professor of the French Language and Literature.

THEODORE WOLLE, Esq., Professor of Music.

MISS N. JANE SPEER, Miss NANNIE T. SPEED and Miss LUCY McGEE, Assistants in the Literary Departments.

MISS AUGUSTA M. HAGEN, Madame JOUANNE and Miss CAROLINE A. BLAKE Assistants in the Department of Music.

MISS R. L. SIMPSON, Drawing and Painting.

THOMAS C. BLAKE, Esq., Steward.

MRS T. C. BLAKE, Governess.

This Institution is situated in a healthy part of Central North Carolina. It is under the charge of the North Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In the selection of the Faculty the Trustees have had reference first of all to superior qualifications, and as far as practicable have obtained ladies and gentlemen of Southern birth and education.

The course of study is as full and as thorough as that in the best Female Seminaries. While particular attention is paid to the solid branches of education, sufficient regard is had for the ornamental: but above all the culture of the morals of their pupils is considered the great work of the teachers. Special lessons of economy are inculcated. The pupils are not allowed under any circumstances to contract debts. Parents deposit money in advance. All the expenditures of the scholars are under direct supervision of the President, and their purchases are made by their teachers. Perhaps in no similar institution of its numbers have the bills of the pupils been so small in the aggregate as at this College during the past year.

The department of Natural Science is furnished with excellent apparatus, some of the instruments being of the highest finish, with all modern improvements. Lectures are delivered on Chemistry by the President, and on Natural Philosophy by Prof. Jones, weekly, and are accompanied by experiments. In the selection of the Professor of French regard was had to purity and accuracy of pronunciation, and the present incumbent of that chair possesses more than ordinary qualifications for this office. The practical use of the language in conversation is the aim of daily lessons.

In the department of Oil Painting the teacher does not seek to give her pupils simply a "pretty picture" at the close of the session, but the principles of the art are assiduously taught in the expectation that those who have special talent for design may prosecute self-culture after leaving the school.

All the principal teachers have had much experience in the business of their profession, and "thoroughness" is the motto throughout the whole Institution. The Faculty are working under this formula: "We are striving to make not the largest but the best school in the land."

TERMS:

$70 a session (of 21 weeks) for Tuition and Board, including washing, fuel, lights, furnished rooms and attendance; $20 extra for music on the Piano or Guitar, or for Oil Painting; $5 for Drawing or French or Latin. The Trustees believe that no school of its grade as the South offers such advantages on such favorable terms.

For further particulars application may be made to the President of the College.

The next session will open December 23, 1858. ja6-6t

HARDSTOWN FEMALE INSTITUTE.
REV. A. A. MORRISON, A. M., Principal.

This Institution is under the patronage of the Louisville Annual Conference, and is located in Hardstown, Ky. Bardstown is located on the turnpike from Nashville to Louisville, with a line of daily stages passing through, and is 30 miles south of the latter city. Bardstown is pleasantly located, and is proverbial for health. The Institute buildings are large and commodious, and the pleasure grounds attached pleasant and spacious.

The Institution is furnished with a full Board of experienced and accomplished Teachers, and the course of study as select and thorough as can be found in any similar Institution in the land. The school is permanently established, and in point of healthiness of locality and facilities for a thorough Female Education, on reasonable terms—this Institution offers peculiar inducements to Southern Methodists and to the Southern community generally.

TERMS PER SESSION OF TWENTY WEEKS.
(Board payable in advance: Tuition at the close of the Session.)

Primary Department	$ 8 00
Junior Class	12 00
Middle Class	15 00
Senior Class	18 00
Music on Piano or Guitar	20 00
Vocal Music	4 00
Drawing and Painting	10 00
Greek, Latin, French or German	8 00
Boarding, including Washing, Lights and Fuel	40 00
For Fuel in school-room in winter	1 00

The next session will commence on the 30th of January last.

REFERENCES:

Rev J B McFerrin, Nashville, Tenn; W H Hickman, M D, Hon G W Hite, Bardstown, Ky; Rev C B Parsons, Rev E Stevenson, Rev B W Sehon, Rev A H Redford, Louisville, Ky; and the Ministers of the Louisville Conference generally.

Bardstown, Jan. 5, 1854.—6

EMORY and HENRY COLLEGE.
WASHINGTON COUNTY, VA.

THE SPRING SESSION of this Institution will commence on the 12th January, 1854. There is, we believe no College in the South offering stronger inducements to young men desirous of a thorough course of collegiate instruction.

TERMS:

Tuition per session of 5 months	$14 00
Board " " "	31 50
Washing " " "	5 00
Fuel " " "	2 00
Contingent charges " "	1 25
	$54 75

With a location famous for health, with ample Libraries and Apparatus, with a full and efficient Board of Instruction, and with a degree of cheapness unparalleled, any young man with limited means, fair abilities and proper energy can here acquire a superior, liberal or business education. For further information address

B. E. WILEY, President,
Emory Post-office, Va

jan6-6t

BUSINESS CARDS.

HARPER'S
NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE,
FOR MARCH.

The Publishers of HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE are compelled to solicit public indulgence again for the defects in its typographical appearance. With the present Number, however, the Publishers confidently trust that these defects will disappear. Neither labor nor expense, will be spared in the endeavor to render the Magazine still more attractive than it has been hitherto. It will be conducted upon the same general plan which has rendered it so universally popular; seeking to present, with the utmost attainable elegance of style, the largest amount of the most attractive matter which the wide range of American and European literature will afford.

CONTENTS.

THE GRINNELL EXPEDITION IN SEARCH OF SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—The Cabin of the Advance in Winter—The Advance and Rescue—The Sukkertoppen—Encounter with an Iceberg—Icebergs—Hummocks—Lively, Greenland—Entering Melville Bay—In the Pack—Coast Scene—The Devil's Thumb—The Advance in the Ice—Hummocks Forming—Moving Ice—Caught in the Ice—Auroris Borealis—The Cook's Gallery—Winter Rig—Arctic Hoods—The Advance Laid up—Of Crocker's Bay—Snow Shoes—The Ice-Pack Opening—Cutting out the Vessel—Seals at Play—Brooded Ice-Floe—Interior of Native Hut—Saluting the Town—Parting with the Prince Albert.

COTTON AND ITS CULTIVATION. By T. B. Thorpe.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—Shipping the Cotton—The Bloom—Cotton-Flower in the Morning—The same Flower at Evening—The Boll nearly Ripe—The Boll perfectly Ripe—The Boll shedding the Cotton—The Boll after shedding—Picking Cotton—Carrying Cotton to the Gin—The Gin-House—The Cotton Gin in Operation—Hauling Cotton to the River.

THE RAVEN. By G. P. R. JAMES.

SIGHTS AND PRINCIPLES ABROAD—FROM MASSEILLE TO FLORENCE.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. By JOHN S. C. ABBOTT.

MARS.—Krasnoi—Countries between Paris and Moscow.

MIGHTY HUNTERS.

AMY, THE CHILD.

A LEAF FROM THE PARISH REGISTER.

LORD BROUGHAM. By GEORGE GILFILLAN.

A PEEP BEHIND THE SCENES.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

STORY OF A MOTHER.

FLORENCE MAY—A LOVE STORY.

STORY OF THE DAISY.

THE FIRST AERONAUT.

LIFE IN ARGENTINA.

GRAND-DAME AND CHILD. By ALICE CAREY.

LIVES OF PLANTS.

THE RUBBERS OF LE MAGVAIS PAS.

PHARISEES AND SINNERS.

THE MERCHANT OF BAGDAD.

MONTHLY RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS.

United States: The Nebraska Bill; Debates in the Senate—The Case of Bedini—Rewards for Aid in the San Francisco—The Nebraska Bill in the House—Simon Tauszig—Anniversary of the Unionist ion Society—Death of Monsieur Bodisco—The Oaddon Treaty with Mexico—Actions in the States on the Nebraska Bill—Public Works in Pennsylvania—The Somora Expedition—Revenue and Expenses of California—New Mexico—Exploring Expedition across the Isthmus.—South America—Great Britain: The Eastern Question—Prince Albert—Bulwer's Address at Edinburgh—Trial of French Conspirators—Warlike Preparations—Reception of Mr. Mason—Dissolution of Spanish Ministry—Neutrality of Denmark—Note of the Four Powers—Reply of the Sultan—Circular of the French Minister—Entrance of French and English Squadrons into the Black Sea—Battle of Citale—The Insurrection in China—Conduct of the American Commissioner.

EDITOR'S TABLE.

POLITICAL REGENERATION.—Supernatural Influences—Human Means—Reform Parties—Spasmodic—Heal the Pustules, but do not Purify the Blood—Attendance on Primary Meetings—Professors of Political Engineering—Practical Difficulty—Caucus hack of the Caucus—The Athenian Ecclesia—The Few Covern—Heroic Periods—The Newspaper Press—Stumparet with the Clergy—Editorial Crack—Apostolical Commission—Clergyphobia—The Press self-ordained—Press in its Higher Aspect—Why inefficient against Political Corruption—The Church—The School.

EDITOR'S EASY CHAIR.

Gossip from Abroad—A Chance at London—The Queen, the Prince, and Politics—The Warlike Aspect—The Press and the Prince—Aspects of English Country Life—Repudiation and Mr. Skimpole—Albert Smith and his "Placer" on Mount Blanc—A Peep at France—The British and French Alliance—Senatory Arrangements in Paris—The Theatres and the Opera—Singular Law Case—Police Reports and Street Scenes—Diplomacy and Bayonets—The Austrians in Hungary and Italy—Life in Italy and Switzerland—Hard Times at Constantinople—Vale!

EDITOR'S BRAWER.

Anecdotes of Webster—Do Nothings—A "Prospect of New York in the Olden Time"—A Sweet Creature—The Poor Abbe—The Worth of a Doll—Jeremy Diddler on the Mississippi—The Death of the Firstborn—Who gets Best Paid!—Borrowing Troubles—Napoleon at St. Helena—V. F. W.—The Poor Customer—Knowledge of the Lord—Night Side of the Town—Entry into London—Mrs. Partington on the Latest News.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Books of the Month: New Edition of Campbell—The English Poets—Hitchcock's Outlines of Geology—Tales and Tales for Children—Gazetteer of the United States—Sketches of the Irish Bar—Human Anatomy, Physiology and Hygiene—De Quincey's Essays—Papers on American History—The Old Brewery—Uncle Toby's Library.—Foreign Literary Intelligence: The Athenæum on Kane's Arctic Expedition and Hillard's Italy—New Books announced—Dickens's Readings—New Quarterly—Portraits of Inventors—Murdoch's Retirement—Marriage of George IV. with Mrs. Fitzherbert—New French Books—Lamartine Company—Carus's Theirschen Morphologie—Humboldt's Minor Writings—Obituaries.

ILLUSTRATED PROGRAMME FOR JULLIEN'S CONCERTS.

ILLUSTRATIONS.—Pianissimo—Solo, Cornet-à-Piston—Solo, Contra-Basso—Encore—Yankee Doodle—Galoppe, Amazon and Flyer—God Save the Queen—Finale.

FASHIONS FOR MARCH.

ILLUSTRATIONS (furnished by Brodie in advance of their appearance)—Evening Costumes.

TERMS.—The Magazine may be obtained of Booksellers, Periodical Agents, or from the Publishers, at Three Dollars a year, or Twenty-five Cents a number. The Semi-annual Volumes, as completed, neatly bound in Cloth, are sold at Two Dollars each. Muslin Covers are furnished to those who wish to have their back Numbers uniformly bound, at Twenty-five Cents each. Seven Volumes are now ready, bound.

The Publishers will supply Specimen Numbers gratuitously to Agents and Postmasters, and will make liberal arrangements with them for circulating the Magazine. They will also supply Clubs, of two persons, at Five Dollars a year, or five persons at Ten Dollars. Clergymen supplied at Two Dollars a year. Numbers from the commencement can still be supplied.

The Magazine weighs over seven and not over eight ounces. The Postage upon each Number, which must be paid quarterly in advance, is Three Cents. mhl1 It

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers.

OCEAN SPRINGS.

The undersigned, having been appointed as agent for the sale of lots at Ocean Springs, has, under the authority of the proprietors of the place, had the whole property resurveyed and a map made upon a large scale; also, lithograph plans in pamphlet form, for distribution to persons wishing to purchase. The two will enable any one to see the location and qualities of any particular lot, or they will be shown them on the spot, either by one of the owners, or the subscriber.

The advantages of this watering place cannot be known, or fully appreciated, except by a visit to the place, and this is respectfully solicited from all those having any idea of locating on the Lake shore. The land on the Bay consists of the finest bluffs, with large live oak trees, between here and Mobile; some twenty or twenty-five feet above the level of the lake, with ravines between each bluff, and which serve as a drain to them; and to all the land in the rear back to old Fort Bayou, upon which the two springs are situated, say about three quarters of a mile from the Bay. The whole of the land between the Bay and the Bayou is better drained than any other place upon the Lake. The soil is good, and produces (with little aid, and which is at hand in the bottoms,) excellent corn and vegetables. The absence of sand, so common at the watering places, affords a fine opportunity for good drives.

The Bay affords the best opportunity for sailing with safety, of any place upon the coast. Abundance of fish and oysters can be obtained at all times, and in the winter, ducks in any quantity. The bathing is also very superior.

The superior virtues of the two springs (sulphur and chalybeate) have not only been proven by the analysis of some of our first chemists, but their medicinal qualities have been fully demonstrated in the cure of several well-known citizens of this and other States.

A hotel of the first class will be kept open summer and winter, and in addition to which an infirmary will be established from the first of May next, near the springs, under the management of two of the most respectable physicians of this city.

Persons wishing to purchase any of this property are invited to call on the undersigned and inspect the large plan and lithographs, and for full particulars.

D. PERKINS, Real Estate Broker, mh11 6m Commercial Place

1000 BOOK AGENTS and COLPORTEURS WANTED—To sell THE "OLD BREWERY."

This extraordinarily popular work is destined to have a larger sale than Mrs. Stowe's famous book. The first edition demanded was Thirty Thousand Copies, which is without example in the history of book publishing. Five hundred thousand readers are ready to purchase this wonderful history of reform at the "Five Points," when an opportunity is presented. Its thrilling narratives have received the unanimous verdict of unquantified praise from the secular and religious press.

N. B.—The most liberal terms will be given. Attractive circulars for canvassing furnished gratuitously on application to

STRINGER & TOWNSEND,
mh11-4t Publishers, No. 222 Broadway, N. Y.

Balls! Bells!! Balls!!!

For Churches, Academies, Factories, Steamboats, Plantations, etc., made, and a large assortment kept constantly on hand by the Subscribers, at their old established and enlarged Foundry, which has been in operation for Thirty Years, and whose patterns, and process of manufacture are so perfected, that their bells have received world-wide celebrity for volume of sound and quality of tone. The present Proprietors have recently succeeded in applying the process of loam moulding in Iron Cases to Bell Casting—which secures a perfect casting and even temper; and as an evidence of the unimpaired excellence of their Bells, they have just received—Jan. 1854—the FIRST PREMIUM (A Silver Medal) of the World's Fair in New York, over all others, several from this Country and Europe being in competition; and which is the 16th Medal, besides many Diplomas, that have been awarded them! They have patterns for, and keep on hand, Bells of a variety of tones of the same weight, and they also furnish to order Chimes of any number of bells, or key, and can refer to several of their make throughout the States and Canada. Their Hangings, comprising many recent and valuable improvements, consist of Cast-Iron Yoke, with moveable arms, and which may be turned upon the Bell; Spring acting on the Clapper, prolonging the sound. Iron Frame, Tolling Hammer, Counterpoise, Stop, etc. For steamboats, Steamships, etc., their improved Revolving Yoke, or Fancy Hangings in Brass or Bronze of any design furnished. We can supply whole sets, or parts, of our Improved Hangings, to rehang Bells of other construction, upon proper specifications being given. Old Bells taken in exchange.

Surveyors' Instruments of all descriptions made and kept on hand.

Being in immediate connection with the principal routes, in all directions, either Railroad, Canal or River, orders can be executed with dispatch, which, either personally or by communication, are respectfully solicited.

A. MENEELY'S SONS,
West Troy, Albany Co., N. Y.

Dr. J. K. Keanon,
Castilian Spring,
Holmes County, Mississippi,

Is now prepared to offer good accommodations to invalids who may desire to visit Castilian Spring, as place themselves under his care for treatment. This is one of the most desirable retreats for invalids in the South, located in an elevated healthy region of country, with abundance of fine Freestone water. The mineral water is composed very strongly of Iron, Sulphur, Magnesia and Soda, and contains largely of Carbonic Acid Gas.

The diseases which it has cured are Dyspepsia, Dropsy, General Debility, Affections of the Kidneys, Bladder, and the various functional and organic derangements of the Womb. This water is especially efficacious in Diseases of Females.

Board, per week—$7.

Reference—Ministers of Miss. Conference.
Rev. J. B. Walker,	} New Orleans.
Rev. M. N. McTyeire,

march 4 6m

AYER'S
CHERRY PECTORAL,
FOR THE CURE OF
COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS,
BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH,
CROUP, ASTHMA AND CONSUMPTION.

Many years of trial, instead of impairing the public confidence in this medicine, has won for it an appreciation and notoriety by far exceeding the most sanguine expectations of its friends. Nothing but its intrinsic virtues and the unmistakable benefit conferred on thousands of sufferers, could originate and maintain the reputation it enjoys. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded, this has gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

While it is a fraud on the public to pretend that any one medicine will infallibly cure—still there is abundant proof that the Cherry Pectoral does not only as a general thing, but almost invariably cure the maladies for which it is employed.

As time makes these facts wider and better known, this medicine has gradually become the best reliance of the afflicted, from the log-cabin of the American peasant to the palaces of European kings. Throughout this entire country, Cherry Pectoral is known as the best remedy extant for diseases of the Throat and Lungs, and in many foreign countries it is coming to be extensively used by their most intelligent physicians. In Great Britain, France and Germany, where the medical sciences have reached their highest perfection, Cherry Pectoral is introduced, and in constant use in the Armies, Hospitals, Alms-houses, Public Institutions and in domestic practice, as the surest remedy their attending physicians can employ for the more dangerous affections of the lungs. Also in milder cases and for children it is safe, pleasant and effectual to cure. In fact, some of the most flattering testimonials we receive have been from parents who have found it efficacious in cases particularly incidental to childhood.

The Cherry Pectoral is manufactured by a practical Chemist, and every ounce of it under his own eye, with invariable accuracy and care. It is sealed and protected by law from counterfeits, consequently can be relied on as genuine without adulteration.

We have endeavored here to furnish the community with a medicine of such intrinsic superiority and worth as should commend itself to their confidence—a remedy at once safe, speedy and effectual, which this has by repeated and countless trials proved itself to be; and trust by great care in preparing it with chemical accuracy, of uniform strength to afford physicians a new agent on which they can rely for the best results, and the afflicted with a remedy that will do far them all that medicine can do. Prepared and sold by

JAMES C. AYER,
Practical and Analytical Chemist, Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists.

J. WRIGHT & CO., New Orleans,
mar4 3m Wholesale Agents.

JEFFERSON BOOK STORE.

W. FLEMMING, BOOKSELLER and STATIONER, corner of Jackson and Tchoupitoulas streets, Fourth District, New Orleans, would respectfully call the attention of Country Merchants, Colleges, Academies

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH, } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 7. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, MARCH 18, 1854. WHOLE NO. 163.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

PAMPHLETS FOR THE PEOPLE.

Mr. EDITOR: I send you by mail, accompanying this, a pamphlet which I received through the mail a week since. It purports to have been written by "A Presbyter of Mississippi," and is called "Pamphlets for the People." It is addressed to me and purports to be another review of a series of letters on Apostolic Succession, which I published last summer, addressed to Bishop Green.

I have read some small portions of this pamphlet, and threw it aside as quite unworthy the notice of any one. I regarded it, and still regard it as the most feeble, pointless, childish thing I ever saw in print in my life. I supposed this would be the last of it, from its excessive imbecility places it, I supposed, beyond the reach even of curiosity. I am, however, I was mistaken. The last number of the Christian Herald, of Vicksburg, which I have received, contains a formal recommendation and endorsement of it. I suppose I am expected to say something about it. The editors of the Herald are responsible. Of the "Presbyter" I have no knowledge, nor do I believe there is a Presbyter in Mississippi who will acknowledge the fellowship.

The editors of the Herald say they are "so much pleased with" this pamphlet, that they will "hereafter either publish them entire or make liberal extracts from them." They will do neither. The editors of the Herald are sensible men. They may feel themselves in duty bound to speak complimentary of anything that opposes my little innocent book of letters to Bishop Green; but they know better than to fill their columns with the senseless trash with which this pamphlet is filled. They may possibly select and find a few pages, here and there, that by possibility may do. Beyond this they will not go. They can but think as I do of its feebleness.

In the first place, this unknown "Presbyter" is totally ignorant of the argument. He knows nothing of the questions at issue. He is as ignorant of the positions I have assumed in the letters to Bishop Green, as he is of the doctrines and ministry of his own church. He says in perhaps a dozen places, so far as I have read, that the ministry of the Episcopal Church is a "hereditary" ministry; he speaks of tracing its "hereditary descent," of "the hereditary commission of the apostolic ministry through a successive episcopate," &c. And you must perceive that by no means significant are the Episcopalians—by which I define term all intelligent churchmen—Episcopalian churches that are governed by hereditary bishops."

I quote him exact, italics, small capitals and large ones. Again: "And it strikes me reverend brother, that every real branch of the apostolic and ancient church is bound to make good its claim to union with Christ, the Head, by unbroken ecclesiastical lineage."

He says the Methodists object to the Campbellites," and the validity of their orders, "because they have no hereditary or transmitted ministry."

"Though one of the youngest Presbyters, by ordination, in this church, (I should think I was about the youngest) and though you are, as it were, GOLIAH among you own hosts, yet, taking example of David I will with a few smooth stones in my sling, trusting in God, go forth to meet you."

And the way he goes forth is to assume that I have written a book on a subject I never thought of—viz: in opposition to the validity of the orders of the ministry in the Episcopal Church.

"If your book be true, my brother, there is no punishment that God holds in reserve for greater transgressors, that ought not to be visited upon the heads of the Bishops and clergy of the Episcopal Church for assuming to be called of God when they are not."

Who ever intimated that the "bishops and clergy" of that church were not "called of God," or were not proper and valid ministers? Will the editors of the Herald say that ever I did? And yet this silly writer devotes a considerable portion of his "pamphlets" to what he calls an "argument" with me on this point. And in every place, so far as I have seen, he is about as unsuccessful in finding out what questions I discussed in my letters. So far as I have read he has not attempted to contravene a question that I raised in those letters, though he has—after a fashion—controverted several questions he has had the kindness to raise for me. This, however, is evidently not design: it is sheer ignorance.

"You labor to show that it was impossible that the hereditary right of ordination could have come down, unbroken, through a line of successive consecrated Bishops."

Not exactly; I never heard of a "hereditary right of ordination" before in my life. I don't know, however, but any kind of a right of ordination might "come down" almost anywhere.

Again: This pamphlet, which the editors of the Herald "cannot too much admire," contains, all over it, in forty places, quotations purporting to come from me, which are not in my Letters or elsewhere in anything I have written. This is most singular indeed. The "Presbyter" does not appear to understand what a question means, or the use writers make of inverted commas. He uses them at random—hither and thither, on every page. The book, so far as I have read, contains scarcely a correct quotation from my Letters, and yet it seems to quote from me frequently and liberally all the while. Really, here is stupidity unexampled, or, a budget of about the silliest frauds I have seen.

But let us look a little at the sublime and the classic.

"It is as if a man given to much tobacco-chewing should enter my parlor saying: 'Sir, I am a great chewer, and my friends say that I spit amber on all sides, no matter where I may be, and do a deal of mischief thereby, and that sometimes I stain and injure the furniture when—I never thought of such things;' and, sir, 'I mean no such thing.' 'I have no such sentiment within me.' If any spit should fall from my lips over your wife's carpet or cushions, I beg you will consider that I don't intend any injury."—Verbatim!

His "argument" is on this wise: "A true and lawful ambassador must, therefore, be sent by a superior power; must be lawfully commissioned with authority to act for that power; and, in case of death, authorized to convey and transmit his commission and seal of office to a successor as charge d'affaires; who shall hold and stand in his place, with equal authority, ex-officio, and during the term that he retains these delegated powers.

"Thus Paul to Timothy says: 'The things thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same COMMIT thou to faithful men WHO shall be able to teach others also.' Here we have the beginning of the transmission of the ambassaderial commission of teaching the gospel and extending the Church, which being fully committed to Paul by his King and Lord, is here conveyed by the Apostle to Timothy, who is commanded to convey it in his turn to 'faithful men,' who, when they depart this life, must teach others also."

Was ever such nonsense written! Will the Herald copy it? It dare not! It is copied exact, italics, small capitals and all. The relation of king and ambassador is a correct and proper illustration of that subsisting between the minister and Christ. And so, the "Presbyter" says, the king appoints his ambassador: and the ambassador appoints his successor, when he dies, and he his successor, and so on in a succession forever, and of course we must do the same thing in the Church!

But I was thinking the "ambassaderial commission" was "conveyed" in a way somewhat different, usually. I was under the impression that at the expiration of the service of one incumbent, the king himself appointed the successor. But no, the "Presbyter" says the ambassador appoints his own successor after he is dead!

I repeat, will the Herald copy, entire, the two last paragraphs, from page 16 of the pamphlet "we are so much pleased with"? The editors would not only be ashamed of such bunglingly written nonsense, but they know better than to publish in their paper, to be read by Episcopalians, such an illustration of the Christian ministry. Will they publish the 12th page? They will not. But as they are going the whole—thirteen chapters—or make liberal extracts, allow me to ask them to publish the first chapter—or the first and second, entire. They will not do it.—They cannot! The remaining eleven may be of a piece with the first two. I have only glanced hastily at some of them. Will the Herald publish these two first chapters? No!

In the letters to Bishop Green it was argued that, as high church men claim all the advantages of a Christian Church and ministry, they ought to present to the world all the Christianity, and instead of which they present only one in thirty of the professing Christians of this country, counting the entire Episcopal Church, not over half of which is composed of high churchmen.

This argument the Presbyter in question understands as having been made to show that the Methodist Church is the only true one, and the Episcopal Church spurious; and he argues wonderfully to prove that—"numbers, therefore, my brother, are no criterion for deciding upon claims of being the Church of God."

Again, it was argued in the Letters, that if, as was contended by Bishop Green and his school, the only authority to preach was committed by Christ to the Eleven Apostles, as in Matt. 28, 16, 20, upon which text the argument is based, then the Apostle Paul had no ministerial authority, for he was neither one of the Eleven nor was he ordained by one of them.

Our "Presbyter" understands this argument as denying ministerial authority to St. Paul! And he "argues" most lustily to defend St. Paul, and to prove that he was truly a minister. He don't understand the difference between my denying the validity of St. Paul's ministry, and showing that their arguments compel them to deny it. His stupidity is below ordinary blockheadedness!

In truth, sir, though I have not read this pamphlet, nor is it at all certain I ever shall, from what little I have seen of it, I do not feel much complimented by its being addressed to myself. I like to see a good, fair, bold argument on any side of any question, but I hardly think it is very good taste for boys under fifteen to address public pamphlets to men of my years. Of the thing itself, however, I should perhaps have said nothing; I know not who wrote it, if indeed it was written at all, nor have I the least desire to know; but I have a right to speak of the editors of the Herald for using my name in connection with the emptiest and most senseless production they ever saw.

I send the work to you, Brother M., and would like to know if you "admire the tone" as much as our friends at Vicksburg do. Perhaps you too may be "much pleased with these Pamphlets for the People," and may wish to "either publish them entire or make liberal extracts from them." You are at perfect liberty to do either. By reading them you will no doubt learn many things about "churches that are governed by hereditary Bishops," "unbroken ecclesiastical lineage," &c., &c.

You will also learn, what I presume you never heard before, that I have "tried to destroy the validity of the Episcopal orders of the Bishop of Mississippi." For my part I did not know that we had, in this State, any such officer as "the Bishop of Mississippi," though it seems we have "a Presbyter of Mississippi." I supposed that the State of Mississippi did not adopt any sectarian form of Christianity, and that Bishop Green was merely the Bishop of the Episcopal Church in Mississippi, or of the Diocese of Mississippi.

You will also learn that the types can print anything in pamphlet form, and that editors are sometimes, by the rules of party training compelled to recommend almost anything to their party. Though perhaps if you will take the trouble to read further into the pamphlets than I have done, you may be more successful.

Last summer or Spring, I wrote and published a little book of "Letters to Bishop Green," with the view to demonstrate the absurdity of Apostolic succession. How far I succeeded I leave to intelligent men to determine. I wrote the book because I believed the great difficulty with Christianity in the present age to be formalism, and the teachings of formalism, in opposition to vital piety. You, sir, among others, have been pleased to speak commendatory of the work. I thought likely it might be controverted. It has been, by writers of ability far beyond any pretensions of mine. It is before the world and open to controversy. Any man has a right to controvert it; and to do it in his own way. Let us many do it as he choose. As is the case with all published debate, it invites debate; and challenges controversy. But at the same time I have a right to expect to be controverted by grown up men, or at least by something a little removed from the nursery. The insertion of the term "Presbyter," whether truly or falsely applied—I know not—cannot shield the adventurous scribbler from the exposures to which his temerity entitle him.

I would not refuse to debate any suitable question publicly with any clever school boy. I might by so doing benefit him or others; or I might be benefitted myself; but I have learned that some things can be written which are entirely below the reach of serious debate. Perhaps, Brother McTyeire, you can have more patience with this "Presbyter" than I have. So I turn him over to you.

R. ARNEY.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

NATURAL RIGHTS AND CIVIL LIBERTY.

Sine lege, est sine ratione, modo, ordine.

Some time in the early part of February, in the year of our Lord 1854, the U. S. mail stage, on its way from Texas to the commercial emporium of north-western Louisiana, halted in the quiet little village of Greenwood. Scarcely had the wheels of the ponderous vehicle ceased to turn when some half a dozen men emerged and hastened with various degrees of speed toward the door of a house, where had been kept the previous year a modern "exchange." Very soon the two or three who had first entered the door were seen returning with saddened countenances, and wearing very much the appearance of men who had been cheated of an expected pleasure. In answer apparently to some inquiries from their fellow-passengers, they shook their heads in sullen silence. "Can't we get a glass across the street?" "Not a drop; the people have voted us down and taken away our license." "And do they call this a free country?"

Significant glances were exchanged and most of the party seemed desirous of hiding themselves within the coach, looking very like one feels when, in being disappointed of a promised enjoyment, he has awkwardly placed himself in a predicament to be laughed at, or when he has been the subject of a successful joke on the first day of April. But though a majority of the passengers were evidently disposed to submit to the force of circumstances, the rum-thirsty fellow who boisterously asked if he were in a free country, was heard to mutter various incoherent expressions about natural rights and civil liberty, which, as dust and distance hid the coach and silenced its burly occupant, suggested a train of thought upon a subject that 'twere better, 'twere better understood.

It is a reasonable inference to suppose that nature intended man should use what she has given him, in common with the rest of his species, and made necessary to his existence or wellbeing. So we say a man has a right to drink water from the fountains which nature has provided, to breathe the air of heaven, and enjoy the light of the sun. It is his also to enjoy life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Nature has been bountiful to man; she has been almost prodigal in her provision for his necessities; in her stores are exhaustless supplies of the treasures of happiness. These treasures are all around him, and even in this sin-stricken world there is scarcely a product of nature that may not minister to his enjoyment; but if he would make everything around him contribute to his happiness he must first learn a lesson of obedience, and subject himself to the restraints which nature has imposed upon the use of all her gifts. And the inference that nature has imposed these restraints is just as reasonable as that she has given the right of use; for if she has given man unrestrained freedom in the use of her gifts she has involved herself in an obvious absurdity, since it is continually happening that several persons want to possess and use the same natural object at the same time. If we could imagine a man to live in what has been sometimes, very improperly, called a state of nature, that is in the absence of society, without any of the conflict of wants which pertain to it, deriving no benefit from its institutions and no protection from its laws, the unrestrained liberty of the tiger, as he roams his native jungle, would be his privilege, and it would be his duty to repel any invasion of his natural rights, as they have already been defined, by his own individual force. But no such unrestrained freedom of action can exist in a state of society, where even these fancied natural rights are surrendered for the common good, and where the duty of protection is transferred from the individual to the community. Every one is supposed to consent to this in consideration of the many and great advantages he derives from becoming a member of society, and especially for the better protection he receives, in his person and property, from the power of combination and the force of numbers. Here, then, the distinction of rights practically ceases, and natural is merged into civil liberty. It follows that the first function of civil government is to restrain the conduct of its subjects, and if denied the power of prohibition, it has no power left for good. Without the restraints of law there can be no such thing as liberty, because they constitute its very essence. And the power of government may extend so far, and does extend so far in every civilized state, as to deprive the individual of the dearest, most sacred and unalienable natural rights; yea, even to depriving him of his liberty or his life. Nevertheless there is a limit, clear and well defined, to the control of the government over the acts and property of the individual. The powers of government extend to whatever is necessary to the peace, welfare and good order of society, and they can extend no further without encroaching upon the just principles of human liberty. If this subject be closely looked into it will be found the individual yields nothing but the liberty to do wrong, and in compensation society undertakes to protect his person and his property, and guarantees to him the liberty to do right. To secure these ends it becomes the duty of the government to enact laws not only to punish crime but to restrain vice, and prohibit immorality. If these restrictions are necessary to the wellbeing of society and the peace and happiness of its members, the dependent state, physical wants, and moral constitution of man bear witness with Revelation that he was created to live in society.

We come now to the application of the principles laid down above to the subject of selling spirituous liquors, to be drunk as a beverage. It is constantly asserted by those interested in the traffic of ardent spirits that a law to prohibit its sale, takes away their liberties and destroys their natural rights. But in the first place nature has never formed a drop of alcohol in any of its multifarious combinations. It does not exist in the animal, vegetable or mineral kingdoms. It is no where in nature to be found. And if it were in abundance, it bears no such relation to man's being, as to make its use a condition of his existence. It is an artificial compound: and its use is destructive of animal existence. It is a poison. And to say that man has a right to use it, or to vend it, derived from nature, is to assert more than a falsehood—it is an absurdity. But further than this, we have shown that if the exigent public good required it, government may prohibit its sale by law, even though this were numbered among the most sacred natural rights. The champions of temperance have proven a thousand times that they war against evils which threaten, more than all other evils combined, the existence of our civil institutions—evils which, if unchecked, bid fair to engulf the whole nation in irretrievable ruin; and if it be the duty of government to protect society by laws restraining the conduct of individuals, it ought most assuredly to strike at the very root of such an evil as this by prohibiting its sale altogether for purposes of beverage.

CADDO.

From our English Correspondent.]

A REMARKABLE INSTANCE OF MISSIONARY ZEAL.

ENGLAND, Feb. 9, 1854.

England's greatest glory must be sought for in her Evangelist efforts and labors for the salvation of the heathen world. Her naval and military renown may be great; but her missionary renown is far greater. The names of Wellington and Nelson will be forgotten when the names of Heber, Carey, Williams, Coke and Duff will be enshrined more sacredly than ever in the memory of the Church. And the heroic and self-sacrificing spirit of living, diffusive Christianity is not restricted to the leaders of the missionary enterprise; it is often found reigning in the hearts of those who compose the membership of our Churches—the great body of Christ's flock. It is all but universal among the members of our Churches, that when religion is flourishing in their midst, the tide of missionary feeling is strong enough to break down all the embankments of selfishness. Then, the pulsations of the missionary heart beat fast and strong, exerting an influence for good to the farthest bounds of Christ's Kingdom.

Peter Grangy, the subject of this sketch, whose acquaintance I made some ten years ago at a missionary meeting in the county of Cornwall, was a striking example of the close alliance between deep personal piety and missionary zeal. Peter was a working-man, and, having a large circle of children, he often knew the gripe of poverty. He was altogether illiterate; when his conversion occurred he did not know the letters of the alphabet. His lot was that of constant toil, and the earnings of that hard, monotonous labor scarcely sufficed to provide the plain necessary food for himself and family. Nevertheless, Peter had a heart of intense sympathy with the perishing millions of the heathen, and of expansive benevolence towards them.

My introduction to Peter was on this wise. At a missionary meeting held in a very poor neighborhood, among Cornish miners, which I attended, Peter was present, and took a deep interest in the proceedings. It was a sublime spectacle to gaze upon these poor people, uniting in importunate supplication, and listening with ardent feelings to our addresses, hearing upon the salvation of the unsaved—millions of mankind. Peter's eye kindled as the meeting proceeded, his tongue and heart responded to the petitions presented to the Great Father of all, and no one appeared to have a greater stake than Peter in a large pecuniary contribution. As the meeting drew to a close, the plates were sent round from seat to seat to gather in the collection. When counted, the sum was announced to these God-fearing miners, according to our custom; and when it was stated that the collection amounted to the liberal sum of nine pounds, six shillings, or nearly $50, Peter stood up at the lower part of the chapel and said: "Here, Mr. Chairman, is half a crown more to make it up to ten pounds."

This piece, by some mysterious power of attraction, drew other pieces of silver, from other pockets; and when this cannonade upon the platform had ceased, and the spoils had been gathered up, the collection was announced to be a few shillings above ten pounds. But, before we could pronounce the benedictions, Peter was on his legs again: "Mr. Chairman," he said, "guineas are in fashion now; here is a shilling more to make up the collection to ten guineas instead of pounds," and, suiting the action to the word, up came the shilling. This brought upon us another cannonade, which resulted in an addition to the evening's gatherings, bringing up the amount to more than ten guineas. Peter, after this, was still anxious to do more; for, as we were finally closing the meeting, he shouted out: "Mr. Chairman, if you want any more money, you may have it; for we are so happy in a Saviour's love that you may have as much as you please." But, believing that these poor yet noble delvers in the bowels of the earth had, if possible, transcended their own ability, we persisted in terminating the proceedings of one of the most memorable meetings I was ever privileged to attend.

After leaving the chapel, I sought for Peter, and walked part of the distance home with him; and in the conversation I had with him, I discovered that his zeal for missions was based on principle, and not a mere ebullition of enthusiastic feeling. He wanted, he said, all to be saved, at home and abroad, and to be saved speedily. He lamented over the apathy of the majority of Christian professors, who could sit at ease, keep their money, and let souls perish in incredible numbers. Having to hold another missionary meeting in another village seven miles off the following month, I invited Peter to accompany me, and as he had such a right state of heart on the subject of Christian missions, to try his hand at making a speech. He shrank from making a speech, but engaged to go with me to the meeting.

Accordingly, on the day appointed, Peter called for me, and we went together to this second meeting. About the only rich man in the chapel was our Chairman, a sort of squire in the village, a leading member of the little church; but, I grieve to think, a man who dwelt in a cold region, very far removed from a genial, large-hearted liberality. With some difficulty I got Peter to come to the platform, and yield to my request to advocate the cause of Christian missions. Presently the Chairman announced his name, and Peter, with some perturbation, arising from the novelty of his position, began his pleading with the audience on behalf of the heathen. He wanted to know how it was that the world was not more nearly converted. He endeavored to show that vast tracts of heathenism, not yet visited, were accessible to the Gospel-husbandmen; that there were young men raised up by God, and approved by the Church, ready to go forth into the high-places of the great harvest-field; but that, for the want of funds, these young men could not be sent out, and the fields white unto the harvest could not be reaped: "Whose fault is this?" thundered Peter. "Why, Mr. Chairman, it's the the fault of these rich Christians who won't let the Lord have the money for this purpose. God has opened the nations! The heralds of mercy, too, are provided in those young men, who are waiting to go and preach the Gospel to every creature, and there is money enough in the hands of God's people; but they refuse to give it up—they won't obey their Lord when he is demanding their help." Peter was an utter stranger to the Chairman's penurious character; but the people of the village who knew him smiled as they saw him writhe about under Peter's burning words. The Chairman's property consisted chiefly in a large number of houses; but of this Peter knew nothing. My zealous friend, in the course of his address, attempted to show the folly of hoarding money and accumulating property. "What do people want," he said, "with so many houses to cumber and trouble them? Can they live in them all? Is not one house quite enough for a man? And why should the money be saved up, as some say, for the children? I have got nine children at home; but why should I save up for them? Nobody ever saved up anything for me!"

I am sure the Chairman must have been relieved when Peter sat down; but the meeting testified their sympathy with Peter's sentiments by a collection that far outstripped their doings in former years. Peter still lives—and may he long live to provoke lending more to love and good works. X. Y. Z.

CATHOLICS NOT PAPISTS.—There is a large number of this so-called Catholic population who are merely reputed Catholics. They are considered such by the clergy. Of this description was a certain Italian in Cincinnati, who placed his daughter in a Protestant female college, because the education in the Catholic school was so imperfect that his daughter was behind those of her age. Our Italian friend, when introducing his daughter said, "I am a Catholic, but no papist." Our Roman Catholic friends have learned that the Protestantism of the United States, comprising its free institutions, makes sad work with Romanism in this country, so that the great body of the children and descendants of Papists either become Protestants, or are detached from the Church of Rome.

[Independent.

ISOLATED CONGREGATIONS. There were at the time of the census 539 places of worship with 10,148 sittings of "isolated congregations," refusing to acknowledge connection with any particular sect.—[London Times.

The avaricious man is like the barren, sandy ground of the desert, which sucks in all the rain and dews with greediness, but yields no fruitful herbs or plants for the benefit of others.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

RANDOM NOTES ON BEARDS.

It has been calculated by a curious investigator, Withof, that the hair of the beard grows at the rate of one line and a half in the week. This will give a length of six inches in the course of the year, and for a man of eighty years of age, twenty-seven feet, which have fallen before the edge of the razor. Such an amount of growth appears in nowise remarkable, when we learn from Eble, that, in the Prince's Court at Eidan, there is a full-length painting of a carpenter whose beard was nine feet long, so that when engaged at work he was obliged to carry it in a bag.

The hairs of different regions of the body of the same individual present some degree of variety of dimensions. In the following table the diameter of the hair of the head is given in the first line as a standard of comparison:

Hair, black.
Head.....	1-350 of an inch.
Beard.....	1-200 " "
Whisker.....	1 200 " "
Eyebrows.....	1-250 " "
Eyelashes.....	1-300 " "

The ancient Romans suffered their beards to grow till about the year of the city 454, when one P. Treinius brought barbers from Sicily, and first introduced the custom of shaving at Rome, which continued to the time of Hadrian, who, to cover some excrescences on his chin, revived the custom of letting the beard grow, but that of shaving was soon after resumed.

The day on which young men first began to shave was held as a holiday, according to Juvenal, and presents were sent to them by their friends. The first growth of the beard was consecrated to some god—thus, Nero consecrated his in a golden box, set with pearls, to Jupiter Capitolinus.

In grief and mourning the Romans allowed the beard to grow; sometimes they tore it and covered it with dust and ashes. The Greeks, on the contrary, in grief shaved their beard. Among the Jews it was reckoned ignominious to shave a person's beard.

Augustus Cæsar used sometimes to clip his beard, and sometimes to shave it. Some used to pull the hairs from the root with an instrument somewhat similar to our nippers or small pincers; others, to burn them out with the flame of nut-shells, as the tyrant Dionysus did, with walnut-shells. Some used a certain ointment as a depilatory.

Alexander the Great thought that the beards of the soldiers afforded convenient handles for the enemy to lay hold of, preparatory to cutting off their heads; and, with a view of depriving them of this advantage he ordered the whole of his army to be closely shaved.

The fashion of wearing long beards became prevalent during the reign of Henry I.; it was severely reprobated by the clergy. Some of the monkists compared the men of their day to "filthy goats." During the absence of Richard Cœur de Lion his English subjects shaved their faces. William Fitz-Osbert, or Long-Beard, the great demagogue of the day, re-introduced, among the people who claimed to be of Saxon origin, the fashion of long beards. In John's reign, beards and mustaches were worn or not as fancy dictated.

During the reign of Edward II., beards were sometimes worn by persons in years, by great officers of State and by Knights Templars. That the practice was not general, is shown by the following anecdote: Peter Auger, valet to the king, when setting out on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, obtained letters of safe conduct from his majesty, because, having vowed not to shave his beard, he was afraid he should be taken for a Knight Templar, and consequently insulted; the cruel persecution and suppression of that renowned order having commenced at this period.

Edward III. is represented upon his tomb at Westminster with a beard which would have graced a philosopher.

When Chaucer lived, the beard was forked, and the mustache, in all knightly effigies, is long and drooping on each side of the mouth over the camail.

Beards were not much worn in the reign of Henry V. Mustaches, also, were only partially worn. The general character, indeed, of the whole of the fifteenth century is a closely shaven chin.

Stowe, in his Annals—in his account of the reign of Henry VIII., under 1535—says: "The 8th of May the king commanded all about his court to poll their heads, and, to give the example, he caused his own head to be polled, and from henceforth his beard to be knotted, and no more shaven."

The reader will easily call to recollection the portraits of Pamlet, Marquis of Winchester, Cardinal Pole and Bishop Gardiner, all ornamented with flowing beards, in the reign of the first Mary.

The commentators on Shakspeare show that, in the reign of Elizabeth, beards of different cut were appropriated to various characters and professions. The soldier had one fashion, the judge another, the bishop differed from both. Malone has quoted an old ballad, inserted in a miscellany, entitled "Le Prince d'Amour," in which some of these forms are described and appropriated. Gayton, the Water Poet, in his "Whip of Pride," likewise describes the fashions of the board as they still continued to subsist in his time:

"Now a few lines to paper I will put,
Of negro' beards' strange and variable cut,
In which there's some do take as vain a pride
As almost in all other things beside.
Some are resp'd most substantial like a brush;
Which makes a natural well known by the bush;
(And in my time of some men have I heard, Whose wisdom have been only wealth and beard)
Some of these the proverb well doth fit,
Which says, 'Bush natural, more fair than wit.'
Some seem as they were starched stiff and fine,
Like to the bristles of some angry swine;
And some, to set their love's desire to sale,
Are cut and pruned, like to a quickset hedge
Some like a spade, some like a fork, some square,
Some round, some mow'd like stubble, some stark bare,
Some sharp, stiletto-fashion, dagger-like,
That may, with whispering, a man's eye out-pike;
Some with the hammer-cut, or Roman T,
Their beards extravagant reformed must be;
Some with the quadrate, some triangle fashion,
Some circular, some ovalin translation,
Some perpendicular in longitude,
Some like a bisket for their crassitude
That heights, depths, breadths, triforme, square, oval round,
And rules geometrical to beards are found.
* * * * * * *
The barbers thus, like tailors, still must be Acquainted with each cut a-la-barbe."

The beard now gradually declined, and the court of Charles I. was the last in which even a small one was cherished. After the restoration of Charles II., mustaches or whiskers continued, but the rest of the face was shaven; and in a short time the process of shaving the entire face become universal.

A famous epigram was made by the Scots who visited London in 1327—when David, son of Robert Bruce, was married to Joan, the sister of King Edward—and stuck upon the church door of St. Peter, Stangate. It was as follows:

"Long beards heartlesse,
Painted hoods witlesse,
Gray coats gracelesse,
Make England thriftlesse."

D'Israeli, the elder, quotes an author, who, in his "Elements of Education," printed in 1640, says: "I have a favorable opinion of that young gentleman who is curious in fine mustaches. The time he employs in adjusting, dressing and curling them, is no time lost; for the more he contemplates his mustaches the more his mind will cherish and be animated by masculine and courageous notions."

When the Emperor Charles V. ascended the throne of Spain he had no beard. It was not to be expected that the obsequious parasites who always surround a monarch could presume to look more virile than their master. Immediately all the courtiers appeared beardless, with the exception of such few grave old men as had outgrown the fashion, and who had determined to die bearded as they had lived. Many people saw this resolution with the deepest sorrow and deepest alarm, and thought that every manly virtue would be banished with the beard. It became at that time a common saying, "We have no longer souls since we have lost our beards."

Until the year 1705, the Russians had been famous for their length of beard. But, at that time, Peter the Great sent forth his command that not only the army, but all the ranks of citizens, from the nobles to the serfs, should shave their beards. A certain time was given that people might get over the first throes of their repugnance, after which every man who chose to retain his beard was to pay a tax of one hundred roubles. The priests and the serfs were put on a lower footing, and allowed to retain theirs upon payment of a copeck every time they passed the gate of a city.

Great discontent arose from this law, but all people thought it wiser to out off their beards than to run the risk of incensing a man who would make no scruple of cutting off their heads. For many years a very considerable revenue was collected from this source. The collectors gave in receipt for its payment a small copper coin, struck expressly for the purpose, and called the "bearded." On one side it bore the figure of a nose, mouth, and mustache, with a long bushy beard, surmounted by the word "money received," the whole encircled by a wreath and stamped with the black eagle of Russia. On the reverse it bore the date of the year.

Every man who chose to wear a beard was obliged to produce this receipt on his entry into a town. Those who were refractory, and refused to pay the tax, were thrown into prison.

During a temporary triumph gained by the Dutch soldiers over the citizens of Lornain, in October, 1830, it became a standing joke against the patriots that they shaved their faces clean immediately, and the wits of the Dutch army asserted that they had gathered mustaches enough from the denuded lips of the Belgians to stuff mattresses for all the sick and wounded in their hospitals.

In the German newspapers of August, 1830, appeared an ordinance, signed by the King of Bavaria, forbidding civilians, on any pretence whatever, to wear mustaches, and commanding the police and other authorities to arrest and cause to be shaved, the offending parties. "Strange to say," says LeDroit, the journal from which this account is taken, "mustaches disappeared immediately, like leaves from the trees in autumn; everybody made haste to obey the royal order, and not one person was arrested."

"Human felicity," says your Dr. Franklin, "is produced not so much by great pieces of good fortune, that seldom happen, as by little advantages that occur every day. Thus, if you teach a young man to shave himself and keep his razor in order, you may contribute more to the happiness of his life than in giving him a thousand guineas. This sum may be soon spent—the regret only remaining of having foolishly consumed it; but, in the other case, he escapes the frequent vexation of waiting for barbers, and of sometimes dirty fingers, offensive breaths and dull razors; he shaves when most convenient to him, and enjoys daily the pleasure of its being done with a good instrument."

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

A modern medical writer says: "Aside from its utility in a medical point of view, we are of opinion that a luxuriant flowing beard adds to the grace and dignity of a man. As a fair and smooth face gives to the female that delicacy and feminine tenderness which is so appropriate to her sphere, so does the beard give to the male the manly dignity and severeness of aspect which is so well adapted to him who is to brave the tempests of a rough world. We are aware of the delicate ground on which we tread when attempting to interfere with any prevailing mode, and we expect that every weasen-faced and sandy-haired individual will endeavor to ridicule our benevolent efforts; but we shall persevere in our endeavors to introduce a more close imitation, physically as well as mentally, of the wise and holy patriarchs of old."

After due consideration—so necessary to the vast importance of the subject—we have come to the same decision as P. Gentien Hewet, Regent of the College at Orleans, who, in the year 1536, printed three discourses on the beard. In the first of these, De Radenda Barba, he makes it appear that we are bound to shave the beard; in the second, De Alenda Barba, he proves we ought to let the beard grow; and in the third, De vel Radenda vel Alenda Barba, he considers that it is lawful either to shave or cultivate the beard at pleasure.

England, JOHN BULL.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, MARCH 18, 1854.

A WORD TO SUBSCRIBERS AND AGENTS.

In the list of published receipts it is only proposed to advise our agents and others who send us money, through the post-office or private conveyance, that their remittances have been received. The entire cash receipts are kept only in the clerk's books; and we are happy to assure our agents and subscribers that he is a very correct and business-like officer. The head clerkship in the office of a newspaper is as important to its prosperity, and to the satisfaction of subscribers and agents as the editorship. Our office, in the last twelve months, has lost three clerks. Mr. F. S. Baowne now fills the bureau in the office of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, which he has filled for twenty years as clerk of the Louisville Journal, Ky. Our agents and subscribers could not ask higher assurance than is presented in him that all their accounts will be accurately kept.

The plan of not publishing receipts, followed by some of our cotemporaries with apparent satisfaction, does not suit us or our patrons. From sheer necessity we were driven to it, for a few months, during and succeeding the late epidemic. But every letter received in that time has been filed and its contents duly attended to. Since the beginning of the present year the published receipts have been resumed, and will be continued. The present form is adopted after deliberation. The former, besides being very tedious and expensive, was liable to many errors and confusions. The present is simple and brief. It acknowledges only the money sent. When an Agent writes us that he has received subscription money from A, B and C—old subscribers, or orders the paper for them as new subscribers, the subscribers are credited and the paper sent by mail as directed. If the Agent send the money in the letter, it is acknowledged: if not, he is charged with the amount, and when sent then it is acknowledged and his account credited. But if the remittance of the Agent—by loss of mail or other cause—never reaches the office, the subscribers holding his receipt are safe. We enter no subscriber on our books unless the money is paid in advance, or the Agent sending the name says, "credit him and charge my account."

☞ All money sent by mail, post-paid, is at the risk of the office.

☞ Bills of any specie-paying bank in the State where the subscriber lives are received in payment of subscription.

☞ Any amount sent by a subscriber over his subscription, is credited to his account for the succeeding year. We hope many, without waiting to be called on by the preacher, will remit to us directly: $5 bills can be snugly enveloped, and will pay a new subscriber a good way ahead: some old ones are that much behind.

☞ A list of the post-offices in every circuit is much needed.

☞ And now let our brethren of the traveling ministry and local ministry and friends all strike for the TEN THOUSAND.

"PAMPHLETS FOR THE PEOPLE."—We have read this effusion, alluded to by Rev. R. Abbey in the first communication on first page. As far as it pretends to be an argument on the general subject of "succession," or an answer to the "Letters to Bishop Green," our friend has plainly, yet justly characterized it. The "Pamphlets," however, have this interest—the author is put down as a "Presbyter of Mississippi," (of the P. E. Church, in Mississippi, we presume is meant,) and his publication endorsed by the Church organ! Then we understand Mississippi Episcopalians. They are of those who maintain that the Church of Christ is an ecclesiasticism. That is the Bishop Ives platform. Bishop Ives is now in Rome—he is there logically.

MORAL SLAVERY.

If kings are things, words are things: for they too have their subjects. There are who fear not death, and yet cower before a word. The politician knows this and feels it too. the dogmatist and the religious bigot. The sound of certain words is like the charmed line the juggler draws round his victim—beyond it they have no power to go. It breaks off the strongest demonstrations, interrupts the plainest processes of reason, the clearest deductions: blinds eyes otherwise single and sound; makes the boldest reformers walk tender-footed, on certain enchanted ground, or turns them aside from their path-left at a stand or hopelessly bewildered. Call it prejudice, or cant, or habit—it is a word that conveys some idea, or may be no idea at all; but a master word, for all that. Who is delivered from the bondage of his particular ism—of all isms? Who is sure that he is emancipated? Who is free, indeed?

None of the sufferings of this moral slavery are are so absurd, contradictory, painful as to cause the victim to break off and declare independence, or even think independently. It was well said by a suffering member of a synod of English independents—"it requires great bravery to be an Independent among Independents." So it is—this moral slavery follows men, let them call themselves by any name. Honesty is ashamed of its plain clothes and labor ashamed of its own sweat. In a recent lecture at Liverpool, Dr. Bowring said that there is no lady in China who aspires to a high position, who does not look upon it as a great accomplishment not to be able to walk. "I have seen beautiful women carried to their marriage ceremonies on the backs of their slaves, wholly unable to walk from one end of the room to the other."

A keen observer, onn father Kenyon, a good while ago said:

"We are all slaves, in a thousand senses of the word; slaves to time, to place, to circumstances: to the habits of our great grandfathers on either side, and to the whims of our maternal ancestors in all their nonsensical generations; to fire, air, earth and water, throughout all their analyses; to tailors—a most galling yoke; snuff, washerwomen, quacks, policemen, umbrellas, London merchants, native milliners, and royal engineers."

John Mitchell, the Irish editor, in his reply to the attack of Henry Ward Beecher, who, with other Abolitionists of that ilk, seems to regard negro slavery the only sort possible and to be feared in this world, thus arraigns him:

"Now your reverence is a slave: a slave to certain words and phrases, which have got the mastery over your poor mind, and thus over your body too. You are as one possessed by them. They make you cry out, and gesticulate violently, and toil and sweat, and revile passers by. Who will emancipate you, unhappy congregational pastor! You call these noisy spirits that possess you principles; and ask me where is my "principle."

Even thus may be degraded in its application that noble word "principle"—a mere shibboleth. Even thus it is with the one idea man. We hear of people that ride hobbies, which is a mistake—they are ridden by them and frenly, too, as their exhaustion and straitened souls and spavined faculties show.

The Jew could accept no good thing coming out of Nazareth. And the narrow-minded sectary of this day scorning the various bounties of the Universal Father, can admire no excellence, nor be profited by any gift, nor have his affections warm, glow, expand at the contemplation of any loveliness, unless all is presented under the prescribed shape, the magic name.

Who is free? None but such as have embraced the World's Saviou, and received his Spirit and are all embued with it: a love of the truth for its own sake, an all-embracing charity and fraternity; an unwinking sense of personal accountability and an estimate of all things temporal in the light of eternity. They are free, INDEED.

SOUTHERN COMMERCIAL CONVENTION.

We acknowledge the receipt of an invitation from the committee to attend the sittings of the Commercial Convention shortly to convene in Charleston, S. C. It will be remembered that this Convention originally assembled in Memphis, and adjourned to meet at Charleston on the 10th of April next. Its proceedings will doubtless be very interesting and important, and will bring together some of the first men of the South.

Its proceedings are of internst to us of course, and we hope the clerical element will be as ably represented in the Charleston as the Memphis Convention, by Rev. C. K. Marshall, Secretary. One matter, not exactly commercial, ought to fall under the consideration of this body—it is a supply of Southern school books. The general interest felt for the education of the masses—the manner in which States have taken hold of the Common School System, make it a matter of the first importance that the seminaries of learning in the Southern States should be supplied with books calculated to inspire a proper estimate and appreciation of our own section of the Union.

The following remarks are from the Mobile Register:

"Most of the elementary works in vogue at the North, and which have hitherto been used in our own schools, contain more or less direct assaults upon the frame work of our social condition, and insidious sentimentalities, calculated to poison the minds of our youth and destroy their natural love for the institutions among which they have been born and educated. They are also filled exclusively with the productions of Northern or English writers—placing these forward as the only models of scholarly excellence, and directing the attention solely to scenes, incidents, and personages, in their sphere of history—thus doing the greatest injustice to the intellectual and heroic achievements of our own great men, hiding from view the natural beauties and advantages of our section—and leaving the South as a great blank desert—a Zahara—in the historic world.

"All this is most gross and insulting, and it is wonderful that our people have so long tamely submitted to it. We should have our own authors—our own historians, essayists, and poets—but, chief of all, we should have our own school books, made up of the productions of our own writers; and doing justice to own past, present and future characteristics. The seeds of proper instruction should be implanted in the minds of our children so that they may germinate and bear such fruit as will enrich and beautify the land.

"Fletcher of Saltoun said: 'let me make the songs of a nation, and I care not who makes its laws—I will still be ruler.' The same aphorism is much more true of the school books of a country. These form and govern the minds of the people—they overrule and control all laws—they shape, defend or abolish all institutions. How important then that the South should have her own school books in the hands of her children.

JEWISH LECTURES.—Mr. Bonhomme's lectures have been well attended, notwithstanding the numerous counter-attractions of the multitude, at theatres, concerts, soirees, levees, etc. On Sabbath next his appointments are at 11 A. M. in the Presbyterian Church, on Casacalvo st, and at 7 1-2 P. M., in the Presbyterian Church on Prytania st. His week-night lectures, the subjects of which have already been announced, will be continued at the Carondelot st. (Methodist) Church, at 7 1-2 P. M., 21st and 22d inst.

BAPTIST CHURCH.—A few days after penning a late paragraph on the prospects of the Baptist Church in New Orleans, we passed the lot of the proposed edifice and found the ground "broken." The Chronicle says:

"The new building is to be of the English Gothic order; imposing, church-like, yet plain and simple in its structure. Outside, it will measure, including the tower and chancel, 127 by 62 feet. The tower will be, outside, 25 1-2 feet square, at its base; and will run up 96 feet, being crowned with a spire 78 feet high, and measuring 174 feet in all, and built entirely of brick. The church walls will measure, outside, 44 feet in height, and the pitch of the roof will be 18 feet.

"The building will have a concealed basement, above which will be the main Audience Room, reached by spiral stairways from the basement and from the tower. The Audience Room will measure, inside, excluding the chancel, 91 by 60 feet."

QUARTERLIES AND REVIEWS.—The Westminster Review of January (rather later than usual) and Blackwood for February—republications by L. Scott & Co., 79 Fulton street, New York—are on our table, full and interesting.

Putnam's Monthly, and Harpers' (for March) we have through 36 Camp street—McGinnis & Carver. Putnam states that 7-8 of his patronage is north of Mason and Dixon's line.

HARPER presents through that racy sketcher, Thorpe, of Louisiana, another of the great Southern staples—Cotton, its growing and gathering. It in an occasion (not neglected) for showing off "Uncle Tom's Cabin as it is."

A contributor who belongs to the progressives, has sent us an article, suggested by the Editor's table, on clergy-phobia.

THE GRINNELL EXPEDITION.—The firm of Harper and Brothers have laid on our table, a generously gotten up 8vo. volume, by Dr. Kane, detailing, in a taking style of personal adventure, the adventures in the Arctic Seas of the expedition fitted out by the munificence of a New York merchant, in search of Sir John Franklin. The search, though fruitless of its main object, resulted in novel and intensely critical adventures and instructive observations, well told. The book may be had at 36 Camp street.

TENETS OF THE GREEK CHURCH.

They disown the authority of the Pope, and deny that the Church of Rome is the true Catholic Church. They do not baptise their children till they are three, four, five, six, ten, nay, sometimes eighteen years of age; baptism is performed by triune immersion. They insist that the sacrament of the Lord's Supper ought to be administered in both kinds, and they give the sacrament to children immediately after baptism. They grant no indulgences, nor do they lay any claim to the character of infallibility, like the Church of Rome. They deny that there is any such place as purgatory, notwithstanding they pray for the dead, that God may have mercy on them at the general judgment. They practice the invocation of saints; though they say they do not invoke them as deities, but as intercessors with God. They exclude confirmation, extreme unction and matrimony out of the seven sacraments. They deny auricular confession to be a divine precept, and say it is only a positive injunction of the church. They pay no religious homage to the eucharist. They administer the communion in both kinds to the laity, both in sickness and in health, though they have never applied themselves to their confessors; because they are persuaded that a living faith is all which is requisite for the worthy receiving of the Lord's Supper. They maintain that the Holy Ghost proceeds only from the Father, and not from the Son. They believe in predestination. They admit of no images in relief or enclosed work, but use paintings and sculptures in silver and copper. They approve of the marriage of priests, provided they enter into that state before their admission into holy orders. They condemn all fourth marriages. They observe a number of holy days, and keep four fasts in the year more solemn than the rest, of which the fast in Lent, before Easter, is the chief. They believe the doctrine of consubstantiation, or the union of the body of Christ with the sacrament bread.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

"A NEW CONFERENCE DESIRED."

Under this caption I sent a few lines to the Nashville Advocate, a few days ago, in which I proposed that a line begin at the mouth of Yazoo River and run up said river to the county line, and thence east to the State line so as to include Yazoo, Madison, Leake, Neshoba and Kemper counties; and that all that portion of the State of Mississippi north of that line should be set off as the North Mississippi Conference. Also that the Mississippi river shall be the line between the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences, and the State line between Mississippi and Alabama Conferences.

Conversing and a further examination of the subject induce me to think that that plan might be changed for the good of all, viz—That we leave the Mississippi river at the upper line of Adams county and run east so as to include Franklin, Lawrence, Covington, Jones and Wayne and all Louisiana east of Mississippi river, for the New Orleans Conference.

Mississippi Conference to run up the river to the upper line of Washington county, thence east to the State line so as to include Holmes, Attala, Winston and Nexubee in the Mississippi Conference. That the State of Arkansas and that portion of Louisiana lying west of the Mississippi river be made into three Conferences. That the State of Alabama and West Florida be made into three Conferences, and that the Memphis Conference includes West Tennessee and West Kentucky.

This would put the Conferences alluded to in a compact and manageable form and size. All of our Conference territories at this time (at least in the region presented in the above plan, including Georgia) are too large. Our Bishops are often hurried to get from one Conference to another in time; the distance to be traveled and the expenses to be incurred are so great as to prevent several of our brethren attending Conference almost every year; the number of preachers to be entertained is so great as to make it necessary to have Conference only in a few large towns, so that we come round to them once in from three to seven years, whereas, if our territories were smaller, the number of preachers would be smaller, and most of the country towns in each Conference could support a Conference. This would bring our preachers more in contact with the people, and the people would learn more of our plans and operations. Our Bishops would have a greater circulation than they can have under the old plan. More preachers would be brought into active service in the business of our Conference. More time would be devoted to religious services at each Conference than is at the present; more missionary money would be raised, from the fact that more people would be informed by the exercises of our anniversary exercises.

Now some old fogy may rise up with terror and astonishment depicted in his countenance, and protest very seriously to all this movement—"that when the Mississippi Conference first met we had all Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana and Arkansas in its territory, and you would now make nine Conferences out of it!" Yes, brother, we would do all that. You know that you had but nine preachers when you met, but now there are a great many more than nine times nine preachers, so we are too many to dwell in two or three houses, or go up together to be supported by the people. We must divide; will work better, be more united and accomplish more good. When we go to Conference we will not have the prospect of 300 or 400 miles to move our families over. So we hope the Delegates representing the territories alluded to will go for our plan or one better—if they have it. PROGRESSIVENESS.

N. B.—If that portion of Mississippi now included in the Alabama Conference should fall into our Conference, will not some of the Alabama preachers who consider us the short stock, have pity on us and come into our bounds to serve Columbus, Macon and a few other places? We hope they will. P.

Mississippi Conference.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

SANTA CLARA, CALIFORNIA.

BRO. MCTYEIRE: I have just closed the labors of the present Conference year on Santa Clara Circuit. We have built a good frame church in this place; have it paid for, with a membership of 21 persons. The past has been a year of some afflictions, but God has comforted us, and we have witnessed a number of happy conversions. We have a good Circuit that will support us well, and we hope the Bishop may return us to it another year.

Several of our preachers have left, and others will leave, but God is with us and we shall yet live and prosper in California.

Yours, truly, A. M. BAILEY.

Santa Clara Feb. 12, 1854.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS.

MAYHEW PRAIRIE, March 4, 1854.

At a meeting of the Quarterly Conference, held at Goshen Church, on the Starkville Circuit and Sharon District, on Sunday, the 26th of February, 1854, Rev. D. M. Wiggins presiding, the following resolutions were offered and passed unanimously:

1. Resolved, That, in view of the many reasons which may be given, it is the deliberate opinion of this Quarterly Conference that the portion of the State of Mississippi within the bounds of the Alabama Conference should be set off to the Mississippi Conference.

2. Resolved, That our Delegates to the General Conference to be held May 1, 1854, be requested to bring to its notice this arrangement and urge its adoption.

3. Resolved, That the Secretary forward these Resolutions to the N. O. Christian Advocate, and request publication of the same.

THOS. E. CANNON, Sec'y.

The receipts for the National Washington Monument during February, amount to $7011 74—the expenditures were $1688 60. The work on this patriotic memorial was to be resumed about the 15th inst.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

"WHAT WENT YE OUT FOR TO SEE?"

This question was addressed by Jesus to the multitudes who had gone out to hear John the Baptist when he preached in the Desert; many of whom had probably been attracted by the novelty of his appearance, and had gone to hear a man of singular doctrines, instead of a desire of being benefitted. Perhaps it would be well for all to examine their own motives in attending church, for in vain will be the assembling of ourselves together unattended with efforts to worship God with spirit and in truth, and many, it is to be feared, who go to the sanctuary professedly to worship, have in reality no higher aim than to see "a reed shaken by the wind." Others, and it is to be hoped they are not few, can say in sincerity with the Psalmist: "How amiable are thy tabernacles, oh Lord of Hosts. My spirit longeth, yea even fainteth, for the courts of the Lord;" and their prayer while there is: "Remember thy congregation which thou hast purchased of old, the rod of their inheritance which thou hast redeemed."

The Pilgrim too who, like Bunyan's, has just started from the City of Destruction, goes there to be directed by Evangelist to the little wicket gate, and he a little farther advanced, hardly out of the Slough of Despond, having turned aside from the straight and narrow way, in seeking the house of Mr. Legality, and having come to Mount Sinai, and "seeing so much of it hanging over the wayside that he is afraid to go farther," has often, while listening to his teachings, first got a view of the Cross and the Saviour, realized that He alone is the way, and cried out in ecstacy: "My Lord and my God"!

And the convicted sinner, long since convinced that there is no peace for the wicked, but on counting the cost of becoming a disciple of the meek and lowly Jesus who had not where to lay his head, and thought it too great, has while there been led to inquire what will be the cost of enjoying the pleasures of sin for a season; grieving the Holy Spirit, and neglecting so great salvation; and conscience has answered truly and faithfully: "What will it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Then, when he has yielded to conviction, prostrated himself at the Saviour's feet, inquiring what wilt thou have me to do? Joyfully has such an one exclaimed: "This is no other than the house of God, and the very gates of Heaven; thy way, oh Lord, is in the sanctuary."

An attendance on the means of grace has often proved a blessing to the careless and unconcerned; for, while listening to truths, which in the bustle and turmoil of life have been lost sight of, he sees, as in a mirror, the narrow neck of land on which he stands, and the uncertain tenure by which even that is possessed; life's little thread by which he hangs suspended over a burning lake, and the power of Him whose counsels have long been despised, and laws violated, to sever that thread without one moment's warning. Vividly comes before his mind's eye that vision of John, the revelator, as he beheld in the great day of wrath—the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, calling on the hills and rocks to fall on them, and hide them from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and the wrath of the Lamb. In beautiful contrast to this scene of terror comes another, described by the same pen of inspiration, of a great multitude clothed in white robes, and palms in their hands; those who have come up out of great tribulation, having washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb; who shall never hunger nor thirst any more, for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and lead them unto living fountains of waters.

And true wisdom there often decides that an eternity of happiness is more to be desired than one of woe, and common sense dictates that as a man sows so also he shall reap, and reflection urges, unless ye repent ye shall all likewise perish; and memory brings back opportunities more favorable than the present one, all slighted; and prudence whispers the present moment is all that is your own; and the Spirit and the Bride say come; and the blessed Saviour pleads, behold I stand at the door and knock; and the Lord himself inquires, oh my people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee? turn unto me and I will turn unto you; and his eyes are opened to see Death standing ready to cut him down—strange, passing strange! so many have fallen victims before him—till happily amid the din of unwelcome, but friendly voices, that of the tempter, sweetly saying, "Thou hast much goods laid up for many years, take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry," is unheard or unheeded; while the soul, startled from its death-like slumber, awakens fully to a sense of its priceless worth, strives to lay hold of its dearly bought redemption, presses into the kingdom of Heaven, knowing that it suffereth violence, and exults in the treasures of its newly-found inheritance. Triumphantly, then, ascends a shout, echoed by saints above: for there is joy in Heaven over one sinner that repenteth: Praise ye Lord; I will praise the Lord with my whole heart, in the assembly of the upright, and in the congregation. Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive honor, and glory, and blessing."

Oh, how many gifted intellects, long flattered by sin, beautiful imaginations soiled with the mire of earth; glorious aspirations imprisoned in narrow bounds, have struggled forth from thraldom; soared upward as on angel's wings, and ascended into realms of spiritual light and loveliness—under the preaching of the everlasting Gospel.

Gladly and faithfully, then, let the watchmen on the walls of Zion proclaim glad tidings of salvation to a perishing world; unitedly and fervently, let the believing prayers of Christians for a special outpouring of the Spirit ascend; as did those of the Apostles before the day of Pentecost, and soon will the Church shine forth clear as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners; and the morning of millennial glory shall dawn on the world. Shall not those who have received the earnest of the Spirit turn unto the Lord with all the heart, and with fasting, and weeping, and with mourning, that he may be jealous for his land, and pity his people? J. B. C.

The French newspaper, the Journal des Debats, has only 9000 subscribers, yet it is estimated to be worth $280,000; one-fourteenth of it sold for $20,000 a short time since.

REVIVAL EXTRAORDINARY.

This is certainly the age of wonders, moral, physical and religious. After the achievements of grace at the Five Points in N. York, certainly no place and person need despair, and yet a powerful revival of religion among the convicts of a penitentiary is a strange thing under the sun. Truly the wrath of man shall praise God. We take the following from the Frankfort Commonwealth:

"A very interesting revival of religion is now in progress in the Kentucky penitentiary, under the labors of Rev. Mr. Linn, of the Methodist Church. Some 15 had sought admission to membership in that denomination previous to last Sabbath evening, and at that time, after a very impressive and eloquent sermon by Mr. L., he administered the ordinance of baptism to seven of them. After this, an opportunity being afforded, five others offered themselves as seekers of religion and applicants for church membership—making in all some 20 of these poor unfortunates who have, under Mr. Linn's ministry, there professed to commence a new life of faith and virtue.

"A religious feeling among the prisoners has been more or less manifest for some months past, and other clergymen who have preached there have had encouraging success in their labor of Christian love. We remember especially that some two months ago Mr. Black baptized and received into the Baptist Church a number of them—how many we do not remember precisely.

"The scene on last Sabbath evening was to us intensely interesting. Rough, stalwart men, with features hardened by exposure, dissipation and crime, and whose hearts might be supposed impenetrable to every thing but divine Grace, shed tears like children, and quivered through all their brawny frames under the truths of the gospel. As we sat there we could not but think with self-reproach of the general indifference of man for the spiritual welfare of the notoriously wicked, and of those especially whose crimes the law has branded, while He who pardoned the thief upon the cross has shown so clearly that in his eyes their souls are of infinite price, and declared that over the conversion of one of them there is special joy even among the happy angels in heaven.

THE MISER.

Of all creatures upon earth none is so despicable as the miser. It is not impossible that the profligate may have a friend, for there is usually left about him some touch of humanity; some one unbroken cord of finer feelings of our nature; but the miser meets with no sympathy. Even the nurse who is hired to attend him in his latest hours, loathes the ghastly occupation, and longs for the moment of his release, for although the dead lamp is already gathering on his brow, the thoughts of the departing sinner are still upon his gold, and, at the mere jingle of a key, he starts from his torpor in a paroxysm of terror lest a surreptitious attempt is being made upon the sanctity of his strong box. There are no prayer of the orphan or widow for him—not a solitary voice has ever breathed his name to heaven as a benefactor. One poor penny given away in the spirit of true charity would now be worth more to him than all the world contains; but notwithstanding that he was a church-going man, and from his infancy familiar with those texts in which the worship of mammon is denounced, and the punishment of Dives told, he has never yet been able to divorce himself from his solitary love of lucre, or to part with one atom of his pelf. And so from a miserable life—deserted, despised, he passes into a dread eternity; and those whom he has neglected or misused, makes merry with the hoards of the miser!—[Blackwood.

Drainage in New Orleans.

Several years ago I published a little work entitled "Suggested Works on the Thames." My attention has therefore been for some time turned to the important subject of drainage. This must be my excuse if I venture to make a suggestion respecting the drainage of New Orleans, than which, I venture to affirm, no city in the old world or the new requires a perfect system of drainage more imperatively. It is only necessary to perambulate its streets and observe its gutters on each side, to be convinced of this fact.

The supposed difficulty in the drainage of New Orleans lies in the fact that the level of its streets is below that of the water in the river. But in reality this constitutes no difficulty. All that is necessary is to raise the water of the Mississippi at the Southern extremity of the city in an upright iron shaft, and to allow this water to flow through iron pipes distributed through the city into the river at its Northern part. With these horizontal pipes an upright pipe from each dwelling must communicate. It will be observed that the first and principal shaft, and the pipes from each house, will empty themselves into the horizontal pipes and eventually into the river with a velocity proportionate to their height, and the city will be drained. It will only remain to remove all surface matter in the usual manner of large cities.

The fall of the water and drainage of each house may be aided by common pumps.

There is nothing complicated or expensive in this plan beyond that which obtains in London and every large city in England, whilst the motives to effect a perfect drainage are many times greater in New Orleans than in any of these, visited as it is by that epidemic scourge, the yellow fever, besides the cholera and its own endemic intermittents.

If a perfect drainage were accomplished, a great part of the population of New Orleans, who now feel it incumbent on them to leave the city during the unhealthy season, might remain, greatly to the advantage of every interest; whilst many a family would be preserved from the depths of mourning.

I may possibly enter into some details relative to this question hereafter. It is enough for the present to have shown in how simple a manner a perfect drainage of the city of New Orleans may be accomplished.

MARSHALL HALL.

St. Charles, March 13, 1854.

A ROMANTIC HISTORY.—A Spanish boy, named Joseph Edward Eue Pohalo has arrived in Washington, the story of whose history is essentially romantic. It appears that some ten years ago, while bathing on the coast near the city of Campeachy, Mexico, he, with five other boys, was stolen by a gang of French pirates, who kept them four years, and then sold them to a merchantman, who kept them two years, took them to the city of New Orleans, and there sold them to a Louisiana planter for the term of their minority. Their owner was about to resell them to a shipmaster, to make sailors of them, when the boy, Pohalo, made his escape, and worked his way to Lafayette, Indiana, where he attracted the notice of a gentleman who corresponded with the Mexican Minister at Washington, regarding him. The Minister became interested in the story of the boy, and wrote to have him forwarded, that he might restore him to his parents, if they were living. The boy will be sent home, if there yet remains a home for him. The superintendents of the various railroads over which he has traveled since his history became known, have given him free passes, and hotel keepers have declared his bills settled on sight.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—In Polk county, Texas, Jan. 1, by the Rev. J. M. Maxey, Mr. ROBINSON to Miss MOLLIE L. McGEE.

MARRIED—On the evening of the 22d inst. in the Parish of Terrebonne, by the Rev. A. Sugg, Mr. HENRY B. HALCOMBE, of Mobile, and Miss BRIDGET TANNER, of Terrebonne Parish, La.

OBITUARY:

DIED, in the city of Vicksburg, Miss., on January 18, 1854, Mrs. FRANCES ANN ROGAN, wife of Mr. William Rogan.

Mrs. Rogan was born in Kent county, State of Maryland, December 14, 18[illegible]. In the various relations of life she was highly esteemed, and the manner in which she discharged the obligations growing out of these relations excited the admiration of all who knew her. As a wife, she was most devoted; as a mother, tender and affectionate; as a friend, faithful and confiding; as a neighbor humane and beloved by her servants. The loss of these relations her death is painful indeed and lamented, while to her it is infinite gain.

She was through every period of her painful illness conscious of her approaching end, being found with the proper exercise of her intellect to the last; yet, as she always had been in health, so in her deep suffering was resigned to the will of her Heavenly Father.

Her last adieu to her husband, children, brothers, servants, and those kind friends who had so patiently watched with her during her sickness, will long be remembered by those who witnessed it. It was indeed a painful scene; yet cheering to witness the power of that grace which alone can support the soul above bodily suffering and the fear of death.

Having spoken to each individually, and directed suitable mementos to be distributed to each as she herself particularly wished, she resigned herself with all her interests in time and eternity into the hands of Him who is able to keep that which is committed unto Him against that day.

"Thus star by star declines,
Till all are passed away;
As morning high and higher shine
To pure and perfect day."

"Nor sink those stars in empty night;
But hide themselves in Heaven's own light."

DIED—Near Allenton, Ala., January [illegible], 1854, Mr. NEILL MCNEILL; born in Marlboro District, S. C., January 31, 1818, from whence his parents emigrated and settled in Florida, where death deprived him of an affectionate and pious father, and from which time the cares and management of his mother's family devolved upon him, being the eldest son, and in which relation he conducted himself and managed the affairs of the household much to his credit, and in no manner more elevated him in public estimation to a position to which many young men of the country placed under the same circumstances, have attained. He, with his mother and family, left Florida and settled in this, Wilcox county, Camden, where they lived until two years ago, when they moved to this neighborhood. His health became impaired, and he continued to wear away with that destroying disease, chronic diarrhœa, until finally it brought him to his end. He was a member of the M. E. Church, and of the Masonic Fraternity, and in the various relations which he was connected: to the county as a citizen; to the family as governor and manager, to the institutions of which he was a member, he maintained an honest, moral, right and dignified character. His religious experience was not of that bright and brilliant character with which many are blessed, and in consequence of which he experienced during his sickness, a want of more faith, and said, repeatedly, "It is all of faith," and remarked to his friends, "Pray, pray in the house and for faith." Prayer was offered for him, and it is a consolation to his friends to know God's ear was open to their and to his prayers, for his faith grew stronger, and he expressed himself as not only resigned but ready and willing to go; saying, "He would soon be out of this troublesome world and his afflictions would soon be over." From the evidences he left, while his friends sorrow over his loss, yet "they sorrow not as those who have no hope." May God bless his aged and pious mother, his brothers, sisters and friends, and bring them all to inherit eternal life.

A. C. RAMSAY.

Allenton, Ala., Feb. 25, 1854.

DIED—On the 13th February, 1854, in the 59th year, HUGH NUGENT. He joined the M. E. Church in the year 1827, at a Quarterly Meeting, at Big Creek, about 15 miles north of Alexandria, under the charge of Rev. W. L. Douglass, and held the office of class-leader and steward many years.

Brother Nugent was an exemplary member of the Church. He leaves a wife and nine children, and many relatives who deeply deplore his loss, but their loss is his gain. He collected his family that were present at his bed-side, and gave them his parting advice, a few days before his death.

Rapides, La. J. W. PRICE.

THE MCDONOUGH WILL CASE.—The opinion of the Supreme Court in the great McDonough case was delivered by Judge Campbell. It consisted of thirty-two manuscript pages, which is drawn with great ability, and concurred in by the whole Court. The points decided in the case are, that the citizens of New Orleans and Baltimore are the legatees of McDonough, and that the legacy is valid; that the destination of the legacy for the education of the poor is obligatory, and that the courts of the State can enforce the application; that there are no substitutions included in the legacy, and that the illegal restraints upon the alienation or division of the property, and for the appointment of special agents for its management, do not avoid it; that the heirs have no interest in the validity of the annuities, for if they fail they will go to the cities. The Court does not decide upon the validity of them. The Court further decides that the States of Louisiana and Maryland could have excluded the heirs.

Mr. J. S. Richardson, the inventor of the proposed atmospheric telegraph, by which the mails, and even packages weighing several tons, will be transmitted the whole distance between New York and Boston in at least fifteen minutes, by atmospheric pressure, through a tube of metal, has asked of Congress an appropriation of fifty thousand dollars to test the experiment. The President pro tem. of the Senate has appointed the following select committee to consider the petition of Mr. Richardson, viz: Messrs. Shields, Everett, Mallory, Williams, and Thompson of Kentucky. The project, we understand, receives favorable consideration in Washington.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

☞ List of REMITTANCES received at the office of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, from 1st to 16th MARCH, inclusive.

A—R Alexander $3.

B—Mrs M E Bowman $1 50; A Bonnell $3; I N Butler $1 25; R Babington $1 50; G W Brown $3.

C—D C B Connorly $10; A W Caldwell $1 50; Mrs E S Collier $1 50; J M Carter $1 50; N A Cravens $1 50.

D—Jos Dixon $1 50; A P Davis $1 50; M D Dixon $1 50; Mrs Daniel $1 50; J T Dew $3 00.

E—J W Ellis $10; A B Ensley $1 50; E Ellis $3; J F Eckford $5.

F—F G Ferguson $6.

G—J F Goodrich $1 50; W Garrett 50 cents.

H—W P Harrison $10; J C Huckabee $3; H Hoss $2.

K—S J Kelly $6; T J Koger $5.

L—W D Lovelady $1 50.

M—Mrs H Merritt $1 50; A C McMillan $3; D M McLaughlin $1 50.; N Mixon $1; H M Montgomery $5; S D Mussengale $1 50; J Morrison $1 50; Mrs C W Muggah $1 50; W P Miller $6.

N—Mary Nugent $1 50; Mrs Norton $2; W J Nash $1 50.

O—Mrs A P O'Brien $1 50.

P—H T Pendleton $1 50; J L Prescott $1 50; E Philips $2; J Price $1 50; J Phelan $2; L Pearce $10.

Q—B Quarles $1 50.

R—E Rawlison $1 50; R Randle $15; Mrs M L Riggs $1 50; T A Ross $8 50; Wm Rognti $5; F P Ray $1 50; Mrs S Robbins $1 50; H N Rockinbow $1 50.

S—W Smith $3; A Sample $1 50; F W Shurbrough $5; J W Shores $3.

T—P Taylor $1 50; G Tayor $1 50; P J Trammell $1 50; F H Trammell $1 50; G M Thompson $1 50; Miss H Teaguo $1 50; J Taylor $5.

W—D S Watkins $6; G Wood $1 50; J G Whitehead $1 50.

A TANNER WANTED.

A GENTLEMEN, with or without a family, can get employment in the TANNING BUSINESS, by making application to the subscriber, at Grove Hill, Jackson Parish, La. N. MIXON, P. M.

Grove Hill, La., Feb. 27, 1854. mh18-1t

RATES OF ADVERTISING:

ADVERTISEMENTS, of a proper character and to a limited extent, will hereafter be inserted in the "New Orleans Christian Advocate" at the following rates:

One Square, first insertion $1 00
Each subsequent insertion 50
One Square, one year 15 00
One Square, six months 10 00
Two Squares, one year 25 00

☞ A Square is ten lines—ten words make a line. No Advertisement inserted until paid for.

The following is the report of the interments in the cemeteries of the city for the week ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on Sunday, the 12th inst.: Protestant, Girod street, 4; Cypress Grove, 3; Potter's Field, 14; Charity Hospital, 16; St. Patrick's, 14; Catholic No. 1, Second District, 5; Catholic No. 2, Second District, 12; St. Vincent de Paul, Third District, 13; Lafayette, Fourth District, 17. Total, 97.

BOARD OF ALDERMEN.—This Board held a special meeting last evening, Mr. Lugenbuhl in the chair and a bare quorum present. On motion, the reading of the minutes was dispensed with, and a communication from the Mayor, respecting the decision of the Supreme Court at Washington in favor of the validity of the McDonogh will, was read and referred to the Finance Committee.

Also a communication from his Honor, transmitting a resolution from the Sanitary Commission regarding the printing of their report. Referred to the Committee on Health.

A communication was read from the Comptroller, informing the Board of the adjudication of contracts for constructing railings around Lafayette and Jackson Squares. Referred to the Committee on Streets and Landings.

A number of resolutions from the Upper Board were read, most of which were concurred in. Among those rejected, was the resolution not to furnish the city officers with any newspapers at the expense of the corporation, except the official journal. Mr. Mazioni gave notice that he should cause this resolution to be reconsidered, and it was with some difficulty the chair convinced him that by voting the minority he had lost his privilege of doing so.

The proposals for the sale of city bonds, together with the report of the Finance Committee thereon, were then read, and the resolution previously offered in the Upper Board and referred to this committee, apportioning the amount to be purchased ($120,000) among the different wards, was adopted.

A report was read from the committee on the proposed Canal street improvement, enclosing a letter from Mr. R. D. Shepherd, in regard to the sum which he had proposed to expend for the improvement and embellishment of Canal street, on condition that it be henceforth and forever called Touro Avenue, be paved with square blocks of granite from Front Levee to Camp street, and the Neutral Ground laid out in squares from thence to Claiborne street, and that other improvements shall be made in accordance with a plan which he will submit; and also, that the resolution already passed to erect a cenotaph on some portion of said street to the memory of Judah Touro, be carried into effect. Resolutions agreeable to these requirements were offered by the committee and adopted by the Board, $10,000 being appropriated to the erection of the monument.

The ordinance organizing the Treasury Department, which had been made the order of the day, was then taken up and passed; it defines the duties of the Comptroller as well as Treasurer. The debate and passage of this ordinance occupied considerable time and the Board soon after adjourned.

YOUNG AMERICA IN TROUBLE.—Officers Dillon and Kearney yesterday afternoon had occasion to convey a prisoner to the Lake for the purpose of sending him to Mobile, and while there they learned that a lady's pocket had been picked on board the steamer Oregon. Suspicion fell upon a small boy, and he was immediately arrested and brought to the police office of the First District. His countenance was extremely prepossessing, and he was dressed in the very best style: coat, pantaloons and vest of the finest material, red-topped boots, and a low crowned hat, which fitted his head in a manner that gave him an air of great sagacity. He took the matter very coolly, replying to every question in a perfectly self-possessed, but cautious manner. Upon being searched, no less than four pocket books, containing between sixty and seventy dollars, together with a $25 note on a broken bank, were found upon his person. He stated that his name was James Williams, that his father resided in Philadelphia, and that he had left home some time ago, and had come here unaccompanied by any one: that he had been at the St. Charles Hotel for about three weeks, where he had a room and lived like a gentlemen. In fact, he had told the lady who accused him of taking her pocket-book that he was a gentleman's son and was astonished at such a charge being preferred against him. He stated that he was fifteen years of age, but from his appearance we supposed him to be younger; as to his age in experience, it would be difficult to form any just estimate. To a suggestion that a blazing pin in his shirt bosom was rather costly, he replied that it was only a "Cape May diamond;" and when he was finally divested of his plunder, he picked up his hat and walked off with the officer to his cell with the most perfect unconcern.

LOUISIANA LEGISLATURE.

BATON ROUGE, Monday, March 13.—Senate. The claim of Coffin & Co. against the model farm was defeated.

The House bill, for the improvement of Bayou Lafourche, was concurred in.

An act to reclaim the swamp and overflowed lands, and appropriating three hundred thousand dollars to carry it out, was passed by its title.

House.—Mr. Cronan's underground sewerage bill, and a bill authorizing certain parishes to subscribe to the Vicksburg and Shreveport Railroad, were laid on the table.

The Senate bill, to tax free persons of color, for purposes of colonization, was rejected.

The report of joint committee on Banks says: In the course of examination, your committee regret to state, that, with the commendable exception of the Citizens' Bank, they found all the other chartered banks had overstepped the limits prescribed by the second fundamental rule of the act of 1842. The report adds, that it appears that specie has been recently ordered by several of the banks to the gross amount of about eight hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, and since the examination, a letter has been received from the Canal Bank, announcing the arrival of four hundred thousand dollars in coin. A letter was also received from the Bank of Louisiana, dated 20th February, announcing that on that day it was in line four hundred and thirty-two thousand. These are gratifying evidences that the banks intend to place themselves, at an early period, within the requirements of the State. They speak in the highest terms of the soundness and success of free banking, and recommend the exemption of the consolidated bank from the control of the Board of Currency.

BATON ROUGE, March 14.—Senate.—The House bill authorizing the city to aid the Pontchartrain and Mobile Railroad was passed, and both quarantine hills were laid on the table by the casting vote of the President.

House.—The General Appropriation bill has been under discussion all day. An appropriation of $5000 was refused to furnish the University building. $20,000 was appropriated to the Charity Hospital, $6000 to the Female Orphan Asylum, and $3000 to the Fireman's Charitable Association.

General Intelligence.

The "Know Nothings" already number about 60,000 members in the State of New York.

Two autograph letters of Edgar A. Poe are offered for sale in Philadelphia for five dollars.

T. Babington Macaulay pronounces the statement that he is addicted to opium eating, and that his mental faculties are injured thereby, "an impudent lie."

Captain Creighton, of the ship Three Bells, sailed from New York on the 22d for Liverpool. On his departure he was greeted with loud cheers, and his ship was saluted by the different forts as she passed.

It is asserted by the Washington National Intelligencer, that there is nothing in the reports relative to the impracticability of the Isthmus of Darien project, to shake in the slightest degree the confidence previously entertained in the practicability of the work.

The Galveston News says: "We see it stated that Mr. Moore, who has lately immigrated to Grimes county, in this State, has, since his arrival, lost thirty-six of his family by cholera. Out of fifteen, of his white family, there were thirteen swept away by the fatal epidemic; and of his negroes he lost twenty-one."

FARE TO CALIFORNIA.—The fare to California via the Isthmus by steamship from New York is $150 in the first cabin, $125 in the second cabin, and from $75 to $110 in the steerage; in first class clipper ships, via Cape Horn, from $250 to $300 is charged. The freight on measurement goods is from 55 to 65 cents per cubic foot.

The Paris correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser writes that "It is understood that Mr Soulé's position is one of almost complete isolation, as to society, in Madrid. The character which preceded him, with his challenge of Turgot, has created a feeling against him that nothing can overcome, and which makes his situation alike humiliating and painful."

DEATH OF AN ENGLISH VETERAN JOURNALIST. The last steamer brings news of the death of Robert Alexander, Esq., the founder and senior editor of the Liverpool Mail. Mr. Alexander was justly esteemed as one of the ablest English journalists. He was some years since the editor of the London Morning Journal, and suffered a year's imprisonment at Newgate for libels on the Duke of Wellington and Lord Lyndhurst, as ministers of the crown.

STEAMBOAT DISASTER.—We learn from the Natchez Courier of the 11th inst. that the steamboat John L Avery, Captain R. Robinson, struck a snag on the afternoon of Thursday, the 9th, about ten miles above Fort Adams, and sunk immediately. The Avery left this city on the evening of the 7th, bound for Cincinnati, with a large freight on board and a great number of passengers; not less, it is thought, than three hundred, of which one hundred were cabin passengers. It seems that the accident occurred, racing with the Sultana. The former was so heavily loaded that the water would occasionally come up to her guards. The Courier says:

"The boat was about 150 to 200 yards from the Louisiana shore, when she struck the snag. The fore part appeared immediately to separate from the hind portion; the chimneys going overboard, and the stern rapidly settling. As the stern settled the cabin careered, rolling overboard a large number which had gathered upon it for safety. The sinking was almost instantaneous; some of the passengers stating that it was hardly over two minutes, and others that not more than four or five minutes elapsed at the utmost, before all was over, and the entire steamer out of sight, except the top of her upper cabin, on which were congregated most of the passengers who were saved. Many were, however, afterwards rescued from the water. The wind at the time was very high, and the waves rolled with quite a heavy swell. The steamer Sultana, which was immediately behind, came alongside in the course of twenty minutes, and succeeded in rescuing those clinging to the wreck, and also several found floating in the river."

The Courier estimates that not less than fifty lives were lost by this disaster, though we are disposed to think that this account is somewhat exaggerated. The survivors were taken to Natchez by the Sultana.

THE EXPLOSION AT HARTFORD.—A telegraphic dispatch from Hartford, Conn., dated the 2d inst., gives the following of the explosion and loss of life at Hartford, which we have before noticed: At two o'clock to-day the new steam boiler in Fales & Gray's car factory exploded, destroying the blacksmith shop and engine-room, and badly shattering the main building. Over 100 persons were in that part of the building. The explosion was terrific, wrenching the powerful machinery, breaking the timbers, and prostrating the walls and roof. The workmen were buried beneath the ruins. The citizens were quickly on the spot to rescue the sufferers, nine of whom were instantly killed, and seven have since died. Many others are badly injured, some of whom will die. The boiler was a new one of 50 horse power, and built in the best manner. Over 300 persons were employed in the whole building, and those killed were chiefly employed in the blacksmith shop. The scene was heart-rending. Hundreds of the wives and children of the workmen rushed to the spot, venting their grief in tears and piteous cries. The excitement spread to the schools in the South District, attended by the children of the workmen, who were at once dismissed in consequence of their distress. The victims were horribly mutilated, and in some instances scarcely recognizable. At 5 o'clock every one had been extricated from the ruins, and it is supposed that the wounded will exceed 50. A coroner's jury was immediately summoned and proceeded to investigate the disaster. The estimated loss of the building and machinery is $30,000.

It is said that the engineer was filling his boiler with water when the accident occurred. It is on such occasions that most accidents of a similar kind occur.

Burning of the Steamboat Caroline on White River.

OVER FORTY LIVES LOST!

The Memphis Enquirer of the 10th inst. gives the following particulars of the burning of the Memphis and White River steamboat Caroline, on White River, on Sunday afternoon, the 5th inst., a report of which melancholy disaster reached this city on Monday:

Our city was thrown into great excitement early yesterday morning by the rumor, brought here by a passenger on the steamboat America, of the burning of the Caroline, e Memphis and White river packet. The rumor was confirmed by the arrival of Mr. Folger, who was captain of the Caroline. He arrived on the St. Nicholas. We learn from him, that fire was discovered on the Caroline between three and four o'clock last Sunday afternoon, about twenty miles above the mouth of White river. It appears the fire originated beneath the boilers, and in a very short time the entire boat was enveloped in a sheet of flame. There were many passengers on board, mostly emigrating families; and between forty and fifty of them were either burned or found a watery grave. The captain (Mr. Folger) was in his room, in the act of lying down, when the fire was first discovered; and, although hearing a commotion on board, he was not aware that the boat was on fire, until the steward told him to save himself. Mr. John Trice, one of the pilots, was at the wheel, and after getting the order from the captain to run the boat ashore, like young Cassa Ibanez, stood at his post, and perished in the flames, not, however, until he had put the burning vessel against the shore. Alas, poor Trice! a monument should be built to perpetuate thy heroism.

The breezy call of incense-breathing morn,
The swallow twittering from the straw-built shed,
The cock's shrill clarion or the echoing horn,
No more shall rouse thee from thy lowly bed.

Mr. Trice left his watch only once and then only for a moment to awaken the Captain for instructions how to steer the boat. Being told to put her into shore, he stood at the wheel, and was never seen again!

A large circle of relatives and friends will be shocked to learn that Captain James Creighton is among the lost. Mr. Creighton, with great presence of mind, undressed himself partly, swung to the lower guard of the boat and then jumped into the river, and commenced swimming to the shore. When last seen he was giving the Odd Fellows' sign of distress.

And death came soon and swift,
And painless.

A number of persons took possession of the yawl, all of whom were drowned, caused by the sinking of the yawl from the overload. It is supposed there were sixteen persons in the yawl at the time it sunk.

There were ten deck hands on board, only two of whom were saved. They shipped from St. Louis.

The following is a list of the lost. It is as accurate as it can be made at present:

List of Officers and Crew Lost.—John R. Trice, pilot; James A. Creighton, pilot; Lewis Pollock, assistant bar-keeper; John Warner, Dennie Lunch, Robert Young, James Leach, Dan ——, Peter ——, all deck hands.

List of Passengers Lost.—In the cabin—Mr. Jones, clerk of Pool & Co., Jacksonport, Ark.; Mr. Harwick, mouth of Cache. On the deck—wife and child of J. Hasken; four children of S. McMullen; Mr. Smith, wife and young lady; Mrs. Bailey and three children; John Wharton, wife and two children; Mr. Parvell, E. M. Martin; Susanna E. Pool, Henshaw's child; Mr. ——, Shelby county, Tenn., (son-in-law of Mr. Wetham,) his widowed sister and her three children and single sister.

A large amount of money was lost. Captain Folger having five thousand dollars in the safe, and Mr. Penn, a passenger, between three and four thousand dollars. There was also a package of money in the safe for Mrs. Wilbanks, whose husband died recently at the Commercial Hotel, in this city, and whose remains were on the boat.

Very few of the large number of deck passengers were saved. There were several women and children lost, whose names are unknown.

The boat burnt to the surface of the water, which running in at the stern, raised the hull up, and it then swung off, floating into the stream, where it sunk in thirty feet water. The burning of the boat was the work of a few moments, and the passengers and crew of the boat lost everything.

The Caroline was owned by Capt. Jas Clark, of Chicago, Ill. It was valued at twelve thousand dollars, and insured in this city for five thousand dollars.

We hear of many heart-rending scenes, one of which we record. An old gentleman plunged into the river with a child in each arm. He buffetted the relentless waves, but the struggle was vain. He sunk twice, when he released his dear little ones to gain a moment's respite. Catching them up again almost lifeless, he again sunk and rose alternately. He was enabled, however, to reach a large tree standing in the edge of the water. He laid the children within the forks of the tree; but they were dead!

The dreadful catastrophe has carried desolation to many families in this city and the adjacent country. Capt. Creighton, who is among the number, was a citizen of this place, where his aged parents, brothers and sisters reside. To them it is a terrible blow. He had, too, a large number of friends, to whom his untimely loss carries the deepest affliction. He was a warm-hearted, active, energetic man, imbued with all those qualities which attach men to their possessor. But the loss of Mr. Trice is peculiarly distressing. Young, full of life and hope, he had just married a young and beautiful wife (daughter of Hume F. Hill, Esq.,) who fortunately remained at home during this terribly disastrous trip. In West Tennessee and North Mississippi, as will be seen by the list of names, there have been heavy and most distressing losses. The paper which carries this sad news will spread gloom and anguish in many homes. It is one of the most heart-rending disasters we ever had to record.

Conviction of Dr. Gardinar.

HIS SENTENCE AND DEATH.

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun gives the following particulars of the conviction of Dr. Gardiner and his subsequent death:

Quite unexpectedly to every body, the jury in the case of George A. Gardiner, this morning entered the court room about half-past eleven o'clock with a verdict. The prisoner was seated in the court room, and as the jury took their places he peered scrutinizingly into their faces, as if to elicit one favorable indication. Disappointed in this, a death-like paleness spread over his features; mortification and despair appeared to paralyze his whole system. The verdict was guilty.

After the verdict was announced, Mr. Bradley, one of the counsel for the defense, stated that the counsel had prepared to file a bill of exceptions, and they would prefer to have judgment pronounced immediately.

Dr. George A. Gardiner was then called upon to stand up and receive the sentence of the law; which Judge Crawford pronounced as follows:

"You have been convicted by a jury of your country of the crime of false swearing, touching the expenditure of public money, and in support of a claim against the United States. Perjury, in its nature and general sense, strikes at the root of all the securities which society is bound to extend to and maintain around the citizen. The particular offense charged upon you, and upon which the jury have passed, whether considered in reference to the complicated plot by which its objects were consummated, or to the amount of money obtained from the Treasury on the award of the commissioners appointed to decide upon the claims under the treaty with Mexico of February, 1848, is one of unusual enormity.

"To address such observations, as must seem to every man who knows the circumstances that surrounded you, to a person of your concealed ability it would be useless or vain—useless, if they have arisen in your own mind; vain, if they have not. From your fate others should learn, that no plan, however remote its origin, with whatever forecast laid, however stealthily or adroitly pursued for years, and at length executed, or with whatever success for a time attended, can be so cunningly devised as to escape detection. The unexampled ingenuity, on the net-work spread out on this trial; and on the fact that it has been exposed at the last stage, ought not to fail of a beneficial effect in convincing all men that if they will trample on laws, human and divine, they shall suffer for it.

"The sentence of the Court is, that you suffer in the penitentiary for the District of Columbia imprisonment and labor for the period of ten years."

After the sentence was pronounced the prisoner was taken to the jail, in custody of the proper officers.

Mr. Bradley, the prisoner's counsel, was present—and, having been seated, some conversation took place between them. Gardiner then took a glass of water and signified his readiness to go to jail. Mr. Smith, the warden of the jail, and Mr. Wilson, bailiff of the court, then accompanied him over. In entering the guard-room, Mr. Gardiner took a chair, and in about five minutes was seized with a severe fit, and fell to the ground, cutting his head. Physicians were soon sent for and he soon recovered. Several fits in quick succession followed. He was cupped, and every remedy used without effect. During these sufferings, Gardiner called Mr. Bradley to his side, told him he was dying, and that he died innocent.

Gardiner died about three o'clock. This melancholy occurrence has shocked our citizens, and as this is closed we are waiting for Coroner Woodward to convene a jury of inquest, and the physicians are preparing to hold a post mortem examination on the body.

The court, after sentencing Gardiner, adjourned until Monday next, when it commences a new term, and the spectators present cleared out. Not more than half an hour elapsed between the appearance of the jury in the court and the final closing of the scene. Gardiner's counsel had filed a bill of exceptions before the District Court.

It appears that this morning Gardiner knew that the jury had stood ten opposed to him and two in favor of him; but their subsequent delay created high hopes in him of final and continued disagreement. He was cheerful, and having dressed himself neatly and handsomely, proceeded to the court room. This first emotion he has ever evinced during the trial was when the jury came into the guard room. He then took a chair, drew up to the table, and took out of his pocket the letters which he destroyed. He then wrote a letter, put it in his pocket, and commenced another, when he was suddenly seized with spasms and fell back, cutting the side of his head against the desk.

Gardiner immediately called for water and then for brandy. There being none, he drew from his pocket a quarter dollar, and Dr. Birch sent a messenger for some. On the return of the messenger, Gardiner reviving, refused the brandy. He then gave his brother the letters, and others the contents of his pockets. Shortly after convulsions commenced. Gardiner and his brother wished no physician, because, as they stated, he was subject to convulsions. Several physicians came, however, and used every means for his relief, but without avail.

The inquest adjourned until to-morrow morning, when a post mortem examination will be held. The public opinion is at this time very confident that he poisoned himself. Crowds surrounded the jail until dark, and there is considerable excitement on every hand.

On the 4th a post mortem examination was held, when the jury came to the conclusion that he died from the effects of strychnine. The Sentinel says witnesses testified on various points affecting the circumstances of his death. Two of them said they noticed that Dr. Gardiner, while in the court-house, put some small substance into his mouth, which they at first supposed to be tobacco crumbs, and then touched his lips with water; and from this they suppose he at that time swallowed the fatal drug.

Passage of the Nebraska Bill.

The Nebraska Bill passed the United States Senate on the morning of Saturday the 4th inst., after a session extending throughout the whole night. This thing is accomplished by the very decisive vote of 37 yeas to 14 nays, or nearly three to one, and this too without the vote of three Senators who it is known would have voted for the measure could they have been present, while six, including Messrs Pearce of Maryland, and Clayton of Delaware, are not recorded on either side of the question. There was but one more vote which would have been cast against the bill, that of Mr. Allen of Rhode Island, who was accessarily absent. It is represented by the Washington press—especially the Sentinel and Union of Saturday—that the debate on the bill in the Senate on Friday night was very able and interesting. Although it continued until half-past four o'clock in the morning, the interest of the large number of persons in the galleries was kept up to the last. The closing speech of Senator Douglas is universally regarded as the most masterly of his many able efforts. The Globe says that the debate during the two days and nights, (Thursday and Friday,) will make at least one hundred columns in that paper, and that before its publication it will be submitted to the speakers for revision.

We give below a careful analysis of the vote in the Senate. It presents some strange political and sectional features, deserving the study of the curious:

FOR THE BILL.

Northern Democrats.—Messrs. Brodhead, Pa.; Cass, Mich.; Dodge, Iowa; Douglas, Ill.; Gwin, Cal.; Jones, Iowa; Norris, N. H.; Petit, Ia.; Shields, Ill.; Stuart, Mich.; Thompson, N. J.; Toucy, Conn.; Weller, Cal.; Williams, N. H.—14

Southern Democrats.—Messrs. Adams, Miss.; Atchison, Mo.; Bayard, Del.; Brown, Miss.; Butler, S. C.; Clay, Ala.; Evans, S. C.; Fitzpatrick, Ala.; Hunter, Va.; Johnston, Ark.; Mason, Va.; Rusk, Texas; Sebastian, Ark.; Slidell, La.—14.

Southern Whigs.—Messrs. Benjamin, La.; Badger, N. C.; Dawson, Ga.; Dixon, Ky.; Geyer, Mo.; Jones, Tenn.; Morton, Fla.; Pratt, Md.; Thompson, Ky.—9. Total for the Bill, 37.

AGAINST THE BILL.

Northern Democrats.—Messrs. Dodge, of Wisconsin; Hamlin, of Maine; James, of R. Island; Walker, of Wisconsin.—4.

Northern Whigs.—Messrs. Fessenden, of Maine; Fish, of New York; Foot, of Vermont; Seward, of New York, (abolition;) Smith, of Connecticut; Wade, of Ohio, (abolition).—6.

Independent Free Soilers.—Messrs. Chase, of Ohio, and Sumner, of Massachusetts.—2.

Southern Whig.—Mr. Bell, of Tennessee.—1.

Southern Democrat.—Mr. Houston, of Texas.—1.

Total against the bill, 14.

ABSENTEES.

Northern Democrats.—Allen, of R. I.; Bright, of Ia.; and Wright, of N. J.—3.

Southern Democrat.—Mallory, of Fla.—1.

Northern Whigs.—Clayton, of Del.; Cooper, of Penn.; Everett, of Mass.; and Phelps, of Vt.—4.

Southern Whigs.—Pearce, of Md.; Toombs, of Geo.—2.

Total absentees, (31 States—62 Senators—1 vacancy from North Carolina) 10.

RECAPITULATION.

For the Bill.		Against it.
Northern Democrats,	14	Northern Democrats	4
Southern Democrats,	14	Southern Democrats	1
Southern Whigs,	9	Northern Whigs	6
		Southern Whigs	1
		Free Soilers	2
Total	37	Total	14

Majority for the bill 23

The Sentinel says: Perhaps no public measure was ever more thoroughly canvassed and elaborately discussed in the Senate, than the bill to which we refer. Nor was ever any measure, involving principles of such vast importance and delicacy, discussed with more sobriety, calmness and good feeling.

The N. Y. Tribune gives the following statement of the annual salaries paid in each of the departments at Washington:

State Department, annual salaries	$41 000
Treasury Department, annual salaries	538 710
Interior Department, annual salaries	404,130
War Department, annual salaries	98 580
Navy Department, annual salaries	123 400
Post-Office Department, annual salaries	124 400
Total amount of salaries paid in Washington	$1 331 000

This does not include the postmasters, land agents, pension agents, and a host of other officials dependent on the Executive, the extent of whose patronage this table may assist to elucidate.

A little girl had a beautiful head of hair, which hung in "clustering curls" down her neck. One hot summer day, she went up stairs and cut off all her curls. Coming down she met her mother, who exclaimed with surprise: "Why, Mary! what have you been doing to your hair?" To which she responded, that she had cut it off and laid it away in her box, but she intended to put it on again to-morrow, as Aunt Nancy did!

Washington's birthday was celebrated appropriately in most of the cities and villages throughout the nation. At New York and Philadelphia especially, the occasion was celebrated in a manner, never before equaled in these cities.

Louis Napoleon's Letter to the Czar.

PALACE OF THE TUILERIES Jan. 29.

Sire—The difference which has arisen between your Majesty and the Ottoman Porte has assumed such a grave aspect, that I think I right myself to explain directly to your Majesty the part which France has taken in this question, and the means which suggest themselves to me in order to avoid the dangers which menace the tranquility of Europe.

The note which your Majesty has just sent to my Government, and to that of Queen Victoria, endeavors to prove that it was the system of pressure adopted from the commencement of the two maritime powers which alone involved the question in bitterness. On the contrary, according to my view, the matter would have continued a Cabinet question, if the occupation of the two Principalities had not suddenly transferred it from the region of discussion to that of fact. Nevertheless, although your Majesty's troops had entered Wallachia, we advised the Porte not to consider that occupation as a warlike act, thus proving our extreme desire for conciliation. After I had consulted with England, Austria and Prussia, I proposed to your Majesty a note, designed to give satisfaction to all. Your Majesty accepted it. We had hardly, however, been informed of this good news when your Minister, by explanatory commentaries, destroyed all the conciliatory effects of it, and thus prevented us from insisting at Constantinople upon its pure and simple adoption. The Porte, for its own part, suggested some modifications in the note to which the Representatives of the Four Powers at Vienna were not disposed to agree. They were not, however, agreed to by your Majesty. It was then that the Porte, wounded in his dignity, its independence threatened, and being compelled to raise an army to oppose that of your Majesty, preferred to declare war rather than remain in a state of uncertainty and humility. The Porte had claimed our support; the cause of the Porte appeared to us to be a just one, and the English and French squadrons were therefore ordered to the Bosphorus.

Our attitude in reference to Turkey was that of a protector, but it was passive. We did not incite her to war. We unceasingly addressed to the cenk of the Sultan the advice of peace and moderation, persuaded that this was the best mode of coming to an agreement, and the Four Powers consulted together again, and submitted to your Majesty some other propositions. Your Majesty, on your part, exhibiting the calmness which arises from the consciousness of strength, contented yourself with repulsing from the left bank of the Danube, as in Asia, the attacks of the Turks; and, with the moderation worthy of the chief of a great Empire, your Majesty declared that you would act on the defensive. Up to that period, then, we were, I may say, interested spectators, but simply spectators of the dispute, when the affair of Sinope compelled us to take a more decisive part. France and England had not thought it necessary to send troops to the assistance of Turkey. Their flag, therefore, was not engaged in the conflicts which took place upon land. But at sea it was very different. There were at the entrance of the Bosphorus three thousand guns, the existence of which proclaimed loudly enough to Turkey that the two leading maritime powers would not allow her to be attacked by sea. The affair at Sinope was for us as painful as it was unexpected; for it matters little to us whether or not the Turks wished to convey munitions of war to the Russian territory.

In fact, Russian ships attacked Turkish vessels in the waters of Turkey, while these vessels were riding quietly at anchor in a Turkish port. The Turkish vessels were destroyed, in spite of the assurance that there was no wish to commence an aggressive war, and in spite of the vicinity of our squadrons. It was no longer our policy which received a check, it was our military honor. The sound of the cannon shot at Sinope reverberated painfully in the hearts of all those who in England and France respect national dignity. There was a general participation in the sentiment that wherever our cannon can reach our allies ought to be respected. Out of this feeling arose the order to our squadrons to enter the Black Sea, and to prevent by force, if necessary, the recurrence of a similar event. Thence arose the collective notification sent to the Cabinet of St. Petersburg, announcing that if we prevented the Turks from making an aggressive war upon the coast of Russia, we would also protect the Turks on their own territory. As to the Russian fleet, in prohibiting its navigation of the Black Sea, we placed it upon a different condition, because it was important during the war to preserve a guarantee equivalent in force to the occupation of the Turkish territory, and thus facilitate the conclusion of peace by having the power of making a desirable exchange.

Such, sire, is the result, and a statement of the facts. It is clear that having arrived at this point, they must bring about either a definite understanding or a decided rupture.

Your Majesty has given so many proofs of your solicitude for the tranquility of Europe, and by your beneficent influence has so powerfully arrested the spirit of disorder, that I cannot doubt as to the course you will take in the alternative which presents itself to your choice. Should your Majesty be as desirous as myself of a pacific conclusion, what would be more simple than to declare that an armistice shall now be signed, that things shall resume their diplomatic course, that all hostilities shall cease, and that the belligerent forces shall return from the places to which motives of war have led them?

Thus the Russian troops would abandon the Principalities, and our squadrons the Black Sea. Your Majesty, preferring to treat directly with Turkey, might appoint an Embassador, who could negotiate with a plenipotentiary of the Sultan a convention which might be submitted to a conference of the Four Powers. Let your Majesty adopt this plan, upon which the Queen of England and myself are perfectly agreed, the tranquility will be re-established and the world satisfied.

There is nothing in the plan which is unworthy of your Majesty—nothing which can wound your honor; but if, from a motive difficult to understand, your Majesty should refuse this proposal, then France, as well as England, will be compelled to leave to the fate of arms and the chances of war, that which might now be decided by reason and justice.

Let not your Majesty think that the least animosity can enter my heart. I feel no other sentiments than those expressed by your Majesty yourself in your letter of the 17th of January, 1853, in which you write: "Our relations ought to be sincerely amicable, based as they are upon the same intentions—the maintenance, of order, the love of peace, respect for treaties, and reciprocal good feeling." This programme is worthy of the sovereign who traced it, and I do not hesitate to declare that I remain faithful to it.

I beg your Majesty to believe in the sincerity of my sentiments, and it is with these sentiments that I am, sire, your Majesty's good friend,

NAPOLEON.

Later from Mexico.

By the arrival of the steamship Texas, Capt. Place, we have received papers from the city of Mexico to the 5th of March, and from Vera Cruz to the 9th.

It being feared that Count Rousset de Boulbon was about to make an attack upon Acapulco, the government had sent two regiments of troops for its defense. The march of this body towards Acapulco had been the cause of a rebellion in the southern part of the country. Don Juan Alvarez, a chief in the mountains around Acapulco, fearing that those forces had been sent for the purpose of assassinating him and his followers, had raised his standard and opposed their entrance into his territory. To suppress this insurrection, Santa Anna had sent 4000 to the city of Bravos.

The papers of the Capital appear to agree pretty well in representing this Alvarez as a man of very infamous character and career, who has long been the plague of all governments, by not merely his restless spirit, but the large band of abandoned men whom he keeps about him and with whom he not only sets up such insurrections, but commits all sorts of cruelties and oppressions upon the harmless and quiet people about him. As he is much crowded in the South, the Government had attempted to conciliate him by passing over his former acts; but it appears that he had at last become satisfied that while Santa Anna was putting down robbers every where else he himself could not long escape. The Universal speaks of him as follows: "All the world knows that Don Juan Alvarez has always exercised in the department of Guerrero a boundless power, which he has abused in the most scandalous manner ever seen. His power has founded itself on the attrocious influence which brute force is accustomed to acquire when accompanied with cunning. He has sustained itself by a continual series of crimes, such as can hardly be found in any history of tyranny. The cruelties of the Caffre and Hottentot chiefs in the ignorant tribes which obey them, are nothing in comparison with those which this man has been exercising upon those of the South, at the same time that our political constitutions designed them free citizens."

Official information from Monterey speaks of an attack by Indians, who killed three persons and carried off a number of mules. In Durango also they were continuing their ravages.

Several decrees have recently been issued. One prohibits the importation into any ports of the Republic of anise, either in seed or in essence. Another renews the stamp duties of the 30th of April, 1842. A third pronounces those merchants conspirators who shall order goods to be imported into any port declared to be in a state of rebellion. A fourth prohibits the consignments of vessels or cargoes to capitains or supercargoes. They must be consigned to some established house of the port to which they go. A fifth regulates the management of the public treasury, etc.

Fifteen Days Later from the Pacific.

LATER FROM THE ISTHMUS—DREADFUL DISASTER ON LAKE NICARAGUA.

By the arrival, on Saturday, of the steamship El Dorado, Captain Gray, from Aspinwall, and the Daniel Webster, Captain Womack, from San Juan Del Norte, we have received fifteen days' later intelligence from California and later dates from the Isthmus and the South Pacific.

The Daniel Webster was detained four days at San Juan Del Norte, by a melancholy accident which took place at Virgin Bay, on Lake Nicaragua, on the afternoon of the 2d inst., while the passengers were being conveyed to the lake steamer Omalepe, at her moorings, in the large iron launch used for that purpose. It appears, from all the information we could collect, that the launch was crowded by over anxious passengers to get on board the steamer. The wind blowing on shore created a heavy swell, which filled her while near the land, and precipitated nearly eighty persons altogether into the water, twenty-four of whom were drowned. Nineteen bodies were recovered and buried at Navy Bay.

The agent at that place was using every exertion in his power to find the other bodies. Every attention was paid to the survivors that was possible. It is supposed that the large amount of gold and dust attached to the persons of the unfortunate victims was the cause of the drowning of many of them, as the water was quite shallow a few feet inside the launch.

The natives as well as others were very active in rescuing passengers and baggage from the water, and one poor fellow was drowned in his humane attempts.

Annexed is a list of the names of most of the persons whose bodies have been found since the accident at Virgin Bay. The amount of treasure attached to them, is said to be in the hands of the agent:

William H. Gardiner, $900 in gold, draft for $1450; Francis Harris, 119 ounces dust; Isaac Edge, $4000; Engineer, name unknown; C. Vine, D. W. Loud, Fred. Cleary, (boy,) Daniel Churchill, Edw. Thomas, (boy,) Jacob Leads, New York; Charles Lyons; Old man from Michigan, name unknown; H. W. Studley, not found; Mercy Moore, a native; James Potter, not found; William Lynn; English woman, found; her husband, not found, had on his body $3500; T. Sanicote; Frank Flynn; David Lewis, a black.

This is the first accident of the kind that has taken place since the line was formed.

The Star of the West left San Juan on the evening of the 5th for New York, with 350 passengers, and $1,000,000 in treasure.

The El Dorado left Aspinwall on the morning of the 6th inst.

Steamship George Law left Aspinwall at the same time, with two hundred passengers, and one million and a half in gold dust.

The United States sloop of-war Cyane, Capt. Hollins, was in port at Aspinwall when the El Dorado left. Capt. H. states that, after landing Lieut. Strain and party, of the Darien Canal expedition, at Caledonia Bay, he returned there twenty-eight days, during which time nothing was heard of the party, except, from some natives, to the effect that they were all dead. Lieut. Strain took with him only ten days' provisions; and, although Captain Hollins and officers of the Cyane are of opinion that the whole party have perished, yet the arrival of the English Engineering Corps at Panama leaves still some hopes of their safety.

Capt. Hollins was to le

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

THE LAND OF DREAMS

O dreadful is the land of dreams
When all its world a chaos seems
Of thoughts so fix'd before
When Heaven can feel no stain'd with blood
And friends come o'er our solitude
Now friends of ours no more
Oh, dearer to our hearts than ever
Keep stretching forth with vain endeavor
Their pale and pained hands
To clasp us phantoms as we are Along the cold, like drifting snows
To far off nameless lands
Yet all the while we know not why
Nor others those dreams can see
Half hoping that a cure is nigh
And wild can only be in sleep
And that some harrowing scream
Will break the fetters of the dream
And let us back to waking life
Fill'd the air at least the watch can know
There is danger on the land or sea
Some cry of distress
Assur'd that he must answer to
Of tears upon the sea-dead
In that land's enslaved
When beating o'er the pale cheek
Of one who softly seems asleep
At every cold cut breathing kiss
He hears a voice afar speak—
Thy love on yet ever.—Blackwood's Mag.

The Widow's Daughter.

The golden light of evening dazzled the eyes of a young girl who stood upon a style, watching for the arrival of the loitering coach.

It was about a hundred miles from London—no matter in what direction—at the bottom of a green valley, down the western slope of which the road came winding here and there concealed by trees. A well-beaten path led to a village a few fields distant, embowered in orchards, and leaning, as it were, against the massive oaks and elms of a park, that shut in the view in that direction. The square steeple-tower of the old church scarcely overtopped this background of leaves.

Florence May was waiting for her mother, who had been absent some weeks in London, and who had been compelled, to leave her all alone in their humble cottage—all alone, unless her rectitude and her sense of duty may be counted as companions.

They were poor, humble people. Mrs. May was the widow of a country curate, who had died, leaving, as curates sometimes do not, a slight provision for his family. It was like a Providence. Having fought the fight of life nearly out on £50 or £60 a year, some elegant relation, whom they had never seen and scarcely ever heard of, put the curate in his will to £1000. This sum, invested, was sufficient to support both mother and daughter in that out of the way place.

A letter had arrived, when Mrs May had been a widow three years, requesting her to come up to London, to hear of "something to her advantage." This was vague enough, but she resolved to comply; and not being able to afford the expense of a distant journey, had left her daughter, then about seventeen, under the guardianship of the neighbors, her own character, and a mother's prayers.

She has been absent more than a week. What has happened in the meantime? Why does Florence wait with more than the impatience of filial affection—with a countenance in which smiling lips and tearful eyes tell of a struggle between joy and sadness? She is troubled with the burden of her first secret—a secret which she nurses with uneasy delight, and which she is anxious to pour into the ears of her only confidante—her mother. "How many maidens of seventeen are still in the full bloom of innocence!"

The sun had set behind the hills. Wheels came sounding down the valley, and the coach began to descend, glittering and lightning upheld but the lights that glanced occasionally among the trees. The time seemed unusually long to Florence. She even thought once that some fantastical, ghastly coachman was driving a phantom vehicle to and fro on the hillside to mock her. Young people have state of mind would annihilate time and space. However, here it comes, the Tally-ho, sweeping round the last corner—lights gleaming—horses tossing their heads and steaming—a portmanteau flapping to and fro. "That's a girl's voice as screamed," said a man to the Whip as they passed. "Full inside and out," was the reply, and on went the Tally-ho along the level lap of the valley.

"She is not come," murmured Florence, after waiting in vain some time, to see if the coach would stop lower down; but it pursued its inexorable course, and the young girl returned by the dim path to her cottage on the outskirts of the village.

That was a critical period in her life. For some days after her mother's departure, she had spent her time either at her needle, or with one or two old neighbors, who wearied her with their gossip. To escape from the sense of monotony, she had wandered one morning into the fields, as it was indeed her custom from time to time to do; and there, with the scent of wild flowers and new mown hay around, she allowed her mind to be ruffled by those thoughts and feelings which at that age breathe upon us from I know not what region—sparkling and innocent stirrings, that scarcely typify the billowy agitation of succeeding years.

Across the meadows that occupy the lowest portion of that valley, meanders a stream, over which the willows hang their whip-like branches and slender leaves. Near its margin, Florence used often to sit with her work, but diligently attended to, then dropped occasionally on her lap, that she might watch the little fish that flitted like shadows to and fro in the shallow current; then utterly forgotten, as she herself went wafting down the stream of the future, that, widened as she went, and flowed, at her unconscious will, through scenes more magical than those of fairy-land. The schoolmen have sought for the place of Paradise; did they peep into a young heart that is waiting, without knowing it, to love?

It was during her first walks since her mother's absence, that a stranger came slowly down the opposite bank of the stream; and seeing this lovely young girl entranced in a reverie, paused to gaze at her. His glance at first was cold and critical, like that of a man who has trodden many lands, and has seen more such visions than one under trees in lonely places—visions that, when neared and grasped at, hardened into reality, vulgar and lucubrate. In a little time, however, the brow of this stranger unbent—and his lip uncurled, and there came a strange fear to his heart, that what he saw of grace and beauty beneath that archway of willow-boughs, was a mere optical illusion—a phantasm painted on the exhalations of the meadow by the sun's beams. There is a certain prelude in disappointed natures, which makes them believe that all the loveliness of the outer world is of their own imagining, as if we could imagine more perfect things than God has imagined and thrown on this canvas of the universe.

The man was of the south by travel, if not by birth, and muttered some "Santa Virgines" more in surprise than devotion. He did not move or speak to attract the young girl's attention, but waited with her eyes, which he saw were restless, should chance to fall upon him. Her start of alarm, when she found herself to be not alone, was repressed by the grave politeness of his bow.

"Young lady," he said, in a low musical voice when she had leaped the stream and stood by her side, "I am on my way to Melcyn Park. Perhaps I may learn from you in what direction to turn."

"The roof of the mansion shews above the trees," replied she, raising and stretching out her pretty hand.

"I might have guessed as much," said the stranger, whose accent was Italian; "but a stupid foreigner and this is but a bad excuse for speaking to you. It is more frank to say, that I was surprised at seeing so much beauty and grace nurtured in this sequestered valley, and could not pass on without learning who you may be."

Flattery flies to the heart as swiftly as electricity along the wire. The guileless beauty drew off but slightly. "Florence May," said she, "is known to the whole valley and will not be made apprised of her mistress, without finding defenders."

Was this affected fear, a cunning device for telling her name without stooping to answer an unauthorized question.

"Child," replied the stranger, who, perhaps, took this view of the matter, for he smiled, though kindly, "you may count on me as one of the defenders of the present, let me thank you, and say farewell."

With these words, and an air almost formal now, he turned and went across the fields, leaving Florence bewildered, almost breathless, with surprise and excitement, and, to confess the truth, not a little piqued that her rustical rusé it was, had brought, the dialogue to so abrupt a termination. She had no wish to parley with strangers. Her mother had expressly warned her not to do so. What a famous opportunity thrown away to exhibit the rigidness of her sense of duty! Indeed, there had been so little [illegible] in the stranger, if he had only read her countenance, he might presently have known that she was not displeased. Another part that the stranger, if he had only read her countenance, he might presently have known that she was not displeased. Another part that the stranger, if he had only read her countenance, he might presently have known that she was not displeased.

There were not exactly her thoughts, but the reluctance of them. She felt as if the retiring manner of the stranger, as she kept by the river among the willows, and slightly bent her lip. There certainly, as if remembering that the sun glistened amid which her attitude expressed, was more beautiful than ever among willows. His emphasis was that word her beautiful setting. She turned, with a shuddering like a dart, and set down again, with her face averted from the now distant stranger—nursing only a moment [illegible] and have remained [illegible] out of that exquisite grass among which the gnats rustle, by the stone that has flattened down her shoulder.

Now, here I must mean an air of faith that I have [illegible] "Florence May," she says, "is known to the whole valley and will not be made apprised of her mistress, without finding defenders." We would have you recorded in the consistent mood your each than that. But, at any rate, the impression had been produced. Also [illegible] Florence, and the stranger [illegible] Florence [illegible] Florence [illegible] Florence

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Publishing Committee Louisiana Conference, { J. C. KEENER, L. PARKER, J. B. WALKER.

H. N. McTYEIRE, EDITOR.

J. HAMILTON, D. D., T. W. DORMAN, W. MURRAH. } Publishing Committee Alabama Conference.

VOL. IV. NO. 8. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 1854. WHOLE NO. 164.

THE END AND BEGINNING OF THE YEAR.

BY ALFRED TENNYSON.

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying clouds, the frosty light:
The year is dying in the night;
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring happily, bells across the snow;
The Year is going, let him go:
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the grief that saps the mind;
For those that here we see no more;
Ring out the feuds of rich and poor,
Ring in redress to all mankind.

Ring out a slowly dying cause,
And ancient forms of party strife;
Ring in the nobler modes of life,
With sweeter manners, purer laws

Ring out the want, the care, the sin,
The faithless coldness of the times;
Ring out, ring out, my mournful rhymes,
But ring in the fuller minstrel in.

Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slanders and the spite;
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good.

Ring out old shapes of foul disease,
Ring out the narrow lust of gold,
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant men and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

CLERGY-PHOBIA.

It is well known that, whether reasonable or not, there is among us a growing distrust of the Christian Ministry. Among the signs of the times, there is getting to be in many quarters a rabid clergy-phobia, as it has been well called, to which some parts of the newspaper press have not a little contributed. Methodists of every kind are looked upon with a very suspicious eye. Especially is this the case in respect to their assumption of being a special teaching class. Men ask for the guarantee of their fitness, the grounds of their superior enlightenment, the direct, palpable evidence of their apostolical commission." [Editor's table: Harper's for March.

The above extract would be both partial and garbled if it was the purpose of this article to indulge an invidious critique of the whole. Justice leads us to explain that it embraces the inception of an argument a posteriori, against the claims of the newspaper press, as the hope of the age, and the ascendant of modern politics. If the assumed position of the Christian ministry, with its guarantees and credentials of whatever sort, is questioned and distrusted, how much more are the claims of the press, without guarantees or credentials, open to a like suspicion and distrust?

Without passing an opinion upon the conclusion supposed to be reached, the statement of the argument will indicate the Christian duty of the writer. It seems to have been addressed ad hominem to those who magnify the press and corps editorial at the cost of pulpit and ministerial detraction.

The facts relevantly embodied in the extract and bearing the imprimatur of the highest newspaper authority, have a significance which cannot be confined to the connexion in which they are found. "There is among us a growing distrust of the Christian ministry." "Among the signs of the times there is getting to be a rabid clergy-phobia." Methodists of every kind are looked upon with very suspicious eye. Especially is this the case in respect to their assumption of being a special teaching class." The guarantee of their fitness, the grounds of their superior enlightenment, the direct palpable evidence of their apostolical commission, are looked for. This is not a growing and enlightened public opinion inimical to the abuses and unscriptural prerogatives of a high church and papal priesthood; but it is an aggressive prejudice which questions the moderate and warranted functions of ministerial office. The assumption of being a special teaching class is opposed. This being denied them, the Christian ministry as a mere profession, or even as a divine call, is swept away—it is virtually annihilated. The position of Christian ministers, as public and proven-accredited teachers is the last which they can renounce, as it is the chief matter of their apostolical commission. This given up, the world is without a ministry, and in proportion as public opinion shall reject it, in the same proportion will the usefulness of the gospel ministry suffer prostration.

In accounting for these facts, doubtless a great deal may be set down to the enmity of the carnal mind and its want of spiritual discernment, something more to the superscriptural arrogance of hierarchies, and the carnal intrigues of a corrupt and Jesuitical priesthood. These would be sufficient were the facts only an expression of well founded suspicion of Popery—a clergy-phobia extending only to Rome and her propagandism. But they come short of the mark when the position of a scriptural ministry is made the subject of proscription by a public sentiment, formed and fostered within the bosom of Protestant influence. This sentiment may have sympathies and tendencies stronger still to the German phase, rationalism; but neither are necessarily or wholly involved. The motive set forth does not appear to be a desire to overthrow religion or to reject the gospel. It is rather the indulgence of skepticism respecting the claims of an order, which they choose to regard as an excrescence upon the Christian system and hurtful to society.

To every reflecting mind it is evident that this sentiment does not wholly grow out of a disposition to disparage religion itself, nor does it arise from the inadequacy of guarantees to accredit the ministry to the world in the capacity of public teachers. We may confidently assume that the credentials of a Christian minister, when fully exhibited in himself, are sufficient to command the respect and confidence of the world; and that the rabid clergy-phobia of our time, is, in the main owing to the obscurity with which these credentials are presented. Heaven's authorized teachers have, in every dispensation, been furnished with direct and palpable evidence of their call. This evidence has been given to the subject of a divine commission, as of the first importance: then to the church and finally to the world. A minister comes before the world with the conviction, on his own part, that he is moved by the Holy Ghost to the office, and with the collective wisdom of the Church as its ratification. This is at least presumptive prima facie evidence of his fitness. He is neither self-moved nor self-endorsed—he is moved by the Holy Ghost and endorsed by the judgment of members. There is in such a case a pledge of qualifications on the part of the Christian teacher which is entitled to respect.

This kind of evidence for the ministry might not be sufficiently palpable to the world. But as a mere profession, its claims to credit in its legitimate field are at least equal to those of their callings. The deference accorded to the medical faculty on the subjects of physiology, therapeutics and pharmacy is just and rational, because these are the subjects of their special investigation and practice. The respect paid to the opinions of the legal fraternity is highly proper, because the business of life with them is to form and ascertain the correctness of such opinions. Upon these grounds, if there were no higher, a ministry exclusively devoted to the study of the Bible, may reasonably claim the office of public instructors in religion and morals. Nor can it be required of them that they be better informed than others upon topics not embraced in these subjects. If a man be an able minister of the New Testament, if his Biblical knowledge be thorough and his experience deeply spiritual, the grounds of his superior enlightenment are palpable. He is competent to teach all the ministry professes to teach—the Bible, its doctrines and precepts.

To be thus exclusively occupied with one study, aloof from the secular cares and pursuits of the masses, gives to the ministry a vantage ground of observation and practice not possessed by others. They occupy a position where passion and interest cannot warp the judgment and bias the conscience, and where the rule of moral rectitude can be applied with unswerving fidelity to all the affairs of life.

The most direct evidence of the divine commission of the Ministry, before the bar of public opinion, must be drawn from the consistency of its profession with its practice. This requirement is not met by purity and uprightness alone. These meet the case in a private Christian, but not in a Christian minister. He professes to be moved by the Holy Ghost to assume the office of a public teacher and pastor. With vows of exclusive devotion to this sacred mission, he claims of the world the respect due to his office. To transcend his commission or to come short of it before such a tribunal, would be very just grounds of suspicion. Moved to preach the gospel, to be consistent he must preach no more than the gospel. Called exclusively to this mission he must give it his whole attention. The want of consistency in this respect has, more than anything else, brought the ministry into disrepute. The pulpit in too many instances has taken up the discussion of political and social economies, and has taken advantage of its security and influence for the advocacy of partisan radicalisms. Instances of this are not difficult to find. Eminent cases are Theodore Parker and Henry Ward Beecher. Occupying [illegible] aspects the two extremes of theology, they are agreed in transforming their desks into rostrums of political fanaticism. These are prominent examples. Others there are who follow but not with equal pace. There is scarcely an ism, a political measure, a speculation, a whim, that has not been taken up, to some extent, by the American pulpit. Abolitionism, woman's rights, States rights, filibusterism and spiritual rappings have received its advocacy in some instances, its opposition in others. Young America and Old Fogydom have not been passed by. Now, we may hazard the opinion without any committal respecting the merits of these subjects, that no man has been specially moved by the Holy Ghost to discuss them. Whatever they are, it is clear that they do not compose the subject matter of the apostolical commission, and that their entertainment is calculated to damage the pulpit in public estimation.

In these restless, progressive, agitated times, there are many temptations to allure the ministry from its legitimate and sole topic. The desk and altar may be kept unpolluted, but be whose only call is to minister there, ascends the platform of popular declamation as the champion of politics, moral reform, the accredited embassador of the republic of letters, or the ism-monger of modern revelations. Under these circumstances whether the seats be free or at the cost of half a dollar, the public may well question the sacred claims of an office that can be put on and off at will. It may justly call for the guarantee of its ghostly movings.

The validity of such objections to the Christian Ministry we need not investigate. The fact is enough, that the order, by transcending its commission, has brought distrust and suspicion upon itself.

Equally fatal to the clerical order, is that inconsistency which comes short of its profession. The Bible, the world and the ordination vows of Christian ministers hold the same opinion; that the preacher of the gospel should be a man of one work. He professes to be called to the work of the ministry—the saving of souls; that he is moved by the Holy Ghost.

In whatever way we may settle the compatibility of the call to the ministry and secular pursuits, with the Scriptures and conscience, public opinion has decided against it. Unless there be a stringent necessity, they cannot be reconciled. Some secular pursuits are incompatible with the Christian profession; all secular pursuits are incompatible with the ministerial call. Not that they are evil in themselves, but that the minister is professedly moved by the Holy Ghost, to preach the gospel and care for the flock of Christ—a mission whose claims exclude all others. When, therefore, with these professions and vows, the Christian minister engages in secular business, he contradicts himself. His claims as a heaven-sent teacher stand self-refuted. When with him the movings of the Holy Ghost are held in check and subservience to the carnal incentives of worldly ambition and temporal gain, what wonder that men ask for "the guarantee of his fitness," and even question whether he is moved by the Holy Ghost at all? The ministry has become too much secularized. Politics, medicine, law, agriculture and trade have absorbed a fearful amount of ministerial consecration. Every instance of this kind detracts from the authority and character of the clergy as a teaching class. When we consider that thousands of men in the Christian ministry are thus mixed up with the world-living inconsistencies, instead of being surprised that there is a growing distrust of the clerical order, we may rather marvel that public confidence has not been altogether lost.

That claim of respect which, with professions, the Christian ministry may base upon the careful and laborious study of the subjects of its teaching, is forfeited and lost by secularization. If under these circumstances the moral character passes unharmed through the fires of worldly speculation and enterprise, the spiritual and intellectual forces are sadly weakened and the souls of the preacher and hearers banish upon cant and common places. Besides, that position removed from the passions and interests of the world which entitles the devoted minister to the confidence of men as their spiritual guide and counsellor, is abandoned. He becomes indeed a man of like passions, prejudices and tastes with those he assumes to guide and instruct. They cannot see wherein he differs from themselves save in pretentions for which they can discover no sufficient warrant. They may ask "for the grounds of his superior enlightenment: the direct palpable evidence of his apostolical communion." Nothing short of miracles could accredit him as specially called to preach the Word; and even then it would be a plausible blasphemy which should ascribe these to Belzebub.

If these are among the causes which account for the startling facts that head this article, it must be acknowledged that the Church and Ministry are responsible for them. The evil has begun here, and here it must be remedied. The ministry must be consistent with itself. Its consecration, its teachings, must accord with its ordination vows and professions. To be respected it must first respect itself. If the pulpit goes beyond its great text, the gospel: if the clergy come short of their absorbing communion, to preach the cross and feed the flock of Christ, the ministry will have to reform before the world shall think better of it.

With what light we now have the question may be entertained with all seriousness, whether our own ministerial economy has not greatly contributed to that distrust—that clergy-phobia which obtains in certain quarters. We doubt whether an itinerant ministry has done anything to bring this about. On the contrary its sacrifice and fidelity have done almost everything that has been done towards staying its progress. But we have in our economy a fundamental contradiction, a secular ministry. The two are constitutionally amalgamated—they are wedded by statute. This has had a tendency to lower our views of the call to the ministry by divorcing the pulpit from the pastorate, and by making the moving of the Holy Ghost secondary if not subservient to personal convenience and earthly pursuits. It has opened an easy door of egress for the itineracy and for yielding to its seductive facilities, church, law and ecclesiastical provision may be pleaded in extenuation. The availability of this conscientious mode of escaping from the ministry, and the continual increase of local ordinations is now felt to be an evil. It is a burning blight upon Zion, and the mildew of skepticism upon the world.

Such was the opinion of the venerable Jesse Lee, in the incipiency of this policy. "He feared," says the author of his Life and Times, "it would encourage the location of ministers, already one of the greatest drawbacks to the efficiency and success of the work in which they were engaged; and he apprehended evils of a nature and magnitude, then scarcely to be apprehended by any, but since most fearfully realized." Again: "It was a cardinal principle with them that no man could or ought to take the office of the ministry upon himself," but be that was called of God, as was Aaron. And when thus taken, the vows of God were upon him for life. It was a warfare from which there was no release. Regarding the ministry in this light, as pastors caring for the flock, he could not give his consent to a measure that exacted vows that, in the nature of things, could never be met, and provided pastors without ever intending them to have a flock.

The necessity of inaugurating a new policy in this respect, is becoming more and more urgent. The facts which have suggested these observations demand it. It must be met, and the sooner the better. To define and vindicate the required change is left to those whose position calls them to the ungrateful task, and whose only present reward will be the approval of conscience of wisdom, and the elevation and efficiency of the Christian Ministry.

WOODSMAN.

A FARMER'S WIFE IN OLDEN TIMES.—Sir Anthony Fitcherbert, Chancellor to Henry VIII., thus describes the model farmer's wife:—"It is a wyves occupation to winnow all manner of corues, to make malte, to wash and irouying, to help her husband fill the muckwayne or dung oart, drive the plough, load hay, corns, and such other. And go or ride to the market to sell butter, cheese, eggs, cheykns, capons, hens, pigs, geese, and all manner of corues."

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THOUGHTS ON HOLINESS.

MR. EDITOR: It would be a most difficult as well as a most disagreeable effort, to exclude the progressive spirit from the Church of Christ, and whilst such an attempt would merit all the ridicule and sarcasm that might originate in the order of the "progressive," it would also be subjected to a more reasonable and Scriptural condemnation. If the great Governor of the Universe has loaned us the lightning messengers to bear intelligence in a moment from mountain to seaboard, across continents in the twinkling of an eye; if he has opened the treasuries of the buried past, and disentombed the evidences of Bible history; if he has bound together twenty-five millions of freemen under the auspicious reign of religious toleration; if he has furnished these with extraordinary instrumentalities and means for the advancement of Christ's kingdom among men; and if he has opened the opaque minds of a few heathen reformers, and accomplished by their means the downfall of national idolatry among four hundred millions of our race—does he intend that we shall lie dormant and passive, or follow the lead of a restrictive prudence, which fetters instead of enlarging gospel means. Nay, verily, the Church should partake of the progressive spirit of the age; she should have her lamp trimmed with double care, ready to search for every avenue and path by which to reach the hearts and consciences of men. She should go forth to proclaim hot victories through the blood of Jesus, with trumpet tongue, and plead for souls with all the eloquence vouchsafed to the ministers of the everlasting covenant. "Progressive aggression" was the motto of the early Wesleyans, and should be of their successors to all generations. But there should be a proper object toward which we should exercise these faculties—a proper end should be attempted in the use of well-guarded means. Our fathers used a farthing candle to light their dwellings—we may use gas, but it is light still: the same flame may put both in a blaze. Fifty years ago men traveled on horseback and in slow carriages; now we may cross a State in a day, or visit the Atlantic from the Rocky Mountains in a week; but these places stand in all the changes of time, as they have always stood; distance is the same; our means for overcoming it are changed; and here is the progress.

Now, Mr. Editor, you have many intelligent and good men—men whose heads were frosted by age before your correspondent opened his eyes upon the spring-time of life, who are busy in their speculations upon the advancement of the Church. They see many faults in the economy of Methodism, and like good men and true, they publish through the Advocate their views in favor of changes—changes in form, changes in matter, changes involving the future welfare of our beloved Church, and they, doubtless, believe that they are doing well, but I doubt it. A Virginia brother on the floor of our General Conference offers to prove that two Houses of the Methodist Congress must be created, and to show the necessity for this change, as a matter of course, must hold up to the world the inefficiency of the present system. Now this good brother is a man of unquestionable piety and of great wisdom, but adopt his plan, and where will be the end to the spirit of innovation? I fear but a few steps this side of ruin. Another brother, equally honest and pure, publishes to the world that our Episcopacy is an inefficient system. Bishops can't be seen by everybody and everybody can't become familiar with them, and therefore we must have one for each Conference. A Bishop is a great man, and can therefore do more than other men, but he must be with and about the people more than our present method allows. Now in what does the superior ministerial efficiency of a Bishop consist? Does he not receive his messages to God's people from the same Spirit that other men do? Is it pretended that God will bless a Bishop's labors sooner than those of other ministers? It is not, I presume. But we love our Bishops, we love to hear them preach. We love to listen to their words of knowledge as they preach the word at our Annual Conference re-unions. A sermon there will tell upon the destinies of thousands, it may be; but do we not expect too much of our Bishops when we expect them to do for the world that which they can and ought to do for the preachers assembled in Conference? Do we not act unwisely, not to say ungratefully, when we intimate that they love their ease more than other men? Do they not know that familiarity begets indifference, and that their superior pulpit ministrations might detract from the influence of equally worthy, yet less talented brethren? I question whether either of our much loved chief pastors would sanction the election of more than three additional itinerant superintendents. Would it not be presuming upon them to suppose that they would counsel the location of these itinerants? But after all, Bro. McTyeire, the papers of the Church are not the mediums through which to parade the defects of any system among us to the eyes of those whose duty it is to correct them. But there is an evil in the practice, and the proof may be found in the growth of a thirst for novelties. I have before me a Church paper in which I find the proceedings of a Quarterly Conference (in the M. E. Church, South) recommending a change to be made by the General Conference in the Bishop's duties, so that he may have charge of a station or circuit for an indifferent number of years! One Bishop is requested for each Annual Conference, and that the office of Presiding Elders be destroyed! whilst lay delegation is urged for the Annual and General Conferences! Does Methodism need these changes? Nay, she will cease to need anything when they are adopted.

I am opposed to novelties, Mr. Editor, and therefore some may call me an old fogy; I will correct the name—I am a young fogy, in the light some may view it. If to retain the principles which gave success to early Methodism is to be a fogy, I am one, and thank God that I am. And yet I am for progress: yes, progress in its full sense. What is our object as a people? Is it not to spread Scripture holiness over these lands"? Why do we have Bishops, papers, and periodicals, if this is not our purpose? God thrust out the Wesleys to raise a holy people—are we not laboring for this object? If we are not, we have lost the spirit of Methodism, and that accounts for the reason why we want changes in the letter.

Do not many of our people, who are members of our churches, remain in ignorance of the great peculiarity of Methodism—Scripture holiness? Do not many of them deny its existence? Do not many who ought to teach this doctrine waste their precious time in debating the metaphysical bearings of the doctrine, when they touch it at all? Do they not waste their efforts on the head and leave the heart unchanged, unmoved? Are we spreading Scripture holiness over these lands? I ask the question in all brotherly love: for, brethren in the ministry, we are in danger of trifling with souls in our zeal for the economy of Church. If we are true to our mission, God will make a way for our usefulness, and His providence will unerringly point out every needful improvement.

OMICRON.

Alabama Conference, 1853.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

BIOGRAPHICAL.

HON. H. P. POINDEXTER.

Friends, our chief treasure—how they drop!
And leave us in a ruin of our joy:
Since they fall—and yours roll on:
Let time appear, a moment—as it is,
And let eternity's full orb at once
Turn on our souls and strike them into heaven.

[YOUNG.

DIED, at his residence in Hempstead county, Arkansas, on the 10th February, 1854, Hon. HENRY P. POINDEXTER, late Senator of that district.

Mr. Poindexter was born in Surry, N. C., on the 10th April, 1792; married Miss Sarah Paup, of Brunswick, Va; lived in his native State, and served her in almost every honorable capacity for a long series of years; removed to Arkansas in 1844, where he continued to exert an influence for good wherever he moved.

He was possessed of strong natural powers of mind, well cultivated by extensive reading and intercourse with the world. His disposition was the most amiable, his manners easy and natural, which caused him to be admired and loved even by his political opponents.

He lived the life of a true and devoted Christian—died in great peace, having with perfect composure made all his arrangements for his departure; he bade his wife and friends farewell, and without a struggle, fell gently on sleep, in the sixty-second year of his age.

For the last five years it was my privilege to enjoy the intimate, Christian association and friendship of the deceased, and in the Providence of God, to be with him (though a short while) during the affliction, which a little more than two months after this, our last interview, terminated his useful and valuable life.

His looks and words on this affecting, and to me deeply impressive occasion, (expressive of holy calmness and pious resignation, unshaken faith, strong assurance of salvation and lively hope of heaven, through the blessed Saviour) will never, I think, be erased from my mind.

It would occupy too much space in a notice of this kind, to record all he said on that occasion; when questioned in regard to his present feelings and prospects of the future, he promptly replied in a spirit of great calmness and composure, "I am gradually passing away, daily, and (to myself as to others) perceptibly shaking, yet, thank God, ready at any moment for my departure. Apart from the grief it will occasion my wife, friends and relatives, whom I love much, there could be but one object for which I might desire to have my days prolonged—the settlement of a large estate—yet this is so arranged that no future difficulty can well attend it, and as such I am in every respect entirely resigned; and, indeed, the Lord has all through life been so good to me, and in so many instances answered my prayers, so blessed me in my plans and efforts relative to what I thought best for myself and others, that now I really feel ashamed to ask for anything more. I have already lived longer than any one might have expected, feeble and afflicted as I have been for many years past, and as death has no terrors to me, the will of God is my will; let Him do what seemeth Him best. I am sure, after death, I shall be with Christ; I never had such clear views of the plan of salvation by faith alone in Christ, as during this, my present affliction; there is a suitableness, beauty and glory in it beyond all description; I feel, had I done and suffered a thousand times more than I have, it would be just nothing—in the way of merit. It is Christ—faith alone in Him that can save us. My life looks to me as a blank; I am happy, however, to say in truth, that in no instance since my profession of faith in Christ, have I wilfully sinned against God. In this my conscience is clear, yet this I owe of course wholly to Divine grace, for in me of myself there is nothing good.

"In connecting myself with the Church, I set out with the fixed purpose of heart to serve God in all sincerity and truth; I never had a doubt of my conversion from the moment it occurred to the present hour. It was as clear as the light of the sun at noonday. Satan may have tempted me on other points, but never in this. The strong and satisfactory evidence of my conversion has sustained and comforted me in many hard conflicts, and the thought of it makes me happy now."

Here he gave a minute account of the manner of his conversion and the peculiar circumstances connected with it, after which he added: "I am at peace with all the world, and have no unkind feeling toward any one; I love all: and think unworthy, expect to die happy and at last reach heaven." To this (his almost dying testimony) I need add nothing more. To me it was indeed a scene beyond the common walk of virtuous life, quite on the verge of heaven.

"We saw his hold ob Host, and how He owned
Him on this side the grave—
Throwing wide the gates celestial to his view."

Many years he had been troubled with asthma and other symptoms of a distressing character, which finally undermined a once vigorous constitution, broke down the earthly tenement and bore it to "the narrow house appointed for all the living." Though after suffering greatly under a consuming malady, he replied not, but steadfastly endured, as seeing Him who is invisible. Heavenly grace sustained him in every trial and enabled him quietly to await the time of his departure. His work finished, his race ended, the faith kept, his spirit redeemed and sanctified through the blood of Jesus, passed joyfully away from this low region of darkness and confinement, to the marvellous light and liberty of the sons of God, to dwell in the glorious temple, not made by hands, eternal in the skies.

It may be truly said of him, he was a good man, full of faith and the Holy Ghost. As such, possessed as he was of a mind of no ordinary grasp and power of memory, connected with great fondness for reading, thirst for varied and general knowledge, and especially that of the Holy Scriptures, he was eminently qualified for usefulness to society and the world at large. Nor were his talents buried, or misapplied; he not only served the State in several high and important positions, but likewise the Church, in various official relations, that is, as class-leader, steward, trustee, and exhorter and (so far as his otherwise public engagements would admit) preacher. For the performance of the sacred duties of this high office, he had been duly appointed by the proper authorities of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which he was a member. The duties of these several offices he discharged with becoming zeal, faithfulness and dignity.

As a minister of the gospel he would have shown, no doubt, as a star of no ordinary brightness, had his time been more exclusively devoted to the work.

He did, however, in this great department of Christian enterprise, all, perhaps, that he could, hindered, as he was, by numerous necessary public and private cares, as well as general feebleness of health. In the pulpit his unaffected simplicity and earnestness of manner, fervency of spirit, and not unfrequently eloquent language, accompanied with "tears that burned" will long be remembered by those who were favored with his services in the sanctuary. Alas! for us, my brother; with all thy gifts and graces, thou art gone—gone from the church, the world—gone to the grave, the cold, silent, oblivious grave, where oft earth's fondest hopes are buried, and sorrows and darkness continually gather. Sad, indeed, is our lot; yet as death was to thee "eternal gain,"

"We will not deplore thee,
Whose God was thy ransom, thy guardian and guide,
He gave thee, he took thee, and he will restore thee,
And death has no sting since the Saviour has died."

Yea, though we hope, we bow to the will of God, and pray that the example of this good man's life and the triumph of his death may not be lost on us, who are left behind to struggle awhile longer with the ills of life.

In presenting briefly a general portraiture of our friend, we would say, from early life he evinced great decision of character and an invincible firmness of purpose, mingled with much gentleness of spirit and suavity of manner; his integrity, unbending devotion to principle, and faithful observance of every trust committed to his charge, secured the respect, esteem and confidence of all who knew him, and those who knew him best loved him most.

He was a pleasant and intelligent companion, a true and faithful friend, a kind and affectionate husband, a good neighbor, a humane and indulgent master, a patriotic citizen, a wise legislator, and, as "the highest style of man," a sincere and devoted Christian.

In completing this biographical sketch it should be stated that, though fond of retirement and study, he had a keen relish for social intercourse and was remarkably cheerful and communicative. He had quite a turn for humor and anecdote, and also a quick sense of the ridiculous—all this, however, so chastened by a correct taste and a naturally amiable and benevolent disposition, that whatever fell from him of that kind was devoid of coarseness and asperity.

In conclusion, not to indulge in further detail of peculiar points or excellencies of character, it might be said, in a word, his merits were those of the best of men. Frailties and faults (in some form ever incident to humanity) he must have had, but, as known to us, none so striking as to offend; therefore, not easy or necessary to be drawn. If, however, as known to others, there were such, let them repose in the grave, while his virtues "rest in the bosom of his Father and his God." Love for the living and duty to the dead, will justify, we trust, this somewhat extended though, we acknowledge, public tribute of respect.

"A husband, friend, a Christian sleeps,
And o'er his grave affection weeps;
A heart within whose sacred cell
The peaceful virtues loved to dwell;
Friendship warm, and faith sincere,
And soft humanity were there:
Though calm in death, and all resigned,
He felt the wound he left behind.
His noble image here below,
Sits smiling on a widow's woe,
Whom, what awaits while here she strays,
Along the lonely vale of days?
A pang to secret sorrow dear—
A sigh, an unavailing tear,
Till time shall every grief remove,
From earth to yon bright world of love."

H. C. THWEATT.

New Orleans, March 12, 1854.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

EPISCOPAL DISTRICTS.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me, in view of an article under the above head, in your paper of March 4, to propose a few queries, and give plain, candid, common sense answers. As the article was written by a delegate to the ensuing General Conference, and corresponds mainly with the views of other delegates, the subject presented acquires some importance.

Query 1st. What is an Episcopal District?

Answer. The jurisdiction of a Bishop.

Query 2d. What is a Diocese?

Ans. The circuit of every Bishop's jurisdiction.

Query 3d. Is this diocesan Episcopacy?

Ans. Unquestionably it is—who can distinguish?

Query 4th. What was the design of "the rule"—the third restrictive article?

Ans. The design of the rule was evidently to raise a constitutional barrier against diocesan Episcopacy.

Query 5th. Do the advocates of "episcopal districts"—or what is the same thing—"the circuits of every bishop's jurisdiction"—desire to transcend that barrier?

Ans. It is presumed that no one desires to transcend that barrier.

The two last answers are in the words of the article referred to.

Query 6th. What does our brother A. T. M. Fly "desire"?

Ans. 1st. "Let the General Conference elect five or six additional bishops. 2d. Let the general work be so arranged as to form eight or ten Episcopal districts. 3d. Let each of the bishops be assigned to an Episcopal district for the ensuing four years."

Query 7th. Would this be "general superintendency," or would it be "the circuits of every bishop's jurisdiction?

Ans. Certainly the latter.

Query 8th. Is it a fact that "the work" is laid "off into distinct fields of labor" and that "each bishop has exclusive jurisdiction over his particular portion of the work"?

Ans. If so, where is the law authorising such "exclusive jurisdiction?" And what becomes of the third restrictive article, and the rule prescribing "the duty of a bishop"?

Brother Fly's plan, with his remarks on the maxim, "let well enough alone," reminds me of an epitaph said to be placed over the grave of a deceased person, thus, "I was well, I would be better, I took physic and died." The adoption of his plan would be like sounding the death knell of "itinerant general superintendency." L. GARRETT.

Vernon, Miss., March, 1854.

P. S. Brother F. supposes that his plan would be "returning to the old landmarks," but to my mind it looks like setting up new stakes, or marking out a devious pathway through an unexplored region. L. G.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

CORRECTION OF MINUTES.

MR. EDITOR: I see that there is a mistake in the printed "Minutes of the Alabama Conference," in reference to the amount apportioned to the Montgomery District, by the Joint Board of Finance. It is $600 instead of $550, as published.

And while on this subject will you allow me to call the attention of the Presiding Elders to the following extract from the Constitution of the Board:

"Art. 5. It shall be the duty of the Presiding Elder, together with the lay-member from each district to apportion the amount to be raised by the district among the several circuits and stations of the district.

Art. 6. It shall be the duty of each Presiding Elder to inform the stewards of each circuit and station in his district, as soon after Conference as practicable, of the amount thus apportioned to them, and he, together with the stewards, shall apportion said amount among the several leaders and classes; and it shall be the duty of the preachers in charge, in connexion with the leaders, to use their best endeavors to secure the collection of the amount so apportioned, and the Presiding Elder shall inquire at each succeeding Quarterly meeting how this collection progresses and see that the proper means and efforts for its completion are used."

Since the adoption of our new "plan of finance," our dividends have gradually risen from 43 to 90 per cent. This ought to encourage us to increase our exertions in this good cause—the cause of the superannuated and worn out ministers who have sacrificed everything for the good of the church. It is the cause of the widows and orphans of those who nobly sustained themselves as good soldiers of the cross.

And now, brethren, let us make a strong pull and a pull altogether, that we may at our next Conference be able to lay upon the Treasurer's table an amount sufficient to meet all our claims. This can be done; it must be done. THOS. Y. RAMSEY.

Marion, March 10, 1854.

A man's genius is always in the beginning of life, as much unknown to himself as to others—and it is only after frequent trials, attended with success, that he dares think himself equal to the undertakings in which those who have succeeded, have fixed the admiration of mankind. [Hume.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 1854.

ENCOURAGING.—Our friends are getting wide awake—thank them! Some of the preachers have sent us thirty new subscribers since Conference, and are going on for more. Our lay brethren, too, especially those of the Louisiana Conference, are doing something. The subscription list is now having a nett increase of fifty a week. It must get up to one hundred a week before the 10,000 can be reached by the beginning of next volume. It can be done.

NEWS.—An epidemic of disastrous fires has prevailed in the city the last ten days. The Canal Bank has been burnt around, but not damaged, though $300,000 worth of property, mostly insured, was destroyed, contiguous. The Directors have very properly voted $1500 donation to the Firemens' Relief Association. Two noble firemen, Woodruff and McLeod, lost their lives by the falling of a wall at this fire. The fire-bells and rumbling of engines along our streets are familiar sounds. Visitors on business and pleasure are overflowing: some of the largest hotels turning off arrivals. Health good: weather delightful. The churches all are crowded on Sabbath days. There are needed half dozen new churches and able gospel ministers.

LECTURES.—Rev. Mr. Bonhomme preaches to-morrow at 11 A. M., in Carondelet street Church. He continues his interesting lectures at same place on Wednesday and Thursday nights following. Seats are free, and Israelites are especially invited to attend.

REV. J. W. LAMBETH.—The father of this young missionary from the Mississippi Conference, informs us by letter of 14th instant, that he left on the 13th for Richmond. It will be remembered that, according to Bishop Andrew's notice, a farewell missionary meeting is to be held in Richmond, on the 25th and 26th of this month, at which our beloved brethren, Kelly, Bolton and Lambeth are expected to be present, and soon thereafter to sail for their new field of labor in China.

Rev. Dr. Taylor, whose family has been in the United States for some time, is expected to arrive in New York about the middle of April.

TEXAS TONIC.—We doubt whether any medicine, proposing to relieve those various ills flesh is heir to, can furnish such strong certificates and eminent certifiers, as this, of which there is an advertisement in another column.

NUTS TO CRACK.—Our friend, Rev. J. A. Godfrey, of Raymond, Miss., has sent us a box full (not a small box either) of walnuts. From these specimens we do not wonder that there is a place in Mississippi called Walnut Hills. They are large and fresh, and unlike most hard things proposed to editors—when you crack them there is something in them. Thanks to him and also to the commercial house of A. J. Wright & Co., through whose prompt courtesy the gift was laid at our door.

Rev. President Barker, of Allegheny College, having been elected President of Centenary College—we understand he has accepted—to begin in the fall.

GRAHAM'S MAGAZINE.—The March number of this monthly is one of the best which have ever been issued. On our last page, we to-day publish a poem from it by that talented young author, William North, which is worthy of Tennyson.

CLERICAL ADVERTISEMENTS.—In England there is more frankness in advertising professional wants, than in this country—for examples of which, see the following genuine advertisements, cut from the London Record the organ of the "low church" or "evangelical" portion of the English Established Church:

"A clergyman, M. A., of evangelical views, desires a sole charge in some town sphere of usefulness. Advertiser sets forth zealously and faithfully the whole counsel of God, and preaches unwritten sermons. His qualifications being of rather a higher order, a suitable stipend required. Also, he is a bachelor. Address L. L. B., at the office of the Record. The advertiser having been found under God, very successful in preaching the doctrines of grace, would be glad in meeting another metropolitan sphere. He has a powerful voice, an earnest delivery and a style of preaching best suited to an educated and enlightened audience."

SHORT PRAYERS MOST EFFECTUAL.—Elder Knapp occasionally says a good thing, notwithstanding his bad ones. He was one evening speaking of the prevailing tendencies of some religionists to long prayers, and remarked that we would find no example for these in the Scriptures. The prayers of our Saviour were short and to the point. The prayer of the penitent publican was a happy specimen. When Peter was endeavoring to walk upon the waters to meet his master, and was about sinking, had his supplication been as long as the introduction to one of our modern prayers, before he had got half through he would have been fifty feet under water.

CITY REFORM.

The whole city is moved, at the time we go to press, for the Charter elections next Monday. Mayor, Aldermen, Assistant Aldermen, Surveyors, Recorders, and the et ceteras of municipal government are to be made. In opposition to party nominations, a public meeting of citizens, five or six thousand strong, was held last week, on Lafayette Square, when an independent ticket for these offices was adopted—an eclectic ticket made up of men deemed to be capable of administering office for the good of the city—men of both the leading parties, but the majority, we understand, upon strict count are democrats.

We have nothing to do with party—but it is for this very reason we look favorably upon this movement and wish its success. We desire to see our charter offices filled with men selected and supported, not for their fidelity to Whiggery and Democracy, but their efficiency and fidelity to trusts. Gen. Jackson's criteria were the sort—"Is he capable? Is he honest?" The men to whom a party owes most are generally those to whom the country owes least. Our city has been long and sadly misgoverned. Its elections and measures are carried by "taking a drink." Our police, from Mayor and Recorders down have been too familiar with grog-shop influence, to be sober; too temporizing to be strong; too fond of fancy balls and Sunday night theatres to be moral. We desire REFORM. A change of the old party regime could hardly be for the worse. In this matter we are like the traveler who, having been served at an inn with an indifferent cup of slops, was asked by the polite waiter to take another cup of coffee: "If that was coffee I have just had, I want tea; if it was tea, I want coffee." Alternately under Whig and Democratic rule, we now turn to the Independents and beg them, if they can do anything, to help us.

HOME CHINESE MISSION.

REV. J. L. SHUCK and family left this port Wednesday morning, 22d inst., on steamship Daniel Webster, for California via Nicaragua. Mr. Shuck goes out as the Missionary of the Southern Baptist Board, to the Chinese in California. His principal station will be in San Francisco. This is an important movement: one in manifest agreement with the calls and signs of the times. Rev. Mr. Speers, of the American Board, is already in this field and prospering. We are glad that our Baptist brethren are prepared to enter it so promptly and in the person of so efficient a minister as Mr. Shuck. In all the range of denominations we doubt if a missionary of higher personal and linguistic qualifications could be found. Mr. Shuck is now in the prime of life—industrious, judicious and self-sacrificing. He belongs to the highest stylo of the missionary; and we hold that the missionary is the highest stylo of the Christian minister. In 1835, he entered China, on the evangelical work he is now prosecuting: labored in Macon, Hong-Kong, Canton, and for the last five years in Shanghai. He has translated the New Testament into the Shanghai dialect and written and put in circulation seven original Chinese Tracts. He was a member of the Committee of seven, made up by various denominations for translating the whole Bible into Chinese, of which Dr. Medhurst was chairman.

There are in California at this time, by the most probable estimate, 40,000 Chinese. Many of these have heard Mr. Shuck in their own land and some were members of his Church. It gives us unfeigned pleasure to see so competent a missionary, while others are going Eastward, sent Westward to meet this incoming tide. We trust the enterprise may be energetically supported and abundantly successful.

Rev. Mr. Walker, the Corresponding Secretary of the Board, accompanied the party to this point of departure, and is now in the city.

THE FATHERLESS AND WIDOW

[The following brief appeal for help need not be urged by any words but those describing the destitution.—ED.]

MR. EDITOR: Our dear sister Bailey, the widow of a late member of the Alabama Conference, has recently had her house burned down, with everything she had in it. She is left entirely destitute, with a large family of children. They did not save even a change of apparel.

Now, I propose to be one of any number of the members of the Alabama Conference to give $5 each for her relief. The friends at Summerfield will rebuild her house, but that is not near all of her loss. Who will respond to the above proposition?

Remit to Dr. S. W. Vaughan or J. J. Heard, Esq., Summerfield.

A MEMBER OF ALA. CONF.

March 14, 1854.

CHURCH ATTENDANCE IN GREAT BRITAIN. The British census of 1851 gives some statistics respecting the number of attendants on public worship in the churches and chapels of the various religious denominations in England and Wales. The whole population in those countries amounts to 17,927,609, and at the most numerously attended service, on Sunday, March 30, 1851, there were 9,356,222 persons present. Of this number there were in the places of worship belonging to the Church of England, 2,971,238; Protestant Dissenters 3,110,782; Roman Catholics, 249,389; Other Denominations, 24,703. More than one-third of the entire population, therefore attended, church on that day, not counting those who, though absent from the service when the enumeration was made, might have been present at the other services of the day.

METHODIST PRESS.

REVIEW OF A REVIEW.—Our confrere of the Nashville Advocate, in his issue of the 9th inst., takes exceptions to our remarks on a late and very interesting publication—The Life of Bishop Hascom, by Rev. M. M. Henkle, D. D. He cannot see how our setting out with such words as these, "A good work has been done by Dr. Henkle in writing the life of Henry Bidleman Bascom," is consistent with some other things said in our review of the book. So it was "a good work." We stand to that; but not good in the sense of perfection. It has brought together much and valuable material—illustrating the life and embalming the memory of one of the most marked men Methodism or the country has produced. It is an acquisition to our native grown Methodist literature—a matter that we regard with constant and increasing interest, and for which Dr. Henkle has done much. True, we did not keep going for two columns at that rate. The book, though good on the whole, is unequal, and so was our praise. Its excellencies lay in streaks, and after the same manner did we lay on our commendation. One of Dr. Henkle's experience and success as an author certainly prefers discriminating to wholesale commendation. For our part we have no admiration for that spirit of criticism presiding in some Advocates which accepts everything bearing a Methodist imprint, as a matter of course, pronounces it first rate (provided it makes bows to "old Methodism,") and collectionizes the dictionary for terms of eulogy—"grand, splendid, superb, brilliant." We do not think brotherly love or denominational loyalty requires so much of an editor who holds his opinion to be worth anything or would not give an uncertain sound to his readers concerning the "latest publications."

The editor, quoting the remarks, in which exception is taken by us to the prominent connection maintained by the biographer between Bascom's preaching and his reputation, on account of its hurtful example and its lowering the solemn majesty of the Christian ambassador—speaks of our "letting fly this shaft, which, with sharp and poisoned point, went to the vitals of the biographer, and laid him out as dead as Goliah, when he fell by the sling and pebble of David. Surely, the biographer of Bishop Bascom will never find use again for the words, 'reputation,' 'commendation,' and 'performance.'"

"Poisoned!" that is a hard and unkind word, and amounts to a personal imputation we are not aware of having given any ground for. Will our elder brother of the Nashville Advocate persist in confounding the man with the author and not allow us to speak candidly of his book without flying a shaft with poisoned point into the "vitals of the biographer." We like bro. McFerrin amazingly, and brother Henkle too, and would not hurt a hair of his head, much less his "vitals."

Again:

"The unkindest cut, however, is, that the shades of McKendree and Asbury should be invoked to witness the slaughter of the biographer of Bishop Bascom, by one so young as the reviewer."

Our elder brother of Nashville will have it that reviewing a book that is before the public, is to be made a personal matter of. "So young as the reviewer." Perhaps brother McFerrin is mistaken there and we will set him right as to our years, if that have anything to do with reviewing a book. We are full twenty-nine and begin to be about thirty years of age. Once for all, about this "so young:" we do not see its relevancy to newspaper issues, and hope to hear no more of it. We hope also to be old enough, in the course of time, to see a thing and say it too, without giving sass to any of our elder and wiser brethren of the quill.

HEAVY INVESTMENT.—Dr. Lee, quoting our doubts about investing largely in brick and mortar for a Book Concern, and our hints as to the cheapness and briskness of the agency plan, says:

As to the brick, mortar, presses, etc., somebody must have them, and somebody pay for them. A Book Agency will pay for them just as certainly as a Book Concern: with this difference: the former will pay for them to be owned by the contractor, the latter will pay for them to be owned by the Church."

Exactly: but that view ignores the great idea of political economy—division of labor. Cannot a firm or contractor own and work this extensive machinery cheaper than an unwieldy Church? Why not go farther on the same principle and propose that the M. E. Church, South, have her own paper-mills, type-foundry, brick kilns and mortar beds.

A MISSIONARY TO ROME.—The Western Christian Advocate states that the brethren of the Union Chapel, Cincinnati, have determined to support a missionary in the Eternal City. He is to go as an American citizen and a Protestant missionary, claiming to exercise the proper functions of his ministerial office. They have selected their man, and await the action of the Missionary Society and the Bishop. Concerning the man to be sent, the Western Advocate says:

After looking over the country and holding correspondence, they have finally concluded to ask for the appointment of the Rev'd Dr. Teft, who has consented to go, provided he can make the necessary arrangements in time, of which he entertains but little doubt. We hope to see the question fairly tested in the missionary, as the representative of the whole Protestant Church, as well as of the spirited branch which sends him forth.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SUCCESS.—The last annual report of the Sunday School Union of the M. E. Church (North) shows in their libraries more than a million and a half of books—mostly their own publications: Also for the year about 17,000 conversions among the scholars. For the last seven years there has been an average of conversions among the Sunday School scholars of 11,000. Who can ponder these things and account for the indifference of parents and Christians to Sabbath Schools. And what need have Methodists to seek to other Sabbath School Unions, when they can have such for their own? The publications of this are as numerous as those of any existing Sabbath School Union—the American not excepted. So states the Christian Advocate and Journal of 9th inst., and adds this information:

It is gratifying to perceive, too, that the Board of Managers have been induced to take a step in advance of anything they have yet done for the purpose of increasing the number and the value of Sunday school publications. They have hitherto, to a great extent, been dependent on works of foreign origin, which have been reprinted, after revision by the Sunday school editor; and, owing to the necessity of putting the price of our library and other books as low as possible, and having to compete with institutions having more funds at command, it has not been practicable to hold out suitable pecuniary inducements to call forth our own native talent in this direction. The Board of Managers of our Union have at length felt themselves impelled, by the necessities of the case, and warranted by strong faith in the liberality of their friends, to offer one thousand dollars in premiums for original essays to be presented for publication previous to the first day of October next. This liberal sum has been divided as follows: $350 for a volume, not less than 300 pages duodecimo, on any topic tending to advance the interests of Sunday schools, and calculated to be read by parents and teachers; $250 for the best book for the Sunday School and Youth's Library; $100 for the best book for Sunday school reading for younger children. They offer also for the best book of instruction for infant classes, $200; and, what we regard of the most importance, $100 for the best tract, from 24 to 50 pages, on the duty of personal Christian labor in the Sabbath school."

LOCATING A CONFERENCE HIGH SCHOOL.

The Louisiana Conference, as may be seen by the Report on Education, at its last session, appointed a committee, of which Dr. C. G. Young, of Caddo, is chairman, to inquire into the expediency of establishing a High School in North Louisiana for the education of boys and young men, to be under the control of the Conference and open for the education of the sons of its ministers, free of board and tuition. The committee were also to canvass suitable locations, plans of endowment, &c., and report at the next session.

We are glad to see that the committee is not idle, and the people of North Louisiana not uninterested in securing such an institution. We take the following from the Claiborne Advocate, published in Homer, Claiborne Parish, La. We have heard Bastrop, in Morehouse Parish, mentioned also, and Sparta, in Bienville Parish. The enlightened and generous citizens of these and other places will not be slow in presenting facilities for securing among them an institution that will be a permanent blessing—making rich and adding no sorrow or loss thereto. We hope the committee will report so definitely to Conference that the work may soon be under way. One suggestion—The Conference will hardly regard any point as eligible that tolerates grog-shops.

The Claiborne Advocate of 1st inst. says:

"In our last was published a call for a public meeting in this place on the 22d. In that notice the purpose of the meeting was stated to be to introduce a correspondence with the committee, appointed by the Methodist Conference at its recent session at Mansfield, with the view of bringing to the attention of those gentlemen the superior advantages of Homer as the site of the college, proposed to be established by the Conference at some point in North Louisiana. In accordance with that notice a meeting was held at the court-house in this place on last Wednesday evening and a committee of correspondence was appointed, composed of Messrs. Young, Thomasson and Dugan.

"Homer possesses two obvious advantages as a site for the institution: its healthfulness and its centrality. There is no other point in any of the North Louisiana parishes between the Ouachita river and the Texas line, that possesses these advantages, as we conceive, in so eminent a degree. If the Conference committee have any doubts on either point they need only visit the place to become fully satisfied.

"And in connection with these two prominent facts there are others well worthy of consideration. Homer is a rapidly growing place, and from its situation must necessarily continue to improve. By the excellence of the roads leading to it from every point, the comparative convenience of steam navigation, the lines of mail coaches soon to terminate at this place, or to pass through or near it—to say nothing of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, which will pass within a few miles of it—every requisite facility of communication with the place will be afforded. And besides this healthfulness (of which there is no question) and its centrality (which any person may know by only consulting the geography of North Louisiana) and its easy accessibility from every quarter, Homer offers an obvious advantage for an institution of learning in the character of the community by which it is surrounded. If our population is not the wealthiest which may be found in some portions of the country, there is none anywhere to be found more moral, orderly and enterprising, and few, if any, more intelligent and cultivated. There is, besides, in this community a very large infusion of Methodism, which, itself, might be a consideration of some importance in selecting a permanent location for a Methodist institution. And there will be found to be still another advantage in favor of Homer over any other point that may be regarded by the Conference committee as an equal competitor in other respects: Homer, or its citizens, and those of the vicinity, will give largely towards the erection of the buildings and the permanent endowment of the institution. Of this we have assurance from many of our ablest citizens.

"These advantages, and others which do not now occur to us, will doubtless be urged by our corresponding committee. But, as the representations of parties interested may not be regarded as very weighty, it is hoped that the gentlemen composing the Conference committee will visit us in person before they make their report to the next Conference."

THE SCEPTRE FALLEN.

Under the head of "The Insignificance of the Pope," the New York Observer refers to a remarkable fact in connection with the present aspect of European affairs:

"We have not seen the matter adverted to, but there is nothing which has more deeply impressed us with the waning influence of Popery, than the utter insignificance of the Pope in connection with the great struggle which seems now about to commence in Europe. The time was when in all the conflicts which were anticipated, he was the first of all to be consulted, and when his word was all powerful in determining the course of action: when princes sought his favor and emperors bowed before him humbly acknowledging his supremacy. History records scenes in which kings have exhibited the most abject and degrading submission to his authority, not daring to take one step in opposition to his expressed wishes.

"What is the case now. Europe appears about to be convulsed with war. Almost every power, even to that of the weakest State, is the subject of speculation as to its course in the coming strife; but we do not even hear the question proposed as to what may be the thoughts of the Pope. He is left out of view entirely, and his intentions are no more seriously called in question than those of the Emperor of Hayti.

"To our minds this appears a most significant fact. It shows in an unquestionable form that the power of the papacy has passed away. The Pope is now of no more account among the sovereigns of Europe, and what he may think or desire has really no more influence than when he stood as a footman on the back of a carriage on his way out of Rome during the late revolution. It may be said that these remarks will apply only to the temporal power of the Pope, but his spiritual supremacy and influence have been in a great measure dependent upon the temporal. And when he who once claimed to be the arbiter in all disputes between princes and kings, and who often exercised his authority in the most haughty and domineering manner, becomes so insignificant that no one does him reverence; when the whole map of a European war is laid out without consulting the Pope, or thinking of his wishes, it is a sure sign that the day of his power has passed."

Unwilling to be ignored totally in a contest, where once he would have been the first to be consulted, the Pope has recently issued an Allocution, on the critical state of affairs in Europe, the extravagant tone and promise of which excite the usual smile with which Protestants regard the Papal thunder. In noticing this last effusion, the London Times utters the following profound truth respecting the future of Popery:

"In a word, the Papal address is not of a nature to inspire alarm in those who hope for the advance and enlightenment of mankind. In spite of her alliance with successful despotism, Popery makes no real progress. Her reverses are those which spring from the natural instincts of mankind, and are therefore lasting; her triumphs, on the other hand, are gained by the artificial aids of an elaborate organization, an astute policy, a fierce esprit du corps, and a false enthusiasm; they are against the sense of mankind and the spirit of the age, and are in their nature temporary. It is the struggle of a system, strong indeed and vigorous, against a distant but inevitable future. The vessel may seem to advance, but there is an unseen current which carries it with greater speed in the opposite direction. Within the last year or two, fewer than usual of the apparent successes have rewarded the Papal policy. On the other hand, those churches which have thrown off its authority are prosecuting their career with energy and success."

POLICY IN EASTERN AFFAIRS.

One of the most interesting and important articles in the February number of the North British Review, is that on "The War in the East and its Political Contingencies." The subject is viewed in its various aspects, and the reasons for the repeated efforts to settle the dispute between Russia and Turkey by diplomacy, are thus stated:

"We cannot wonder at the nervous anxiety exhibited by all the Great Powers of Western Europe to prevent the dispute between Russia and Turkey from culminating in a war, nor their desire, on almost any terms, to hush up and terminate that war now that it has actually broken out. Statesmen of every nation are so well aware that a prolonged contest can scarcely be confined to two belligerents alone, and that it must open questions and risk eventualities, neither of which they are prepared to face. The motives of their present zeal are partly humanity, partly laziness, partly timidity, and partly perplexity. Those considerations have unfortunately proved stronger than love of justice, or that wisdom which looks to future tranquility rather than to present truce—which is less anxious for an immediate armistice than for an enduring peace. They led to our earnest advice to Turkey not to declare war. They led to the hurried, clumsy and discreditable Vienna Note, and to the indecent violence with which some of our influential writers urged its submissive acceptance by the Porte. We cannot wonder at this feeling; the eventualities of the present position of affairs are undoubtedly serious and complicated enough; and it is not surprising that statesmen who cannot see their way through them, who have not nerve to look them in the face, and who are not clear as to the line of policy which the ought, or may wish, to pursue when these eventualities arise—should endeavor to stave them off by every means in their power. Still, this is not wisdom; it is not duty; it is at best but, the weak craft of the procrastinator, or the craven manœuvre of the ostrich. Sooner or later these embarrassing questions must be met and understood, and our maxims of conduct with regard to them decided and made known."

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

A QUESTION ANSWERED.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY—ITS PUBLICATIONS, AGENTS, ETC.

BRO. MCTYEIRE: I deem it a matter of some interest to the Methodist Church, South, to invite attention to the subjects indicated above. The circulation of useful Tracts has resulted in great good. But, then, it is true, that much of what is issued from the religious press of the country is objectionable; and therefore, no man should should circulate anything but that which he is satisfied in his own conscience is perfectly orthodox. Nor should innocent persons be held accountable for that in which they have no agency.

I have been led to these reflections by the fact there have been some persons traveling through different parts of Mississippi of late, professing to be agents for the American Tract Society, soliciting the aid of Methodists with others, in behalf of that institution. In order to success, the impression is made, whenever it can be, that the Methodist Church is united and equally interested with others in the publications of that Society. Now, such deception ought not to be practiced; for I am sure that among those who ought to know, it is distinctly understood that we have no official connection with that establishment. On the contrary the Methodists have their own Tract Society.

It may be true that the Board of Publication is composed of individual Methodists as well as Presbyterians, Baptists, etc. But this does by no means constitute a denominational connection. However, if you will answer the following questions through your excellent paper, the public may be set right on this subject:

What connection, if any, has the M. E. Church, South, with the American Tract Society. Yours,

HENRY J. HARRIS.

Raymond, March 14, 1854.

NOTE.—Bro. Harris contributes a correct answer to his question. The same statement is applicable to another Society yclept "American"—the American Sabbath School Union. These both sometimes employ Methodist local preachers as agents, which makes their undenominational character more specious. Notwithstanding, their real management is Presbyterian and their doctrinal substratum Calvinistic. We think that Methodists can work to more advantage without forming under the wings of either of these Societies. Let us build up our own which are equally American and decidedly Arminian.

[For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

REVIVAL AT LAKE PROVIDENCE, LOUISIANA.

A good work is in progress at this place, under the faithful labors of Bro. R. J. Harp. The Church is much revived; 12 or 15 have been converted, and 42 added to the M. E. Church, South, on probation, and a number have attached themselves to the Presbyterian Church. There is still deep interest felt on the subject in the community. We have not had such a time in Providence for many years. We were severely scourged last fall by yellow fever, and we are trying to learn the lesson it was calculated to teach. May God revive his work throughout the length and breadth of our land.

Brother Harp is also doing a great work for Sabbath Schools. About $150 have been collected to purchase a library, and it is probable that much more will be raised for the same purpose.

Your list of receipts will also show a large report from him. If all our preachers would do as much your number would soon be made up. Pray for us. ZACH. THOMPSON.

March 16, 1854.

"ONE DIED FOR ALL."

EXTRACT OF A LETTER OF LATE REV. HUGH WHITE, ON 2 COR. v, 15.

O, my dear friend, what a boundless range of subject is opened before us in that brief sentence; what an infinitude of meaning within the compass of those few words! What a marvellous manifestation of divine love they unfold—what an overwhelming appeal to the gratitude of the human heart do they contain—what inexhaustible materials for the everlasting, yea, the ever-increasing gratitude, wonder, and praise of the glorified saints who have been the trophies of that dying love, do they supply! Strange that they do not affect us more deeply, engage our meditation more constantly, and influence our lives more effectually and abidingly! May the Holy Spirit make them, to us all, more and more the theme of our devout contemplation—the magnet of attraction to our hearts—the motive to prompt our every word and action, rendering our hearts a Saviour's throne, our lips a hallowed conser filled with a Saviour's praise—our life a grateful offering consecrated to a Saviour's glory. O, dear friend, were it so with us, how lightly would earthly sorrows press upon us! You, how would it minister to our happiness by drawing us closer to him for support and consolation, until earth should become a very foretaste of heaven.

O can I hope, since Jesus wept,
No tears mine eyes should dim;
Or wish a world to smile on me,
That only frowned on him?

And since his saints in every age
A thorny path have trod,
O who am I, that flowers alone
Should strew my path to God?

Can I wish more than that a lot
Like theirs to me be given—
A toilsome pilgrimage on earth,
Eternal rest in heaven?

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.—A German correspondent of the Western Christian Advocate, says that the Moravians have 70 missionary stations in Greenland, Labrador, St. Croix, St. Jan, Jamaica, Barbadoes, Mosquito, Surinam, South Africa, and New Holland, employing 296 missionaries, while the members of their mission churches number 67,149.

If the world suspect your well intended designs, be not uneasy. It only shows that mankind are themselves false and artful, which is the cause of their being suspicious.

IS IT FIT? IS IT REASONABLE?

Is it fit that a populous and a strong nation should, on its own soil, be governed by a comparative handful of foreigners, ignorant of the laws yet claiming to administer them, and seizing upon its offices while yet hardly speaking its language? Can this be just? Ought it to be borne? Should it be asked?

Not unless the being born abroad confers some right over us: not, unless we and our country belong to everybody but ourselves; unless Americans are altogether inferior to the born elsewhere, unworthy of freedom and incapable of self-government.

Are we inferior to even the most unsophisticated class of the two nations that chiefly lord it over us—the Irish and Germans? If we are, all this is but right.

But in what respect are we inferior to these people? Are we barbarians, and do they come to enlighten us? Are we rude, and do they come to polish us? Are we pagan, and do they mean to christianize us?

Suppose even all this, and that the most unfortunate and "down-trodden" of European nations, who tell us they were slaves at home ought still, when they come among us, to be our masters, because they stand as high above us as we do above the red-skins of our forests and prairies. Suppose all this: still, we do not treat the Indians as these people are treated by us. We leave them to govern themselves by their own laws and their own men: we exercise over them some general powers, only for the sake of keeping them at peace with each other and of preventing grog-shops among them. We pay them annuities, send the Bible and the school-master among them, furnish them with implements of regular husbandry, and endeavor to teach them their use. We protect them and try to improve them.

But what do our foreign masters do for us? Do they protect us from foreign nations? On the contrary: they are always wanting to draw us into aimless quarrels with everybody. Do they keep us at peace among ourselves? By no manner of means. They are always quarreling with us and even with each other, about Hayti knows what—about White Boys and Orange men, Corkonians and Fardowners; immemorial feuds and fights, that nobody ever understood and which are only the fiercer for people not knowing what they mean. The Germans and Italians are quieter, and only raise a riot now and then: but the Irish are forever kicking up rowe and breaking heads, getting up mobs, rendering our elections scenes of violence and blood, and turning the highest and what should be the soberest of our institutions, the right of suffrage, into an outrage and a mockery, a hell's hubbub of drunkenness and perjury and bludgeoning.

Do they prevent grog-shops? Lo! in every city, the worst dens of debauch are, to get them and to keep away decent men from voting, made almost the sole places for holding the polls! Shall we ask what they do, as our lawgivers and masters, to raise us up from our inferiority, to civilize, to moralize, to christianize, to instruct us? Nothing. We repeat that they treat us even less humanely than we do the most barbarous and generally irreclaimable Indians.

Those Indians are a conquered people. But when did these foreigners conquer us? Not since, as a young and weak but high-spirited nation, we threw off the light fetters of England's dominion. And have we done so, in the full vigor of our strength, only to become, in its old and stalwart manhood, the vassals of all Europe's vile boudmen to all the world, slaves that have not even the poor privilege of belonging to any one in particular, but are a common property of which anybody abroad has only to come here and take possession? Did we shake off Kings and Lords only that we might be ever and lorded over by those who say they were slaves to kings and vassals to lords? Shall we utter bow our necks once more to the British yoke? For that servitude was less low, less galling. It was a tyranny softened by old benefits and natural affections: a tyranny of our own kin and for

Our masters then
Were still at least our countrymen.

We speak warmly. How can we help it? Who does not know that the abuses we are complaining of have become intolerable? Who does not feel that none can bear it, except the dishonorable and disloyal traffickers for office who willingly, for their own dishonest harter away, to the worst and foolishest of foreigners, the rights and the well-being of good citizens, and even the true interests of the naturalized foreigner himself?

Himself usually poor and less able than others to make his way. In a strange land, through the public disorders which foreigners stirred up by wicked demagogues, excited by the general prejudice which their conduct first producing, the alien, in his own person pays more severely than all others the mischief which he does or which political jugglers make play upon his ignorance and his passions. Only the poor who, more than all, have need that the law, ever vigorous and impartial, shall protect all men, all the while. Wealth and power protect themselves. It is, more than all, the poor who have need that the country where they are should flourish: for a bad and foolish government grinds, starves, oppresses chiefly the poor: the rich it favors; or they can buy it, or they can fly from it. Bad government must take much from the rich: but from the poor it takes all. So, again, it is the poor who have the truest and strongest interest in keeping a genuine republican free Government. The rich are free enough, almost anywhere: generally but the poor who are enslaved. And the Bible is, in the moral world, good and the Republican Government is in the civil world are the salvation of the poor. As, then, the poor are, for beyond all others, the sufferers by bad government, so the foreign-born poor, who needs good laws, a good government, and the greatest public prosperity to assist him; is in a strange country, all the rest of the poor have the advantage over him.

Instead of considering all this, and how they were in a condition, by taking an active part in our Government, to benefit it or even themselves, the great body of these men, and especially of our headlong friends the Irish, have rushed into politics, as fast as they landed, to not only have aided all disorder, all turbulence and everything illegal and mischievous, but in doing this, more and more, every day, while dominecring violence and arrogance, which have now roused the general indignation of the people of the soil. They are not accustomed to be lorded over; and will least of all bear to see men admitted, by a boon, to a participation in our freedom, not to a right of hectoring and ruining us.

All the sober and just part of them—and we rejoice to say they are many—feel as strongly as we do the folly, the mischief, the criminality of these courses, and the probability that the country must at last, if these men thus array themselves a plague to the land and the people who have received them and dealt with them in a spirit so brotherly, treat them as aliens, as they will persist in not being Americans, not but Americans, and entitled to no more than other Americans, even after being honestly naturalized.

Since the new divorce bill has gone into operation in Ohio, marriages are placed under the head of limited partnerships.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

OBITUARY:

Mrs. Martha Byrd, consort Wm. S. Byrd, daughter of Daniel W. Easley, of Athens, departed this life on the 17th January, 54, at her residence in Richland, Holmes nty, Miss.

She had lived a long and pious life, being the time of her death, 60 years 9 months 11 days old. At the tender age of 13 embraced religion under the preaching of Rev. Hope Hull, in her native State, and ever since remained a worthy and beloved member of the Methodist Episcopal rch.

She had had for years very hard trials, but remained firm and a pillar of the Church her them. Her place in the Church will soon be filled. She seemed confident, n the time the fearful disease (palpitation of the heart) began its ravages upon feeble frame, that her earthly existence but of short duration; yet she did not n to wish it longer, but rather to rejoice the time was rapidly approaching for le depart and to be with Christ, which deemed far better than to remain in this ld. When, seeing she had but a few rs to live, she called her children togeth- round her bed of death, to leave with n mother's blessings and bid them fare- ; after which she requested her friends brethren present to sing her favorite n, of which she repeated one verse, "Jecan make a dying bed feel soft as down ows nre." While they were singing this propriate hymn a heavenly smile suffused face.

After she had lost the power of speech, in er to ascertain whether or not she was scious, she was asked to raise her hands; in a moment raised them both. She was n asked if she felt Christ with her in passthe dark valley, to let it be known by the sign. She threw up both her pale and ble hands in token that she had gained victory. A few moments more and she the world adieu forever! without struggle. Who, in witnessing such triumph not say, "let me die the death of the teous, and let my last end be like his."

P. Cooper.

Ben, in Perry county, Ala., on the 5th of ril, 1854, Thomas Webb Bland, aged 23 rs and 3 days. He was always remarkd good boy, and when on his death-bed he ed that had been trying to serve God ever e he was eleven years old; and he died he lived, in the faith of the gospel. His moments were spent in shouting aloud praises of God.

Living as he did at some distance in the ntry, he did not enjoy much intercourse h his brethren here, but his request was, t they should be informed that "he had e to heaven, and he hoped they would et him there." May God grant it.

T. Y. Ramsey.

Clarion, Ala., March 14, 1854.

Died, at his residence near Clinton, La., of the prevailing epidemic, Nov. 15, 1853, Rev. D. D. Merrick, formerly from Wilbraham, Mass. The Saviour whom he sought d found in early youth, forsook him not in hour of dissolution. His sweet and genspirit passed away to mingle with those o have gone up to the paradise of God, ds white in the blood of the Lamb. In his th the poor have lost a friend, the Church ornament, while his wife, three children and ide circle of friends are left to mourn his eparable loss. S. B. T.

The Christian Advocate and Journal will ase copy.

Death in the Pulpit.—The Montgomery rnal of the 14th says: We learn that the v. W. S. Loyd, the pastor of two Baptist urches in this county, a few miles west of city, Elam and Antioch, died on last nday, while performing service at the lat- He had commenced his discourse, and r speaking a few moments, suddenly exmed, "I feel, brethren, I am going," and antaneously sank down and expired.

Some physicians were present in the congation, who attempted in vain to revive n. There was no pulsation or breath after fall, and it is presumed that he died of n ease of the heart, as he had suffered much day previously from palpitation.

Mr. Loyd was justly esteemed by his parioners for his able, faithful and acceptable rs, and although his loss is a bitter stroke his friends, it is doubtless a consolation to m to know that he died without pain and h his "harness on," in the faithful and est discharge of his duty.

LOCAL MATTERS.

The following is the report of the interments the cemeteries of the city with one exception, for the week ending at 6 o'clock, A. M., on nday, the 19th inst.: Protestant, Girod street, Cypress Grove, 6; Odd Fellows' Rest, 4; ter's Field, 14; Charity Hospital, 23; St. rick's, 14; Catholic No. 1, Second District, Catholic No. 2, Second District, 7; Lafayette, rth District, 19. Total, 97.

Dreadful Death.—An inquest was held last urday on the body of a man named Jacques nal, a native of France and about 54 years go. Deceased had fallen into a well, in a den on Ursuline street, between Johnson and eur streets, and being intoxicated at the e was drowned before assistance could be dered.

James Williams Again.—This juvenile rascal, who, it may be remembered, was arrested o days ago on a charge of having picked a y's pocket at the Lake, and who was discharged in consequence of no prosecutor appearagainst him, was again arrested night before last by the officer employed at the St. Charles Hotel, who charges him with having taken the sum of $175. His trunks were forched, and duplicates of drafts to the amount $200, which had been transmitted to a person named McCoy, in Birmingham, (or "Hurmingem," as the boy calls it) England, were found. These he denies all knowledge of, and declares that if any such papers were found in trunks they must have been placed there by he person for the purpose of getting him into crape. He is at present in the lock-up of the st District. When this little chap was reased on the former occasion he called at the ces of the different morning papers of the y, and stated that his standing in society as honest gentleman, together with his personal ings, had been much injured and outraged sundry articles that had appeared in relation his arrest, and he desired that the affair uld be properly represented to the public, t the stain upon his character might be reved and his name freed from the reproach t upon it. In fact, if our memory be good, succeeded in obtaining the amende honorable m one of our brothers, in very choice and ect terms, and will without doubt seek it in if he is fortunate enough to escape this s. What can be thought of a boy who has duated in the science of rascality when rely past the age of twelve years?

Board of Assistant Aldermen.—This Board met last evening, Dr. Dalton in the Chair and a quorum present. On motion the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting was dispensed with, and a communication was read from the Mayor, informing the Board that ex-President Fillmore had left Louisville for New Orleans, and would probably arrive here sometime during this week, and recommending that the hospitalities of the city be tendered him by the Common Council; resolutions to that effect were adopted and a Committee appointed to arrange the matter. His Honor also transmitted a memorial from the trustees of the Seamen's Home, complaining of the opposition experienced in the discharge of their duties from the runners of sailor landlords; a number of affidavits, from sailors and other, accompanied this document, to the effect that deponents on landing at this port had been abused, assaulted and in some instances cruelly beaten for taking lodgings at the Seamen's Home, and for even expressing intentions of doing so. The memorial further sets forth that applications have frequently been made to the Recorders of the city and to the officers of the police, but that protection had invariably been withheld, and it thus became necessary to seek justice from the City Council.

Mr. Purvis offered a resolution authorizing the Mayor to furnish vessels arriving here a sufficient police force to protect sailors and others from violence in the exercise of their rights. This resolution was opposed by Messrs. Wright and O'Sullivan, the former having misunderstood its import, and the latter stating that he believed the sailors were able to protect themselves.

Mr. Purris rose to an explanation. He stated that the resolution was only meant for the protection of the class of persons referred to, and that he was astonished to see it meet with opposition. Was it possible that an appeal of this kind could be disregarded, when it was distinctly asserted by numerous respectable citizens that the ordinary methods of obtaining justice had entirely failed in accomplishing that end? Did the Board wish to make itself a laughing-stock and incur the condemnation and scorn of all sensible and right-thinking men. Would they, the members, for a paltry political consideration, forego all sense of justice, and close their eyes to a most abominable outrage upon personal rights and the laws of the land?

Several other members spoke warmly upon the subject, and the resolution was afterwards amended so as to devolve the duty of furnishing policemen upon the Recorders of the several Districts instead of the Mayor, and after many attempts to lay it on the table, refer it to a special committee, and to defeat it altogether—principally made by Messrs. Ker, O'Sullivan and Latour—the resolution as emended was adopted. A resolution was then adopted requesting the Police Committee to report whether an increase of the police force would be necessary in order to carry out the arrangement resolved upon.

A second message was read from the Mayor, alluding to the great fire which occurred some days ago, and suggesting the propriety of the Council taking some steps for the erection of a suitable monument to the memory of Daniel S. Woodruff and William McLeod, who lost their lives at said fire. A resolution appropriating the sum of $2000 to that purpose was, after much discussion, adopted.

A communication from the Comptroller was read, informing the Board of the adjudication of a contract for the construction of an iron railing around Annunciation Square, for the sum of $19,700. The communication was referred to the Committee on Streets and Landings.

General Intelligence.

On Thursday night last, a large meeting was held at Mobile for the purpose of giving expression to the sentiments of that community in relation to the seizure of the Black Warrior at Havana, resolutions were reported and several speeches were made.

Earthquake in Georgia.—A slight earthquake was experienced at Macon, Ga., on or about 6 o'clock yesterday morning, accompanied by a heavy rumbling sound which lasted thirty or forty seconds.

It is understood that the Secretary of the Navy will report that our mail steamers would be of no sort of account in time of war except as transports.

Fire in Mobile.—Masterson's crockery warehouse, situated in Water street, Mobile, has been destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $11,500. The property was insured in the city.

Mary Hewitt is engaged in writing a popular history of America, intended to make the reading class of English artisans, etc., better acquainted with the history of the United States than they have hitherto been.

"Know-Nothings"—A secret society of this name was formed in this city on Monday night, with over a hundred members. There are thousands of persons banded together in the North in this cause whatever it is. [Washington Sentinel.

Mr. Joseph Warnock, a young man aged 19, of Warren county, Miss., on his return home from Oakland College, on the steamer Princess, fell from the cabin deck to the lower deck and fractured his skull, from the effects of which he died at Vicksburg.

Outrage and Murder by a Slave.—A man named Mitchel, living in Ashe county, N. C., a short time since, having gone to Grayson Courthouse to lecture on temperance, his own negro during his absence committed a rape on his mistress, after which he murdered her, put the body in a bed in her house and then ran to a neighbor's house and informed them his mistress was dying; he then went to another house and informed persons there that she was dead. The negro was arrested and confessed the hellish deed, and it was reported was whipped and then hung.

Mrs. Gwin, wife of Senator Gwin of California, it is stated, has just come into possession of 50,000 acres of land located in Texas, worth from $2 to $20 per acre.

The property formerly belonged to her first husband, Mr. Logan, a wealthy citizen of Texas, who, some years since, died suddenly without a will, but it has for several years been in the hands of an administrator. Recently, however, a case instituted by some of Mr. Logan's heirs against the administrator in the Supreme Court of Texas, was decided, and Mrs. Gwin declared to be entitled to the whole estate.

The Louisiana Legislature and Cuba.—The following resolutions were adopted by both houses of the Legislature on the last day of the session, with but three dissenting votes:

Be it Resolved, That we view with alarm the recent and avowed change that has taken place in the policy of the Spanish Government in Cuba, the manifest tendency and result of which must be the abolition of slavery and the destruction of the white race in that country.

Resolved, That we believe such an event will have a most pernicious effect upon the same institution and interests in these States; that it will destroy the social and political existence of that island; that it will materially affect the natural law of American progress, by precluding forever the admission of Cuba into this Union; that it will create in our immediate vicinity, and almost within sight of our own shores, a government administered by an inferior and barbarous African race, under the immediate influence of European interests and ideas, and adverse to the pure American influences which should predominate on this continent and its adjacent islands; that it will menace the security of the outlets of all our Southern and South-western rivers, and harbors of the Gulf of Mexico, of the American Mediterranean, of the new and great highways of commerce through those seas and across the isthmus of America; and that it will materially endanger the intercourse between our Atlantic and Pacific States.

Resolved, That we approve of the sentiments expressed in the inaugural message of General Pierce, relative to the extension of our limits and the prevention of the establishment of prejudicial influences around our Southern border, and of those laid down by his Excellency Governor Hebert in his late annual message.

Resolved, That we deem the time has arrived when the American people and the Federal Government should take a great and active interest in the proceedings of Spain and other European powers in Cuba, in order to prevent the establishment of measures and institutions prejudicial to our own safety and welfare.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Washington, March 18, 1854.

Congress has settled down into its old dog-trot pace and we may expect this session to witness the coming in and going out of the season—the leaves have not quite burst the buds, but they will expand and grow and fade again, before Congress adjourns, at its present rate of progress.

There is a remedy for this. Within the few first days after the opening of this Congress, the House appointed a Select Committee with power to revise the rules and to report at any time, this report, when made, to take precedence of all other business until finally disposed of. The experience of years has shown that the present cumbrous code of rules which governs the House is so devised that all the business becomes, after a few weeks, blocked up, and each succeeding week only adds to this mass of confusion, fresh obstacles to progress, so that in the end, nothing but the annual appropriation bills are passed upon, and these loaded down with items properly belonging to separate bills; even these are not seriously taken in hand until a day of adjournment is fixed upon, and then everything is done helter-skelter—clerks work all night—committees of conference between the two Houses cross each other's paths in the rotunda—everybody is worried to know what is done, and until the legislative battle is over and Congress adjourned, the very actors in this scene of disgraceful hurry know not what is done, or left undone. The remedy for this is a return to parliamentary rules and the courtesy of gentlemen. Let the press call upon the Select Committee to report; even if all the present rules are annulled the country will be the gainer.

Mr. Hunt brought before the House, this morning, a question of privilege relative to some remarks of Mr. Lane, of Indiana, which were reported in the Globe in a manner offensive to Mr. H., if designed to be applied to him—upon this point Mr. Hunt made inquiry. Mr. Lane entered upon a long explanation and the upshot of it was that he first took away the ground of complaint, and then withdrew the language used.

Washington, March 14, 1854.

We have had a sort of supplemental discussion upon the Nebraska bill in the Senate today, which grew out of a petition presented by Mr. Everett, of Massachusetts; and as it was an occasion of some excitement, for the moment, perhaps it may amuse and edify your readers if I give them a brief synopsis of it.

Mr. Everett briefly called attention to the petition which was lying on the Clerk's desk (a huge roll of manuscript tied with a large cord) which he had been requested to present to the Senate, and which was signed by three thousand and fifty of the clergymen of New England. He hoped that a remonstrance from so intelligent a body of men would be allowed its proper weight with the Senate.

Mr. Pratt, of Maryland, presented a petition from the Baltimore Board of Trade relative to the improvement of their harbor, etc.

[While others were presenting petitions, Senator Douglas was at the Clerk's desk inspecting the huge petition from the Puritans.]

Mr. Douglas, having returned to his seat, rose with a good deal of feeling in his manner and denounced the New England protest as libelous, calumnious, etc.

Sam Houston took the floor in defense of the petitioners, whose right to be heard was as good as that of Senators themselves. They used no language stronger than he had applied to the measure when it was under discussion. He had said that the bill was a violation of treaties solemnly entered into with the Indians; that it was a violation of plighted faith in the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, and he told Senators at the time that it would awaken a storm of agitation at the North. This was then denied, but now look on the table—there was a protest signed by more than three thousand ministers of the living God. [Laughter.]

Mr. Mason, of Virginia, was for treating all petitions respectfully, but these men were here in a character unknown to the Constitution; they had laid aside their character as citizens, and were here as ministers of the gospel. As a body, these men were encroaching and arrogant. He moved that the petition be not received.

Mr Butler, of South Carolina, had great respect for ministers of the gospel; could almost be passive under their rebuke. But these men had left the pulpit and entered the political arena. They assumed, as God's organs, to be foreman of the jury which was to pronounce a verdict against us. The Senate should not submit to their rebuke.

Mr. Adams, of Mississippi, had great respect for clergymen while they kept themselves to the purity of their office, but when they descended from this to mix in the dirty pool of politics, etc.

Sam Houston said the Senator from Virginia had represented these petitioners as invoking God's vengeance on us, but this was not so. They were denounced as agitators; but where did agitation begin? This Senate was the laboratory where it was first manufactured.

Mr. Everett, of Massachusetts, here ventured a gentle defence of himself and the protestants. He was sorry that the presentation of this petition had awakened so much feeling. He thought the language of the memorial had been misconstrued. It was represented as a protest upon the action already done by this body, but on examining it he found that it bore date the 1st of March, and the bill was passed on the 4th; he had no doubt it was signed while the bill was under discussion. He believed, too, that clergymen of all political parties had joined in this remonstrance, and that nowhere in the world could there be found a like number of men of more worth and intelligence. He had considered it strictly his duty to present this petition, for though the bill had passed the Senate it might yet come back for amendment, and meanwhile he had moved to lay this petition on the table.

Mr. Pettit said the Senator from Mississippi had expressed great respect for clergymen while they kept out of the turbid pool of politics. Now he (Pettit) did not think the political waters any muddier than the streams which ran through the contradictory systems of theology. These men had made this an ecclesiastical question, and denounced us as violators of God's law. We have chosen an officer to expound the divine will to us, and he should move to refer this petition to the Chaplain, Rev. Henry Slicer, that he might consider it and report upon it officially. [Laughter.]

If it was his (the Chaplain's) opinion that the bill we have passed is likely to subject us to divine wrath, he (Pettit) should beg his colleagues in the House for God's sake to send back the bill to us.

The discussion was further continued by Messrs. Douglas, Houston, Seward and Badger, and finally the petition was laid on the table.

The House spent the whole day upon another railroad bill, which had passed the Senate, for a grant of land to Wisconsin in aid of a road from Milwaukee to Lake Winnebago. This bill has met a strong opposition by parties from the locality, who already have a road under way with which this one would conflict. At one time the measure was near being ordered to its engrossment, the vote being 91 yeas to 90 nays, but Speaker Boyd came in and voted no; so there was a tie, and the vote lost. Subsequently, the bill was laid on the table, or as Senator Benton would say, "killed stone dead."

The Senate had a long Executive session today, but the Gadsden Treaty was not taken up. Those who say this Treaty will be passed know no more about it than he who reads.

The Homestead Bill.

This bill, which passed the House of Representatives on the 6th, makes the following provisions:

1. That any free white person who is at the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and is a citizen of the United States, shall be entitled to enter, free of cost, one quarter section of vacant and unappropriated public land which at the time of application may be subject to private entry at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, or a quantity equal thereto, to be located in a body in conformity with the legal subdivisions of the public lands, and after the same shall have been surveyed.

2. The person applying for the benefit of this act in which he or she is about to make each entry, shall make affidavit before the said Register that he or she is the head of a family, or twenty-one years of age, and upon making affidavit and filing it with the Register, he or she shall thereupon be permitted to enter the quantity of land already specified; provided that no certificate shall be given or patent issued therefor until the expiration of five years from the date of said entry, and if at the expiration of such time the person making such entry, or if he be dead, his widow, or in case of her death his heirs or devisee, or in case of a widow making such entry, her heirs or devisee in case of her death shall prove by two credible witnesses he, or she, or they, have continued to reside upon and cultivate said land and still reside upon the same, and have not alienated it or any part thereof, then in such case he, or she, or they, shall be entitled to a patent as in other cases made and provided for by law; provided further in case of the death of both father and mother, leaving an infant child or children under twenty-one years of age, the right of the free entry shall inure to the benefit of the said infant child or children, and the executor, administrator, or guardian, may at any time within two years after the death of such surviving parent, and in accordance with the laws of the State in which such children for the time being have their domicil, sell said land for the benefit of the said infants, but no other purpose, and the purchaser shall acquire the absolute title by the purchase, and be entitled to a patent from the United States.

3. All land acquired under this act shall in no event become liable to satisfaction of any debts contracted prior to the issuing of the patent therefor.

4. In case a person who has filed the affidavit required shall have changed his or her residence, or abandoned said country for more than six months at any one time, in that event the land so entered to revert back to Government, subject to appeal to the General Land Office.

5. If any individual now a resident of any one of the States or Territories and not a citizen of the United States at the time of making such application for the benefit of this act, shall have filed a declaration of intention as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen of the same before the issuance of the patent as made and provided for in this act, shall be placed on an equal footing with the native born citizen of the United States.

6. No individual is permitted to make more than one entry under the provision of this act, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office is required to prepare and issue such rules and regulations consistent with this act as shall be necessary and proper to carry its provisions into effect, and the Registers and Receivers of the several land offices shall be entitled to receive the same compensation for any lands entered under the provisions of this act, that they are now entitled to receive when the same quantity of land is entered with money, one-half to be paid by the person making the application, at the time of so doing, and the other half on the issue of the certificate by the person to whom it may be issued; provided, however, all persons entering land under the provisions of this act shall, as near as may be practicable, in making such entries, be confined to each alternate quarter section, and to land subject to private entry, and provided nothing in this act shall be so contructed as to impair or interfere in any manner whatever with existing pre-emption rights; and provided further, that the provisions of this act shall be so construed as to authorize the class of persons provided for who may not own over 160 acres of land, to enter free of cost any public lands adjoining his or her farm, subject to private entry at the minimum price in quantity when added to what he or she now owns, equal to 160 acres—provided he or she shall cultivate the whole or part thereof.

Custom-house Regulations of the Island of Cuba.

The Charleston Courier publishes the following regulations of the Custom-houses in Cuba, as published by the authorities of that Island, for the government of the Captains and Supercargoes of Spanish and foreign vessels engaged in that trade:

I.

All Captains or Supercargoes the moment their vessels have come to their anchor in any port of this Island, must deliver, immediately upon being visited by the Custom-house boat, a manifest, declaring his name, that of the vessel, from whence she comes, number of tons, number of bales, packages and every other article he has on board, or of which his cargo is composed, with their respective marks, numbers and consignees.

If the whole or part of the cargo were composed of jerked beef, salt, cocoa or any article shipped loose or in bulk, the cargo must be manifested in Spanish weight or measure. All stores, ammunition, arms, tools, instruments, and all other ships' utensils must be manifested, and likewise the seals, if the vessel be a steamboat.

II.

All Captains and Supercargoes of vessels, who enter in distress into any port of this Island, must deliver a manifest of their cargoes in the same manner, as if the vessels were engaged in this trade.

III.

To this same rule are liable all Captains and Supercargoes of vessels entering in ballast.

IV.

If the Captain of a vessel has been obliged by stress of weather or any other unforseen cause, to throw cargo overboard, he must state in his manifest the quantity of the cargo that has been lost, specifying, no matter how large or small the quantity may be, the quantity, number of bales, packages, boxes, etc., as well as class or kind of the goods. After having delivered the manifest, he must appear personally in the Custom-house, with his Logbook, to prove that his declaration is true and correct.

V.

All Captains of vessels coming from Spanish ports with the register of the respective Custom-house, must deliver an additional manifest of all the goods which they have taken on board after the receipt of said register, and not included in the same, and also of all the stores and ships' utensils already mentioned in the rule No. 1.

VI.

In case the Captain or Supercargo does not present the manifest within the time above mentioned, he will incur a fine of $500.

VII.

In case the Captain or Supercargo is unable to make out a manifest, this will be the duty of the consignee or any one of his clerks.

VIII.

During the twelve hours, after having delivered the manifest, which are to commence from six o'clock in the morning until seven at night, the Captain, Supercargo or consignee, can make any alteration he thinks proper or necessary, and for this purpose he will call on the collector, or in his absence on the Commander of the Custom-house officers in service.

IX.

The twelve hours prescribed in the rule No. 9 having elapsed, all the packages or other goods which have been omitted in the manifest will be confiscated, and the Captain or Supercargo fined in double the value of the same in case the amount of the duties to be paid on the contents of the package or packages confiscated does not exceed $400. In case the value of the duties to be paid should exceed the above sum and belong to the owner or consignee, Captain or Supercargo of the vessel, he or they will be condemned, instead of the above fine, to lose the vessel, freight and all other profits.

X.

Nothing whatever can be discharged without the permission of the Collector and knowledge of the Commander of the Custom-house Officers in service. Should, however, anything be discharged, although of little value or free of duty, the Captain or Supercargo will incur the fine of $1000, with entire confiscation of the goods thus discharged and likewise of the boats or launches which have been employed in the transportation of the same, in case the value of the duties to be paid on such goods does not exceed the sum of $200; but if they should exceed said sum, instead of the fine the vessel will be confiscated.

XI.

No goods whatever, to be quantity large or small, can be transported from one vessel to another, without the permission mentioned in the rule No. 11, and if this law is violated the Captains or Supercargos of each vessel will suffer the same penalty of fine, embargo or confiscation.

XII.

Should a vessel discharge merchandise, to the quantity large or small, in a non-licensed port, said merchandise, as well as the vessel and all her appurtenances, shall incur the penalty of confiscation.

XIII.

If on the conclusion of the discharge there should be found one or more packages short of the quantity manifested, it will in that case be understood that the Captain or Supercargo of the vessel has committed fraud against the Custom-house, and he shall be fined $200 for each package missing.

XIV.

If in the outward dispatch, in consequence of the visit of the vessel by the Custom-house officer, before the Captain or Supercargo has received his register, an excess of cargo should be detected, such goods will be confiscated and the Captain fined in the value of the merchandise confiscated.

XV.

All goods, product or any other article detected in the act of being fraudulently shipped, shall likewise incur the same penalty of fine and embargo.

XVI.

Should the Captains or Supercargoes not have wherewith to satisfy such fines and costs imposed on and caused by them, the vessels they command shall be seized for the purpose, unless the consignee come forward as security.

The President's Message.

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 10th instant, I herewith transmit a report of the Secretary of State, containing all the information received at the department in relation to the seizure of the Black Warrior at Havana on the 28th ultimo. There have been, in the course of a few years past, many other instances of aggression upon our commerce, violations of the rights of American citizens, and insults to the national flag, by the Spanish authorities in Cuba; and all attempts to obtain redress have led to protracted, and as yet fruitless, negotiations. The documents in these cases are voluminous, and, when prepared, will be sent to Congress. Those now transmitted relate exclusively to the seizure of the Black Warrior, and present so clear a case of wrong that it would be reasonable to expect full indemnity therefor as soon as this unjustifiable and offensive conduct shall be made known to her Catholic Majesty's government; but similar expectations in other cases have not been realized. The offending party is at our doors, with large powers for aggression, but none, it is alleged, for reparation. The source of redress is in another hemisphere, and the answers to our just complaints made to the home government are but the repetition of excuses, rendered by inferior officials to their superiors, in reply to representations of misconduct. The peculiar situation of the parties has, undoubtedly, much aggravated the annoyances and injuries which our citizens have suffered from the Cuban authorities, and Spain does not seem to appreciate to its full extent her responsibility for the conduct of these authorities. In giving very extraordinary powers to them, she owes it to justice and to her friendly relations with this government to guard with great vigilance against the exorbitant exercise of these powers, and, in case of injuries, to provide for prompt redress.

I have already taken measures to present to the Government of Spain the wanton injury of the Cuban authorities in the detention and seizure of the Black Warrior, and to demand immediate indemnity for the injury which has thereby resulted to our citizens.

In view of the position of the Island of Cuba, its proximity to our coast, the relations which it must ever bear to our commercial and other interests, it is vain to expect that a series of unfriendly acts, infringing our commercial rights, and the adoption of a policy threatening the honor and security of these States, can long consist with peaceful relations.

In case the measures taken for amicable adjustment of our difficulties with Spain should unfortunately fail, I shall not hesitate to use the authority and means which Congress may grant to insure the observance of our just rights, to obtain redress for injuries received, and to vindicate the honor of our flag. In anticipation of that contingency, which I earnestly hope may not arise, I suggest to Congress the propriety of adopting such provisional measures as the exigency may seem to demand.

Franklin Pierce.

Washington, March 15, 1854.

The Black Warrior Affair.

LETTER FROM CONSUL ROBERTSON TO SECRETARY MARCY.

We copy the following official account of the seizure of the steamship Black Warrior, received at the State Department from Col. Wm. H. Robertson, our acting Consul at Havana:

Consulate of the United States,
Havana, March 3, 1854.

Sir—By the United States steamer Corwin, which I dispatched to Charleston on the 1st instant, conceiving that the importance of the intelligence I had to communicate justified that course, I advised you of the seizure by the Custom-house authorities here, apparently, or rather evidently, with the consent and approbation of the supreme authority of the Island, of the cargo on board the steamer Black Warrior, of New York, and of the attempt to lay a very heavy fine upon the Captain of the vessel, which fine is said to be double in amount to the value of the cargo—all this under the pretence of his having made a false entry, to-wit: that he stated his ship to be in ballast, when she had cotton on board in transitu. I feel it to be my duty to repeat the circumstances of the case, to correct any errors that I may have communicated in my dispatch before mentioned, numbered 34.

The steamer was expected here from Mobile, on her way to New York, on the 20th ult. Messrs. Tyng & Co., her consignees, on the day before, (25th, Saturday) entered and cleared her in ballast. This has been customary for steamers of the Law and British mail lines. I am informed that the Black Warrior has been entered and cleared in ballast since she commenced to run, now about eighteen months past, making two trips per month, without any objection on the part of the Custom-house authorities, who cannot plead ignorance of the fact, for immediately that a steamer drops her anchor, two Custom-house guards, and an unlimited number of policemen, public and secret, were placed on board to watch every passenger or package on the ship. No attempt has ever been made, that I am aware of, to conceal the cargo. Furthermore, the Captain of the Black Warrior has been in the habit to deliver to the authorities, on arrival, several numbers of the public journals of New York or Mobile, of the latest dates, which contained the advertisement of the Black Warrior's being about to sail on such a date, expressing the cargo she carried for her port of destination.

The ship arrived here on the morning of the 28th. The Captain delivered his manifest in ballast, as had been customary. He assures me that he had always been under the impression that a special concession existed which exempted his vessel and other steamers from the formality of manifesting their cargo in transitu; he thinks that the owners of the ship entertain the same belief. On the same day (28th) at about 12 o'clock, Mr. Tyng sent his clerk to the custom-house for the dispatch of the steamer, to take the same to the Captain of the Port, to procure the pass for her to leave the port; it was refused to him, and he was informed that the ship was stopped by order of superior authority of the royal exchequer. Upon this Mr. Tyng, with the Captain, came to my office and informed me of the state of the case. Whilst the former was entering a protest, I took the latter with me to the Captain-General. The object of this interview was to lay before his Excellency all the circumstances of the case, and particularly to show that there had not been, on the part of Captain Bullock, or any one concerned in the ship, the least intention of violating any law of Spain or regulation of the port. His Excellency courteously listened to me, and replied that no report had been made to him on the subject; he also recommended that I should give him my statement in a memorial or official communication. I immediately returned to my office and prepared my letter to the Captain-General. Of this letter, in my anxiety to bring the affairs to a satisfactory settlement without delay, I kept no copy, which I regret.

In the meantime Mr. Tyng went to the custom-house, finding that this cause of the difficulty was the omission of the cargo in transitu in the manifest, and thinking that as the twelve hours allowed by law to amend manifests had not elapsed, and that by making the amendment the difficulty would be terminated, he applied to the collector, stating that in the course of fifty minutes or half an hour he would be prepared to present the correct manifest. The collector replied that it could not and should not be admitted, because he had already applied for the vessel's dispatch, or something to this effect. It is true that Mr. Tyng had applied for the dispatch; but it may be well to bear in mind that it was not given; and it is a question, in my opinion, whether the steamer could be considered as cleared, in effect, so far as regards the clearance on the 28th, before she had arrived. I deem it informal. Mr. Tyng was at the same time informed that the cargo was confiscated and the Captain fined according to the custom-house regulations. In the afternoon of the same day (I have been informed) a gang of men were sent alongside the ship, to commence the discharge of the cargo; but finding that the Captain and Purser were on shore, the operation was deferred until the next morning, when they again appeared, and the officer at the head of the party demanded of the Captain the delivery of the cargo, which Captain Bullock declined, remarking to the officer that if he took by force, as he must do, one single bale of the cargo, he (the Captain) would instantly haul down his colors and abandon his ship to them. This seemed to make the officer hesitate. He suspended his operation, and came on shore—no doubt to lay the facts before his superiors, and receive their directions. He soon returned on board, opened the hatches and commenced the discharge; whereupon Captain Bullock hauled down his flag, and, with his officers and crew, abandoned the vessel to the Spanish authorities.

On the evening of the 28th I received the Captain-General's reply to my letter, which was far from satisfactory. A copy and translation of the same were transmitted to you with my communication, No. 34, sent by steamer Corwin.

On the 1st, at about 12 o'clock, the Collector wrote a communication to Mr. Tyng. I send you a copy of this communication, as well as that of a second letter from the same officer, also that of Mr. Tyng's reply. Enclosed you will likewise find a copy of a letter I received last evening from the "Intendente" of the Treasury, and of my reply thereto. I also accompany a copy of the printed regulations, which are handed to all captains of vessels on the first visit from the custom-house officers.

I have omitted to say that I am informed that the regulations concerning steamers require that they shall manifest the quantity of coal they have on board, but that in no instance has this law been complied with. This neglect or unobservance of the laws by the authorities themselves has rendered them obsolete, and therefore inapplicable. I am also assured that a law prescribes that, when it is clearly shown that there has been no intention of infringing the law, or defrauding her Majesty's revenues, parties shall not be deemed culpable. In my opinion, it is simply ridiculous to suppose for an instant that the Captain of the Black Warrior had any intention to do otherwise than conform to all established regulations.

Although I had written to the "Intendente" last evening declining the request that I should appoint a person to take an account of the cargo proposed to be landed to-day, being led to that course by the idea that the Intendente's object was to present at least the semblance of a sanction on the part of this Consulate to their proceedings, I, nevertheless, called upon him this morning, remarking by way of introduction that I presented myself not only in the character of Consul or commercial agent, but as a friend; that I was expecting the steamer Philadelphia to-day, and I was anxious to communicate to my government the true relation of facts on both sides, that my government might be prepared to meet the many demands upon it for indemnity by innocent parties interested in the cargo; that I did not come to solicit that his government should alter its position, however desirous I might be to aid in preserving good relations between the two governments, but to obtain facts. This led to a discussion. I remarked that I could not see how two wrongs made a right; that it might have been wrong to have entered and cleared the ship in ballast, but that the Captain, through his consignee, had attempted to correct the error within the legal time, and he had not been permitted; that this, added to the long-continued, and by the authorities well known, practice of entering in ballast, when she had cargo in transitu, I did not see how they could put themselves in the right; still, that I was not disposed to test the law points bearing on the case, but that it had given me much pain that the matter had not been settled satisfactorily and amicably as it should have been; and finally, that I was apprehensive that this affair might create great agitation and difficulty, from the circumstance of there being so many parties interested who had nothing whatever to do with the vessel. To all this the Intendente said that he regretted he had not seen me before; that, as the matter stood, he still not know what to do, but he would examine carefully into it, and try to bring it to a satisfactory termination, or something to this effect.

But, in the meantime, the ship has been, by order of the authorities, hauled to one of the wharves, and some of the cargo taken out. There is every appearance that it is intended to proceed with the discharge.

In my dispatch (No 34) I stated that the British mail line have also been in the habit of entering and clearing in ballast when they had cargo on board. Mr. Crawford, the British Consul, has assured me to-day that such is not the case.

Some of the officers and all the crew of the Black Warrior are on board of the United States steamer Fulton; the transient passengers, 14 in number, are on shore.

I beg of you to consider my anxiety to lay before you all the circumstances that I can bring to mind in regard to this unfortunate affair, as a sufficient apology for the length of this dispatch.

There are three or four other American vessels in difficulty here at present; but I do not consider their cases of such importance as to require that I shall trouble you with them until I can ascertain the result, and whether this has not been in conformity to law.

I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your very obedient servant,

Wm. H. Robertson, Acting Consul.

Hon Wm. L. Marcy, Secretary of State of the U. S., Washington.

Drawing of the Havana Lottery.—A late letter from Havana to the Charleston Standard says: I was present on Friday last, at the drawing of the "Grand Royal Cuban Lottery," which exhibited the Cuban population in, to me, a new light, and therefore I send you a description of the scene.

A platform was erected in one of the arches of the square of the Custom-House, which at the back and sides was hung with crimson drapery, at the back was suspended a portrait of the Queen of Spain. There were two large, gaudily-painted globes placed near the edge of the platform, in one of which was placed representatives of the whole number of tickets, and in the other the several prizes; two boys ascended the platform, the globes were turned by negroes, a military band played one of the Royal Marches, a file of soldiers—soldiers here play a prominent part on all public occasions—was placed to keep the crowd clear of the platform, and the drawing commenced. One of the boys thrust his arm into one of the globes and drew out a number, then marched with a theatrical air to the rear of the platform; the other boy went through a similar ceremony, and the two advanced together to the front, the one proclaimed the number, the other the prize; then there was a universal examining of tickets, but no one appeared to hold the fortunate number, and the ceremony of drawing another number was gone through, and a like result ensued; at the drawing of the fifth number there was a shriek of joy, and a miserable looking duo-decimo edition of a man, was discovered to have swooned with delight at being the holder of the eighth of a two thousand dollar prize! Poor devil! when he "came to," as I believe the old ladies call it, he said "Caramba, I thought it was $20,000." During the day, I heard of several parties who had drawn small prizes, but although all the city, or rather all the white population of it appeared to hold portions of tickets, yet no one, that I have heard of, held the number 12,567, which drew the $100,000 prize. I will not say that the drawing was not fairly conducted, but I confess I liked not the two boys turning their backs upon the crowd and marching to the rear of the platform; it afforded opportunity for collusion, and no dimes or dollars of my "hard earnings" shall ever be invested in the "Royal Cuban Lottery."

Russia and Turkey.—The following is stated to be a prophecy taken from an old volume of predictions, written in the 15th century:

> In twice two hundred years, the Bear
> The Crescent will assail:
> But if the Cock and the Bull unite,
> The Bear shall not prevail.
>
> In twice two hundred years again
> Let Israel know and fear,
> The Cross shall stand, the Crescent wane,
> Dissolve and disappear.

The treaty between France and Belgium has been signed by both powers.

TELEGRAPHIC.

ONE WEEK LATER FROM EUROPE.

New York, March 15.—The Cunard steamer Arabia has arrived, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 4th inst., one week later than those received by the Asia. It will be seen by her commercial summary, which we give below, that the cotton market is dull and drooping, and that a still further decline has taken place in breadstuffs.

Liverpool, March 4.—The cotton market opened heavy at the commencement of the week, but improved slightly before the close. There were more sellers than buyers in the market, and the decline may be set down at 1 d-16d. per lb. Middling qualities have declined most. The sales of the week amount to only 31,000 bales, and the following are to-day's quotations: Fair Orleans, 6¼d.; Fair Uplands, 6¼d.; and Middling Uplands, 5 11-16d. per lb. Flour has declined 2s. per bbl., and Cor

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

THE BEAUTIFUL BEGGAR.....A BALLAD.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

It was in Summer's brightest days,
Beneath a mighty tree,
Could shelter from the noontide blaze,
The knights and ladies three.

Each laughing pair of lovers there
Conversed in merry mood,
When lo! a girl with golden hair
Came slowly from the wood.

The sun had browned her sweet fair face,
But feet were travel sore,
A mandolin with touching grace
Upon her arm she bore.

And to the knights and ladies three
Right sweetly did she sing,
It seemed some bird upon the tree
Regarding weary wing.

Right sweetly did she sing to them,
A tune in bach blue eye,
That sparkled like some costly gem
Which captured monarchs buy.

And thus she spake—"O ladies fair!
O noble cavaliers!
By your bright eyes and beauty rare,
And by your matchless spears!

"I ask not silver for my song,
But golden pieces bright;
For ye may lose and recover long
Nor one so mad a wight!

"In Barbary, the Moslem's slave,
My lover sighs for me;
And I were rather in my grave,
Than kiss alone and free!

"He was the bravest of our youth,
And loved me when a child;
And never treason to the truth,
His noble lips defiled!

"'Tis for his ransom that I sing
And beg from day to day,
That I have sworn from earth to wring,
And for his freedom pay!"

Then rose the first gay cavilier,
And said—"My pretty maid," Whilst brushing from his eye a tear,
"That ransom shall be paid!

"No gold have I, my debts are long,
And sad to call to mind;
But I've a horse both young and strong,
For martial use designed.

"That horse is thine, its price will aid
To set thy lover free."
"Nay, then, his ransom shall be paid!"
Cried knights and ladies three.

The second knight his dagger gave,
The first work of Spain;
His mantle trimmed with ermine brave,
The third to doff was fain.

And each fair lady from her ear
Unloosed her rings of gold,
And gave them to her cavalier
To help that maiden bold.

And by those knights and ladies three,
That ransom straight was paid,
And she a happy wife was she,
That fair and faithful maid.

Nor ever lacked a charger knight
Who sat beneath that tree,
Nor cramined cloak, nor dagger bright
To set a captive free.

But ladies fair and lovers brave,
All prospered from that day,
On which the noble spendthrifts gave
Their little all away.

[Graham's Magazine.

Haydon the Painter.

It was a fine long fellow, made of wood, yellow washed, and with a little knob at the end to prevent its slipping through my teeth: I am speaking of a pipe. A fine fellow I bought in Chartres street the other day, in form like a common clay, but having the advantage of being light, and not liable to break. I had just filled him to the brim, and was drawing in the first long, soothing stream of dry smoke as I took up a volume of Haydon's autobiography, languidly, for I felt I should be bored. I wished to have something easy and interesting to read, and I took it out of my own free will, but as a kind of duty. I anticipated the usual business—unpublished letters from distinguished men with nothing to distinguish them from those of undistinguished people—hard details full of technical terms. I opened it feeling it would interfere with the soothing influence of my pipe. But I found I was mistaken, I generally err in my presentiments. I was soon deeply interested in poor old Haydon's story; his determination, as a boy, to be a great artist. His pluck in bidding for some anatomical book, at an auction, without a cent in his pocket, and leaving his father to pay for it, and his pride in dashing down the dictionary on the counter and leaving the shop, when a customer offered him less than the proper price for it. But when I read: "I hated day-books, ledgers, bill-books and cash-books; I hated standing behind the counter, and insulted the customers," I looked round for a chair or something to represent Haydon, that I might stop it on the back by way of expressing my admiration.

I read on, on, never weary. There is something startling to be thus admitted to the society, the confidence of a great man; to follow his movements, and hear his most inmost thoughts freely expressed. Glorious things are books; men do not half appreciate them. The idea of being introduced, as it were, into the society of a circle of great men, for one or two dollars! Why, one will spend fifty, and take no end of trouble to simply see the house in which a single famous man was born; and yet one will neglect the opportunity (when it costs next to nothing,) of becoming acquainted with a dozen, to hear what they said, thought, did and looked like. Why, it is like a hungry man going to Baton Rouge to see a pie dish, when he can have a fine dinner for a dollar, by staying in New Orleans. Haydon introduces you to Wilkie, Coleridge, Wordsworth, the Duke of Wellington, Nelson, Fuseli, Leigh Hunt, Landseer, Collins and many others.

Haydon reminds me very much of an old companion now in New York, an author whose name every one knows, but who is as unsuccessful as poor Haydon, simply because he will fight the world, because he prefers walking on the wrong side of the sidewalk, and bumping up against every one he meets, to going easily with the tide on the right side. He certainly gets along somehow; occasionally knocks down one of those who oppose him, and makes a stir; but in the long run, he would effect infinitely greater progress, by taking the easy side; but still, it is grand to see a man going his own way in spite of every one, and never "caving in." This stern determination of Haydon's only makes you admire him; for you find he is not all opposition; there is a soft side to his character; he dotes upon his wife and children and his art. He says he has endured great misery, but has enjoyed more happiness in mere painting than could counterbalance all his miseries put together.

The poor fellow! when his first child is only fourteen months old, a baby, he says, with exquisite simplicity, his mind full of his art, "The dear boy grows apace and seems to be more pleased with color than anything else." In 1822, when his boy is an infant, he prays God to give him genius, that he may be a great painter; that the son may carry out what the father commenced. In 1842, he says, "Thank God, not one of my boys, nor my girl, can draw a straight line even with a ruler, much less without one. And I pray God on my knees, with my forehead bent to the earth, and my lips to the dust, that He will in his mercy afflict them with every other passion, appetite or misery, wretchedness, disease, insanity, or gambling idiotism, rather than a longing for painting—that scorned, miserable art—that greater imposture than the human species it imitates." What a change! Did ever broken heart give forth such a wail? Were ever bright hopes, glorious, noble aspirations so contrasted with blasted prospects and bitter disappointment, as in this short prayer of joy and bitter cry of agony.

But his art was his god to the last, he worshipped it through life, and thanked God just before he left the world, that he had advanced it, and educated the first artists of the day—Landseer, Eastlake and Lance. None, who have not mixed in the society of artists, can conceive the extent to which they are attached to their art, the extent to which it supplies the place of everything else, and makes them indifferent to those amusements which to other young men are necessary. I have often entered the studio of an artist, in the evening, and found half a dozen young fellows laughing and talking with more heartiness over coffee and pipes, than I ever did men of other classes over the most sumptuous supper table.

Haydon speaks with the greatest feeling of the pleasant meetings of his student life—and well he might, when such men as Wilkie were his companions. I can fancy old Wilkie sitting on the bed drawing his own ugly reflections in the looking-glass, and entirely forgetting in order any breakfast. Or when he saw the crowd collected round his first picture in the exhibition, his repeating, "Dear, dear, it's jest wonderful!" It must have been somewhat of a mortification though to poor Haydon, with all his craving for fame, to have the modest Scot get ahead of him, but he tries to avoid showing it in his autobiography.

On one occasion Haydon dissects a lioness which leads him to discover where exist the differences between man and the beast. He says: "I was struck with the relative difference and similarity in the forms of the lion and the man. I put, as a mere experiment, the lion resting on the heel and ball of the toe like the human being, and in an instant of inspired perception, saw the whole system. I found the lioness's feet flat—her chest narrow—her brain small—her forearm long—her body long. I found that she was entirely and capable of standing erect on her feet when resting on the same bones as the human being. I compared the two in muscle and construction; the points where they differed I put down as marks of brutality on the lion's part, as indications of humanity on that of the man, and concluded that in building a superior form, the human peculiarities are to be dwelt on, while for inferior form, those which belong to the brute are to be approached." A little further on he writes: "About the latter end of this year the artists met with a black, a native of Boston, a perfect antique figure alive; on my getting sight of him I engaged him for a month and proceeded to draw and cast him, without a moment's loss of time, in all the attitudes wanted for my picture. The most extraordinary thing was, that I found in this negro all the positive marks of characteristic brutality; beautiful as his form was, his calf was high and feeble, his feet flat and heel projecting, his forearm as long as his arm-bone, his deltoid short, his jaw projecting and his forehead receding." He says in another part of the book, speaking of one of his many quarrels with the world, "I provoked all this clamour by asserting my belief, founded on physical construction, that the negro was the link between animal and man." It is interesting to know the opinion of such a man as Haydon on these subjects.

He gave the abolitionists a capital rub when he was painting the picture of the anti-slavery convention. He records it in his journal thus: "Seveil called. I said, 'I shall place you, Thompson, and the negro together.' Now an abolitionist on thorough principle, would have gloried in being so placed. This was the touchstone. His sophisticated immediately on the propriety of placing the negro in the distance as it would have a much greater effect.

This was quite characteristic of the old boy. Right or wrong he was thorough; he abominated humbug. But this very abomination of the false led him to condemn that which he was ignorant of in unmeasured terms. A striking illustration of this unsharitableness is to be found in his remarks on the principles of Lucretia Mott, whom he was to introduce into the abolition picture:

"Lucretia Mott, the leader of the delegate women from America, sat. I found her out to have infidel notions and resolved at once, narrow-minded or not, not to give her the prominent place I first intended. I will reserve that for a beautiful belie ver in the Divinity of Christ."

Apropos of the Forest King. Landseer once had a dead lion sent to him for the purpose of dissection. When it was brought to the door, his handmaiden came up to the studio, and asked him with great simplicity, "If you please, sir, did you order a lion?" I dare say Landseer thought no more of going to the Zoological Gardens and telling them to send home a brace of Elephants than you or I would of ordering the same number of chickens.

Strong as Hayden was in his dislikes, he was stronger in his affections. He venerated Nelson, and with true John Bull prejudice hated the French. He says: "I have a much higher idea of Nelson's reach of mind than most men are inclined to have. His correspondence in Clerk's Life is masterly. His perfect self-sacrifice, his pure unadulterated patriotism, his intense estimate of the character of the French, and his never being imposed on by their beggarly and bloody philosophy, but invariably seeing through their chuffing pretences, and never believing that their word was worth more than their morals; his inspired conviction that England, in peace or in war, was and would always be the object of their inveterate hatred, showed a vigor and perspicacity proof against all imposition. And the French in their dread hatred of him, tacitly admitted the truth of his instincts." This is rather more than could have been expected in the way of prejudice from an artist, even though that artist was an Englishman. It is worthy of a British merchant, and reminds me of the picture in Punch, which represents a particularly port-armed specimen of that class saying "Railroads, I hate railroads, sir, and shall be glad when they are all done away with and we have the stage coaches again." Haydon, by the way, abominated railroads, he thought, them so unpicturesque, in which most artists would agree with him.

Although Americans bought one of his paintings, and hung it up in Philadelphia, he did not seem to like us much, he gives a rather spiteful account of a young American: "A young American sat with me in the compés, and I was heartily amused. All the characteristics of his countrymen came out in perfection. He carelessly tumbled about bills to a considerable amount—boasted of the bottle of Plattsburgh, which I had forgotten till I was obliged to pull him down a little, tenderly, about the Chesapeake and the Capital. His face altered instantly.

"At lnuch he went and fennd ont who I was, and his altered tone amused me. He drove up to the same hotel, and announced my coming, (which was a cursed liberty)." John Bull all over.

In one part of his journal he writes: "There are three things in the world I hope to see before I die—the Americans thrashed at sea, my own debts paid and historical painting encouraged by Government." Poor fellow he did not live to see either.

Possibly the very reason why Haydon was not particularly partial to Americans is, because they rendered him a service; they bought one of his pictures. He wails over it as it were a lost child: "It was now leaving my native country forever, where I hoped to have seen it placed triumphantly in some public building" It must be melancholy for a man to part with the creation of his own brain which he has worked at for months and months, seeing it grow into life and beauty.

One misfortune attending painting is, that it engenders flunkeyism. Artists need rich patrons to purchase their pictures, and they consequently approve of insultations which tend to concentrate large sums of money in the hands of single individuals. I have heard American artists sigh for a peerage, and the law of entail: there are not a sufficient number of rich men to purchase their pictures in America, and the art languishes.

Haydon's flunkyism stands out all through his journal, and interferes with the feeling of respect we are otherwise inclined to have for his independent character. One constantly meets with such passages as this: "It was melancholy time to look at a work for the last time, which had excited so great a sensation in England and Scotland, the progress of which had been watched by all the nobility, foreign ministers and people of fashion, etc., etc."

Hayden must have had the organ of veneration largely developed. He was always praying. He never began a picture or a part of a picture, without asking the assistance of God. "God grant I may succeed in Solomon." "I prayed God to give me strength that I might get through Christ." "May a merciful Creator assist me in my efforts to paint the ass," etc. Now, had Haydon been a successful man, pious people would have pointed to him as an illustration of the efficacy of prayer; as it is, they say nothing about it. In spite of Haydon's religious feeling, he did not seem to altogether relish going to church; he stays at home painting all Sunday, and says it fills him with nobler thoughts than hearing a sermon. His children seem to share his opinions, and his son Frank, who is a regular chip of the old block, says he hates to pray with a parcel of fools who come to be looked at.

Hayden's abomination of portrait painting was perfectly amusing, the positively savage manner in which he always speaks of it has something quite comic. "Finished one cursed portrait," he writes, "have only one more to touch and then I shall be free. I have an exquisite gratification in painting portraits wretchedly. I love to see the sitters look as if they thought, 'can this be Haydon's, the great Haydon's painting?' I chuckle: I am a rascal to take their money, and chuckle more." I can hardly conceive anything more unsatisfactory than laboring through an uninteresting portrait, and then having the sitter and all the sitter's friends pick it to pieces, one saying the mouth is too large, another the nose is too small, a third the face is too short, till the unhappy artist sickens with disappointment and mortification. And to a man, too, of Haydon's vanity, the slightest remark would mortify him. In his last work he was guilty of a piece of egotism which stamps the character of the man. In his painting of Curtius leaping into the gulf, he painted his own portrait for Curtius. This piece of vanity has been condemned by many. But it was not a bad idea. Art was his Rome and he sacrified himself for it.

As I laid down the volume I thought to myself what a strange, novel record of a man's life! One generally gets the autobiographies of dreamers to read, as they are the men who most love to look inward and record on paper the workings of their own minds. Men of action scarcely ever stop to record what they do and think; for their own private gratification, therefore, this autobiography of Haydon is novel, and I hope every one who wishes really to be charmed, amused and instructed, will take up and ramble through Haydon's autobiography as I have done. B.

RULES FOR NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENTS.—A small work recently published in New York, gives the following rules for newspaper correspondents, in which we would invite the attention of those who favor us with their lucubrations:

Write legibly. Make as few erasures and interlineations as possible. In writing the names of persons and places be more particular than usual to make every letter distinct and clear, also in using words not English. Write only on one side of the paper. Employ no abbreviations whatever, but write out every word in full. Address communications, not to any particular person, but to "The Editors." Finally, when you sit down to write, do not be in a hurry. Consider that hurried writing makes slow printing.

The neglect of any of these directions will often cause a communication, otherwise valuable, to be thrown aside. An editor has too much labor on his hands to be able to spare time to decipher bad writing, and guess obscure meanings, and if a communication is not correctly made out, the correspondent is offended; therefore, as an editor may offend after all his trouble, be wisely throws the communication away, rather than offend.

If you desire two or more paragraphs to be made out of one, piece two crotchets back to back thus:][. All printers know this mark so well, that they will make the new paragraph without any other explanation or direction.

What is called "long-winded sentences" are the bane of composition. They are wearisome to read, difficult to understand and almost impossible to correct. Long-sentenced communications are never revised, except by persons who are under great obligations to the writer, or have great friendship for him. This fault in writing prevents many useful articles from appearing in print. Editors cannot find time for the vexatious drudgery of re-writing such papers. Yet if a communication is unnoticed, people go about arraigning the venality of the press, when the ignorance of the writer was the cause of rejection. It is a common complaint, that editors strike out the best part of papers sent them; but this would be nearly impossible if the papers were written tersely.

FASHIONABLE FOLLIES OF NEW YORK SOCIETY. Countless instances of the reckless extravagance of "our best society" might readily be adduced. We will take the single article of dress. We are given to understand by these familiar with the subject, that a lady's dress—lace and jewelry included—such as are worn at our balls, is thought quite common unless it cost a thousand dollars! That is to say, the fair wearer, whose total stock in life in the way of intellectual and physical acquirements would hardly secure her a living, or enable her to educate a son, spends as much in one evening's folly—for the dress cannot possibly be worn twice—as a gray-haired book-keeper, or an ingenious mechanic, or a skilful foreman printer can make in a year. Her night's gadding costs society as much as would support a family for twelve months. And who are the people who wear those $1000 dresses? Are they sensible, intellectual, honorable, amiable? Have they even the poor recommendation of high blood, or hereditary respectability! Alas! Snooks' father was a joiner, and his own hands have been hardened by the use of the plane. Jenkine grew his own potatoes, and supplied fashionable families with the vegetable when fashionable people lived in Dey street. Stubberslops painted doors and windows in his early youth, and Mrs. S. mixed the paint. Worse than this, Snooks is a stupid dog-headed clown; Jenkins is mean and narrow-minded; Stubberslops believes that Dickens wrote Shakspeare, and that the "Midsummer Night's Dream" is the work of Mr. Barry of the Brondway. Respectable, though ignorant, in the humble station in which they began life, they are now snobbish, contemptible and extravagant. [N. Y. Herald.

THE OLDEST HOTEL IN THE UNITED STATES. A friend of ours from Old Virginia, says the Galveston News, who not long since stopped at the Swan Tavern, in Yorktown, has handed us the following card, which he discovered pasted up in that house, and which, he says, is strictly true in every particular. We understand that Mr. Anderson is a descendant of the original owner, who flourished as "mine host" in the same old brick building, 160 years ago, or near 50 years before it witnessed the capture of Lord Cornwallis:

SWAN TAVERN AT YORKTOWN.

This ancient building was opened as a house of entertainment on the 18th of March, 1722, and is now in its 130th year, being the senior establishment of the kind in the United States. It now receives and accommodates travelers on the following terms:

Visitors must state their names and residences, and be prepared to pay their fare in specie change, without regard to age, at the following rates: breakfast, dinner and supper, each 50 cents; lodging, 25 cents; meals for servants, 25 cents; weekly board, $9; monthly board, $1 per day; horses 75 cents a night, and single feed 25 cents. Plain drinks at the bar, 6¼ cents; punch, mint julep, etc., double that price. Rooms for public meetings, courts martial, taking depositions, and all such assemblages, will be charged for by the day. As the house is not intended to be a place of lazy, unprofitable resort, mere loungers are required to keep away; and all who come only to idle their time at the fire in winter, or to gulph down ice water in summer, will be charged 25 cents daily. Rude, noisy or intoxicated persons will not be tolerated on any terms. ROBT. ANDERSON.

YORKTOWN, 1852.

LYING IN BED WITH THE HEAD HIGH.—It is often a question amongst people who are unacquainted with the anatomy and physiology of man, whether lying with the head exalted or even with the body, was the most wholesome. Most consulting their own ease on this point, argue in favor of that which they prefer. Now, although many delight in bolstering up their heads at night, and sleep soundly without injury, yet we declare it to be a dangerous habit. The vessels through which the blood passes from the heart to the head, are always lessened in their cavities when the head is resting in bed higher than the body, therefore in all diseases attended with fever, the head should be pretty nearly on a level with the body; and people ought to accustom themselves to sleep thus to avoid danger. [Medical Journal.

MONKEY SKIN GLOVES.—Of the many animals who contributes to a dandy's dress, (in the materials of which the several perilous arts made) we find that he is indebted to the monkey for the politest portion, the "French kid glove." The manufacture of this article depends now on the monkey skins brought from South America, which are so much more pliable than the old material, as the monkey is more agile than the kid. As it is impolite to offer an ungloved hand to a lady, it appears, therefore, that she is more honored with the touch of a monkey's skin than a man's. We see by the papers that there is one hunter who kills three thousand monkeys a year, selling their skins to the French dealers for twenty to forty cents each.

ONE SPOT OF GREEN.... BY BRADY CORNWELL.

When the winter bloweth loud,
And the earth is in a shroud,
Bitter rain and blinding snow
Dimming every dream below,
Cheerily! cheerily!
There is e'er a spot of green,
Whence the Heavens may be seen.

When our purse is shrinking fast,
And our friend is lost, (the last!)
And the world doth pour its pain
Sharper than the frozen rain;
Cheerily! cheerily!
There is still a spot of green,
Whence the Heavens may be seen.

Let us never greet despair,
While the little spot is there;
For winter brighteneth into May,
And smiles night to sunny day;
So, cheerily! cheerily!
Let us seek the spot of green,
Hopeful, patient, and serene,
Whence the Heavens may be seen.

[Household Words.

PLEASURE.—Blessed be the hand that prepares a pleasure for a child! for there is no saying when and where it may again bloom forth. Does not almost everybody remember some kind-hearted men who showed him a kindness in the quiet days of his childhood? The writer of this recollects himself at this moment as a bare-footed lad, standing at the wooden fence of a poor little garden in his native village, with longing eyes he gazed on the flowers which were blooming there quietly in the brightness of a Sunday morning. The possessor came forth from his little cottage—he was a wood-cutter by trade—and spent the whole week at his work in the woods. He was come into his garden to gather flowers to stick in his coat when he went to church. He saw the boy, and breaking off the most beautiful of his carnations—it was streaked with red and white—gave it to him. Neither the giver nor the receiver spoke a word; and with bounding steps the boy ran home; and now, here at a vast distance from that home, after so many events of so many years, the feelings of gratitude which agitated the breast of that boy, expresses itself on paper. The carnation has long since withered, but now it blooms afresh. [Douglass Jerrold.

SWEDEN.—Her War Capacity and Machine Works.—At this moment the capabilities of the great machine works at Motala, in Sweden, are exciting attention. This establishment has become the largest in the country, and new employe between eight and nine hundred men. During the last ten years it has built thirty-eight steamers, in the whole 1,814 horse power, and has fitted them all with machinery. It has also constructed twenty-five steam engines (2456 horse power) for vessels built elsewhere, and eighteen land engines, (164 horse power) besides an infinity of machinery, tools, presses, cranes, canni bridges, etc., of all kinds. At this moment it has under work a steam engine (300 horse power) for the ship-of the-line Carl Johan; four iron steamers (70 horse power each) for the Hull (St. Petersburg line) via Gotha Canal; an iron steamer for Norrland, 160 horse power; a do. for Sundsvall, 80 horse power; a propeller do. for Norkoping, 80 horse power; an iron steamer for Holland, 100 horse power; a do. for Upsala, 60 horse power; a steam engine of 24 horse power, another of 100, and a multitude of other items. Sweden is, therefore, able to arm if required.

SUPERSTITION OF THE MONTHS.—January—It is unlucky to walk under a ladder when they are shovelling the snow off the roof. February: the unlucky number of pancakes to eat on Shrove Tuesday is thirteen. March: If you read "Allison's History of Europe" through, it is a sign that, somethiug will happen to you. April: If you see an announcement that Mr. Gough will address a meeting at Exeter Hall, with Mr. George Cruikshank in the chair, it is a bad sign. May: It is unlucky to marry a woman with a wooden leg. June: If two people eat your cucumbers at one sitting, it is a sign of approaching sickness. July: If you don't put a bucket of water at your door for the dogs, you will be likely to kick it unpleasantly. August: If you invite a party of friends this month, you will be sure to have an "August" assembly. September: It is dangerous to walk before a Londoner with his gon cocked. October: If you bet upon the probable number of pockets of hops produced in the season, you will probably empty your own pocket, or have to hop off. November: It is unlucky to get between two cabs in the Strand during a fog. December: It is unlucky to play the trombone and cornet-a-piston, after midnight, under a nervous gentlemnn's window.

ORIGIN OF PHRASES.—Hic Betty Martin.—Many of our most popular vulgarisms have their origin in some whimsical perversion of language or fact. St. Martin is one of the worthiest of the Roman Calendar, and a form of prayer commences with the words, "O mihi beate Martin," which was corrupted to "My eye and Betty Martin," and still further to "Hic! Betty Martin." Roland for an Oliver.—Although no phrase is in more common use, yet few are acquainted with its origin. The impression signifies the giving of an equivalent. Roland and Oliver were two knights famous in Romence. The wonderful achievements of the one can only be equalled by those of the other. Hence the phrase, "Roland for an Oliver." Mind your P's and Q's—The origin of this phrase is said to have been a call of attention in the old English ale-house, pints and quarts being scored down to the unconscious or reckless beer bibber.

HOW TO MAKE LOVE.—A bashful gentlsman, who had for some time admired a lady without daring to disclose his passion, sitting near to her one Sunday at church, hit upon the following method of declaring it: Taking up his Bible, he handed it over to her, having first turned down a leaf upon which he had marked with pencil the following, in the Epistle of St. John, 2d chapter, 5th verse: "And now I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another." The lady in a few minutes returned it with this passage turned down and marked—(Ruth, 1st chapter, 16th verse): "Whither thou goest I will go; where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people; thy God my God; Where thou diest I will die, and there will I be buried also. The Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me."

A SINGULAR BILL.—A bill is before the New York Legislature, which provides that every person who shall obtain a livelihood by fishing, shall, towards the close of the fishing season, impregnate the spawn taken from at least two dozen female fish, with the milt taken from the same number of male fish, and plant the same upon his fishing ground, in the presence of a Justice of the Peace living in the district. The penalty for the violation of this provision is a fine of $50.

The most beautiful women, like the most beautiful birds and flowers, are often the most evil and useless. Between Aspasie and Miss Dix, or Mrs. Fry or Mrs. Chisholm, there is the same relation that there is between a Woody Nightshade and a Pink, or a Tulip and a Violet—or between a Bird of Paradise and a Nightingale, or a Peacock and a Linnet.

In the New York Independent we find the following from a mother:

"But did I tell you what a time I had with my little Joe?"

"No; what was it?"

"Why, I was showing him the picture of the martyrs thrown to the lions; and was talking very solemnly to him, trying to make him feel what a terrible thing it was. 'Ma!' said he, all at once, 'Oh ma! just look at that poor little lion way behind there, he won't get any!'"

BUSINESS CARDS.

M. DUBOSE,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
PROVIDENCE, La.
☞ Practices in the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Tensas, and in the Supreme Court of the State.
REFERENCES—Messrs. Wright, Williams & Co., Messrs A. J. Wright & Co., Messrs. J. T. Donald & Co., Messrs. Joseph H. Palmer & Co; Messrs t. D. Fuller & Co; Messrs Race & Foster, Attorneys at Law, New Orleans. jy11 ly

JOHN HOLMES. L. CLAUSS.
HOLMES & CLAUSS,
GROCERS AND DEALERS IN PRODUCE,
☞ No 14 Tchoupitonlas and 16 New Levan, between Common and Gravier streets, New Orleans. ap30

SAM. HENDERSON. ALEX. HENDERSON.
S. & A. HENDERSON & CO.,
(Successors to Littlejohn & Henderson.)
WHOLESALE GROCERS,
☞ No. 86 Magazine street, corner of Natches, New Orleans, La. jy3 1y

Bells! Bells!! Bells!!!
For Churches, Academies, Factories, Steamboats, Plantations, etc., made, and a large assortment kept constantly on hand by the Subscribers, at their old established and enlarged Foundry, which has been in operation for Thirty Years, and whose patterns, and process of manufacture are so perfected, that their bells have a world-wide celebrity for volume of sound and quality of tone. The present Proprietors have recently succeeded in applyin the process of loam moulding in Iron Cases to Bell Casting—which secures a perfect casting and even temper; and as an evidence of the unimpaired excellence of their Bells, they have just received—Jan. 1854—the FIRST PREMIUM (A Silver Medal) of the World's Fair in New York, over all others, several from this Country and Europe being in competition; and which is the 15th Medal, besides many Diplomas, that have been awarded them. They have patterns for, and keep on hand, Bells of a variety of tones of the same weight, and they also furnish to order Chimes of any number of bells, or key, and can refer to several of their make throughout the States and Canada. Their Hangings, comprising many recent and valuable improvements, consist of Cast Iron Yoke, with moveable arms, and which may be turned upon the Bell; Spring acting on the Clapper, prolonging the sound. Iron Frame, Tolling Hammer, Counterpoise, Stop, etc. For steamboats, Steamships, etc., their improved Revolving Yoke, or Fancy Hangings in Brass or Bronze of any design furnished. We can supply whole sets, or parts, of our Improved Hangings, to rehang Bells of other construction, upon proper specifications being given. Old Bells taken in exchange.
Surveyors' Instruments of all descriptions made and kept on hand.
Being in immediate connection with the principal routes, in all directions, either Railroad, Canal or River, orders can be executed with dispatch, which, either personally or by communication, are respectfully solicited.
A. MENEELY'S SONS,
mh1t West Troy, Albany Co., N. Y.

Dr. J. K. Keenon,
Castilian Spring,
Holmes County, Mississippi,
is now prepared to offer good accommodations, to invalids who may desire to visit Castilian Spring, or place themselves under his care for treatment. This is one of the most desirable retreats for invalids in the South, located in an elevated healthy region of country, with abundance of fine Freestone water. The mineral water is composed very strongly of Iron, Sulphur, Magnesia and Soda, and contains largely of Carbonic Acid Gas.
The diseases which it has cured are Dyspepsia, Dropsy, General Debility, Affections of the Kidneys, Bladder, and the various functional and organic derangements of the Womb. This water is especially efficacious in Diseases of Females.
Board, per week—$7.
References—Ministers of Miss. Conference.
Rev. J. B. Walker, } New Orleans.
Rev. H. N. McTyeire, }
march 4 6m

AYER'S
CHERRY PECTORAL,
FOR THE CURE OF
COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS,
BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH,
CROUP, ASTHMA AND CONSUMPTION.

